

तमसो मा ज्योतिर्गमय

SANTINIKETAN
VISWA BHARATI LIBRARY

SB. 347

G 74

THE
HINDU CODE

BEING A CODIFIED STATEMENT
OF HINDU LAW WITH A COMMENTARY THEREON

BY
H. S. GOUR, M. A., D. C. L., LL. D.

OF THE INNER TEMPLE ESQUIRE, BARRISTER-AT-LAW,
AUTHOR OF THE LAW OF TRANSFER IN BRITISH INDIA, AND THE PENAL LAW OF BRITISH INDIA.

CALCUTTA :
BUTTERWORTH & CO. (INDIA), LTD.

1919.

PRINTED BY THE COMMERCIAL PRESS.
TRIPPLICANE, MADRAS

PREFACE.

---

The advantages of codified law are now too well known to need expatiation. The Indian Legislature has reduced to the form of Codes its laws on many subjects, but it has left the Hindu and Mahomedan Laws alone, and for an obvious reason. Warren Hastings knew that the Mahomedan rulers had administered justice according to the personal law of the parties. Accordingly, in 1772 he ordered that it should be continued to be so administered. This executive order was subsequently embodied in several statutes with the result that in matters relating to personal status, adoption, marriage, partition, alienation of property and succession, the law applicable to the Hindus is Hindu Law. But where is it to be found? Not in their sacred books alone, for a good deal of what is contained in the books, is not law at all, while a great deal more of what is law is not to be found in the books, the result being that the modern Hindu Law is a curious blend of the sacred texts, judicial dicta and analogies varied by custom or local usages, and eked out by the salutary rule of justice, equity and good conscience.

The ordinance of Warren Hastings was, no doubt, intended to be a privilege: in practice, it has stayed to be a penalty.

For the latest Hindu text is about a thousand years old. It was suited to a people, condition and age which have long since greatly altered. Even the most devout Hindu feels that he can no longer be held fast to the archaic laws of his forefathers. Even if he were so inclined he should have much difficulty in ascertaining them. For there is scarcely a topic upon which contradictory texts cannot be found and upon which contradictory gloss cannot be put. The fact that three divergent systems are the outcome of three commentators on the same text is an instance which is daily repeated in the Courts. For over a quarter century the present writer has seen this spectacle in the Courts. Without legislative authority he has no power to stop it. Nor indeed can it be wholly stopped. But it occurred to him that if other subjects are reduced to codified statements, why should not the Hindu Law be codified if only to present it in a compact form to be easily mastered and applied. It is only a coincidence that of all laws, the laws of the Hindus which were always stated in aphoristic Codes, still remain to be re-enacted in a consolidated Code.

The present work may, it is hoped, prepare the public opinion to be alive to the necessity of such a Code. Jagannatha's Digest, prepared under the direction of that Sanskritist H. T. Colebrook, can in no way be regarded as its prototype, for the latter is merely a collection of selected aphorisms from the sacred texts. This work is prepared on a wholly different plan. It is intended to be a plain and concise statement of modern Hindu Law—of the law as it is understood and administered in the Courts to-day. In the ensuing commentary the raison d'être of the rules so collected, their genesis and their application are all illustrated by concrete cases in which all the case-law to be found in all the reports, authorised and unauthorised, will be found set out.

Those who desire to make themselves acquainted with the outlines of Hindu Law need go no further than the collected rules. But those to whom precedents are all in all, the detailed discussions should furnish a repertory of cases arranged and discussed in their logical sequence, which it is hoped, present to some extent the same advantages as an annotated edition of an Indian enactment.

The plan adopted is the same as in the author's two other works on the Law of Transfer and the Penal Law of British India. The guiding principle in this case has been the same, namely, completeness. The writer does not profess to be a Sanskritist, though he has striven to examine the original authorities whenever they were available. He has avoided lengthy discussions on barren topics, which as a busy lawyer, he knows the practitioner would much rather eschew in arriving at a solution of his problems. If at times he has departed from this rule it has been to refute views which other writers have advanced but for which the text might have remained obscure. But the aim throughout has been to combine simplicity of treatment with perspicacity of expression. How far he has achieved this purpose he leaves it to the judgment of the reader.

H. S. G.

1st August, 1919.

TOPICAL CONTENTS.

---

TITLE PAGE

PREFACE

TOPICAL CONTENTS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GLOSSARY OF SANSKRIT WORDS

TABLE OF CASES CITED

TABLE OF ACTS, REGULATIONS AND STATUTES CITED

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TEXT OF THE HINDU CODE

SECTIONAL COMMENTARY

GENERAL INDEX

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA

---

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

OPERATION AND EXTENT OF THE HINDU CODE.

[Numericals within brackets refer to the paragraphs.]

SECTION	PAGE
1. Short title, local extent and meaning of "Hindu" ...	149
History of the early codes (222). History of Hinduism (224-229). History of the Hindu Code (230). Its extent and operation (231-236). Sources of Hindu Law (237-246). Custom (247). Judicial decisions (248-250). Statutes (251). Hindu conception of immoveable property (252). Procedure under Hindu Law (253). Caste autonomy (254). Schools of Hindu Law (255). Rules of interpretation (259). Who are the Hindus (260-265). Essence of Hinduism (266-271). Present day Hindus (272-278). Outcaste Hindus (279). Caste Disabilities Removal Act (280). Its scope (281). Illegitimate children of Hindus (282). Children of mixed alliances (283-285). General rules deduced (286). The four castes (287-288). Caste tests (289). Kayasths (290-291). Lingayats (292). Sikhs (293-295). Jains (296, 297-331). Brahmins (296, 298-299). Arya Samaj (300). Kabir Panthis (302). Shivites Vaishnavites (303-307). Minor sects (308-309). Ascetics (310). Gossavis (311-313). Brahmacharis, Sadhus, Sanyasis (314). Aboriginal Hindus (315). Non Hindu followers of Hindu Law (316). Khojas (317-318). Kutchi Memons (319). Sunni Borahs (319). Molasalam Girasias (319). Christian converts (320-322). Conversion to Hinduism (323-328). Buddhists (329-330).
2. Hindu Law personal. Law of origin ...	191
Personal law why saved (332-334) What personal law is saved (333-334). General rule (335) Personal law when applicable (336). Law of domicile when applicable (337).
3. Lex Loci ...	194
Lex Loci (338). Law on migration (339). Law in Bengal, Behar and Assam (340). Law in Bombay and Guzerat (341). Law in the U. P. and the C. P. (342). Law in Mithila (343). Law in Madras (344). Law in Punjab (345).

CHAPTER II.

CUSTOMARY LAW.

4. Custom defined ...	199
Custom in Hindu Law (348). Its place in other systems (349).
5. Nature of custom ...	200
Varieties of custom (350-351). Local customs (352) What is a tribal custom (353). Family customs (354). Primogeniture (355-356).

SECTION	PAGE
6. Custom cannot override express law ...	204
Custom and statute law (357). Elements of valid custom (358-359). Must be ancient (360). Uniform (361-364) Consistent (365) Certain (366-369). Peaceable (370) Compulsory (371-372).
7. Invalid customs ...	209
Invalid customs (373-376). Illegality (376-378). Immorality (379-380). Unreasonableness (381). Public Policy (382).
8. Pleading and proof of custom ...	212
Analogous law (383). Plea of custom (384). Proof of custom (385-389). Proof of family custom (390).
9. Proof and disproof of custom ...	215
Evidence of custom (391). Judgments (392). Entries in Public records (393). Published works (394). Transactions (395). Particular instances (396). Opinions (397). Admission and conduct (398-399). Proof of general custom (400-401). Local custom (402). Communal custom (403).
10. Usage defined ...	219
Distinction between usage and custom (404-405). Proof of usage (406).

CHAPTER III.

MARRIAGE.

11. Marriage defined ...	223
Marriage under the English and the Hindu Law (410-411). Marriage, a sacrament (412-413). Eight forms of marriage in early Hindu Law (414-415). What is marriage (416-417). Betrothal (418), Brahma marriage (419). Marriage Contract (420). Marriage brokerage (421).
12. Effect of a breach of contract to marry ...	228
Remedy for breach of contract to marry (422-423) Parent's duty to marry their children (424) Jurisdiction of courts in matters relating to marriage (425).
13. Right to marry ...	231
Right to marry (426) Who may marry (427) Marriages of Bairagis and Gosains (428) Illegitimate children, whether can marry (429).
14. Prescribed ceremonies unnecessary ...	232
Shastric ceremonies (430-431) What is Saptapadi (432) Division of Saptapadi into three parts (433) Present day ceremonies (434-435) consummation not essential (436) Persons entitled to give in marriage (437-440) Customary marriages (441-444) Communal marriage rites (445). Common marriage customs (446-449) Relic of Niyog (450-451) Punjab marriage customs (452-459) The Central Provinces marriage customs (460-463) Difference in local customs (463). Second marriage when necessary (464). Inter-caste marriages (465). Inter-caste customary marriages (466). Inter-marriages between sub-castes (467). Four principal rules deducible from the shastras (468). Marriage of Hindus and non-Hindus (469) Factum valet (470). Re-marriage of wives (471-478). Re-marriage of widows (474-476). Statutory right of divorce (477). Conditional marriages (479).

SECTION	PAGE
15. Marriage expenses ... .. Analogous Law (479).	249
16. No valid marriage within prohibited degree ... .. Prohibited degrees of marriage (480-488). Meaning of Sapinda (484-485). Who are Sapindas (486-487). Special mode of counting (488). Sapin- das and Bandhus the same (489). Gotrajas (490). Samanapravaras (491). Step-mother (492). Adoption (498). Other prohibitions (494) General result of the Shastric rules (495-496). English rules of prohi- bited degrees (497). Marriageable Sapinda relations (498). Marriage by exchange (499). Precepts merely moral (500-501).	249
17. Invalid marriages ... .. Prohibited degrees (502). Difference in caste (503-504). Non-observance of ceremonies (505).	259
18. Marriage by force or fraud ... .. Avoidance of marriage (506). Force or fraud (507).	260
19. Presumption of the death of husband ... .. Analogous law (508). Re-marriage of deserted wife (509).	261
20. Mutual rights and obligations upon marriage ... .. Husband's status and rights upon marriage (510-512) Polygamy (513) Divorce (514) Wife's rights on marriage (515-516). Restitution of con- jugal rights (517-518) Procedure (519) Limitation (520) Damages (521) Measure of damages (522).	262
21. Proof and presumption of marriage ... .. Analogous law (523) Presumption in favour of marriage (524-525) Proof of marriage and its validity (526) Presumption of valid marriage (527- 531) Presumption of marriage in Brahma form (532) Presumption as to due performance of ceremonies (533). Presumption of continuance of marriage (534).	268

CHAPTER IV.

AFFILIATION AND LEGITIMACY.

22. Children defined ... .. Different kinds of children (540-541).	276
23. Presumption of legitimacy ... .. Analogous law (542-543) Presumption of legitimacy (544-546) Proof aliunde (547) Other presumptions (548).	277
24. Children's right of maintenance ... .. Analogous law (549) Amount of maintenance (550). Maintenance only to illegitimate son (551)	279

CHAPTER V.

ON ADOPTION.

25. Adoption defined ... .. Texts on adoption (553) What is an adopted son (554) Who may adopt (555) Minority of adopter (556-557).	281
---	-----

SECTION	PAGE
26. Adopter must be issueless ... ..	283
Adopter to be issueless (558). Historical retrospect (559). Simultaneous adoptions (560). Adoption by person having disqualified son (561-563). Adoption by Jains (564). Parsi adoption (565). Kritrim adoption (566). Usage prohibiting adoption (567). Invalidity of adoption of one by two persons (568). Motive immaterial (569). Adoption of a daughter (570). Illatom adoption (571).
27. Who may adopt ... ..	288
Capacity to adopt (572). Simultaneous adoptions invalid (573). Adoption during pregnancy of wife (574). Degradation of adopter (575). Adoption by lunatic (576). Adoption by bachelor or widower (577). Adoption by ascetic (578). Adoption by person disqualified to inherit (579). Adoption during pollution (580). Agreements against adoption (581). Nephew and daughter's son no bar to adoption (582). Statutory prohibition of adoption (583). Assent of wife unnecessary (585). Participation by one of the wives (586). Texts on adoption by woman (587-588). Working rule stated (589).
28. Adoption by wife ... ..	295
Analogous law (590). Husband's authority (591). Joint authority invalid (592).
29. Adoption by widow ... ..	296
Analogous law (593). Necessity for consent (593-594). Whose consent necessary (594-595). Power to adopt by widow only discretionary (596). Difference of opinion between the various schools (597, 598). Consent of husband necessary in Bengal and in Benares (599-604). From whom assent is essential after husband's death (600). Prohibition to adopt (601-603). Adoption by minor female (605-611). Male adoptions by minors (612). Adoption by Dravid woman (613-615). Dravid widow's power of adoption (616). Father-in-law's consent in undivided family (617). Consent of the manager (618). Consent of Sapindas (619). Assent of all kinsmen unnecessary (620-621). Consent of remote reversioners will do when the nearest refuse on ground of self-interest (622). What is valid consent: minority, acquiescence, corruption and fraud excluded (623-624). Consent of co-widow unnecessary (625). Consent revocable (626). Case of divided counsels (627). Motive immaterial (628). Punjab adoptions (629). Adoption by the Maharashtra widow (630-634).
30. Form of authority ... ..	311
Form of authority (635). Anumati patra (636). Construction of authority (637). Hindu Wills Act (638).
31. Construction and limits of authority ... ..	314
Successive adoptions (639). Liberal construction of authority (640). Authority to adopt a persona designata (641). Construction of authority reasonable (642). Provision for obtaining consent of others (643). Limited authority (644). Illegal authority (645-646). Vague authority (647). Revocation of authority (648).
32. Adoption by Co-widows ... ..	319
Adoption by Co-widows (649-650). Preferential right of senior widow (651).
33. Adoption by fraud, etc., ... ..	321
Voidable adoption (652). Will obtained by fraud, coercion or importunity (653). Ratification, when possible (654). Adoption must be voluntary (655-658). Corrupt adoption (659-660). Adoption by fraud etc., (661).

SECTION	PAGE
34. Legal limitation on widow's power ... ..	325
Limits of widow's power to adopt (662). No revival of power once at an end (663). Widow adopting as Gotraj Sapinda (664). Rule applicable to grandmother (665). Aliter , when son dies minor and unmarried (666). Adoption when estate is vested in co-widows (667). Consent, if effective to revive power (668). Rule inapplicable to joint family (669). Estate vesting by inheritance (670). Fraud when immaterial (671).
35. Power to give in adoption ... ..	329
Father's authority to give in adoption (672-674). Right unaffected by age or conversion (675-677). Mother's authority (678). Unaffected by re-marriage (679). Power and limits of delegation (680). Conditional delegation (681). Who cannot give in adoption (682).
36. Qualification for adoption ... ..	333
Textual rules regarding qualification of adopted boy (683-688). Niyog rules (688). Identity of caste (689). Orphan ineligible (690). Or a person already adopted (691). Age immaterial (692-693). Adoptee to be unmarried (694). Exception in Bombay (695). Status of son of adoptee (696). Adoption before investiture in Bengal and in Benares (697-698). Adoption of prohibited relations (699-703). Rule inapplicable to Shudras (704). Adoption of daughter's son (705). Adoption of sister's son (706). Adoption of Mother's sister's son (707). Adoption of wife's brother's son (708). Adoption of brother (709). Adoption of uncle (710). Adoption of paternal and maternal uncle's son and grandson (711). Adoption of maternal aunt's daughter or latter's son (712). Persons eligible for adoption (713-716). Objection to extension of Niyoga rule (717).
37. Ceremony of adoption ... ..	344
Textual ceremonies (718). Giving and taking (719-721). Datt Homa (722-723).
38. Factum valet ... ..	347
Adoption of eldest or only son (724). Adoption of youngest son (725). Factum valet (726-729). Adoption by widow pregnant in concubinage (730). Adoption by untensured widow (731). Other disqualifications (732). Adoption through bribe (733).
39. Conditional adoption ... ..	351
Conditional adoptions (734). Ante adoption agreements (735-737).
40. Dvamushyayan adoption ... ..	353
Texts on Dvamushyayan adoption (738-739). Evolution of the law on the subject (740). Conditions of Dvamushyayan adoption (741). Local varieties (742-744).
41. Rights of a Dvamushyayan ... ..	355
Analogous law (745-746).
42. Kritrim adoption.. ... ..	35
43. Incidents of a kritrim adoption ... ..	3
History of kritrim adoption (747-748). Ceremonies necessary for (749). Incidents of kritrim adoption (750). Who can adopt (751). Relationship personal (752). Adoption completed by contract (753). Qualifications of adoptee (754).
44. Rights of a Kritrim son ... ..	18
Rights of inheritance (755). Kritrim adoption (756). Jain adoptions (757-759). Burmese adoptions (760).

SECTION	PAGE
45. Proof of adoption ... ..	361
Proof of adoption (761). Strict proof essential (762). No presumption in favour of adoption (763). Evidence in writing, value of (764). Antecedent probabilities (765-767). Publicity (768). Admission and conduct of the parties (769-774). Independent advice where women adopt (775-776). Ancient adoptions (777). Adoption by estoppel (778). Estoppel by representation (779-780). Limitation for challenging adoption (784-785). Limitation for establishing adoption (786). Burden of proof (786). For supporting an adoption (787). Adoption by fraud etc., (789). Working rules (790). Pleading on adoption (791).
46. Effect of void adoption ... ..	374
Effect of invalid adoption (792-793). Construction of bequest (794-795). Persona designata (794-795).
47. Effect on natural family ... ..	376
Results of adoption (796). Position in the natural family (797). Prohibited degrees for marriage and adoption in natural family (798).
48. Rights in the adopted family ... ..	377
Rights of adopted son (799-800). Rights of inheritance (801-802). Rights commence with adoption (803).
49. Adopted son's rights in the adopted family ... ..	379
Rights of adopted son (804, 805). Effect of adoption on alienations made by widow (806). Share of adopted son on partition (807). Adopted son's rights against his father (808).
50. Adoptee's rights limited by auras son ... ..	381
Texts on adopted son's rights as against auras son (809-810). Reasons for divergent views (811).
51. No specific relief in adoption ... ..	383
Analogous law (813).
52. Effect of acquiescence in an invalid adoption ... ..	384
Analogous law (814). Effect of consent on invalid adoption (815). Acquiescence, no bar (816). Estoppel (817).

CHAPTER VI.

MINORITY AND GUARDIANSHIP.

53. Age of majority ... ..	386
Analogous Law (821). Hindu law of majority (822). Hindu age of majority (823). Mode of calculation (824).
54. "Guardian" defined ... ..	388
Definition of guardian (825).
55. Three classes of guardians ... ..	388
Different classes of guardians (826-827). Certificated guardian (828).
56. Natural guardians ... ..	390
Natural guardians (829). Their position under the Guardians and Wards Act (830-831). Father's right (832). Competition between adopted father and natural father (833). Guardianship of illegitimate children

SECTION

PAGE

(884). Guardianship of converts (885). Father's right to appoint guardian (886). Mother's right of guardianship (887). Step-mother, competency of (888). Claim of paternal relations (889-841). Appointment of guardian by Court (842). Grounds of unfitness (843). Parent's claims (844-845). Comparison between English and Hindu Law (846). Mother as guardian (847). Claims of other relations (848). Natural claims when subordinated to welfare of the minor (849).
57. Marriage and loss of caste no disqualification	...	397
Disqualification for guardianship (850). Re-marriage of father (851). Conversion of father (852). Mother's remarriage and conversion (854). Minor Co-parcener (855). Guardianship of converted child (856-857).
58. Karta or guardian of co-parcenary	...	400
Guardianship of property of minor co-parcener (858).
59. Father's power to appoint guardian by will	...	401
Testamentary guardian (859). Power of father to appoint (860).
60. Husband his wife's guardian	...	402
Texts on the subject (861). Husband, lawful guardian of wife (862-864). Appointment of guardian by court (865-866).
61. Appointment or declaration of a guardian by court...	...	403
Appointment of guardian by court (867). Father's unfitness (868). Welfare of the child (869).
62. Joint guardians of persons and property	...	405
Analogous law (870).
63. Court's jurisdiction when limited	...	405
Guardian of property of minor (871). Court's jurisdiction to appoint, when limited (871).
64. Natural guardian	...	406
Powers of natural guardian of minor's property (872). Powers in respect of minor's trading business (873). Powers of certificated guardian (874). Power to compromise on behalf of minor (875). De facto guardian's powers (876). Guardian and trustee (877). Guardian not to enter on speculative enterprises (878). Necessity or benefit to minor (879). Liability of trading firm (880-881).
65. Natural guardian may contract or compromise	...	409
Powers of natural guardian (882). Contract or compromise by guardian (882). Acknowledgment of liability (888).
66. What acts bind minor	...	410
Right of guardian to charge the minor's estate (885). Minor's necessities (886). What are necessities (887). Guardian's right to acknowledge debt (888).
67. Personal contract by guardian	...	412
Personal contract by guardian not binding on minor (889). Charge distinguished (890).
68. Transfer by guardian when voidable	...	413
Minor's right to avoid transfer by guardian (891-892). Liability of minor to restore benefit (893-896). Limitation for suits by minor (897-900).

SECTION	PAGE
69. Guardian must act as such ... .. Guardian's acts binding on minor only when he acts as such (901-902).	417
70. Minor's privilege is personal... .. Minority, a personal privilege (903). Minor's fraud (904).	418
71. Minor's liability under decree. ... .. Minor's liability under decree (905). Compromise decree when binding on minor (906). Fraud or misconduct of guardian (907).	419
72. Right to custody... .. Guardian's right to the custody of his ward (908). Procedure for recovering custody (909)	420

CHAPTER VII.

LAW OF MAINTENANCE.

73. Personal obligation to maintain certain relations ... .. Personal obligation to maintain certain relations (912). Wife (913-914). Concubine (915). Legitimate son (916). Illegitimate son (917-918). Adopted son (919-920). Parents (920). Daughter (921). Sister (922). Chela (923). Son's widow and grand-children (924). Step-son, step- mother (925). Son-in-law (926). Brother (927).	422
74. Husband's conversion immaterial ... .. Wife's right to maintenance after husband's conversion (928).	426
75. Mistress's right to maintenance ... .. Texts on the subject (929, 930.) Concubine's right (931).	426
76. Manager's duty to maintain ... .. Duty of manager of joint Hindu family to maintain (932). Widow (933-934). Daughter-in-law (935). Step-mother (936) Grand mother (937) Holder of an impartible estate (938) Married daughter (939). Sister-in-law (940).	427
77. Maintenance of disqualified heir ... .. Texts relating to maintenance of disqualified heir (941). Rights of a dis- qualified heir's family (942).	431
78. Widow's right to maintenance ... .. Widow's right to maintenance out of co-parcenary property of her husband (943). Residence apart from husband's relations not a bar (945-946). Chastity, if a condition of the right to maintenance (947). Mainte- nance, when a charge on the estate (948).	431
79. Widow's right of residence ... .. Widow's right of residence in family house (949). Nature of the right (950-952). Right against transferee with notice (953). Right against transferee without notice (954). Husband's bona fide transfer excepted (955). Or any transfer for necessity (956).	433
80. No forfeiture on loss of caste ... .. Right to maintenance on loss of caste (957).	436

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ix

SECTION	PAGE
81. Amount of maintenance ... ..	436
Text on the subject (958). Amount of maintenance (959) Principles determining assessment (960-965). Limits of her right (966). Conditional maintenance (967-968). Responsible wants of the widow (969).
82. When widow disentitled to maintenance ... ..	439
Widow when disentitled to maintenance (972). Possession of sufficient stridhanam or other means of support (972). Dissipation of original allotment (978) Re-marriage (974). Effect of unchastity (975-976). Separate residence from family for immoral purpose (977). Concubine's maintenance (977).
83. Change of maintenance ... ..	442
Rate of maintenance (978). Case for increase in rate (979). Case for reduction (980-982). Case for suspension (983).
84. Priority of debts ... ..	444
Priority of family debts to claim for maintenance (984).
85. Maintenance a personal right ... ..	445
Right of maintenance, personal (985). Transfer where third person entitled to maintenance (986). Maintenance right non-transferable (987).
86. Maintenance cannot be defeated by gift or devise ... ..	446
Effect of gratuitous transfer on right to maintenance (988). Transfer in fraud of maintenance right (989). Transfer pendente lite (990).
87. Right when enforceable against transferee ... ..	447
Nature of the right to maintenance (991). Claim against transferee (992).
88. Charge for maintenance ... ..	449
Charge for maintenance, nature and extent of (993-995). Maintenance grants, duration of (996).
89. Suit for maintenance ... ..	451
Scope of suits for maintenance (997) Cause of action (998). Limitation (999). Provision for maintenance (1000). Recovery of arrears (1001). Rate of arrears (1002). Defences to a suit for maintenance (1003). Defiance of restrictions imposed by husband (1004). Possession of assets (1005). Measure of maintenance (1006-1008).
90. Parties to a maintenance suit ... ..	456
Necessary parties to a suit for maintenance (1009).
91. Maintenance decree ... ..	456
Form of a maintenance decree (1010-1011). Alteration of amount fixed by decree (1012). Merely declaratory decree improper (1013). Maintenance without charging estate (1014). Charge decree (1015).
92. Limitation for recovery ... ..	458
Limitation for suits for arrears of maintenance (1016) Starting point (1017-1018). Claim for arrears (1019). Suit on contract (1020).

CHAPTER VIII.

THE JOINT FAMILY.

93. ' Issue' defined ... ..	464
Definition of issue (1087).
R.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION	PAGE
94. Ancestral property defined ... ..	465
Texts on "ancestral property" (1038). What is ancestral property (1040). Property inherited from father (1042). Accretions to such property (1043-1044).
95. "Joint property" defined ... ..	467
Difference between "Joint property", "Joint family property", and "Joint ancestral property." (1045-1047) Apratibbandh and Sapratibbandh (1048-1050) Meaning of ancestral property (1052).
96. "Self-acquired property" defined. ... ..	470
Texts on self-acquired property (1053-1054). Early cases on the subject (1056). What is a self-acquisition (1057). Obstructed heritage (1058). Acquisition by gift or devise (1060). Personal gifts (1061). Property acquired without detriment to family estate (1062). Gains of science (1063-1065). Acquisition by unaided effort (1066-1067). Accretion to self-acquired property (1068). Blended property (1069-1070).
97. "Legal necessity" defined ... ..	478
Definition of legal necessity (1071). What is legal necessity (1073). Father's debts (1074-1076). Debts recoverable from the estate (1077). Government revenue (1078). Maintenance of co-parceners and their family (1079). Marriage expenses of members (1080) Performance of ceremonies (1082-1083). Cost of litigation (1084-1085). Expenses of defence of members (1086).
98. "Benefit" defined ... ..	483
Benefit to the estate (1087). What is a benefit (1088-1090).
99. Constitution of Hindu family ... ..	485
Constitution of a joint family (1091-1092).
100. "Co-parcenary" and "Co-parcener" defined ... ..	486
What is a co-parcenary (1093-1096). Who are co-parceners (1097-1100). Co-parcenary of several families (1101-1103). Females excluded (1104) Disqualified co-parceners (1105).
101. No Co-parcenary by contract ... ..	490
Co-parcenary, a creature of law (1106). Cannot be created by contract (1106).
102. Normal state of Hindu family ... ..	491
Normal state of Hindu family is joint (1107-1108). Presumption of joint ownership of family property (1109). Presumption of continuance of joint status (1110-1113). Presumptions of acquisitions being joint family property (1114-1116). Presumption of jointness and joint estate (1117-1119). Presumption applicable only to normal (1120). No presumption that joint family possesses joint family property (1121). Presumption of union (1122). Evidence in rebuttal (1123). Mutation and purchase in separate names (1124). Separation in mess and residence (1125-1126). Separate possession of properties (1127). S. 110 Evidence Act (1128). Presumption where partial separation admitted (1129). Law regarding self-acquisition (1130-1131). Property jointly acquired (1132) No Property treated as joint (1133- 1137). Grants by Government, if and when joint family property (1138). Impartible estates (1139-1142) Accretions to the estate (1143). Hereditary offices (1144).

SECTION	PAGE
103. Co-parcener's acquisition presumed joint ... ..	507
Acquisitions by manager of joint family (1145). Acquisitions by other members presumed to be joint (1146). Presumption and mode of proof (1147). Property standing in the name of a non-co-parcener (1148-1149). Dayabhag families (1150).
104. Co-parcenary manager ... ..	510
The manager of a co-parcenary (1151).
105. Manager's powers ... ..	510
Texts on the powers of a manager (1152). Legal position of a manager (1153-1156). Rights of manager (1157-1159). Individual capacity of manager (1155). Manager's right to possession (1157-1158). Manager not accountable for income (1159). Unless guilty of fraud (1160). Liability to account under agreement (1161). Liability to account for admitted assets (1162). Debts contracted by manager (1163-1164). Proof of binding character of the debts against co-parcenary (1165-1166). Liability of other members for debt (1167). Alienation for family necessity (1168-1169). Consent of other co-parceners if essential (1170). Grounds for setting aside alienation (1170-1171). Manager's contracts (1172). Right to discharge debtor from liability (1173). Power to compromise or refer to arbitration (1174-1176). Acknowledgment of debts (1177). Barred debts, cannot be acknowledged (1178-1180). Exception in the case of the father (1178). Right of manager to sue on behalf of the family (1181-1183). Manager, de facto guardian (1184).
106. Powers of other manager ... ..	523
Powers of manager under Dayabhag and Mitakshara law (1185). Position of guardian of a minor's estate, manager of religious endowment and of the manager of a lunatic (1186).
107. Gift by manager ... ..	524
Texts on manager's right to make gifts (1187). Limits of the power to make gifts (1188). Parent's gift (1189). Gift of manager's share of the property in favour of one co-parcener (1190). Gift by manager with consent of all co-parceners (1190). Gifts by other co-parcener (1191). Gift for maintenance (1192). Quantum of gift (1193). Gift to be reasonable (1194). Gift when set aside (1195). Formalities of a gift (1196). Restriction of manager's powers by agreement (1197-1198).
108. Father's additional powers ... ..	529
Texts on the father's powers (1199). Liability of sons for father's debts (1200-1202). Nature and extent of the liability (1202). Additional powers of father acting as manager (1203-1207). Antecedent debts (1208-1211). Father's illegal or immoral debts (1212). What is an illegal debt (1213-1216). What are immoral debts (1217-1218). Father's promise to pay barred debts (1219-1220). Father's suretyship (1221).
109. Co-parcener's rights inter se . ... ..	538
Rights of Co-parceners inter se . (1223). Right of partition (1223). Right to joint possession (1224-1225). Building on common land (1226). Injunction to restrain, when granted (1227-1228). Separate allotment for convenience (1229). Power to restrain improper acts of manager or other member (1230-1231). Right to impeach alienations of joint family property (1232). Maintenance (1233). Right of alienation (1234). Texts on the subject (1234). Madras view (1236-1239). Bombay cases (1240). C. P. cases (1241). Bengal, U. P. and the Punjab (1242). Equities on setting aside alienation (1243-1244). Transfer of co-parcenary interest (1245-1250). Present state of the law (1251). Involuntary transfer (1252-1253) Transfer with consent of co-parceners (1254-1255). Cancellation of alienation (1256). Interest of co-parcener variable (1258) No right to share of profits (1259). Self-acquisition, right to (1260).

SECTION	PAGE
110. Manager's fraud ... .. 574
The fraud of a manager (1261),
111. Trading family ... .. 574
Law governing trading families (1262). Liability of members inter se (1263-1264). Representation by manager (1265). Right to manage (1267). Powers of manager (1263-1269). Right to pledge family credit (1270-1271). Liability of family assets for transactions of manager (1272). Manager not accountable for past profits (1273) Major and minor members equally liable (1274-1275). Fraud of manager (1276). Manager's right of suit (1277). Exception where only some members trade (1278). Rule of Hindu Law applicable to Kutchi Memons (1279).

CHAPTER IX.

DAYABHAG JOINT FAMILY.

112. Dayabhag family with father as head ... .. 582
Constitution of Dayabhag family (1280). Rights of sons as against the father (1281) Right to maintenance, limits of (1281). No estoppel (1282).
113. Other Dayabhag families ... .. 583
Right of members of a Dayabhag family (1283-1284). Right of member to alienate his share (1285). Rights of women in the co-parcenary (1286). Presumption of joint acquisition in Dayabhag family (1287).

CHAPTER X.

DEBTS.

114. Debt defined ... .. 585
Analogous law (1289-1290).
115. Debts of husband and wife ... .. 586
Liability of husband and wife for debts of each other (1291). Implied agency (1292). Debt incurred for necessities (1292).
116. Liability for personal debts ... .. 587
Analogous law (1293). Liability of co-parcener for personal debts (1294). Mortgage by co-parcener of his share, if valid (1295-1296). Liability for father's debt (1297-1298). Father's illegal and immoral debts (1299). Evidence of illegality or immorality (1800-1801). Burden of Proof (1800-1805). Father's imprudent debts (1802). Debt partially valid (1803) Father's power over ancestral moveables (1804). Liability to pay interest on debts (1806). Position of assignee of the debt (1807). Limitation for enforcing liability against son (1808).
117. Son's liability limited to inherited assets ... .. 594
Limits of son's liability (1809). Liability confined to inherited assets (1810).

SECTION	PAGE
118. Son not liable after separation ... ..	595
Analogous law (1311).
119. When the son is personally liable ... ..	595
Analogous law (1312). Pious obligation of son on father's death (1313).
Cause of action against the son when arises (1314-1315).
120. Heir's liability to pay predecessor's debts ... ..	596
Analogous law (1316). Liability of holder of impartible estate (1317).
Liability of widow for debts of husband (1318-1319). Liability of other heirs (1320). Liability of donees for debts of donor (1321).
121. Bona fide transaction with manager ... ..	599
Analogous law (1322). Title of creditor or alienee (1323). Necessity for enquiry (1324). Nature and extent of enquiry (1325-1326). Notice of facts, what constitutes (1327). Value of recitals (1328). Value of attestation (1329). Quantum of evidence necessary to support justifying necessity (1330). Excessive alienations (1331).
122. Effect of invalid transfer ... ..	603
Analogous law (1332). Differences between the courts (1333). Different equities in voluntary and involuntary transfers (1334-1336).
123. Creditor's suit against the son ... ..	606
Analogous law (1337). Liability of inherited property in the hands of son (1338-1339). Onus on son impeaching decree on father's debt to show illegality or immorality (1341).
124. Mortgagee's suit against co-parceners ... ..	608
Analogous law (1342). Mortgagee's suit against co-parceners (1343). Proof of necessity (1344-1345). Effect of absence of justifying circumstances (1346-1349).
125. Joinder of parties ... ..	609
Analogous law (1350). Parties to a suit on a mortgage executed by manager (1351). Right of co-parceners to join the suit (1352).
126. Burden where purchaser is in possession ... ..	610
Analogous law (1355). Burden of proof where purchaser is in possession (1355).
127. Effect of decree against the manager ... ..	612
Analogous law (1356-1358). Effect of decree against manager (1359). Right of other members to contest authority of manager or character of debt (1360-1361). What passes under an execution sale of the right, title and interest of manager (1361-1362). Pleadings to be examined (1363-1364). Character of the debt (1365-1366). Mortgage debts (1367). Fraud of father (1368).
128. Rule of Damdupat ... ..	617
Texts on liability for interest (1369). Rule of Damdupat (1370-1372). Rule when applicable (1372). Rule applicable only to Hindu debtor (1373).

CHAPTER XI.

PARTITION.

129. Partition defined ... ..	622
Texts on the subject (1377). Partition of revenue paying estate (1378). What is partition (1380). Intention essential (1381-1383, 1384). Severance in interest (1881). Declaration of intention (1882). Division of rights (1885). Effect of institution of a suit (1882-1886) Minor's suit (1888). Dayabhag law distinguished (1889).

SECTION	PAGE
130. Family arrangement ... ..	629
Distinction between partition and family arrangement (1890). Law Governing family arrangements (1891-1895). Effect of release (1897).
131. When a family arrangement may be set aside ... ..	632
Family arrangement when liable to be set aside (1898). Mistake of parties not a sufficient ground (1405). Extraneous consideration not requisite (1400-1401). Antecedent rights immaterial (1402) Unfair arrangement (1403) Unilateral mistake (1405). Arrangement when set aside (1407). Effect of conduct and actings of the parties (1408). Release when operative as family arrangement (1409).
132. Whom the family arrangements bind ... ..	637
Analogous law. (1411).
133. Form to effect a partition ... ..	637
Registration necessary if arrangement is in writing (1412). Oral partition, valid (1413). What documents require registration (1414-1418). Effect of non-registration (1419).
134. Persons entitled to partition ... ..	640
Persons entitled to claim partition (1420-1422). Rule of equal division (1423). Father's power to effect a partition (1427). Co parcener's right to partition (1428). Partition as against grandfather (1429-1430). Minor Co-parcener (1438). Illegitimate sons, when entitled to partition (1433-1435). Adopted son (1436). Disqualified heir (1437). Absent co-parcener (1439). Rights of after-born son (1440-1442).
135. Co-widow's right to partition ... ..	646
Interest of widows in husband's property (1444). Right of co-widows to partition (1445-1446). Effect of partition among co-widows (1447). Right of donee from co-widow to claim partition (1449). Effect of partition on right of survivorship among co-widows (1450).
136. Female shares in partition ... ..	648
Rights of females on a family partition (1451). Texts on the subject (1452). Rights of unmarried daughters and sisters (1453-1461). Wife's share on partition (1456). Rights of mother (1456-1459). Rights of grand-mother (1460). Usage in Southern India (1462-1463).
137. When partition refused ... ..	653
Agreement against partition, how far binding (1464-1465). Bar to partition (1464). Family arrangement (1467). Prior partition (1468). Relinquishment (1469).
138. Partial partition ... ..	655
Partial partition not recognised by texts (1470). Partial partition when refused (1471). Partial partition permitted (1472-1474). Partial partition between co-parceners (1475-1476). Effect of partial partition (1476). Case for partial partition (1477). Statutory modification of Hindu Law rule against partial partition (1478-1480). Partial partition allowed where indispensable (1481). Or where co-parcener affirms alienation (1482). Suit for partial partition between stranger alienees (1486). Or where only a portion of joint property is left undivided (1487). Partition of omitted items (1489). Legal effect of partial partition (1490).

SECTION	PAGE
139. Distribution of Shares ... ..	663
Texts on the subject of distribution of shares on partition (1491). Partition between brothers (1493). Division per stirpes and per capita (1495-1497, 1500-1502). After-born son (1498).
140. Proof of Separation ... ..	668
Analogous law (1503). Agreement to hold shares separately (1503). Intention, the test of partition (1505). Cesser of commensality (1507). Cesser of joint worship (1508-1510). Relationship of parties (1511). Duration of separate living etc (1511). Separate enjoyment (1513). Appropriation of profits (1514). Agreement to divide (1515). Dismemberment of shares (1516-1517). Independent dealings (1518). Stranger's seizure inaffectual (1519). Purchase in individual names (1520). Conversion of Co-parcener to alien faith (1522). Intention not effective to create severance, unless unequivocally expressed (1524). Exclusion of co parcener (1525). Evidence of exclusion (1526-1527).
141. Parties to partition ... ..	679
Analogous law (1528). All sharers to be impleaded (1528-1529). Necessary parties (1530). Unnecessary parties (1531). Mortgagee of joint family property, not a necessary party (1532). Lessee, when a necessary party (1533).
142. Suit for partition ... ..	682
• Analogous law (1534). Partition must be exhaustive (1535). Property outside the jurisdiction of the court (1536). Procedure in partition suits (1537-1539).
143. Mode of partition ... ..	684
Analogous law (1540). Adjustment of equities (1541). Partition of religious office (1542-1543). Service inam (1544). Costs of suit (1545). The partition Act (1546).
143. (A)—Mutual non-liability to account ... ..	690
Partition decreed with reference to existing assets (1547). Right to means profits when a les (1548). Accounts of private dealings (1549).
144. Provision for debts, maintenance and ceremonies ... ..	692
Provision for family charges on a partition (1550). Family debts (1551). Upanayan and marriage of co-parceners etc. (1552-1553). Ceremonial expenses (1554).
145. Equities on distribution of shares ... ..	694
Analogous law (1555). Maintenance of the Status quo (1556). Compensation for improvements (1557). Choice of property (1558). Meaning of improvements (1559). Division into compact and convenient shares (1560). Good faith (1561). Transferee protected (1562). Owelty (1563).
146. Whom a partition binds ... ..	697
Re-opening of partition when allowed (1564-1565). Fraud, misrepresentation or mistake (1566). Acquiescence, effect of (1567).
147. All property must be placed into the hotchpot ... ..	699
Partition to be exhaustive of all joint property (1568). Joint property to be brought into hotchpot (1568). Joint property improperly alienated (1569). Right of defendant to a decree (1570).

SECTION	PAGE
148. Presumption of complete partition ... ..	700
Analogous law (1571). Limits of the rule (1572).
149. Right of absent and disqualified co-parceners to re-partition ...	701
Right to re-open partition in certain cases (1573) Texts on the subject (1573-1575). Son in the womb at the date of partition, but born subsequently (1575). Son subsequently born (1576). Absent co parcener (1577). Disqualified co-parcener (1578). Son born after partition, effect of (1579).
150 Decree for partition ... ..	703
Analogous law (1580). Preliminary decree (1580). Appointment of Commissioner (1580). Partition by Collector (1580) Final decree (1581) Effect of final decree (1582). Variation of shares (1583).
151 Re-union after partition ... ..	705
Texts on re-union (1584). Who may re unite (1585-1587). Proof of re-union (1588). Minor incompetent to re-unite (1589).
152 Succession amongst re-united relations ... ..	707
Texts on succession among re-united co-parceners (1590). Effect of re-union (1591). Re-union, a ground of preference (1591). Competition between divided full brother and re-united half brother (1592).
153 Burden of proving re-union ... ..	709
Analogous law (1593).

CHAPTER XII

IMPARTIBLE ESTATE.

154. Incidents of impartible estate ... ..	710
Analogous law (1597-1598). Single holder (1599). Proof of impartibility (1600). Impartibility by law (1601-1606) By grant (1607-1611). Custom (1612-1618) Origin of impartible estates (1619-1620). Effect of confiscation and re-grant (1624-1625). Jagirs (1621-1623). Ghatwals (1626-1628). Saranjams (1629). Vatanis (1630-1631). Polliam (1632). Impartible rights (1633). Personal property of impartible holder (1634). Holder, the sole owner (1635). Succession by primogeniture determined by personal law (1636-1638) Liability of successor for debts of previous holder (1639-1643). Case law on the subject (1640-1641). Successor has only a spes successionis (1644). Right of members to maintenance (1645). Maintenance grants (1646-1648). Their incidents (1647-1648). Discontinuance of service in service estates (1649).
155. Inalienable estate ... ..	730
Impartible estate, not necessarily inalienable (1650). Custom or tenure, proof of (1651). Alienation for necessity (1651).
156. Acquisitions and accretions ... ..	730
Acquisitions by holder of impartible estate (1652). Incorporation with the impartible estate, evidence of (1652). Succession to acquisitions (1653).
157. Property is presumably partible ... ..	731
Presumption of partibility and alienability of property (1654). Impartibility or inalienability to be pleaded and proved (1655).

SECTION

PAGE

CHAPTER XIII.

SUCCESSION TO IMPARTIBLE ESTATE.

158. Succession to impartible estate	...	...	...	733
Succession to impartible estate (1658-1660). Primogeniture (1659). General and lineal primogeniture (1660). Succession under Mitakshara law (1660-1661). Dayabhag law (1662). Tests of preference among rival heirs (1663). Order of succession under Mitakshara law (1665- 1666). Right of illegitimate sons of Sudras (1666). Interest of junior members, merely a spec successionis (1667). Position of females (1668). Dayabhag succession (1669). Meaning of primogeniture (1670).

CHAPTER XIV.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

159. Definition of property	...	...	...	740
Property defined (1675). Idol, both a person and property under Hindu law (1676-1681). Malikana and Nankar (1682). Emoluments of office (1682). Claim for maintenance (1682).
160. Inalienable property	...	...	...	743
Which property is inalienable (1683). Spec successionis (1684). Res extra            commercium (1683). Co-parcenary interest how far alienable (1686). Maintenance grant (1687). Personal grant (1688).
161. Repugnant condition	...	...	...	744
Restraint on alienation invalid (1689). Provision for enjoyment of profits only (1690). Conditions void for remoteness (1691). Valid conditions (1692).
162. Rule against perpetuity	...	...	...	746
Rule against perpetuity in Hindu law (1693-1695). Gift to unborn persons (1696). Religious and charitable gifts excepted (1697).
163. Accumulations	...	...	...	747
Scope of the rule against accumulations (1698). Rule applicable only to self-acquired property (1698). Limits to the period for which accumu- lation can be directed (1698).
164. Election	...	...	...	749
Principle of election applicable to Hindu law (1699). Rule of equity and justice (1699).
165. Transfer or devise of self-acquired property	...	...	...	750
Analogous law (1700).
166. Power of the manager, trustee, guardian, shebait, female heir to transfer	...	...	...	750
Legal necessity (1701). Benefit (1701). Powers of manager, trustee, guardian, etc., to alienate property (1701). Powers of father of a joint Hindu family (1701). Alienation by female limited owner (1701).

SECTION	PAGE
---------	------

CHAPTER XV

TRUSTS AND BENAMI TRANSACTIONS.

167.	Form of trust ... ..	752
	Public trust, how created (1702). Formalities for creation of a private trust (1702). Imperfect gifts not to be converted into a trust (1703).
168.	Trusts valid and void ... ..	753
	Trust valid only if object lawful (1704). Applicability of English law (1705).
169.	Benami transfer ... ..	754
	Benami transfers common in India (1709). Nature of benami transactions. (1710)
170.	Proof of benami ... ..	755
	Evidence and proof of benami (1711). Tests for ascertaining benami character (1711). Purchase in the name of relations (1711, 1716). No presumption in favour of benami (1712-1713). Badges of benami (1714). Oral evidence admissible to prove benami character (1715). Father and son, acquisitions by one in the name of the other (1717).

CHAPTER XVI.

GIFTS AND GRANTS.

171.	Who may make a gift ... ..	759
	Power to make gifts (1719). Texts on the subject (1719-1728). History of the law (1719-1723). Father's powers of gift (1725). Father's unqualified power of disposal of his self-acquired property (1726).
172.	Gift how made ... ..	762
	Formalities of a gift (1727). Statutory requirements (1728). Delivery of possession not essential (1729). Gift to a class (1730-1731).
173.	Transfer in favour of unborn person ... ..	763
	Hindu law as to transfers in favour of unborn person (1732-1733). Statutory modifications of the rule (1732-1733). The Tagore case (1733).
174.	Gift or devise to unborn person ... ..	766
	Analogous law (1734). Historical retrospect (1736). Modification of Hindu law by legislation (1736-1737). The Hindu Disposition of Property Act (1738). Its scope (1739). Exception in favour of religious and charitable endowments (1734-1735). Texts of Hindu Law (1735). Religious endowment (1740). Gift to idol (1741). Charities (1742). Gift to Brahmins excepted (1743).
175.	Conditional gift or devise... ..	771
	Gifts with conditions (1744). Gift irrevocable when once made (1745).

CHAPTER XVII.

WILLS.

176.	"Will" and "Codicil" defined ... ..	773
	Definition of "will" and "Codicil" (1748-1749). Pre-requisites of a will (1750). Legal declaration relating (1751-1752). Will distinguished from gift (1753). Construction of will (1754). English rules of construction inapplicable (1754).

SECTION	PAGE
177. Who may make a will ... .. 776
Wills can be made by whom (1755). Power of bequest (1756). What property can be bequeathed (1757-1759).
178. Form of will ... .. 777
Form of will (1760-1761). Form immaterial, if intention clear (1762-1765). Nuncupative will (1766).
179. Power defined ... .. 780
Definition of 'power' (1767). Recognition of 'powers' in Hindu law (1767). English law on 'powers' (1768). Divisions of powers, general and special (1769-1771). Creation and exercise of powers (1772-1776).
180. Proof of will ... .. 783
Proof of will (1777-1778). Nuncupative will to be strictly proved (1779-1780). Character of the dispositions (1780). Loss of will (1781).
181. Revocation of will ... .. 785
Revocation of will (1782). Formalities if necessary (1782-1785). Intention to revoke, essential (1784). Effect of marriage, and birth or adoption of a son (1787). Presumption of revocation from loss of will (1788-1789).
182. Will when void ... .. 788
Void wills (1790). Invalidating circumstances (1790). Free will of a testator essential (1791). Force or fraud renders will void (1792). Undue influence (1793-1796).
183. Burden of proof ... .. 791
of proving will on person propounding (1797-1798). Disposing of mind of testator (1799-1801). Proof of sound disposing state mind (1802-1804). Effect of pressure (1805).

CHAPTER XVIII.

CONSTRUCTION OF GIFTS AND WILLS.

184. Construction of Indian deeds ... .. 795
Indian deeds how construed (1806). Technical rules of construction to be avoided (1807). Invalid disposition of property (1808).
185. Grant or bequest conveys grantor's entire interest ... .. 796
Analogous law (1809).
186. Gift to female relation ... .. 797
Gift to females (1810). Presumption of limited estate (1810-1814). Grant to wife or widow (1815) Grant to daughter (1816-1817) Gift to co-parceners (1818). Gift to several donees (1819). Donatio Mortis Causa (1820).
187. Void gift and devise ... .. 801
Void gift and devise (1821)

SECTION	PAGE
188. Gift to a class ... ..	802
Gift or devise to a class (1822). Effect where some cannot take (1822-1823). English and Indian law (1824). Hindu law rules (1826). Law as to remoteness (1825).
189. Construction of will ... ..	806
Construction of Hindu wills (1828, 1829). Formalities necessary (1835). Construction of general words (1837). Extrinsic evidence when admissible (1838, 1839). Bequest void for uncertainty (1840). Quantum of bequest (1841-1845). Charitable bequests liberally (construed) 1846, 1847). Bequest void where object of charity is uncertain (1848, 1849).
190. Extrinsic evidence when admissible ... ..	811
Extrinsic evidence inadmissible to vary terms of will, etc., (1850). Evidences admissible to remove latent ambiguity (1850). Provisions of the statute law on the subject (1851).
191. Evidence of surrounding circumstances admissible ... ..	812
Surrounding circumstances admissible (1852).
192. Construction of will ... ..	813
Benignant construction (1853). Construction so as to effectuate intention of testator (1854).
193. Cypres doctrine ... ..	814
Cypres doctrine (1855). Operation of doctrine, limited to religious and charitable bequests (1855). Application of the doctrine (1856-1857). Power of court to settle a scheme (1858). Essence of a charitable bequest (1859). Subject of charitable bequest to be certain (1860). What are valid objects of a charitable bequest (1862-1863). Bequest void for uncertainty of object (1864-1867).
194. Construction of words ... ..	818
Construction of words in popular sense (1868). General words judicially recognised to have a technical meaning (1868, 1869). Gift of rents and profits (1870).
195. Construction of technical terms ... ..	820
Technical terms to be construed in their legal sense (1872). But may be varied by context (1872). Technical terms in vogue in India (1872-1876).
196. Construction must be uniform ... ..	822
Construction must be uniform (1877). Same words presumed to have the same sense, in the absence of contrary intention (1878).
197. All words must be considered. ... ..	824
All words to be considered (1880). No part to be rejected if reasonable construction possible (1880).
198. Construction must be benignant ... ..	824
Construction against intestacy (1882). Rule as to benignant construction (1882).
199. Subsequent events ignored ... ..	825
Time when will takes effect (1883). Property acquired after execution of will (1883). Devisees born after testator's death (1884).

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxi

SECTION	PAGE
200. Effect of operative part ... ..	826
Partial operation of will (1886) Effect of operative part (1886). Bequest to several persons of whom some cannot take (1886).
201. Devise to female.. ... ..	827
Devise to female relations (1887). Presumption of limited estate (1888). Words indicating absolute estate (1888-1891). Nature of estate where donee is the wife (1892) Different views on the subject (1892-1895). Gift without words of limitation (1897).
202. Probate ... ..	831
Effect of grant of probate (1898). Questions to be decided by probate Court (1898). Mode of enquiry (1898). Position of executor (1899).

CHAPTER XIX.

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.

203. Endowment defined ... ..	834
Hindu texts on endowments (1902). Pious gifts commended by early Hindu law (1903). Essentials of a valid endowment (1906-1908) Dedication of property to religious or charitable uses (1905-1907) Subject and object to be certain (1908). Dedication, partial and complete (1908-1910). Absolute dedication (1911) Gift to an idol (1912). Endowment and bequest distinguished (1913).
204. Religious and charitable endowments defined ... ..	839
Objects of endowments (1914). History of Hindu endowments (1915).
205. Public and private religious endowment ... ..	840
Public and private endowment (1917). Differences between them (1917) Test of public endowment (1918).
206. Form of endowment ... ..	841
Form of endowment (1919). Oral endowment valid (1920). Express words not necessary (1921). Creation of trust unnecessary (1923). Mode of subsequent dealing with property immaterial if dedication established (1924-1925). Registration, when necessary (1926).
207. Subject of endowment ... ..	844
Subject of endowment (1928). Intangible property (1929).
208. Operation of endowment ... ..	845
Operation of endowment (1930). Question of intention (1930).
209. Vesting of the endowment ... ..	845
Vesting of the endowment (1931). Gift to idol or muth (1931) Position of shebait or manager (1932).
210. Endowment in favour of non-existing object ... ..	846
Effect of endowments in favour of non-existing object (1934).

SECTION	PAGE
211. Illusory and void endowment ... ..	847
Illusory and void endowments (1985). Evasion of law (1986). Fraud on creditors (1989). Substantial bequest to charity necessary (1989).
212. Invalid endowment ... ..	849
Invalid endowment (1940)
213. Endowment when revocable ... ..	850
Endowment irrevocable, if once completed (1941). Difference in the case of endowment to a family idol (1942).
214. Who may be appointed manager ... ..	851
Question for managership of endowment (1944). Eligibility dependent on the nature of the endowment (1944). Married man (1945). Females (1946-1947). Qualification of manager (1948).
215. Appointment and succession of manager ... ..	852
Right of management of endowment (1949). Right of founder and his heirs (1950). Who are the founders (1951). Appointment by court (1952).
216. Manager's right of alienation ... ..	854
Manager's rights of alienation (1953). Power of manager analogous to that of guardian of infant or widow (1954). Alienation of corpus when justified (1955-1956). Personal remedy of creditor against manager (1957). Legal necessity or benefit (1958-1959). Powers of head of a mutt (1960). Meaning of "necessity" (1961). Benefit (1962-1968). Partition of endowment if permissible (1964). Exchange of properties (1965). Power of manager to grant leases (1966). Compensation money to be invested, on compulsory acquisition of land (1967). Decree against manager when binding on the trust (1968). Powers of de facto manager (1970). Legal status of shabait , Mahant and Dharmakarta (1971). Setting aside improper alienations (1972). Burden of proof of necessity justifying alienation (1973).
217. Manager's office how far transferable ... ..	862
Manager's office inalienable (1974). Transfer of private endowment (1975). Alienation allowed to a limited extent by custom (1976-1977). Limits of allowable custom (1978). Decree against manager binds institution (1979). Adverse possession against manager affects trust (1980). Mutts: Their origin and history (1981-1983). Position of Mahant or Matathipathi (1984-1986). Succession to Mahantship (1987) Gossains and Sanyasis (1988).
218. Manager's duties ... ..	869
Duties of manager (1989). Founder's directions to be carried out (1990). Manager's general powers (1991). Management by rotation of co-trustees (1992). Right of worshippers (1995). Duty of manager to observe customary usages of the institution (1996-1998). Possession of endowment to be with manager (1999). Possession of manager not adverse to beneficiaries (1998). Manager's authority over servants (2000-2001). Duty of manager to keep accounts (2002-2003). Duty of manager to receive votive offerings (2004). Manager's right of suit (2005). Effect of a compromise (2007). Manager's right of reimbursement for out of pocket expenses (2008).
219. Removal of Manager. ... ..	876
Removal of manager from office (2009). Grounds for removal (2009-2013). Dismissal when justified (2010). Fraud or dishonest misappropriation

SECTION	PAGE
(2009). Omission to keep accounts (2009). Lunacy (2011.) Immortality (2012). Assertion of private ownership (2013). Procedure for removal (2014),
220. Rights and duties of beneficiaries	... 878
Rights of beneficiaries (2015). Who are beneficiaries (2016) Private endowments (2017-2019).
221. Statutory control	... 880
Statutory Control of public religious and charitable endowments (2020). History of the legislation (2020-2024). Scheme of the Rel. End. Act (2025). Provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (2026-2030). Suits under the Common law (2032-2033). Scope of suits under the Rel. End. Act (2034-2036). Misfeasance breach of trust and neglect of duty (2037-2038). Scope of suits under S. 92 C. P. Code (2039). Breach of trust not necessary (2041) Sanction when necessary (2042). Sanction when unnecessary (2044). Necessary parties to the suit (2045). Removal of trustee (2047). Principles guiding courts in removing trustees (2047-2049). Appointment of new trustees (2050). Vesting in a trustee (2051). Accounts and enquiries (2052). Settling a scheme (2053). Other reliefs (2054-2057). The Charitable Endowments Act (2058).

CHAPTER XX.

SUCCESSION BY SURVIVORSHIP.

222. Right of survivorship	... 892
Succession by survivorship (2061). Rule applicable to coparcenary property (2059-2060) Unobstructed heritage (2061). Property acquired with its aid (2061). Property of re-united coparceners (2061). Impartible estate (2063). Right of representation (2064). Acquisition per stripes (2065). Dayabhaga family different (2066).
223. When co-parcenary property devolves on heirs	... 896

CHAPTER XXI

MITAKSHARA INHERITANCE.

224. "Propositus," "Last Full owner," defined	... 901
225. "Sapindas" defined.	... 901
Definition of Sapinda (2088). Texts on the subject (2085-2086). Twofold interpretation of Sapinda (2088). Mitakshara definition (2089, 2092-2096). Classification of Sapindas (2091). Mode of computation (2097).
226. "Gotraj Sapinda" defined	... 905
227. "Bandhus" defined	... 906
Who are bandhus (2099). Historical retrospect (2104-2105). Mode of ascertaining relationship (2109-2110). Mutual Sapindaship essential (2109). What is a bandhu (2111-2112).
228. "Samanodak" defined	... 910
Texts on samanodaka relationship (2113). Bombay view (2113).

SECTION	PAGE
229. "Stridhan" defined	... 911
Text on stridhanam (2114). Property given to a woman (2115). Mitakshara definition of stridhanam in modern Hindu law (2115). What is stridhanam (2116-2118). Law in Bombay (2119).
230. Course of inheritance cannot be altered	... 915
Law of inheritance cannot be altered by subject (2120). Right to devise property (2121). Limits of departure (2122).
231. Heir's right personal	... 916
Rights of heir personal (2123). Rights of issue of disqualified person (2124). Heir succeeds to last owner (2125). Exception in the case of females (2126).
232. Time of vesting	... 918
233. Effect of vesting	... 918
234. Divesting of inheritance	... 919
Inheritance once vested not divested (2129). Exception in the case of adoption (2130). Posthumous son (2131).
235. Spes successionis	... 920
236. Rights of women	... 920
237. Disqualified heirs	... 921
Disqualification for inheritance (2136). Texts on the subject (2136). Blindness, deafness and dumbness (2138). Want of limb or organ (2139). Lunacy or idiocy (2140-2141). Leprosy (2142). Impotency (2143). Unchastity (2145-2147). Re-marriage (2154). Participation in crime (2148-2151). Out-castes (2152). Ascetics (2153). Pleadings and proof regarding exclusion from inheritance (2157).
238. Succession on exclusion of disqualified heir	... 928
Disqualification personal (2158). Right of issue of disqualified person (2159). Maintenance of disqualified heir and his family (2160).

CHAPTER XXII.

ORDER OF THE MITAKSHARA INHERITANCE TO MALES.

239. Classification of Sapindas	... 929
Texts on Mitakshara succession (2161). Table of heirs (2162). Order of succession (2162).
240. Order of succession of heirs	... 931
Texts on the order of succession (2163). Manu's enumeration of heirs (2164). Heirs under the Mitakshara (2164).
241. Right of issue: Succession of Illegitimate Son	... 933
Son the nearest Sapinda (2165). Illegitimate sons (2166-2167). Dasiputra (2168-2170). Share of illegitimate son (2171-2172). Share in competition with other heirs (2172). No right of inheritance to collaterals (2173). Comparison with adopted son (2174-2175). Share of adopted son (2175). Son's son and son's son's son (2176). Widow (2177).

SECTION.	PAGE
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Daughter (2178-2179). Illegitimate daughters (2180). Unchaste and prostitute women (2181). Exclusion of daughters by custom (2182). Daughter's son (2183-2184). Mother (2185) Step-mother (2186). Father (2187) Brother (2188) Effect of re-union (2189). Brother's sons (2190). Bombay rule (2192) Brother's son's son (2193-2194). Paternal grand-mother (2195-2196). Sister in Bombay (2198) Paternal uncle (2199) Paternal uncle's son (2200). Paternal uncle's son's son (2201). Other heirs (2202). Table of remote sapinda heirs (2203-2206)</li> </ul>
242. Order of succession among Samanodaks. ...	950
Analogous law (2208). Who are Samanodaks (2209-2212). Enumeration of Samanodaks (2212)
243. Order of succession amongst bhandus ...	952
Who are the bhandus (2214). Texts on the subject (2213). Division of bhandus into three classes (2215). Ground for preference (2216). Order of enumeration in the texts (2216-2217). Sub-division of bhandus (2218). Intervention of two or more females (2219). Nearer excludes the more remote (2220). Classified order of heritable bandhus (2221). Atma bandhus (2223). Sister's son (2224). Daughter's Daughter's son (2225). Mother's sister's son (2226) Pitri bhandu (2227) Matri bhandus (2228).
244. Special Female heirs in Bombay. ...	962
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Analogous law (2229). Sister (2231). Half-sister (2232). Father's half-sister (2233). Widows of predeceased sapindas (2230). Son's widow (2234). Step-mother (2235). Brother's widow (2236). Brother's son's widow (2237). Paternal uncle's widow (2238). Daughters of descendants (2239).</li> </ul>
245. Madras female heirs. ...	966
Analogous law (2240). Sister (2241). Half-sister (2242) Daughter's daughter (2244). Son's daughter (2243). Brother's daughter (2245) Father's sister (2246). Other heirs (2247) Crown as heir (2248)
246. Hermit's heir. ...	970
Heirs of hermit (2252). Who is a hermit (2253) Mahant (2253) Sanyasi or Yati (2255). Brahmachari (2256).

CHAPTER XXIII

DAYABHAG SUCCESSION.

247. 'Sapinda' defined. ...	972
248. 'Sakulya' defined. ...	972
Who is a Sakulya (2259) Texts on the subject (2258)
249. Heritable property. ...	973
250. Principle governing succession. ...	973
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Analogous law (2261). Shradhs (2262). Parvana Shradh (2263). Relations competent to perform shradh (2264). Definition of Sapinda (2266). Who are sapindas (2267). Enumeration of sapindas (2268-2274). Female sapindas (2275). Sakulyas (2276). Samanodaks (2277).</li> </ul>

SECTION.	PAGE
251. Order of succession among sapindas, etc. . . . .	981
Analogous Law (2279). Tests of preference (2279-2281). Preferences of agnates (2283). Paternal preferred to maternal sapindas (2284-2285). Heir fixed by number of pindas offered (2296) Exception to the rule (2287). Order of heirs (2283). Son, son's son, and son's son's son (2288). Widow (2283-2290) Daughter (2291-2294) Daughter's son (2295). Father (2297) Mother (2298). Brother (2299-2300) Sister (2301). Brother's son (2302). Brother's son's son (2304) Sister's son (2305). Other sapindas (2306-2314). Sakulyas (2315). Samanodaks (2316). Other heirs (2317) Hermit's heir (2318). Inheritance on re-union (2319)
— — —
CHAPTER XXIV.
WOMAN'S ESTATE.
252. Restriction on woman's estate . . . . .	996
Texts on woman's inheritance (2323). Women inherit limited estates (2324). Exception in Bombay (2324). Nature of her interest in property allotted on partition (2325-2326) Legal position of woman inheriting an estate (2327). Widow's position that of an owner, not of a trustee (2328-2329). Divesting of her estate (2330). Forfeiture of estate on re-marriage (2331) Restriction on power of alienation (2332) Reason of the rule (2332). Restriction applies to moveables (2333). Customary rights of widow in Mithila (2335) Power over income and accumulations (2336-2337). Female owners in Bombay (2338-2340). Jain widow (2341). Estate of widow taking under gift or devise (2342).
253. Estate of joint heiresses. . . . .	1006
Analogous law (2343). Joint tenancy in Mitakshara Law (2343). Quasi-severalty in Dayabhag and Mayukh (2343).
254. Accretions. . . . .	1007
Interest in accumulations (2344). Accretion to the estate (2345). Question of accretion one of intention (2346). Widow absolutely entitled to current income (2344) Presumption of accretion (2357). Evidence of accretion (2350). Evidence against accretion (2353) No accretion (2354-2355). Widow's conduct and dispositions (2360).
255. Testamentary incapacity . . . . .	1015
Analogous Law (2361). Consent of reversioner ineffectual (2361). Power over accumulations (2361)
256. Incidents of a woman's estate. . . . .	1015
Analogous Law (2362). Widow as executrix or administratrix (2363). Right to possession of estate (2364). Power to grant leases (2365) Improvident leases voidable by reversioner (2363). Transfer of estate good for life (2371). Her interest attachable (2372)
257. When heiress Ward of Court. . . . .	1018
258. Valid alienation of the estate. . . . .	1018
Analogous Law (2374) Alienations when proper (2374) Legal necessity (2375). Spiritual necessity (2388-2390). Necessity for worldly purposes (2378) Larger power of alienation for husband's religious benefit (2376)

SECTION.

PAGE

Reasonable latitude in management (2378). Alienations for benefit (2380) Shradhs a necessity (2381-2383). Funeral obsequies (2382) Who are competent to perform obsequial rites (2384) Shradhs of relations (2386). Justifiable cost (2387). Spiritual necessity (2388-2389) Religious and pious gifts (2391-2394). Pious acts authorized by owner (2394). Payment of debts (2395-2398). Payment of public charges (2399-2400). Costs of litigation (2401). Preservation and repairs of estate (2402) Self-maintenance (2403-2405) Maintenance of dependants (2406) Marriage gifts (2407). Other ceremonial gifts (2408).
259. Surrender of woman's estate.	... 1031
Right of heiress to surrender or relinquish her estate (2409). Requirements of valid surrender (2409-2410). Surrender to be of entire interest in inherited estate (2411). Prior disposition by heiress not affected (2412). Position of heiress after surrender (2413) Right to her own absolute property, not affected (2413). Surrender and reconveyance (2413). Surrender for consideration (2414-2417). Surrender to be in favour of next reversioner or in favour remote reversioner with the consent of the intermediate reversioner (2418-2419)
260. Presumption of legal necessity.	... 1036
Proof of legal necessity (2420). Consent of reversioner (2421—2423). Whose consent necessary (2420). Presumption of necessity from consent of reversioner (2423) Surrender of estate (2424). Consent and ratification (2425). Consent to be intelligent (2426). Bona fide consent required (2430). No presumption where next reversioner is himself the alienee (2431) Value of recitals in deeds (2429) Recitals as evidence of representations in old alienations (2429) Power to consent not to be delegated (2432) Gift by widow not validated by consent (2433). Consent of female reversioner immaterial (2435). Consent of guardian of minor reversioner (2436) Alienation otherwise valid, not vitiated by absence of proper consent (2437). Estoppel by consent (2438).
— — — — —
CHAPTER XXV.
REVERSIONERS AND THEIR RIGHTS.
261. Reversioner's interest.	... 1046
Analogous Law (2443). Nature of reversioner's right (2443). Spes successionis (2444). Not capable of transfer (2445) Compromise relating to spes successionis (2446-2450). Title of reversioner (2451) Limits of his rights (2454). Estoppel of reversioner (2455).
262. No declaration by reversioner of his rights.	... 1050
Declaratory suits by reversioners (2456). Declaration of reversionary rights not permitted (2456).
263. Prevention of waste, improper acts and alienation.	... 1051
Suit by reversioner to restrain waste (2457—2458). What is waste (2459-2460). Suit for injunction restraining improper alienation (2461). Suit for declaration of invalidity of adoption (2462). Representative character of reversionary suits (2458). Reversioner may oppose probate (2463). Administration suit (2464).
264. Reversioner's suit	... 1054
What reversioner may sue (2465). Preferential right of presumptive reversioner (2466). Right of remote reversioner to continue the suit (2465).

SECTION.	PAGE
Suits to be instituted in a representative capacity (2465) Existence of female reversioner no bar (2467-2468). Minority, collusion, consent of nearer reversioner (2469-2473). Reliefs claimable in such suits (2474-2475). Effect of decision as res-judicata (2476).
265. Alienation for partial necessity. ...	1060
Alienation by heiress for partial necessity (2477). Equities on setting aside (2478). Reversioner liable to pay binding portion of the consideration (2478). Alienation when confirmed (2479) Alienation when set aside (2480).
266. Burden of proof. ...	1061
Onus of proving validity of sale on alienee (2481-2482) Strict proof in case of transfer by purdanashin women (2483).
267. Limitation to avoid an alienation. ...	1063
268. Improper alienation voidable. ...	1063
Analogous Law (2486). Improper alienation only voidable (2486). Mode of avoidance (2487) Institution of suit (2488)
269. Succession of reversioners. ...	1065
270. Reversioner's rights on succession. ...	1065
Analogous law (2490) Rights to accretions and accumulations (2491). Liability to pay compensation (2491) Right to dispute unauthorised acts (2493). Right to continue legal proceedings (2494-2495).
271. His Liabilities. ...	1067
272. Debts of the heiress. ...	1068
Liability of reversioner for debts of the heiress (2498). What debts binding on reversion (2499). Personal claim against widow (2499). Arrears of revenue (2500).
273. Wrongs of the heiress. ...	1069
274. Decree against the heiress. ...	1069
Analogous Law (2502). Decree against heiress when binds reversion (2502). Heiress represents the estate (2503). Cause of action when personal to heiress (2504). Bona-fide litigation essential (2505). Fair trial of the case (2506-2508). Consent decree when binding on reversioners (2508) Unfair trial (2511-2513) Compromise decree against widow (2513-2515). Personal decree against widow (2516). Execution against estate in the hands of the widow (2518-2520) What passes at execution sale (2520). Personal decree (2521).
275. Limitation for possession. ...	1077
Limitation for suit for possession by reversioner (2523) Limitation for suit for recovery of moveables (2524).
CHAPTER XXVI.
STRIDHAN.
276. Stridhan defined. ...	1083
Texts on stridhan (2538). What is Stridhan (2538). Difference between commentators (2538). Modern definition of stridhan (2539).

SECTION.	PAGE
277. What property is stridhan	... 1085
Analogous law (2540-2541) Bombay view (2542) Grants and gifts (2543-2546). Property given for maintenance (2547). Accretions and purchases (2548). Acquisition by adverse possession (2549-2550). Acquisition by self-exertion (2551). Yautak (2552-2554) Ayautak (2553). Sulk (2555) Adhyavedanik (2556-2557). Anwadheyak (2558).
278. Husband's control.	... 1093
Husband's powers over stridhan (2559). Powers over Saudayik stridhan (2561-2562) What is Saudayik stridhan (2559).
279. Succession to maiden's stridhan.	... 1094
Texts on succession to maiden's stridhan (2563). Maiden's heirs (2564-2565).
280. Succession to stridhan of woman with children.	... 1095
Analogous law (2566) Unmarried daughter (2567). Married daughter (2568-2570) Daughter's Daughter (2571) Daughter's son (2572). Son (2573) Grandson (2574) Husband's nearest sapinda (2575).
281. Succession to stridhan of issueless woman.	... 1098
Analogous law (2576). Texts on the subject (2576). Marriage in Brahma form (2577). Stridhan of woman married in Brahma form (2577) Different views as to order of succession (2580-2582). Mithila law (2583). Heirs of Asur Marriage (2584).
282. Devolution of sulk.	... 1103
Heirs to Sulk (2585). Texts on the subject (2585) Mithila law (2587) Dravid departure (2588).
283. Devolution of certain other stridhans.	... 1104
284. Succession to Sulk and Anwadheyak.	... 1105
285. Devolution of stridhan under Dayabhaga Law.	... 1105
Analogous law (2591) Texts of Dayabhaga (2591) Son and betrothed daughter (2592). Married daughter having or who is likely to have issue (2593). Son's son (2594). Daughter's son (2595). Son's son's son (2596) Son of a rival wife (2597). Barren or widowed daughter (2599). Other heirs (2600).
286. Succession to childless women.	... 1107
287. Heirs to property given by the father.	... 1108
288. Heirs to Yautak.	... 1108
289. Disqualified heirs.	... 1109
290. Illegitimacy no bar.	... 1109
Right of illegitimate children to inherit to mother (2605). Prostitute's children (2606). Preference as between degraded and undegraded children (2607).

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS.

---

A.	...	...	Allahabad (Indian Law Reports.)
A. C. J.	...	...	Appellate Civil Jurisdiction.
A. & E.	...	...	Adolphus & Ellis' Reports (1834—1841) (N. S. 1841—1852)
Agra.	...	...	Agra High Court Reports.
A. L. J.	...	...	Allahabad Law Journal
Arub.	...	...	Arubler's Reports (1737—1784.)
App. Cas.	...	...	Law Reports, Appeal Cases.
Atk.	...	...	Atkins' Reports (1736—1754.)
A. W. N.	...	...	Allahabad Weekly Notes.
B.	...	...	Bombay (Indian Law Reports.)
B. & Ad.	...	...	Barnewall and Adolphus' Reports (1830—1834).
B. & Ald.	...	...	Barnewall and Alderson's Reports (1817—1822).
B. & C.	...	...	Barnewall and Cresswell's Reports (1822—1830).
B. & S.	...	...	Best and Smith's Reports (1861—1866).
Bac. Ab.	...	...	Bacon's Abridgment.
Beav.	...	...	Beavan's Reports (1838—1866).
B. H. C. R.	...	...	Bombay High Court Reports (1862—1875).
Bing	...	...	Bingham's Reports (1822—1834).
Bing. N. C.	...	...	Bingham's New Cases (1834—1840).
B. L. R.	...	...	Bengal Law Reports (1866—1876).
Bl. Comm.	...	...	Blackstone's Commentaries.
Bom. L. R.	...	...	Bombay Law Reports
B. P. J.	...	...	Bombay Printed Judgments (1869—1896)
Br. C. C.	...	...	Brown's Chancery Cases (1778—1794).
Brow. & Lush.	...	...	Browning and Lushington's Reports.
Bur. L. R.	...	...	Burmah Law Reports
Bur. L. T.	...	...	Burmah Law Times
C.	...	...	Calcutta (Indian Law Reports)
Camp.	...	...	Campbell's Reports (1807—1816).
C. B. ...	...	...	Common Bench Reports (1845—1856).
C. B. (N. S.)	...	...	Common Bench (New Series) (1856—1865).
C. & J.	...	...	Crompton and Jerira's Reports (1830—1832).
Ch.	...	...	Chapter.
C. L. R.	...	...	Calcutta Law Reports (1877—1883)
C. & M.	...	...	Crompton and Meson's Reports (1832—1834).
C. M. & R.	...	...	Crompton, Meson and Roscoe's Reports (1834—1835)
C. & P.	...	...	Crompton and Payne's Reports.
Ch. C. C.	...	...	Cases in Chancery (1660—1668).
Ch. R.	...	...	Reports in Chancery (1616—1712).
Cowp.	...	...	Cowper's Reports (1774—1778).
Co. Litt.	...	...	Coke upon Littleton.
Coll.	...	...	Colles (House of Lords) (1697—1714).
C. & P.	...	...	Carvington and Payne's Reports (1823—1841).
C. L. J.	...	...	Calcutta Law Journal
C. P. L. R.	...	...	Central Provinces Law Reports (1866—1904).
C. P. D.	...	...	Law Reports Common Pleas Division.
Cowp.	...	...	Cowper's Reports (1774—1778).
Cr. J.	...	...	Crompton and Jervi's Reports (1830—1832).
Cr. M. ...	...	...	Crompton and Meeson (1832—1834).
Cr. M. & R.	...	...	Crompton, Meeson and Moxoe's Reports (1834—1836).
C. W. N.	...	...	Calcutta Weekly Notes
D. & C.	...	...	Deacon and Chitty's Reports (1832—1835).
De G. & J.	...	...	De Gex, and Jones' Reports (1862—1865).
D. M. and G.	...	...	De. Gex, Macnaghten and Gordons Reports (1851—1857)
De G. & S.	...	...	De Gex and Smale's Reports (1846—1852).
Datt. Ob.	...	...	Dattak Chandrika.
Datt. Min.	...	...	Dattak Mimamsa.

De G. F. & J. ...	De Gex, Fisher and Jones' Reports (1859-1862).
De G. J. & S. ...	DeGex, Jones, and Smith's Reports (1862-1866).
De G. M. & G. ...	DeGex, Macnaghten and Gordon's Reports (1851-1857).
Dick ...	Dicken's Reports (1559-1798).
Dig. ...	Morley's Digest.
Doug. ...	Douglas's Reports (1778-1784).
Dowl. ...	Dowling's Reports (1830-1840).
Dowl. (N. S.) ...	Dowling's Reports (New Series) (1841-1842).
Dowl. & L. ...	Dowling and Lounde's Reports (1843-1849).
Dr. ...	Drewry's Reports (1852-1859).
Drl & W. ...	Drewry and Warren's Reports (1841-1843.)
Drew. ...	Drewry's Reports (1852-1859).
Drew. & S. ...	Drewry and Smale's Reports (1859-1865).
Durn & E. ...	Durnford and East Reports (1785-1800).
East. ...	East's Reports (1800-1812)
E. & B. ...	Ellis and Blackburn's Reports (1852-1858).
E. B. & E. ...	Ellis, Blackburn and Ellis Reports (1858).
Ed. ...	Edition.
E. and E. ...	Ellis, and Ellis' Reports (1858-1861).
Eq. Ca. Ab. ...	Equity Cases Abridged (1853-1855).
Esp. ...	Espinasse's Reports (1793-1807).
Ev. A. ...	Evidence Act
Exoh. ...	Exchequer Reports (1848-1856).
Ex. D. ...	Law Reports Exchequer Division
F. B. ...	Full Bench.
Fin. ...	Finch's Reports (1673-1681).
Free ...	Freeman's Reports (Ch.) (1660-1706).
Giff. ...	Giffard's Reports (1857-1865).
Hare ...	Hare's Reports (1841-1853).
H. & C. ...	Hurlstone and Coltman's Reports (1862-1866).
H. & M. ...	Hemming and Miller's Reports (1862-1865).
H. & N. ...	Hurlstone and Norman's Reports (1856-1862).
H. B. L. ...	Henry Blackstone's Reports (1788-1796).
H. L. ...	Hindu Law.
H. L. C. ...	Clark's House of Lords Cases (1847-1866).
Hals. L. E. ...	Halsbury's Laws of England.
Holt. N. S. ...	Holt's Nisi Prius Reports (1815-1817).
Holt. Eq. ...	Holt's Nisi Equity Reports (1688-1711).
I. C. ...	Indian Cases.
I. D. (O. S.) ...	Indian Decisions Old Series.
Imp. Gaz. ...	Imperial Gazetteer of India.
Ir. ...	Irish
Ir. Eq. R. ...	Irish Equity Reports.
I. J. ...	Indian Jurist.
I. J. (N. S.) ...	Indian Jurist (New Series).
J. & H. ...	Johnson and Hemmings Reports (1859-1862).
Jur. ...	Jurist (1837-1854).
Jur. (N. S.) ...	Jurist (New Series.) (1855-1856).
Kay & J. ...	Kay and Johnson's Reports (1854-1859).
Keen ...	Keen's Reports (1886-1888).
Keb. ...	Kemble's Reports (1661-1679).
Kn. ...	Knapp's Reports (P. C.) (1829-1836).
Leon. ...	Leonard's Reports (1553-1615).
L. J. ...	Law Journal Reports (1823-1831).
L. J. (N. S.) ...	Law Journal Reports, (New Series)
L. J. Ch. ...	Law Journal Chancery.
L. R. ...	Law Reports
L. R. Ch. ...	Law Reports Chancery.
L. R. C. P. ...	Law Reports Common Pleas.
L. R. Eq. ...	Law Reports Equity Cases
L. R. Ex. ...	Law Reports, Exchequer.
L. R. H. L. ...	Law Reports English and Irish Appeals
L. R. H. L. C. ...	Law Reports House of Lords Cases.
L. R. I. A. ...	Law Reports Indian Appeals.
L. R. Q. B. ...	Law Reports Queen's Bench Cases.
L. T. ...	Law Times Reports.
Lit. ...	Literally

M	...	...	Madras (Indian Law Reports)
Maon	...	...	Macnaughten
Mar.	...	...	Marshall's Reports (1814—1816).
M. & A.	...	...	Montagu and Ayrton's Reports.
May.	...	...	Mayukh.
Mit.	...	...	Mitaksbara
M. & C.	...	...	Mylne and Craig's Reports (1835—1841)
M. and G.	...	...	Macnaghten
Man and G.	...	...	Manning and Granger (1840—1844)
M. H. C. R.	...	...	Madras High Court Reports.
M. and K.	...	...	Mylne & Keene's Reports (1832—1835).
M. and P.	...	...	Moore and Payne's Reports (1828—1831).
M. I. A.	...	...	Moore's Indian Appeals (1836—1872).
M. L. J.	...	...	Madras Law Journal.
M. L. W.	...	...	Madras Law Weekly.
M. & S.	...	...	Maule and Selwyn's Reports (1813—1817).
M. & W.	...	...	Meeson and Welby's Reports (1836—1847).
Mad.	...	...	Maddock's Reports (1815—1822.)
Meq.	...	...	Mcqueen's House of Lords Cases (1851—1852.)
Mac & G.	...	...	Macnaghten and Gorden's Reports (1849—1852.)
Marsh.	...	...	Marshall's Reports (1813—1816.)
Mer.	...	...	Merivale's Reports (1815—1817.)
Mont.	...	...	Montagu's Reports (1829—1832).
Mood.	...	...	Moody's Chancery Cases (1824—1844).
Moo. P. C.	...	...	Moore's Privy Council Reports (1836—1862)
Moo. P. C. (N. S.)	...	...	Moore's Privy Council New Series (1862—1865.)
My. & Cr.	...	...	Mylne and Craig's Reports (1835—1841)
My. & K.	...	...	Mylne & Keene's Reports (1832—1835.)
N. L. R.	...	...	Nagpur Law Reports.
N. & M.	...	...	Neville and Mannin's Reports (1832—1836.)
N & P.	...	...	Neville & Perry's Reports (1836—1838.)
N. S.	...	...	New Series
N. W. P. H. C. R.	...	...	North West Provinces High Court Reports (1866—1875)
O. A.	...	...	On Appeal
O. C.	...	...	Original Civil Jurisdiction.
P. C.	...	...	Privy Council.
P. D.	...	...	Law Reports Probate Division.
P. L. R.	...	...	The Punjab Law Reporter.
P. R.	...	...	Punjab Record.
Pat.	...	...	Patna.
Pat. L. J.	...	...	Patna Law Journal.
Pat. L. W.	...	...	Patna Law Weekly.
Phil.	...	...	Phillip's Reports (1841—1849).
P. Wms.	...	...	Peere Williams' Reports (1695—1736).
Q. B.	...	...	Law Reports, Queen's Bench.
Q. B. D.	...	...	Law Reports, Queen's Bench Division.
R. & M.	...	...	Russel and Mylne's Reports (1829—1831).
Reg.	...	...	Regulation.
Russ.	...	...	Russell's Reports (1826—1829).
S.	...	...	Section.
Sarv. Inh.	...	...	Sarvadhikari on Inheritance.
S. B. E.	...	...	Sacred Books of the East.
S. C.	...	...	Select Cases.
S. D. A.	...	...	Sudder Dewany Adaulat Reports.
Sch. & Lef.	...	...	Schoales and Lefroy's Reports (1802—1806).
Sel. Rep.	...	...	Select Reports.
Skt.	...	...	Sanskrit.
Sm. and Giff	...	...	Smale and Giffard's Reports (1852—1857)
Sm. L. C.	...	...	Smith's Leading Cases
Stark	...	...	Starkie's Reports (1815—1822).
Str. L. H.	...	...	Strange's Hindu law
Suth	...	...	Sutherland
Sw.	...	...	Swanston's Reports (1818—1819)
T. R.	...	...	Term Reports (1785—1800)
T. L. R.	...	...	Times Law Reports
Taunt	...	...	Taunton's Reports (1807—1819)

Vaugh	...	...	Vaughan's Reports (1865—1874)
Vern....	...	...	Vernon's Reports (1681-1720).
Ves.	...	...	Vesey's (Junior) Reports (1789-1817).
Ves. Sen.	...	...	Vesey's (Senior) Reports (1746-1755).
Vol.	...	...	Volume.
W. & B. H. L.	...	...	West and Buhler's Hindu Law.
W. N.	...	...	Law Reports Weekly Notes.
W. R.	...	...	Weekly Reporter.
W & T. L. C.	...	...	White & Tudor's Leading Cases.
Willes	...	...	Willes' Reports (1737—1760)
Y. & C.	...	...	Young & Colleyer's Reports (1834—1842)
Y. & C. C C	...	..	Young & Colleyer's Chancey Cases (1841—1844
Y. & J.	...	...	Young & Jervis' Reports (1826—1830)
Y & C. Ex.	...	...	Young & Collyer's Exchequer Reports (1826—1830).
Yaj.	...	...	Yajnavalkya.
§	...	...	Paragraph

---

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

- Addison on Torts ... 268
 Angiras Samhita ... xlvi
 Apastamba Sutra ... xxvi, lxiii.
 264, 933, 968, 974, 1077, 1031
 Atharva Veda ... xxviii
- Baden Powell, Land Systems of British
 India 721, 723, 724
 Baines, Census Report for India ... 151
 Balambhatt, Commentary on Mitakshara
 255, 258
 Banerjee, Marriage and Stridhan 1086,
 1094, 1096, 1097, 1100, 1101,
 1102, 1106, 1109
 Baudhayan xxxvii, 198, 260, 275, 294,
 344, 906, 921, 997, 1077
 Battacharya Hindu Law 956, 959, 961,
 962, 1102, 1103
 Bhattacharya K. M. Law of the Joint
 Family 479, 480
 Blackstone's Commentaries 213, 214
 Brihaspati xliii, 275, 524, 529
 538, 592, 620, 649, 1100, 1102
- Census of India lxxi, 153, 191, 222,
 225, 226, 227, 234, 237, 241,
 246, 248
 Census Report, Assam ... iv
 ————— Bengal 191, 237, 238, 239, 244, 246
 ————— Bombay iv, 237, 246
 ————— Central India ... iv
 ————— Central Provinces 237, 242, 246
 ————— Madras iv, 237, 239
 ————— United Provinces 167, 233,
 237, 239
 ————— Punjab 240, 241, 246,
 Cicero Pro Domo ... ix
 Coke on Littleton 201, 208, 209, 1045
- Celebrooke's Digest lvii, lxii, 163, 119,
 233, 265, 267, 276, 284, 387,
 343, 352, 387, 433, 488, 545,
 589, 651, 741, 772, 835,
 922, 1002, 1083
 Celebrooke's Miscellaneous Essays xxi, 238
 Cowell, Hindu Law (T. L. L.) ... 528
 Cruise's Digest ... 743
 Cunningham, Hindu Law 623, 1103
- Darwin. Descent of man ... iii
 Dattak Chandrika liv, 275, 283, 292,
 310, 330, 331, 334, 335, 336,
 337, 345, 348, 354, 355, 376,
 382, 937, 1096, 1098
 Dattaka Mimamsa liv, iv, 274, 281,
 283, 284, 286, 290, 293, 304, 330,
 331, 332, 334, 335, 336, 337, 339,
 345, 354, 357, 376, 383
 Dayabhaga of Jimutavahana li-liv, lxiii,
 185, 253, 263, 284, 337, 387,
 402, 472, 545, 582, 584, 622,
 643, 649, 650, 664, 665, 693,
 705, 707, 708, 767, 772, 906,
 912, 921, 925, 926, 928, 972,
 973, 986, 987, 990, 991, 992,
 994, 998, 1082, 1084, 1085,
 1089, 1091, 1093, 1105
 Dayakrama Sangrah ... 665,
 709, 815, 991, 992, 993, 994,
 995, 998, 1091, 1092, 1093,
 1106, 1107, 1108, 1109
 Dayatatwa 622, 1106, 1107, 1108
 Dayavibhaga liii, 653
 Deuteronomy ... 239
 Devala 382, 489, 1033, 1093, 1105
 Dharma Sindhu ... 910
 Dornat, Civil Law ... 802
- Elphinstone, History of India (4th Edn.) ... 181
- Fatwai Alamgiri ... 17
 Fearne on Contingent Remainders ... 1045
 Freeman, on Co-tenancy 680, 695
- Gains ... viii
 Gautama Smriti xxxiv, xxxvi, lxiii,
 199, 225, 228, 250, 252, 254, 255,
 275, 512, 538, 618, 623, 645, 1103
 Ghose Hindu Law liv, 234, 257, 264, 305, 988, 998
- Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ... xvii
 Gour, Law of Transfer 414, 444, 446, 448,
 519, 585, 592, 595, 601, 610, 633,
 697, 740, 744, 748, 764, 769, 803, 811, 921
- Gour, Penal Law 269, 270

PAGE.	PAGE.
Hale's History of the Common Law... lxiii	332, 335, 336, 337, 339, 353, 354,
Halsbury's Laws of England 200, 208	386, 387, 390, 393, 402, 422, 428,
212, 214, 219, 402, 781	425, 431, 471, 475, 490, 511, 512,
Hiranya Kesin, Grihya Sutra ... 234	529, 539, 540, 618, 621, 640, 649,
Hobbes, Leviathan ... ii	651, 653, 702, 705, 708, 710, 784,
Homer's Odyssey ... ii	759, 760, 767, 835, 901, 903, 904,
Hunter's Roman Law ... v, vi	906, 907, 911, 912, 914, 922, 925,
	929, 931, 932, 942, 943, 972, 975,
	1077, 1078, 1083, 1093, 1100, 1109
	Max Muller, Ancient Sanskrit Literature xi, xviii, 255
	—Six Systems of Indian Philosophy xi, xxvii, lxvii,
Ilbert, Government of India ... 153	Mayne's Hindu Law lix, 653, 734,
Imperial Gazetteer of India lxix, lxx	Mayukha, of Nilakantha lii—liii, lxiii,
	259, 262, 294, 310, 338, 348, 355,
Jaimini Mimamsa Sutras ... lxvii,	376, 427, 431, 433, 436, 469, 472,
Jarman on Wills 752, 763, 806, 824	525, 545, 643, 650, 665, 703, 705,
Jolly, Hindu Law ... 1094	709, 912, 922, 933, 942, 946, 947,
Justinian, Institutes ... lxvii	964, 998, 1092, 1099
Juvenal's Satires ... xvi	Medical Jurisprudence, Taylor ... 278
	Mitakshara of Vignaneswara xlviii—li,
Katyayana lxii, 230, 649, 767, 835, 912,	lxiii, 157, 185, 199, 229, 230, 252,
924, 997, 1090, 1093, 1094	253, 255, 265, 276, 290, 292, 303,
Kerr on Fraud ... 636	334, 348, 353, 424, 426, 431, 432,
Knapp on Partition 680, 695	433, 465, 469, 472, 478, 487, 488,
Kulluka Bhatta's Commentary on	490, 519, 525, 526, 544, 545, 585,
Manu ... xlviii	620, 621, 622, 641, 643, 649, 664,
	665, 666, 693, 701-703, 705, 760,
	761, 767, 835, 895, 897, 906, 908,
	911, 912, 916, 923, 925, 928, 935,
	939, 942, 944, 946, 953, 954, 968,
	970, 998, 1084, 1090, 1092, 1093,
	1094, 1095, 1096, 1099, 1109
Likhita Smriti ... xlvii	Moore, Malabar Law and Custom ... 237
Lyall, Sir Alfred. Asiatic Studies 151, 189	Muir's Sanskrit Texts ... 221
Macauliffe, Sikh Religion ... 240	Narad Smriti (33 S.B.E.) xiii, xlii, xliii, lxii,
MacDonnell's Sanskrit Literature xviii,	159, 228, 230, 250, 254, 257, 261, xix, xx, lxxii, lxxiii	262, 275, 402, 423, 471, 475, 512,
Maonaughten (Will.) Hindu Law lvi, 163	530, 539, 585, 586, 597, 622, 651,
259, 261, 357, 358, 383, 387, 430, 476,	693, 760, 922, 925, 997, 1083, 1086,
694, 708, 971, 1066, 1067, 1068	Nirnay Sindhu 257, 910,
Maonaughten (F) Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law lviii, 161, 347, 383, 402,
403, 835
Mahanirvana Tantra ... 767	Phillips and Trevelyan Hindu Wills 847,
Mahabarat ... 221	Plutarch's Lives xiii, xiv.
Maine, Ancient Law ... ii, 460
—Early law and custom ... ii, iii
—Early History of Institutions 203,
1079	Rattigan's Digest of Civil Law ... 198
Malabar Marriage Commission Report 237	—Punjab Customary Law ... 237
Mandlik, Hindu Law liii, 177, 199, 221,	Rigveda ix, xxi, xxii, xxviii, lxviii, lxix, 221
223, 232, 251, 252, 256, 257, 258,	Risley's Census Report iv, lxix, lxx
260, 281, 335, 337, 422, 469, 471, 538,	Risley's Ethnography ... i
664, 767, 905, 913, 922, 1091	—People of India iv, 151, 162
Manu xv, xxii-xxvii, lxiii, lxx, lxvii,	—Tribes and Castes ... ii
199, 219, 220, 223, 228, 229, 232,
233, 236, 243, 245, 250, 252, 254,
255, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 264,
265, 282, 290, 293, 301, 322, 330,
	Sama Veda ... xxviii

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

xxxvii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Samskar Kanstubha	251, 257		199, 225, 230, 233, 234, 250, 252, 254,
Saraswati Vilasa	...lii, 199		255, 260, 261, 275, 294, 330, 345, 760, 908
Sarvadhikati on Inheritance	... 906	Viramitrodaya	199, 294, 622,
908, 934, 956, 957, 959, 961,		650, 665, 919, 921, 936, 994, 995, 998,
972, 988, 992, 993		1087, 1992, 1103
Sen, G. P., Introduction to the Study		Vishnu Smriti	xli, xlii, of Hinduism	... 151	225, 250, 275, 277, 530, 585, 586,
Sirkar, Adoption (2nd Edn.)	... liv	596, 651, 908, 941, 1088
178, 197, 284, 285, 290, 292, 295, 348		Vivad Chandra	... liv
Sirkar, Hindu Law (3rd Edn.)	... 160	Vivad Chintamani	liv, 294, 651
252, 254, 257, 283, 899, 989, 993,		922, 998, 1033, 1103
1102, 1106		Vivad Ratnakar	... liv
Smriti Chandrika	... liii	Vyas Smriti	xlvi, 225, 465, 588, 1087
263, 432, 471, 653, 665, 702, 998		Vyavastha Chandrika	... 1103
1091, 1094, 1098, 1101		Vyavastha Darpan, Shyama Charan
Spiegel, Eranische Aterthumakunde...	lxix	Sirkar	261, 291, 438, 998
Steele, Law of Caste	... 173	Vyavhar Chintamani	... liv
247, 257, 259, 310, 341, 938, 1100
Story, Equity Jurisprudence	... 696	West and Buhler Hindu Law	xlix, 336, 350,
Strange (Sir T.) Hindu Law	lvii, lxiii,	5351, 656, 664, 923, 936, 938, 943,
232, 233, 261, 284, 304, 331,		94, 954, 165, 1091, 1098, 1100, 1101
336, 347, 352, 383, 387, 433,		Wilkins, Modern Hinduism	180, 181, 182,
488, 493, 494, 495, 545, 591,		189, E
645, 652, 801, 921, 934,		Williams on Executors	822, 824
1002, 1100		Williams, Religious Thought and Life
Subodhini, Commentary on Mitak-		in India	... 189
shara	... 702	Wright, Tenures	... 203
Sugden (Lord St. Leonards)	on	Yajñavalkya Smriti	xvi, xlv-xlv, lxv,
Powers	... 781	185, 230, 251, 252, 258, 259, 260, 292,
		301, 380, 353, 436, 471, 487, 530,
Taylor on Evidence	... 219	538, 536, 620, 621, 641, 643, 649,
Thurston, Castes and Tribes	... iv	651, 664, 693, 701, 705, 708,
Trevelyan, Hindu Law	285, 329	760, 901, 908, 912, 916, 928,
Tylor, Early History of Mankind	... iv	932, 935, 970, 1033, 1090, 1096
Tylor, Primitive Culture	... iv	Yajur Veda	xxviii, 281
Ushanas Smriti	... 580	Yama, Smriti	225, 233
Vasishtha Dharma Shastra	xxxix, xli

GLOSSARY.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Adhyagnik.	अध्यग्निक् ...	Presents given to the bride before the nuptial fire ( Adhi -before and Agni -fire).	A species of stri-dhan.
Adhyavahnik ...	अध्यावाहनिक्.	Presents given to the bride at the time of the bridal procession ( Adhi near or during, Avahnik procession).	Do.
Angir } Angiras }	अङ्गिरः ...	Writer of a Dharmashastra.	He flourished before Yajnavalkya and is mentioned by him in his Smṛiti in Acharadhaya Sloka 4.
Annydeyic.	अन्यदेयिक् ...	Gifts by stranger ( Aunya other outsider, deyik what is given, gift by another).	A species of Stri-dhan.
Aparaditya Dev or Aparark	अपरादित्य देव अपरार्क	Name of a king of the Silahora dynasty one branch of which reigned in J h a n a the other in Panola near Kolhapur in Konkan in the Bombay Presidency.	He flourished either at the time of Vijnaneshwar or subsequent to him. See Sarvadhikari p. 381-387.
Aparark ...	अपरार्क ...	Writer of a Dharmashastra.	Mayne in Para 26 says that his work is of paramount authority in Kashmir which appears doubtful.
Apastamb.	आपस्तम्ब ...	Do.
Ashahaya...	असाहाय ...	Do.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Ashahaya Vidyanes- war ...	अषाहय विद्या नेश्वर ...
Ashvalayan.	आश्वलायन ..	Name of Smriti writer ...
Atharva Ve- da ...	अथर्व वेद ...	The fourth Veda ...	See § 50.
Atri	अत्रि ...	Writer of Dharmashastra.	He is mentioned by Yajnavalkya in Acharadhya Sloka.
Baudhayan.	बौधयन ...	Do.	His work is trans- lated in S. B. E. Series.
Bharuchi...	भारुचि ...	Do.
Bhashya ...	भाष्य ...	Commentary ...
Bhrigu ...	भृगु ...	Name of a sage who re- vealed to the people the doctrines of Manu ...	See Manu, Chapter 1 Sloka 59.
Bhrigusan- hita.	भृगुसंहिता ...	Bhrigu's recension of Manu.
Brihaspati.	बृहस्पति ...	Writer of Dharmasastra...	His work is trans- lated in S. B. E. Series.
Brihat ...	बृहत् ...	} Great { Often used to dis- wise { tinguish the vari- ous writers of Dharmasastras
Budh ...	बुध ...
Daksh ...	दक्ष ...	Writer of a Dharmashastra
Dh a r e s h- war.	धारेश्वर ...	King of Dhar ...	He is mentioned by Yajnavalkya in Acharadhya Sloka 5.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Dattak ... Chandrika	दत्तक् चंद्रिका.	Work on Adoption. ... Dattak-on A d o p t i o n- Chandrika-moonlight...	Name of the work on the law of adoption.
Dattak ... Mimamsa...	दत्तक् मिमांसा.	Work on Adoption (author-Nand Pandit) ...	Mimamsa-inquiry.
Dayabhag. D a y a Vi- bhag ...	दायभाग ... दाया विभाग.	Partition of h e r i t a g e (daya-what is given hence- Inheritance and bhag or vibhag partition ...	A treatise on the law of Inheritance by Jimutvahan.
Deval ...	देवल ...	A writer of Dharmashastra	He flourished probably prior to Brihaspati ...
Dharnidhar	धरणिधर ...	Do.
Gautam ...	गौतम ...	Do.	His work has been translated in 2 S. B. E.
Govindraj.	गोविंदराज ...	Commentator on Manu...
Harit ...	हारीत ...	Writer on Dharmashastra	He is mentioned by Yajnavalkya in Acharadhaya Sloka 4.
Hiranya .. Keshin ...	हिरण्य ... केशिन ..	'Golden haired' ...	A school forming a sub-division of Apastamb ... See Apastamb S. B. E. Series Introduction.
Jeemut Vahan ...	जीमूत वाहन.	Name of a Bengal writer of Dayabhag.	He probably flourished in the fifteenth century. See Sarvadhikari p. 403.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks
Kalpataru.	कल्पतरु ...	Dharmashastra ... (Kalp - desire, Taru - a tree—a Wishing tree).	A work written by Lakshmidar sometime between the 12th and 14th century. See Sarvadhikari p. 391.
Kamlakar.	कमलाकर .	Dharmashastra ... (Kamal-lotus, Akar, mine; treasure) ...	Name of the Author of Nirnaya-sindhu and Kinada Tandava flourished in the 13th century.
Karvir	करवीर ...	He was the minister of Hara Sinha Deva King of Mithila ...
Chandeshwar Thakur ...	चंदेश्वर ताकुर.		Author of Vivad Ratnakar an authoritative work of the Mithila School ...
Kashyap ...	कश्यप ...	Writer ...	His date is not fixed but flourished after Brihaspati ...
Katyayan...	कात्यायन ...	Writer ...
Kulluk Bhatt ...	कुल्लुक भट्ट ...	Best known commentator on Manu ...
Kulluk Dharmasar	कुल्लुक धर्मसार.	Epitome of the work by Kulluk ...
Lakshmidar ...	लक्ष्मीधर ...	Writer ... Shankh and Likhita were joint authors. (Likhita—what is written—a pen-name) ...
Likhita ...	लिखित ...		They are mentioned by Yajñavalkya in Acharadhaya, Sloka 5.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Madhav ...	माधव ...
Manu ...	मनु ...	He is the first law giver said to be a Magadh or Mithila Brahmin. ...	SS. 58-72.
Medhatithi.	मेधातिथि ...	Commentator on Manu...	Flourished before Vijnaneshwar.
Mitakshara.	मिताक्षर ...	A commentary on Yajna- valkya Smriti by Vijnaneshwar ( mit -few, measured Akshar - Letters) i.e. , concise ...
Mitr Misra.	मित्र मिश्र ...	Author of Virmitrodaya. A work of the Benares school. Written in the 16th century.
Lakshmi-dhar ...	लक्ष्मीधर ...	Author of Kalptaru ...
Nand Pandit ...	नन्द पण्डित...	Author of "Dattak Mimansa"
Narad ...	नारद ...	A writer on Dharmashastra. ...	His work has been translated in the S. B. E. series.
Nilkanth ...	नीलकण्ठ ..	Author of Vyavhar Mayukh ...
Parashar ...	पराशर ...	Paramount authority in the Kalinga. His work on law is lost, though extracts from it are cited in the commentaries. His date is not settled..
Madhaviyam ...	माधव्यम् ...

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Mayukh ...	मयूख ...	A ray or beam (of the sun) Vyvhar Mayukh is the chapter on Vyavhar or duty.
Prajapati.	प्रजापति ...	Lord of the People King.
Pratap Rudra Deo.	प्रताप रुद्रदेव..	King of the Kakataya Dynasty of Warangal and is said to be the author of Saraswati Vilas , a work of authority in the Madras Presidency. He flourished in the 14th century.
Rigveda ...	ऋग्वेद ...	The first Veda ( Rikh-Hymn and Veda knowledge—Hymn book).
Samvart ...	संवर्त ...	Name of a writer on Dharmashastra.	He is mentioned by Yajnavalkya in Acharadhaya Sloka 4.
Sam Veda.	सामवेद ...	Third Veda ; ( Sam-song ; Veda , knowledge).
Saudayik ...	सौदायिक ...	A kind of Stridhan-comprising presents made by parents and other relatives of the bride.	A species of -stri dhan.
Shankh ...	शंख ...	Name of a writer ( Sankh-couch )
Sankhyayan	संख्यायन ...
Saraswati-vilas ...	सरस्वति विलास	A work ( Saraswati-Goddess of learning vilas -sport or amusement, sport of the Goddess of learning).

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning	Remarks.
Shatatap ...	शातातप ...	A writer on Dharamashas- tra. He is mentioned by Yajñavalkya in Acharadhaya Sloke 5.
Shaunak ...	शौनक ...	An author more known to lawyers on account of the ritual prescribed by him to be observed in the adoption cere- mony.
Smritichan- drika	स्मृतिचंद्रिका ..	Name of a work on Dharamshashastra by Devananda Bhatt also called Deva or De- vanna Bhatt.	( Smriti — tradition Chandra — moon light).
Srikar ...	श्रीकर् ...	Name of an author ...
Subodhini.	सुबोधिनी ...	A commentary ( Su -good ; Bodh -knowledge).
Shulk ...	शुल्क ...	Bride price	A species of stri dhan.
Upnishads.	उपनिषद् ...	Metaphysical chapters of the Vedas.
Usanas ...	उषन् ...	Name of an author on Dharmashastra.	He is mentioned by Yajñavalkya in Acharadhaya Sloka 4.
Ushan ...	उषन ...	Writer
Ushanas ...	उशनस ...	Sutras of Ushanas
Sutras ..	सुत्राणि ...

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Vachaspati misra.	वाचस्पति मिश्र	Author of Vivad Chintamoni, an authoritative work of the Mithila School. He flourished in the beginning of the fifteenth century.
V a i s h n u follower of the Ramana- nuja sect.	रामानुज पदानु यामी वैष्णवः	Worshippers of the God Vishnu—A sect.
Vadyanatha Dikshiti- yam ...	वैद्यनाथ दिक्षि तयिम ...	Name of a work ...
Vasishth ...	वसिष्ठ ...	Name of an author on Dharmashastra.	His work has been translated in the S. B. E. Series.
Vijnyanesh- war ...	विज्ञानेश्वर ...	Author of the Mitakshara ( Vidya learning Ishwar Master).
Virmitrodai.	वीरमित्रोदय...	“Rise of the brave Mitra” name of a work by Mitakshara ( Vir -brave mitra -name of a king- udai rise).
Vishnu ...	विष्णु ...	Name of the author of a minor law book.	His work has been translated in the S. B. E. Series.
Visvarup ...	विश्वरूप ...	An author of a commentary on Yajñawalkya Smṛiti ( Vishva universe; rupa appearance having the appearance of the universe).

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
VivadChandra ...	विवाद चंद्र ...	The moon on discussion. A work supposed to be prepared by Laxmi Devi though the name of her nephew Devi Misaru Misree is mentioned the writer.
Vivad Chandrika ...	विवाद चंद्रिका ...	Moon-light on discussion. name of work ...
Vivad Chintamani ..	विवाद चिन्ता मणि ...	Antidote against anxiety regarding discussion.
Vivad Ratnakar ...	विवाद रत्नकर ...	Ocean of discussion from Vivad discussion and Ratnakar ocean ...	A work of the Mithila School composed by war.
Vridha Satatap ...	वृद्ध शतातप ...	Shatatap the senior ...	prataparudriya, Author of.
Vrihaspati.	वृहस्पति ...	Name of the author on Dharmshastras. His work has been translated in the S. B. E. Series.
Vrihat Harit	वृहद् हरित ...	Harit the senior.
Vyas ...	व्यास ...	'Diamater' A writer on Dharmashartras.
Vyavahar Chintamani	व्यवहार चिन्ता मणि ...	Antedote against anxiety regarding legal matters.	Another work of Uachespati Misra.
Vyavahar Mayukh ...	व्यवहार मयूख ...	See Nilkanth a ray of light on matter of law...
Vyavahar Nirnai ...	व्यवहार निर्णयि ...	Decisions on legal topics.

Word.	Sanskrit.	Meaning.	Remarks.
Veda Vyas.	वेदव्यास ..	The diametre of the Vedas. The great sage arranged the Vedas. The author of Mahabharat and a number of Puranas are also attributed to him.
Yadnaval- kya ... or	याज्ञवल्क्य ...	Name of a writer ...
Yajnaval- kya ...	याज्ञ वल्क्य ...
Yajur Veda.	यजुर्वेद ...	A book containing the sacrificial formula a retrial from यजुः a sacrificial and वेद knowledge.
Yajur Veda school ...	यजुर्वेद ...
Yama ...	यम ...	Name of a writer, an author on Dharma-shastras mentioned by Yajnavalkya in Acharadhaya Sloka 4 and quoted by Vashistha ...
Yautak ...	यौतक ...	Nuptial presents a kind of Stridhan from "यु to join" ...

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

A		PAGE.	Adivi Suryaprakash Rao v. Nidamarty		PAGE.
Abajee v. Gangadhar	...	310	Gangaraju	825, 328, 384
Abbot v. Middleton	...	824	Administrator-General v. Ananda-
— v. Weekly	...	208	chari	187, 224, 234, 265, 266
Abdul v. Altaf	...	890	Adrishappa v. Gurusbiappa	202, 212
Abdul Aziz v. Appayasami	616, 727		Adusumalli v. Adusumalli	806, 807
Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirina	...	248,	Adviappa v. Rudrava	924, 925, 940
	1001, 1078		Advocate-General v. Abdul Kadir	...	877
Abdul Cadur v. Turner	...	175	— v. Belchambers	...	815
Abdul Hussain v. Habibullah	...	212	— v. Davakar	...	177
Abdul Kadur v. Turner	...	186	— v. Hormasji	...	808
Abdul Karim v. Budruddeen	655, 660		— v. Jimabai	...	185
Abdulla v. Ramdas	...	418	— v. Karmali	...	805
— v. Ram Lal	...	1,042	— v. Strangman	810, 816
— v. Sunda	...	201	— v. Punjabai	...	877
Abdull Majid v. Fatima Bibi	...	822	Aga Hajee v. Jagget	...	531
Abdul Rahim v. Halima Bai	...	185	Aghore Nath v. Gurish Chunder	...	516
Abdul Rahiman v. Bure Khan	...	290	— v. Kamini	823, 824
— v. Yar Mahomed	...	884	Agri v. Vishnu	...	884
— v. Maky	...	755	Ahmad v. Ramlal	...	679
— v. Sukh Dayal	...	417	Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy	...	185,
Abdus Samid v. Abdur Razaq	...	689		186, 212, 467
Abhai Churn v. Mangal	...	195	Aiyabati v. Raj Kishen	...	918
Abhal Churan v. Mangal Jana	136, 708		Aiyagiri v. Aiyagiri	546, 697
Abhayachandra v. Pyari Mohun	...	464,	Ajaba v. Ramalingam	...	885
	512, 515, 516, 583, 691		Ajab Singh v. Nanabhan	365, 369
Abhe Sang v. Raisang	...	1042	Ajudhia v. Mahabir	...	420
Abhi Ram v. Shyama Charan	...	844,	— v. Manohar	...	643
	848, 856, 857, 860, 861		— v. Mahadeo	...	658
Abhoy Churn v. Altar Moni	...	1066	— v. Ram Soomar	521, 958
Abid Ali v. Asgar Ali	...	756	Akbar Ali v. Fair Bukshi	...	757
Abilak Roy v. Rubbi	...	517	Akhil Chandra v. Girish Chandra	...	415
Abinash v. Harinath	1042, 1048, 1056		Akhoy Chunder v. Kalapahar	284, 289, 318
— v. Probodh	1065, 1066		Akima v. Azeem	...	396
Abraham v. Abraham	...		Akkanna v. Venkayya	...	1008,
	175, 202, 677, 919			1013, 1014, 1015
Abu v. Amin	...	684	Akoba v. Sakharam	...	1073
Acha v. Acha	...	396	Akollya v. Muckee Lonee	...	433
Achal Ram v. Hazim Husain	...	365	Akshay v. Hari Das	...	766,
— v. Udai Partab	...	736		816, 973, 974, 991, 995
Aohan Koer v. Thakur Das	...	1039	Alabai v. Musae	...	763
Aoha Ranganaki v. Aoha Ramanuja	229		Alagappa v. Velian	512, 522, 523, 581
Aoharatti v. Muthammal	...	763	— v. Sivaramasundara	...	864
Aohbe v. Jawala	...	484	Alamelu v. Mangamma	...	536
Aohrat Lal v. Chimanlal	...	330	— v. Rangaswami	...	546
Aohom v. Merchant	...	484	Alank v. Fakirochand	...	331
Aohut v. Manjunath	...	1076	Albela v. Pat	...	944
Adams v. Otterback	...	220	Albrecht v. Bahees	295, 400
Addoyto v. Woojan	...	425	Alhadmon v. Gokoolmoni	...	989
Adhar Chanda v. Kirtibash	406, 407		Ali Haffiz v. Abdur Rahman	...	890
— v. Nobin Chandra	474, 475		Ali Saheb v. Shabji	617, 619
Adhibai v. Cursandas	432, 438, 439		Alkajikar v. Naru	...	399
Adhiranee v. Shoni Malee	...	445	Allen v. Jackson	...	264
Adi v. Dhukaram	673, 674, 1059		Alukmonce v. Banees Madhub	...	1073
Adit Narayan v. Mohabir	908, 955,		Alwar Chetty v. Vaidilinga	...	162
	959, 961		Amam Singai v. Chaitual	...	709
			Amanchi v. Ramanchi	...	290

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Amarachandra v. Sebak Chand	... 596	Ananta v. Ramabai	291, 923
Amarpal Singh v. Chhabraj	... 420	Ananthanarayana v. Kuttalam	... 877
Amarsi v. Dayal	... 639	Ananthaya v. Vishnu	280, 424, 544
Amava v. Mahad Gauda	183, 190, 820, 925, 328	Anant Ram v. Channu Lal	... 581
Ambabai v. Govind	176, 180, 190, 192, 937	Anant Singh v. Durga Singh.	202, 216, 944
—v. Ramchandra	452, 453	Andiappa v. Nallendran	... 391
Ambaidas v. Naraindas	... 619	Angammal v. Venkata.	924, 925
Amba Lal v. Reva	797, 828	Angamutu v. Kolandavelu	523, 581
Ambica Dat v. Sukhmani	625, 674	Anglesay v. Hatherston	... 219
Ambo v. Ganga Sahai	... 394	Anivilla v. Cherla	... 475
Ameen v. Medan	885, 886	Anjona v. Prakkad	... 261
Ameena v. Radhabenode	... 1001	Annaji v. Chandrabai	799, 828, 1087
Ameerchand v. Maya Singh	... 695	—v. Narayan	... 877
Ameronissa v. Ashrafoonissa	... 754	—v. Vasudev	... 921
Ameer Singh v. Kanh Singh	... 1087	Annamalai v. Murugesu	463, 524
Amin v. Ibram	... 884	Annammah v. Mabbu	326, 328, 376
Amirchand v. Ghasita	... 500	Annupagauda v. Sangadigayappa	410, 521
Amirchand v. Lokenath	... 547	Annappurni v. Collector	274, 296
Amirchand v. Ram	... 211	—v. Forbes	... 294
Amirthayyan v. Kalka	... 808	—v. Swaminathan	446, 453
—v. Kotharamayyan	316, 317	Annasami v. Ramkrishna	... 212
Amjad Ali v. Moni Ram	1029, 1030	Annaswamy v. Sivagany	... 338
Amma Kannu v. Appu	424, 582	Annayan v. Chinnan	... 936
Amolak Ram v. Chandan	... 548	Anund Chunder v. Teeteeeram	... 990
Amratlal v. Bapubhai	... 229	Anundee Koonuru v. Khedoo Lal	... 499
—v. Bindesri	... 1078	Anund Mobun v. Gobind	... 331
—v. Gauri	... 677	—v. Lamo	... 499
—v. Lakhi Narayan	... 956	Anund Moyee v. Gopal Munder	... 445
—v. Luckee Narain	907, 908	Anudo Mohoy v. Doeden	... 827
—v. Manik	407, 410, 432, 917, 923	Anundomoyee v. Mohendra	... 1028
Amrita Lal v. Manik Lal	... 428	Anupnarsin v. Mahabir	... 1075
Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh	1046, 1047, 1074	Anwar Hossain v. Secretary of State	787, 788
Amritolal v. Rajoonce. Kant	941, 988, 1078	Anyaba v. Daji	... 1058
—v. Surmomoyee	296, 313, 316, 318, 748, 783	Apaji v. Gangabai	421, 442
Amrit Rao v. Abaji	... 708	—v. Ram Chandra	... 642
—v. Govind	656, 659	Appa v. Ranga	... 631
Amrut v. Makand	... 656	Appan v. Srinivasa	... 391
Amulya v. Kalidas	... 318	Arunachalla v. Vythialanga	... 523
Anaji v. Ratnoji	... 725	Appana v. Nagid	... 741
Anand v. Prankis to	... 654	Appandai v. Bagubali	198, 955, 958
Ananda v. Indra Bhusan	1032, 1035, 1042	Appaniengar v. Alameloo	... 804
—v. Nownit Lal	197, 894, 917, 920, 934	Apparao v. Gopala	915, 1086
—v. Rajendra	... 811	Apparvan v. Susaindayan	... 187
Ananda Bai v. Kashi Bai	319, 320, 328	Appayya v. Vengu	841, 348
Anandachari In re	... 232	Appoovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar	514, 623, 625, 626, 627, 673, 674, 697, 893
Ananda Rao v. Bansinath	... 1043	Arbuthnot v. Oolagappa	... 727
Anandi v. Khedoolal	... 671	Ariyaputri v. Alamelu	... 1007
Anandi Bai v. Hari	659, 682, 709	Arjan Singh v. Indar Singh	1029, 1030
—v. Rajaram	... 1016	Arlapa v. Narsi	... 211
—v. Suba Pai	... 700	Armory v. Delamirie	... 647
Anand Kishore v. Daji	... 673	Armstrong, In re	... 780
Anandkunwar v. Court of wards	1053, 1055	Arshad Ali In re	... 269
Anand Rao v. Administrator General	630	Arumuga v. Veeraragava	266, 268, 408
Anand Rao v. Durgabai	... 618	Arumugam v. Ammi	... 822
—v. Ganesh	... 369	—v. Sabapathi	... 517
—v. Shanker	... 880	Arunachala v. Chidambara	407, 408
—v. Vesant Rao	... 495	—v. Zemindar of Sivagiri	727
Anant v. Gopal	... 543	—v. Sampurnathachi	... 526
Anantha v. Damodar	... 674	Arunachellam v. Aiyaswami	381, 348
—v. Nagamuthu	... 770	—v. Arunachellam	... 249
		—v. Muthu	... 888
		—v. Vallaya	... 1055
		Arunagiri v. Ranganayaki	... 940

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

H

	PAGE.		PAGE
Arundadi v. Kuppammal	... 306	—v- Krishnaji	468, 479, 484
Arur Singh v. Mangal	... 234	—v. Laxman Das	... 846
Asam v. Pellatte	... 888	—v. Nana	... 512
Asauand v. Tulsanbi	617, 618, 619	—v. Sheshgiri	... 399
Asaram v. Hari Singh	... 878	—v. Vasudev	... 573
—v. Ratansingh	... 417	Babu v. Dadji Rao	... 515
Aseme v. Krishna	... 835	—v. Krishna Rao	... 1,047
Asghar v. Akbar Husain	... 679	—v. Ratnaji	327, 469
Asgar v. Mahabbat	228, 229	Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram	... 902,
Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb	... 186		904, 905, 910
Ashanullah v. Kali Kinkur	... 685	—v. Tuma	... 492
Asharbi Kunwar v. Kupchand	285, 359, 372	Babur Ali v. Sookeca	... 417
Asher v. Whitlock	... 647	Babu Singh v. Behari Lal	... 533,
Ashidbai v. Abdulla	634, 680, 684		590, 606, 607
Ashrafi v. Ishri	... 248	Bacha Singh v. Chatar Pal	... 935
Ashrafi Kuar v. Jai Narain	... 405	Bachehan Singh v. Kampta Prasad	... 417
Ashrufooddowlah v. Hyder Hossein	... 278	Bacha v. Dharam Das	... 1048
Ashutosh v. Doorgacharu	... 745,	Bachebi v. Makhanlal	... 180
	746, 770, 837	Bachha v. Jugunmohon	196, 197, 198
Ashutosh v. Sukhemonis	... 458	Bachho v. Dharm Das	... 467
Asita v. Nirode	292, 740, 770	Bachiraju v. Venkatappadu	196, 198, 942, 998
Asita Mohun v. Nowde Mohun	... 178	Bachoo v. Khushaldas	... 525
Assur v. Ratan Bai	... 384	—v. Mankorebai	... 297
Atar Singh v. Thakur Singh	474, 477		311, 318, 351, 381, 506, 525, 591, 597
Atharrulla v. Goves	... 884		641, 712, 725
Atmannessa v. Abdul	... 890	—v. Nagindas	... 377
Atmaram v. Bhila	... 419	Backha Jha v. Jugmohan Jhe	... 196
—v. Bholagir	... 202	Padamea v. Fatima Bi	... 245
—v. Madho Rao	347, 500	Badamoo v. Wazeer Singh	... 674
Attar Singh v. Khakar Singh	... 465	Badhawa v. Hira	... 688
Attorney General v. Brown	... 817	—v. Sohlat	... 926
—v. Duke of North		Badri v. Bhugwat	... 652
Umberland	... 839	Badri Das v. Ratan Lal	... 514
—v. Fishmongier's Co.	840	Badri Prasad v. Madan Lal	533, 595
—v. Haberdasher's Co.	814	Badulsingh v. Chutterdharee	... 500
—v. Pearce	... 815	Bagirathi Bai v. Daya	... 965
Atul v. Sanyasi	... 829	Bahadur v. Parash Nath	... 854
Audh Kumari v. Chandra	... 939	Bahadur Singh In-re	... 287
Augad Das v. Ghasiti	... 888	—v. Mohar Singh	920, 1049
Augus v. Dalton	... 205	—v. Viru	... 279
Aunjana Dossee v. Pralhad Chandra	... 230	Baharilaji v. Rajbai	... 438
Authikesavulu v. Ramanujam	227, 232,	Bai Bayee v. Bai Santok	186, 712, 216
	237, 269	Bai Diwali v. Moti	... 263
Avayambal v. Kamalambal	473, 501	Baidyanath v. Durga Churn	... 988
Avula v. Avula	... 1057	Bai Jina v. Kharwa	... 264
Ayabati v. Raj Kristna	261, 917	Bajinath v. Bisson	... 1023
Ayancheri v. Acholathil	... 864	—v. Emperor	... 394
Ayatunnessa v. Kulper	... 890	—v. Mababir	... 941
Ayton v. Ayton	... 804	—v. Ramdhan	... 517
Ayyadorai v. Solai Ammal	... 372	—v. Ramoodin	... 697
Ayyavu v. Niladatchi	383, 539	—v. Shambhoo	341, 359
Azimut Singh v. Kalwant Singh	... 639	—v. Taj Bali Singh	... 505
Azamet v. Hardwaree	... 757	I ayim v. Birjbuckan	1068, 1071, 1076
Azizuddin v. Legal Remembrancer	... 848	Bai Kanta v. Kali Charan	... 372
Azizunnissa v. Tasaddug	... 822	Bai Kashi v. Jannadas	... 244
Azkaur v. Savansinkh	... 237	Bai Kesser v. Hansraj	165, 196
Azuddin v. Lloyd.	... 410	Bai Nani v. Chuni Lal	340, 341, 342, 343
		Bai Premkuar v. Bhika	264, 266, 267
B		Bai Ramakore v. Jinnadas	... 263
Baba v. Timma	546, 591, 592	Bai Rulyat v. Jaychund	... 263
Babai Rao v. Luxman Das	861, 868, 875	Baisni v. Rup Singh	437, 442, 455
Babaji v. Bagirathi Bai	... 335	Bai Ugri v. Patel Pu-shottam	247, 249
—v. Dattu	... 501	Bai Vigli v. Nansa Nagar	... 235
—v. Dhuri	... 517	Bajai Bahadur v. Indarpal	... 1014
—v. Kathibai	625, 674

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Baja Khan v. Birju	... 685	Banee Madhub v. Bhagaobuty	495, 499
Bajee v. Pandurang	... 547	Banga Chandra v. Jagat Kishore	... 602,
Bajrangi v. Manokarnika	927, 940, 1082,		1039, 1041
	1037, 1039, 1041	Bangaru v. Vijayamachi	... 443
Baker v. Sutton	... 885	Bangbutty v. Radha Kissno	... 1007
Bakoobai v. Manchabai	... 923	Bangu Pal v. Subaj	... 452
Balabai v. Tanu Bai	... 648	Banka Lal v. Shanti Prasad	... 687
Balabrix v. Rukhmaabai	500, 659, 700, 705,	Banki Rai v. Madh Ram	... 548
	706, 707, 709	Bank of Bombay v. Raghunathji	... 576
Balaji v. Maina	... 954	Bank of Hindustan v. Premchand	... 762
— v. Nana	... 521	Bank Rai v. Bilase	... 446
Balakrishna v. Muthuswamy	515, 516, 533	Banoo v. Khasheeram	497, 500, 508
— v. Raju	659, 700	Bansidar v. Ganesh	... 921, 968
— v. Ram Narain	... 709	— v. Ganpat lal	... 449
Balamina v. Pullayya	917, 967	— v. Lachmi	... 942
Balappa v. Chanbasappa	... 417	Banwarilal v. Sheo Shankar	... 522,
Balaram v. Appa	... 762		572, 573, 588
— v. Ramchandra	508, 509, 655,	Bapi v. Jamna Das	... 811, 817
	660, 677, 688	Bapiji v. Gungadhur	... 617, 619
Balarami v. Pera	... 287	Bapuji v. Mansukhrum	... 543
Balaswamy v. Venkataswamy	860, 868	— v. Umedbhai	... 531
Balbhadar v. Sheonarayan	... 778	Barabi v. Deb Kamini	... 658
Balbhadra v. Bhawami	... 1053	Baramanund v. Krishna Charan	... 383
Baldeo v. Gobind	... 853	Baran Deo v. Rup Narain	534, 548
— v. Mahabir	... 999	Barati v. Deb Kamini	... 660
— v. Mathura	924, 925	Barnardo v. Me Hugh	... 895
— v. Mobarak Ali	516, 517	Baroda v. Hemidate	... 867
— v. Shamlal	512, 514	Barut v. Barut	... 372
Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivasa	296, 317	Daruck Chunder v. Huro Sunkur	... 384
	321, 325, 346, 347	Daruck v. English Joint Stock Bank	578
Balgir v. Dhondgir	231, 291,	Basangavda v. Basangavda	... 966
Bal Gobind v. Hiramane	... 1056	Basant v. Muna	... 786
— v. Narain Lal	539, 548, 571, 572,	Basante v. Chedilal	... 890
	588	Basanta v. Jogendra	196, 706
— v. Ram Kumar	1007, 1056	Basanta v. Kamikshya	827, 828, 1086,
Bali v. Husani	... 789		1087, 1098
Balji v. Kesbowji	... 512	Basanta v. Mohesh	... 542
Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain	625, 641,	Basanta Kumar v. Queen Empress	... 269
	644, 670, 674	Basantrav v. Mantappa	205, 716
Balkrishna v. Gopal	617, 619	Basara v. Singangauda	178, 179, 202,
— v. Hari	... 661		206, 213, 214, 348, 353, 354,
— v. Harigovind	... 617	Basavangarda v. Basavangardo	... 1,032
— v. Janardan	... 591		1035, 1,038
— v. Lakshmana	196, 942	Basdeo v. Sri Kishen	... 862
— v. Moro	... 523	Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa	331, 332, 337
— v. Municipality of Mahad	581	Basoo v. Basoo	... 316
— v. Muthuswamy	521, 524,	Bastard v. Smith	... 205
	691, 692	Basdeo v. Gopaul	... 372
— v. Savitri bai	916, 934	— v. Jugal Kishore	... 861
Ballabh Das v. Sundar Das	... 548	Basunta v. Moti Lal	685, 695
Ballojee v. Venkapa	... 547	Bata Kristna v. Gopal	... 629
Balsavani v. Narayan	... 512	Batchu v. Vajula	... 411
Balsukram v. Lallubhai	... 445	Bati Maharani v. Collector	... 410
Baltas koer v. Lachmansingh	341, 342	Bawa v. Bishen	... 777
Balaswami v. Narayana	955, 957	Bawani v. Ambabay	... 374
Balwantrao v. Bayabai	... 387	Bayabai v. Bala	... 298,
Balwantrav v. Purshotam	182, 741, 1003		300, 303, 310, 322, 364, 368
Balwant Singh v. Clancey	... 593	Bayana v. Dinkar	... 949
— v. Rani Kishori	197, 762	Bazayat Hoosain v. Dooli Chund	... 447
— v. Roshan Singh	280, 425	Bazloor v. Shumsconissa	266, 267
Bama Soonderee v. Bama Soonderee	1056	Becha v. Mothina	432, 439
Bamundass v. Tarinee	... 238,	Becharam v. Thakooramonee	... 724
	301, 378, 379, 380, 987	Bechur v. Suknee	... 1,003
Bandhu Prasad v. Dhirai	... 401	Bechar v. Lakhmi	... 1003

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Beema v. Jamasjee	... 741	— v. Baya	... 1,006
Beem Churn v. Heeraball	296, 821	— v. Jokhu	224, 482, 584
Beerchunder v. Neelkissen	... 202	— v. Kunhujirao	1003, 1086
— v. Raj Coomar	422, 444, 446	— v. Sheebhik	... 548
Beer Narain v. Teenooia	... 452	Bhagirathi Bai v. Kahamjirao	... 1007
Beer Pertab v. Rajender	... 504,	— v. Ravji	... 444
	505 506, 714, 715,	— v. Sadashiv Row	... 501
	721, 761, 780, 784	Bhagu In re	... 269
Beg v. Alla Ditta	198, 216	Bhagvan v. Kala Shankar	780, 784
Beharee v. Madho Pershad	... 509	Bhagvandas v. Rajmal	... 181,
Beharilal v. Daud Husain	... 1075		189, 213, 332, 359
— v. Kailas Chunder	... 376	Bhagwan Sang v. Bechavdas	... 832
— v. Lal Chand	474, 475	Bhagwan v. Warubai	... 965
— v. Madho Lal	1032, 1033	Bhagwana v. Ramchand	... 403
— v. Mewa Koonwar	... 634	Bhagwan Das v. Salig Ram	... 588
— v. Shib Lal	354, 355	Bhagwandeem v. Myna Bai	196, 197, 198
Beharilalji (Shri) v. Rajbai	... 446		646, 647, 913, 915, 989, 965, 987, 998,
Behary v. Juggs	... 831		1003, 1007, 1081, 1084, 1087
Bejoy v. Girindra	... 634	Bhagwan Devi v. Nihalchand	... 927
Beloy Krishna v. Ashutosh	... 583	Bhagwan Koor v. Bose	... 167
Belas Koor v. Bhowanee	... 499	— v. Bose	179, 181
Bell v. Wardell	... 208	Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh	... 160,
Bemola v. Mohun	445, 518, 576		196, 336 339, 341, 348
Beni v. Hardi	... 348	Bhagwanta v. Sukhi	... 1048
— Madho v. Jagat Singh	... 1042	Bhagwanti v. Macdonald and Co.,	... 598
— Prasad v. Hardai Bibi	158, 245, 350	Bhagwat v. Bipin Behary	589, 668
— v. Puran Chand	616, 999	Bhagwat Prasad v. Murari Lal	314, 1078
— Ram v. Man Singh	... 482	Bhagwat Sahai v. Bepin Behari	... 682
Benkot v. Jeshankar	... 777	Bhai Narindar v. Achal Ram	... 786
Benode v. Sitaram	811, 841, 848	Bhairon v. Seram Rai	... 541
Bepin Behari v. Atul Krishna	... 269	Bhaktawar v. Bhagwana	1082, 1088, 1042,
— v. Durga Charan	... 1042		1057
— v. Lal Mohun	... 584	Bhala v. Parbhu	... 1027
Baresford v. Ramasubba	... 507	Bhao v. Raghunath	... 227
Bernado v. Mc Hugh	... 992	Bhaoni v. Maharaj Singha	... 236
Besant v. Narayaniah	386, 392, 395,	Bharatpur estate v. Gopal	438, 444, 446, 450
	402, 404	Bharwanga v. Rudrappagavda	998, 1005
Bessasur v. Luchmessur	508, 517	Bhasba v. Indar Kunwar	311, 852
Bhabangana v. Horendra	... 831	Bhaskar v. Mahadev	348, 915, 937, 998,
Bhabataran v. Behari	... 844		1006, 1025, 1084
Bhabul Das v. Bholanath	... 1005	— v. Narro	... 810
Bhabuti v. Khetal Singh	... 1057	— v. Saraswathibai	... 762
Bhadia v. Bhaj	... 195	— v. Vijalal	518, 521
Bhadrabahu v. Samhita	... 959	Bhaskara v. Narayanaswamy	... 876
Bhagaban v. Ram Praparna	291, 923	Bhashkari v. Bhaskaram	512, 514
Bhagabat v. Murari	... 315	Bhan v. Gopala	... 1027
Bhagabati v. Bhola Nath	1,011, 1,013	— v. Govind	... 1078
— v. Kalicharan	... 765,	— v. Ragunath	1005, 1006, 1087, 1094
	767, 795, 803, 804, 805	— v. Sundarbat	... 202
— v. Kannai Lal	482, 445, 449	Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath	411, 418,
— v. Sohodra	192, 193, 1,009,	Bhawani v. Chait Ram	... 1042
	1,011, 1,012	— v. Deo Raj	784, 786
Bhaganmal v. Chandi Singh	... 572	— v. Himmat Bahadur	751, 1027
Bhagannah v. Chandi	... 548	— v. Maharaj Singh	984, 985
Bhagat Mal v. Abdul Karim	... 590	— v. Subhagi	... 266
Bhagavatulu v. Yelaswarpu	... 596	— v. Timmanna	... 873
Bhagbat v. Girijsa	... 532,	Bhau Nanaji v. Sundarabai	203, 205, 206,
	590, 613, 615, 616	Bhaya Dirgy v. Pande	... 217
Bhagbat v. Huro Gobind	... 758	Bhaya Lal v. Churaman	280, 425, 940
Bhagibutti v. Bholanath	... 745	— v. Sunderia	... 480
Bhagrath v. Kanuji Rao	... 196	Bhek Narain v. Januk Singh	... 608
Bhagirath Bai v. Hanumant	... 349	Bhem Singh v. Luchho	... 406
Bhagirathi v. Ananta	433, 444	Bhikaji v. Dattatraya	... 828
		— v. Yeshwantrao	... 619

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Bhikji v. Jagannath	... 1053	— v. Nil Ratan	... 1017,
Bhikno v. Chamelakoer	390, 394		1021, 1063
Bhiku v. Buttu	512, 514, 573	Bijoychand v. Kalipada	... 817
Bhikus Koer v. Chamela	... 420	Bijraj v. Pura Sundari	... 775
Bhikya v. Babu	... 940	Bijya v. Unpoorna	998, 1037
Bhima v. Dhulapa	... 269	Bikani v. Shuklal	... 769
Bhimappa v. Basawa	... 307	Bika Singh v. Lachman Singh	... 616
Bhimareddi v. Bhaskar	... 1029	Bikramjeet v. Phoolhas	... 674
Bhimava v. Sangava	299, 320, 328	Bilas Kunwar v. Doora	755, 756
Bhimra v. Pitamber	... 493	Bilash Kunwar v. Bhawancee	492, 498
Bhimul Dass v. Choones Lal	665, 493	Bilaso v. Dina Nath	651, 652
Bhooloo Singh v. Neemoo	... 743	Bilaso v. Munnial	... 767
Bhoba Tarinee v. Peary Lal	438, 798, 805, 1087	Bimala v. Tarasundari	... 516
Bhogaraju v. Addepalli	485, 1029, 1043, 1046, 1073	Bina v. Birjo Mohun	... 547
Bhola v. Chandi	... 1057	Binda v. Kaunsilia	223, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268
Bhola Nath v. Ajoodhia	... 509	Bindaji v. Mathurabai	399, 401, 523,
— v. Bhagabatti	... 1011	Bindo v. Bolie	... 1053
— v. Kartick	... 534	— v. Shamlal	390, 391, 393, 394
— v. Kasiram	540, 641	Bindu v. Bugli	... 385
— v. Sabitra	... 926	Binode v. Purdhan	939, 987
Bholeo v. Peary	829, 830	Binola v. Dangoo	... 988
Bhoobun v. Hurish Chandar	... 821	Bipin Behari v. Lal Mohun	... 540
— v. Mudden	... 998	Biprosarbad v. Kenadeye	492, 509, 740
Bhoobun v. Ramkishore	... 312,	Birajun v. Luchmi Narain	197, 1004
	315, 317, 318, 325, 326, 327	Birbhadra v. Kalpataru	383, 630
Bhoobunessuree v. Gourree Das	... 291	Bireswar v. Ardhia Chander	345, 375
Bhoobun Mohini v. Hurish Chander	771, 821	— v. Kamal Kumar	1068, 1071
Bhowani v. Juggernath	512, 515, 516	Birjnath v. Chander	... 831
— Persad v. Jugger Nath	... 691	Birkett, In re	... 826
Bhubaneswari v. Gourree Das	... 923	Birks, In re	... 823
— v. Nilcomul	... 329	Birode v. Bholanath	... 396
Bhuggobun v. Anand Kumaree	... 619	Biru v. Khandu	... 1006
— v. Pran Coomaree	... 617	Biseswar v. Bhagabati	... 679
Bhugobutty v. Domun	... 492	Bishamanalli v. Gangadhur	... 465
— v. Goroo Prosonno	... 740,	Bishambar v. Fateh Lal	... 445
	770, 838, 841, 842	— v. Sudasheeb	... 519
Bhugwan v. Luchmee	... 1016	Bishenohand v. Asmaida	... 630, 631,
Bhujanga v. Ramayamma	... 1087		641, 642, 666, 703, 763,
Bhujangrav v. Malojirao	505, 777		772, 773, 803, 804, 805
Bhujun Lal v. Gya Pershad	... 926	Bishenohand v. Nadir	... 861
Bhupal v. Lachman	1092, 1096, 1034	Bishen Dass v. Sirdar Dial Singh	... 598
Bhupati v. Ramlal	... 770,	Bishen Perakash v. Bawa Misser	473, 761
	810, 816, 817, 844, 847	Bishen Singh v. Jawala Singh	... 637
Bhupendra v. Amarendra	313, 1001	Bisheshur v. Mata	163, 265, 925
Bhup Singh v. Lachman	... 441	Bishumbhur v. Fateh Lal	406, 408
Bhura v. Ramrao	... 1031	Bishunath v. Ram Charan	... 286
Bhurmechand v. Rajmohishee	... 492	Bissen Dayal v. Jaiseri	... 1022
Bhutnath v. Secretary of State	... 265	Bissessur v. Lachmessur	... 467,
Bhuttacharjee v. Puddomookhee	... 443		509, 522, 613
Bhuwani v. Solukhan	... 1037	Bissonath v. Bamasoondery	... 821
Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh	158, 196	— v. Bindsri	... 532
Bhyrobee v. Nub Kissan	... 989	Bisumbhur v. Soorvdhun	492, 493
Bhyrochand v. Russoomunee	... 665	Bistobehary v. Bay Nath	... 1053
Bhyrub v. Nubo Chunder	446, 453	Bistoo Pershad v. Radha	1086, 1091
Bidhu Mukhi v. Satischandra	... 454	Bistoopra v. Basoodab	... 737
Bidya Prasad v. Bhup Narain	... 582	Biswambhur v. Rajaram	... 542
Bijoy v. Girindra	... 1021,	Biswanth v. Durga	... 1026
	1029, 1034, 1037, 1058	— v. Jagdip Narain	... 532
— v. Krishna	... 1017,	— v. Khantamoni	540, 1053
	1021, 1063, 1064, 1078	Blewett v. Tregonning	... 207
		Boddu v. Goli	... 1,026
		Bodhrao v. Nursingh	... 686
		Bodh Narain v. Umrao	... 928

iv

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Bodh Singh v. Ganesh.	508, 509	Budhilal v. Morarji	392, 401
Bodhunurain v. Omrao	... 642	Budh Singh v. Niradram	... 888
Botom v. Dhuram Singh	... 485	Budree v. Chaoni	888, 889, 690
Bolakee v. Court of Wards	... 467	Budree Lall v. Kantoo Lal	... 590
Bombay (Peerage) case	... 278	Budri v. Chunni Lal	... 886
Bona v. Boles	... 467	Bulakee v. Indurputtee	... 674
Boolechand v. Jonokee	243, 249, 403	Bulakhi Das v. Keshav Lal	927, 1007
Boo Logum v. Swornam	476, 501	Buldeo v. Jumna	... 228
Boomad Lall v. Dawakee Nundum	... 477	— v. Mohamaya	... 228
Bosanquet v. Woodford	... 849	Bullub v. Kishenpria	289, 322, 398
Bose v. Bhagwan Koer	179, 181	Bunseedhur v. Bindeseree	386, 418, 414
Bosville v. Attorney General	... 279	Bunsee Lall v. Aoladh	... 519
Boyse v. Rossborough	790, 791	Buniyad Husain v. Haji Unisa	... 729
Braja Bhookum v. Richan	... 928	Burjaree v. Bha Gana	202, 214
Braja Kisora v. Kundana	... 799	Burrongs v. Philcox	... 781
— v. Radha Gobind	... 994	Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh	791, 792, 794
Brajlal v. Jiban Krishna	84, 985,	Bury v. Philpet	... 278
989, 993, 1068, 1071		Buta v. Bhagan	... 894
Braja Sundari v. Lachmi	... 841	Buta Singh v. Dial Singh	... 342
Bramamyi v. Joges Chandra	748, 803, 805	Burloor v. Shumssoonissa	... 766
— v. Kris to	... 1074	Byari v. Puttanna	... 547
Breadalbane's case	... 274	Byjnath v. Kopilmon	... 193
Brendon v. Sundrabai	... 831	Bykant v. Kisfo Soonderee	... 817
Brickwood v. Young	... 695	Byrobi v. Nub Kishen	... 917
Bridger's case	... 857
Brij v. Shewray	... 641
Brijbhokkanjee v. Gookooloosanjii	310, 338
Brij Indar v. Janki	... 504,
1,084 1,088, 1090
Brij Kishore v. Pratap Narain	... 1,049	C. F. R. v. Mansfield	.. 279
— Lal v. Suraj	780, 782,	Callicart v. Eyskene	... 816
797, 798, 799		Callisher v. Bischoffsheim	629, 630
Brijnandan v. Bidya	537, 594	Callichurn v. Bunggobaity	... 387
Brijnath v. Sreegopal	... 492	Cally Nath v. Chunder Nath	... 748
Brijokishoree v. Sreenath	... 313	Carleton v. Leighton	... 744
Brijraj Singh v. Sheodan Singh	... 641,	Carly v. Lovering	... 207
670, 779		Carran In re	... 420
Brinda v. Radhica	432, 451, 452	Cartwright v. Cartwright	... 792
Brindaban v. Bishanohand	... 1037	Carve v. Long	... 814
— v. Chandra Kumar	232, 233,	Cassinanut v. Hurrosoondry	540, 584, 986,
260, 269		987, 1009, 1020, 1026, 1052, 1053,
— v. Jamna	... 594	Cassumbhoy v. Ahmad bhoy	492, 508, 677
Brindavana v. Radhamani	177, 236, 935	Cavalry v. Collector	... 1001
Broadbent v. Wilke	... 207	Chabhila v. Jadabai	... 671
Brocklebank v. Thompson	... 205	Chabildas v. Ramdas	478, 475, 477
Brojasi v. Gopaul	... 548	Chadnick v. Manning	... 385
Brojo v. Gowree	... 917	Chail Bahari v. Gulzarimul	... 590
Brojo Kishore v. Srinath	... 945,	Chaitram v. Nathi	249, 268,
1,059, 1065		Chakrodhu v. Bear Chunder	... 237
Brojo Mohun v. Hurro Lal	... 879	Chala Conda v. Chala Konda	467, 473 475
Brojomoyee v. Trylukho	... 805,		501
817, 847		Chalamyya v. Varadayya	516, 518
Brojo Nath v. Jugeswar	... 1,071	Chalamma v. Subhamma	... 759
Brojosoodery v. Luchmee	... 844	Challa v. Challa	... 287
Bromley v. Bromley	... 267	— v. Palary	1088, 1034
Broughton v. Mercier	... 770	Challagunda v. Madalli	1055, 1059, 1063
Brown v. Brown	223, 787, 788	Chaman Lal v. Doshi	959, 1003
— v. Higs	... 781	— v. Ganeshi	... 958
Bue v. Gungsa	... 639	Chamara v. Sanakoer	... 1034
Budansha v. Fatma Bi	... 265	Ex-parte Chamdaey	... 402
Budawa v. Gurdit Singh	... 424	Chanbasapa v. Cholowa	... 501
Budha Mal v. Bhagawan Das	493, 674	Chauchamma v. Subbaya	... 287
— ... 946,		Chander v. Murat Singh	... 1007
Budha Singh v. Lattu Singh	247, 248	— v. Sham Kuer	... 614
		Chandar Kishore v. Ganpat	589, 548

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Chander Sakhar v. Kundan Lal	... 658	Chhotiram v. Narayan Das	... 519
Chand Huree v. Narendro Narain	... 510	Chidambaram v. Gauri Nachiar	588, 625
Chandi v. Janki	... 1048	----- v. Koot aperumal	533, 595, 608
Chandika v. Muna Kunwar	193, 202, 217, 245	----- v. Minan nal	... 865
Chand Mal v. Kalyan Mal	... 594	----- v. Muthu	... 659
Chandra v. Girijabai	... 725	----- v. Nachiar	674, 704
----- v. Gojarabai	326, 328, 329, 381	----- v. Ramaswamy	... 521
----- v. Jagat Kishore	... 602	----- v. Rangachariar	... 879
----- v. Selakchand	... 596	----- v. Swaminathan	... 787
Chandrabhaga v. Bishwanath	... 227	Chidambaram v. Hussainamma	... 1047
Chandrabagabai v. Kashirath	430, 433, 440, 1008	Chidambaram v. Nallasiva	... 862
Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad	519, 532, 533, 585, 608	Chiddu v. Nanbat	1081, 1084
Chandra Kunwar v. Narpat Singh	218, 365, 367	Chiman Lal v. Gunput Lal	... 426
Chandra Mala v. Muktamala	... 347	----- v. Hari Chand	... 201
Chandra Nath v. Nil Madhab	... 218	----- v. Narmada	... 264
Chandrapath v. Ramjai	... 1088	Chimnaji e Dinkar	1000, 1027
Chandra Prasad v. Sham Koer	... 596	China v. Kumara	... 348
Chandrasekharudu v. Brambanna	... 200	Chinarama Krishna v. Minatchi	... 378
Chandrika Deo v. Mata Prasad	... 548	Chinna v. Ganga	... 521
Chandsingh v. Mela	211, 237, 241	----- v. Kumara	... 245
Chapman v. Smith	... 205	----- v. Lakshminarasamma	... 1055
Charanjit v. Telu Mal	... 484	----- v. Pedda	... 340
Charn Chunder v. Nobo Sundari	... 642	----- v. Sada Barka	... 518
Chatarbhui v. Chaterjit	770, 847	----- v. Subbaraya	... 882
Chatranarayan v. Uba	... 1021	----- v. Suriya	... 061
Chattraput v. Girindra	... 481	----- v. Tegarai	... 211
Chattarpal Singh v. Natha	... 584	Chinnaku v. Utam	... 1007
Chatur Bhuj v. Chaterjit	810, 816	Chinnammal v. Venkatachella	... 954, 967, 968
Chaturbhooj v. Dharamsi	... 470	Chinnaswamy v. Appuswami	... 1032, 1033, 1034, 1035, 1038, 1043
Chatur Bhuj v. Krishna	... 936	----- v. Kunju	198, 946, 947, 948
Chavhan v. Ram Sarup	... 1063	Chinnaveerayya v. Lakshmi	... 1049
Oneetha v. Mohen Lal	... 492	Chinnaya v. Collector	... 527
	498, 508, 509, 677	----- v. Gurunathan	410, 412
Chela Ram v. Ishar Das	... 1012	----- v. Perumal	... 533
Chelikhani v. Appa Rau	... 473	Chinnu v. Kalimuthu	546, 676
----- v. Chelikani	... 1084	Chintaman v. Chintaman	... 865
----- v. Raja Surenani	... 957	----- v. Dhendo	879, 883
----- v. Venkata	921, 956	Chintaman Rao v. Kashinath	... 530
Chelimi v. Subhamma	... 628	Chintamani v. Mohesh Chandra	... 1067
Chellammal v. Ranganatha	... 936	Chintaman v. Nowlukho	... 201, 202, 506, 720, 724, 725, 738
Chenga v. Vasudeva	... 315	----- v. Ramchandra	... 831
Chengama v. Munisami	666, 702, 703	Chintu v. Dhondu	352, 370, 373
Chennappa v. Ramappa	317, 320	Chirakkal v. Saidamadathi	... 860
Chennaya v. Gurunatham	521, 522	Chiruvelu v. Chiruvelu	941, 1046, 1048, 1059
Chetti Kulam v. Chetti Kulam	538, 728	Chitko v. Janaki	330, 373
----- v. Venkatachella	... 338	Chittar Kunwar v. Gaura	... 646
Chetty v. Chetty	... 245	Chonee Lal v. Jussou	1003, 1025
Chayat Narain v. Bunwaree	678, 674, 682	Chooney v. Ram Kinkur	... 1018
Chhagan v. Ramchandra	... 399	Choora v. Busunti	... 917
Chhaganlal v. Bapubhai	... 452	Chotalal v. Manohar	... 870, 874, 875, 879, 890
Chhagan Ram v. Motigarni	... 1048	Chotay Lal v. Chunnoo	... 915, 941, 957, 958, 1,000, 1081, 1084, 1087
Chhajju Gir v. Diwan	184, 185, 231	Chote Narain v. Ratan	... 793
Chhakauri v. Ganga Prasad	... 586	Chottoo v. Jemab	... 1,053
Chhato Ram v. Bilto	410, 521	Chottun v. Ameer Chund	266, 268
Chhatradhari v. Saraswati	... 220	Choturya v. Saheb Purbulad Syn.	... 424, 643, 935, 940
Chhatukurni v. Raja Ram	... 925	Chowdhry Pudum Singh v. Koer	... 810, 812
Chhidu v. Durga	... 1048	Oddey Singh
Chhindu v. Nanbux	... 999
Chhotalal v. Mahakore	... 640

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Christian v. Tekaitni	... 688	D.
Chuckan Lal v. Poorun Chunder	... 462, 463, 691	Dadajee v. Wittal	... 682
Chudammal v. Nadamuni	... 1030	Dadoba v. Krishna	... 678
Chudasama v. Partap Singh	... 681	Dagai v. Mathura	... 762
Chunder Coomer v. Hurbuns Sahai	... 571	Dagree v. Paootti	... 187
Chumun Lal v. Gunpat Lal	482, 1022	Dahya Churn v. Radha Churn	... 263
Chunder Kant v. Bungsheo	... 986	Dai v. Purshotum	490, 481
— v. Nund Lal	... 543	Daikat v. Appaji	... 412
Chunder Koomar v. Dwarkanath	... 1056	Daji v. Daji	... 619
Chunder Nath v. Hur Narain	... 660	Dalchand v. Soonder	... 916
— v. Ramjoy	... 756	Dalel v. Ambica	487, 455, 1024
Chundi Charn v. Sideskwari	745, 747, 764	Daljan v. Parsidh	... 1057
Chundro v. Buksh Ali	... 495	Dalglish v. Guzuffer Hossain	... 220
Chundro Sekhur v. Nobin Soondur	... 194	Dalip v. Ganpat	180, 211, 986
Chunilal v. Gunpat Lal	... 1030	Dalip Kuar v. Tatti	241, 271
— v. Mulid	... 828	Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal	522, 537
— v. Surajram	227, 229, 236, 269	— v. Nawal Kunwar	... 758
Chuolirya v. Sahib Purtulad	176, 177, 280	Dal Koer v. Panbas	... 647
Churaman v. Copi	525, 526, 527, 1025, 1031, 1086, 1087, 1091	Dalpat v. Bhagwan	... 915
Chy tan v. Ramchand	... 343	Dal Singh In re	... 269
Chattar v. Wooma	... 1053	— v. Dini	... 919
Ja re Clarke	... 389	Dalsukhran v. Lallu Bhai	484, 485
Cloute v. Storey	... 781	Dalton v. Angus	... 205
Colgan v. Administrator General	... 764	Damodar v. Bhogi Lal	... 888
Collector v. Cavalry	... 969,	— v. Damodar	513, 547
—	998, 1001, 1002, 1016, 1020, 1022, 1024, 1037, 1064	— v. Derji	... 617
— v. Debnath	... 514	— v. Lakhun	... 865
— v. Hari	742, 858, 861	— v. Furmandas	... 1008
— v. Hurdai	... 616	— v. Rhat	... 878
— v. Jagat Chunder	... 971	— v. Senabutty	197, 540, 641, 642, 651, 652, 1031
— v. Krishnanath	741, 742	Damodar Das v. Dayabhai	797, 808, 818,
— v. Lekamani	719, 724	— v. Uttamram	512, 740
Collector of Madura v. Muttu Rama- linga	157, 158, 159, 165, 214, 215, 220, 235, 297, 299, 304, 305, 307, 310, 311, 380, 455	— v. Vishen Dass	576, 581
— v. Veeracannu	... 727	Damodaraji v. Collector of Banda	... 838
Masulipatam v. Cavalry	... 198	Dan v. Mohesh	... 941
Ramnad v. Mootoo Rama- linga	... 196	Danakoti v. Bala Sundara	... 308
— Surat v. Dhirsingi	... 332	Danesh v. Tafir	... 269
— Thana v. Krishna Nath	... 162	Danuo v. Darbo	... 989
— Tirhoot v. Howpershad	298, 358	Daolat v. Burmah	989, 940, 1000
Colquhoun v. Smither	... 280	— v. Nandlal	799, 880
Commissioner of Stamps v. Stephen	780	Daraysingh v. Nepalsingh	... 244
Cook v. Wright	680, 682	Dareys (In re)	... 395
Coomara v. Venkataswara	445, 544	Darnby v. L. C. and D Ry. Co	... 385
Cooverji v. Dewsey	... 616	Darshaff v. Collector	... 881
Constable v. Tufnell	789, 790	Daryai Singh v. Narpal Singh	... 244
Cope v. Cope	... 278	Dasarady v. Jodumani	... 517
Corea v. Appuhamy	678, 679	Dashrathi v. Bepin Behari	... 1107
Court of Wards v. Kupulman	... 923	Dassa v. Narasimha	... 848
— v. Mohessur	914, 1086, 1088	Dattaji v. Kalbha	... 1066
Coventry (Earl) v. Willes	... 200	Dattatraya v. Rakhamabai	... 452
Coxhead v. Mullis	... 223	— v. Vishnu	... 590
Crease v. Barrett	... 219	Datti v. Datti	211, 935, 936
Cullen v. Elkins	... 831	Datto v. Pandurang	299, 818, 820, 827
Cursandas v. Ramcooverbai	... 763	Daudkhan v. Gobinda	... 679
Cursandas v. Vundravandas	811, 817	Daulat Ram v. Meharchand	... 615
Dadajee v. Rukmabai	282, 266	Daulta Kauri v. Meghu	... 428
		Davittam v. Narayanarao	... 691
		Davloba v. Rayagavada	... 698
		Davour v. Kakuturu	546, 547
		Dawood v. Ballubdas	... 619
		Dawson v. Small	... 826
		Daya v. Nathi	426, 429

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Dayabhai v. Chunilal	... 822	----- v. Sanmukh Ram	434, 435
Dayal v. Narain	260, 261	Devshankar v. Motiram	... 817
-----Das v. Savitri Bai	... 1104	Deyaldas v. Savitribai	... 915
Dayamani v. Shribash	1017, 1021	Deynath v. Muthoornath	... 994
Daya Ram v. Soheli Singh	... 213	Dhan Deir v. Mahan	... 821
Dayashankar v. Hublal	... 420	Dhanpat Ram v. Premsingh	393, 402
Dabee v. Hur Singh	... 348	Dharam Chand v. Amba	... 502
Dabae Pershad v. Phool Kuari	625, 628, 674	----- v. Karm Devi	... 548
Debendra v. Boojendro	464, 777	Dharamdar v. Nandlal	... 440
Debi v. Daulata	423, 441	Dharam Das v. Dharam Das	... 891
-----Das v. Bipro Charan	... 1069	----- v. Nand Lal	248, 127
-----Dat v. Jadu Rai	533, 606	----- v. Sadho	... 869
-----Dayal v. Bhanpartab	1027, 1029, 1030	Dharamkuar v. Balwant Singh	... 1072
-----Mangal v. Mahadeo	... 913	Dharjit v. Sirtia	... 532
914, 915, 999 1081, 1084, 1087, 1089		Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant	... 307,
Debindra v. Hari Das	685, 689	314, 369, 371, 878
Debi Prasad v. Golap	1032, 1034, 1038, 1039	Dharma v. Ram Kisheri	335, 338, 350
-----Pershad v. Thakur Dial	893, 895, 897	Dharma Das v. Amulyadhan	... 464,
Debi Prasanna v. Harendra	... 1107	512, 514, 583
Debi Sahai v. Sheo Shankar Lal	... 193,	----- v. Gosta	848, 844, 850
998, 1084		Dharmapuram v. Virapandiya	... 970
Debrus v. Abdoor Rahman	... 841	Dharnidhar v. Chinto	... 327
Deela Singh v. Tooganee	... 433,	Dharoo v. Court of Wards	... 492
498, 508, 509, 677		Dharup v. Gobind	285, 942
Deelchand v. Chandkhan	... 418	Dharup Nath v. Gobind	... 261
Deen Dayal v. Jugdeek Narain	... 517,	Dheeraj v. Government of Bengal	... 205
569, 571, 572, 604, 612,		Dhiraj Singh v. Manga Ram	1028, 1068
614, 615, 657		Dholidas v. Fulchand	... 227
----- v. Kylas Chunder	... 617	Dhodyela v. Malanayak	... 936
Deheram v. Soman Ali	... 776	Dhondi v. Radhabai	1,005, 1,009
Dehmoyes v. Juggessur	... 387	Dhondo v. Appaji	... 383
Delaluney v. Pranbati	... 1091	----- v. Ganesh	261, 285
Debrus v. Ashghar	881, 884	----- v. Gopala	... 639
Deo v. Dwarkanath	... 627	Dhondshet v. Ravi	617, 619
----- v. Kupp	... 957	Dhondhu v. Gangabai	965, 1,006
Deodhari v. Bhup Narain	... 589	----- v. Jaganath	... 197
Deoki v. Kala	... 639	Dhondhu v. Narayan	617, 618
Deokishen v. Budh Prakesh	... 642,	Dhoorjeti v. Dhoorjeti	744, 1000, 1,047
644, 919, 923		Dhuria v. Kadhi	... 762
Deoki Singh v. Anupa	... 678	Dhunooverbai v. A. G.	... 852
Deokoonwar v. Umba Ram	... 266	Dhunookdharee v. Gunput Lal	467, 493, 509
Deonandan v. Udit Narain	... 1062,	Dhuri Lal v. Dhania	784, 830
1064, 1065		Dhurum Das v. Shama Soondri	... 493,
Deo Nath v. Hurry Narain	... 498	495, 508, 509, 510
Deo Persad v. Lujoo	... 1000	Dhurnidhur, In re	223, 268
Deopo v. Gobinda	... 986	Dhurrani Singh v. Kissen Singh	... 886
Deputy Commissioner v. Anseri	... 1039	Dial Das v. Dhianun	... 231
----- v. Jagiwan	... 743	Digumber v. Moti Lal	992, 993
----- v. Kanjan Singh	1061	Digombari v. Dhankumari	433, 444, 450
Desai v. Narayanaswamy	... 595	Dildar v. Bhawani	682, 686
De Silva v. De Silva	... 754	Dina v. Karamchand	... 211
Desai Ranchhoddass v. Rawal Nathu		Dinabhandhu v. Chamiruddi	... 875
Bhai	212, 213, 217	Dinakarasami v. Bhaskaraswami	597, 734
Desouza v. Desouza	... 874	Dina Nath v. Harish	... 1023
Devarayan v. Muthuraman	... 228	----- v. Frishikesh	... 1058
Devasigamani v. Palaniappa	856, 860	----- v. Sadashiv	... 212
Deva Singh v. Ram Manohar	... 517	Dindayi v. Bhattachan Lal	... 953
Dev Gopal v. Vasudev	... 704	Dinesh Chandra v. Biraj Kamini	... 776
Devi v. Mangal	... 944	Dinkar v. Appaji	... 522
Devi Prasad v. Gunwanti	428, 432, 442,	----- v. Ganesh	297, 811
455, 466,		Dino Bundhoo v. Rajnotinee	... 455
Devji v. Sambhu	1075, 1076, 1077	Dinomoni v. Brojomotini	... 217
Devkore v. Amrit Ram	911, 930, 951	Dino Nath v. Gopaul	878, 830, 1006
		Din Tarini v. Krishna	775, 778

lix

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Dipa v. Lakshmi	... 776	Durga Devi v. Ramyan	... 216
Iq Daji v. Bhoton	... 953	Durgadut v. Rameshwari	450, 716, 729, 730
Ditcham v. Worrall	... 223	Durga Nath v. Chintamani	540, 584, 728, 978, 986, 998, 1003
Diwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal	... 362,	Durga Prasad v. Prankrishna	... 756
	364, 366, 367	—v. Damodardas	... 512
Diwali v. Brahaddas	... 474	Durga Sundari v. Ram Krishna	... 1015
—v. Patel	... 800	Durjendra v. Purnendra	... 695
Diwali (Bai) v. Moti	245, 260	Durrapp Singh v. Bussurdhun	... 1100
Diwan Singh v. Subbon	... 348	Durrio v. Dari	678, 782
Dixon v. Brown	... 781	Duttanraen v. Ajeet Singh	... 877
Doe v. Daires	... 824	Dwarka v. Saratchandra	197, 227
—v. E. I. Co.	... 762	Dwarka Nath v. Barinda	... 704
Do e d (George v. Jesson)	... 261	—v. Dinabandhu	... 928
Do e d Juggomotun v. Nemoo Dassee	205	—v. Sarat Chandra	... 1095
	237	Durjapada v. Bailean	... 399
Do e d Lloyd v. Deakin	... 261	Dwijendra v. Purnendra	... 542
Dounon v. Prakesh Lal	... 658	Dwarka Nath v. Bungshi	464, 512, 516, 517, 588, 692
Doolichund v. Brojo Bhookun	... 744	—v. Burroda	... 811
Doorga v. Doorga	506, 726, 737	—v. Gopi Nath	... 543
—v. Janoki Pershad	907, 956	—v. Jannobe	740, 871
—v. Surendra	289, 320	—v. Sarat Chandra	... 1102
—v. Tejoo	1,086, 1,087, 1,088	Dwarfia Prasad v. Jamna Das	... 467
Doorga Dayee v. Poosun Dayee	... 1,004	Dyamonce v. Brindaban	... 531
Doorga Nath v. Ghunder Sen	... 848	Dyanoba v. Radhabai	... 300
—v. Ram Chandler	... 523
	818, 844, 845, 860, 856, 857, 858, 863
Doorga Pershad v. Kundan	... 625
	626, 627, 669, 673, 674
—v. Sheo Prasad	... 740
Dooteeram v. Luckee Kant	... 872	E
Doraiswamy In re	... 1078	E. v. E	... 228
Dorasami v. China	... 307	E v. Lazar	... 264
—v. Thungasamy	... 419	E v. Madan Gopal	... 282
Dose Thimmamma v. Krishna	... 447	E v. Umi	247, 265
Dosi Bai v. Ishvardas	... 721	Earl De Lawarr v. Miles	... 219
Dossee v. Taruchuru	... 780	East India Co. v. Syed Ally	... 505
Dossee Monee v. Ramchand	508, 509	Edelstein v. Schuler and Co.	... 219
Dost Mahomed v. Nazir Ali	... 858	Edwards v. Jenkins	... 211
Doulal v. Ramlal	... 290	Ekradeswar Singh v. Janeshwari	218, 738
Dovekon Trust Fund (In re)	... 870	Elayalwar v. Namberumal	873, 885
Dowlal Rao v. Govind Rao	... 940	Elkington's Case	... 857
Drigbijai v. Mohant	... 841	Elkins v. Cullan	813, 889
Drobo v. Tarachand	... 432	Elliott v. Gurr	... 223
Dualip Kuar v. Fatti	... 245	Elwood v. Bulluk	... 209
Dube v. Srinibas	... 863	Emery's Estate	... 826
Dugappa v. Venkatramayya	... 573	Emperor v. Lazar	... 163
Duke of Leeds v. Amherst	... 385	Emurtee v. Nirinul	... 164
Dukharani v. Lachmun	... 971	Endowed Societies Act (In re)	863, 879
Dular v. Dwarka Nath	266, 267	Erasala v. Addepally	535, 536
Dulari v. Moolchand	... 940	Eshan v. Monmohim	... 741
Dular Koer v. Dwarka Nath	... 267	Eshenohunder v. Samachurn	213, 458
Dular Koeri v. Dwarka Nath	... 264	Eshan Kishore v. Hurish Chunder	... 928
Dulari v. Ballubhdas	... 228		324, 351
Duli Singh v. Sundar Singh	... 1032	Ethirajulu v. Mukunthu	... 800
Dunanchand v. Dwaruknath	... 347	Eyre v. Countess of Shaftesbury	395, 402
Durbur v. Khaohar	580, 584, 535
Durga v. Chanahal	... 863	F
—v. Dunichand	... 819	Faer Bax v. Fakiruddin	... 757
—v. Ram Ratan	... 830	Faizuddin v. Raju	... 679
Durgacharan v. Khorda	756, 758	Faizuddin v. Tincowri Shaha	319, 320, 326
—v. Ragunath	206, 213, 217, 505	Fakira v. Gopial	... 1011
Durga Dat v. Ganesh Dat	478, 479	Fakirapa v. Chanapa	589, 571
Durga Dat v. Gita	... 648	—v. Ellappa	... 934
Durga Dei v. Balmukund	... 678	—v. Fakirappa	... 988

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Fakirohand v. Daya Ram	... 480	— v. Lal Muttu	... 1057
Fakirgauda v. Gangi	178, 243, 244, 268	— v. Neelkomal	908, 955, 992
Fakuruddin v. Acken	877, 884, 887	— v. Ragho	... 261
Fanindra v. Administrator General	... 770	— v. Waghu	949, 964, 965
	816, 839	— v. Yemunabai	... 428
Fanindra v. Rajeswar	190, 192, 286, 375	Ganesh Datt v. Jewach Thakurain	... 499
	376, 1100,	— v. Moheshur Singh	202, 716
Fannyamma v. Manjaya	... 372	Ganeshlil v. Surajmal	... 388
Fatesangji v. Desai	162, 741	Ganeshlil v. Babu Lal	698, 699
— v. Harisangji	... 185	Ganesh Row v. Uljaram Row	... 521
— v. Kalyanrayaji	742, 743	Ganga v. Brindaban	... 836
Fatima v. Advocate General	... 769	— v. Ghasita	924, 925, 1097, 1110
— v. Rani	... 323	Ganga v. Kesari	... 947
Fattick v. Juggat	... 923	— v. Kushal	... 484
Fazle v. Anath Bandhu	... 849	— v. Pirthee Lal	... 525
Fazulbhoj v. Sadanund	... 534	Ganga Bai v. Ananta	... 287
Felaram v. Bagalanund	... 1017,	— v. Bhandhu	936, 937
	1021, 1027, 1061	— v. Kishanji	... 453
Fell v. Biddolph	... 805	— v. Sitaram	... 428
Finch v. Finch	... 787	— v. Vamanaji	473, 761
Fisk v. A. G.	... 826	Ganga Baksh v. Jagat Bahadur	... 772
Fitch v. Rawling	... 208	Gangabai v. Gopaldas	... 347
Foolbas v. Jogeshar	... 548	Gangadharulu v. Durasulu	473, 475, 501
Forth v. Chapman	... 822	Gangadhar v. Hira Lal	... 378,
Freeman v. Phillips	... 219		379, 381, 1,102
Fulkumari v. Buch Singh	... 394	— v. Yelu	... 925
Futteh Singh v. Shere Singh	... 424	Ganga Narain v. Kaunsilla	... 391
Fynn In re	... 398	— v. Tilukram	... 325
		Ganganarayan v. Balaram	... 261
		Ganga Prasad v. Budh Sen	... 366
		— v. Hara Janta	... 397
		— v. Jals	... 393
		— v. Jhalo	... 396
		Ganga Prasad v. Nara Kanta	322, 405
		Gangaram v. Ballia	... 269
		— v. Sitaram	... 692
		Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh	... 373
		— v. Lekhraj	160, 164,
			245, 338, 339, 349, 372
		Gangbai v. Thavar Mulla	... 186
		Gangod v. Shamgir	... 688
		Gangadhar v. Parashram	... 679
		Gangu v. Chandra bhagabai	... 212,
			361, 925, 926, 928
		Gangubai v. Ramanna	... 547
		Gannu Singh v. Bhagwati Koeri	... 496,
			671, 672, 675
		Ganpat v. Adamji	... 617
		— v. Annaji	575, 579, 683
		— v. Balmukund	496, 498, 581
		— v. Gopal Rao	... 641,
			645, 666, 684, 702, 703
		Ganpat v. Ram Chander	... 1006
		— v. Supdu	... 638
		— v. Tulsiram	481, 482, 1022, 1031
		Ganapat Lal v. Toosun	... 1022
		Ganpat Rai v. Munni Lal	... 516
		Ganpatrao v. Anoprani	... 875
		— v. Ramadin Das	... 875
		— v. Shivaprasad	... 485
		— v. Vithoba	... 841
		Ganpi v. Ganpama	... 455
		Gangavani v. Narayan	560, 613
		Gan Sarvant v. Narayan	... 613

G

G. v. G.	... 223
Gadadhar v. Balvant	... 662
— v. Chandrabhaga
bai	1003, 1005
Gadeppa v. Apaji	... 1066
Gadgappa v. Apaji	... 417
Gadian v. Gadian	659, 700
Gagarnath v. Jaikishun	... 1027
Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla	248, 440, 454, 927
— v. Parbati	... 1078
Gajanan v. Kashinath	336, 342
Gajapathi v. Bhagwan	870, 878
— v. Gajapathi	198, 682, 633, 643,
	646, 647, 677, 1007
— v. Poosapathi	... 1007
Gajendhur v. Sardar Singh	493, 677
Gajendra Nath v. Mathura Nath	713, 716,
	729
Gajendra v. Harihur	... 510
Gama v. Lahanoo	... 264
Gambirmal v. Hamirmal	... 1053
Ganab v. Subbi	... 1020
Ganapa v. Subi Sanna	... 1029
Ganapat v. Tulsiram	... 482
Ganapati v. Savitri	877, 879
Ganda v. Ohatar Puri	... 869
Gane v. Kane	492, 509
Ganela v. Khwaja Mohammed	... 212
Ganesa v. Gopala	299, 308
Ganesh v. Ajudhia	... 1100
— v. Govind Rao	... 680
— v. Jewakh	651, 659, 671
— v. Keshav	... 657, 661

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxi

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Gantapalli v. Gantapalli	266, 267	Gnanasambanda v. Velu	861, 864, 865, 866, 868, 882
Garurudhwaj y. Suparandhwaj	202, 717	Gnanendra v. Mohendra	... 799
Garu Sarvank v. Narayan	... 463	Goatley v. Jones	... 781
Gatha Ram v. Moobite	... 266	Gobardhan v. Jasadamoni	... 265
Gauradwaja v. Superundwaja	... 212	— v. Groop Roy	... 1015
Gawri v. Chandramani	434, 435	— v. Riju Roy	... 758
Gavuridevamma v. Ramandora	506, 725	Gobind v. Abdul Rayyam	677, 1048
Gawri v. Shivaram	... 341	— v. Baldeo	1018, 1061
Gavrishanker v. Atmaram	... 658,	— v. Gomti	816, 845
	662, 683, 699	— v. Inayat	... 800
Gayabai v. Shridharachaya	... 327	— v. Khunni Lal	677, 1071, 1072, 1074
Geluk Chunder v. Gbilila	... 445	— v. Mahesh	982, 985, 989, 993
George v. George	... 819	Gobinda v. Benode	... 829
Gandhi v. Jadab	... 946,	Gobinda v. Debendra	844, 850
	998, 1,005, 1,086, 1,095	Gobindamani v. Sham Lal	... 1053
Garikipati v. Garikipati	1058, 1060	Gobindan v. Camahchand	... 359
— v. Rattammo	... 1059	Gobind Chunder v. Doorga Persaud	493
Garuda v. Narolla	... 879	Gobind Dass v. Ranchord	... 1029
Garunath v. Krishnaji	... 1006	Gobindo v. Woomesh	... 993
Gawri Dat v. Gur Sahai	... 1056	Gobind Prasad v. Gamti	... 769
Ghansham v. Badiya	... 1028	Gocoolanund v. Wooma Lall	... 335
— v. Saraswati	684, 699	Gocul Chund v. Rajranee	... 1037
Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh	... 399	Godavari bai v. Saguna Bai	... 438
	401, 406, 481, 517, 523	Gojabai v. Shahajirao	196, 269, 1099, 1101
Ghasi Ram v. Binia	... 417	Goki Bai v. Lakshmi Das	438, 440, 444
Ghasita v. Mizvia	... 420	Gokoll v. Issur	811, 816, 817
Ghazaffar v. Yawar	... 890	Gokool Nath v. Issur Loohun	... 770
Ghazaffar Ali v. Kaniz Fatima	269, 278	Gokulchand v. Mangalsen	... 832
Ghazi v. Sakru	235, 236, 260, 268	Gokuldas v. Kambux	... 795
Ghela Bhai v. Hargavan	162, 163, 724	Gokuru v. Gobardhan	... 493
Ghelabai v. Javer	1071, 1073	Golab v. Prosonno	... 861
Gholam v. Mollah	... 890	Golob v. Shib Sahi	... 1056
Ghosal v. Ghosil	175, 183, 677, 898, 897, 900	Golab Koonwar v. Collector	... 432
Gifford v. Yarborough (Lord)	... 200	Golamee v. Juggessur	... 235
Gillins, In re	... 825	Goluck v. Rughoonath	... 860
Giraj Singh v. Hargobind	... 214	Gondoy Koer v. Godoy Singh	1013, 1014
Giranna v. Honama	433, 438, 442	Goodwin v. Roberts	... 219
Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lal	... 593	Goolab v. Phool	... 1003
Girdharee Singh v. Koolahul	... 212	Goolab Singh v. Kurun Singh	... 642
— v. Ram Lal	... 888		1028, 1042, 1053, 1055
— v. Secretary of State	... 957	Goor v. Shevden	... 543
Girdhari Lal v. Government	906, 907, 957,	Goormukh v. Goomanee	... 957
	960, 968, 970, 1099	Goorni v. Gomrao	... 917
Girdhari v. Neeldhur	... 228	Gooroo Churu v. Kylash	... 991
Girdharji v. Madhowdas	782, 878	Gooroodas v. Bejoy	... 543
— v. Ramanlalji	... 858	Gooroo Gobind v. Anund Lall	... 973
Girdhari Lal v. Bengal Government	... 196		978, 980, 982, 985, 992, 993
— v. Kantoo Lal	380, 480, 514,	Goorogobindo v. Hureemdub	... 986
	532, 588, 590, 607, 609, 611, 613	Goos Kaen v. Pursotum	... 1065
Girdhar Lal v. Stir	... 531	Gopal v. Dungazee	... 926
Giriapa v. Ningapa	... 383	— v. Gour Mones	... 1028
Giribala v. Sri Nath	... 1068	— v. Hanmant	178, 206, 213, 217, 849
Givijanun v. Sailajanund	875, 876	— v. Hanuman	... 212
Girija Bai v. Sadashiv	623, 624, 625, 626,	— v. Bari Das	992, 993
	627, 628, 674	— v. Kenaram	707, 709
Girjanund v. Sailajanund	... 459	— v. Khande Rao	... 500
Girraj Singh v. Raghubir	... 594	— v. Kunwar Singh	... 849
Girwar v. Makhbunnessa	512, 523	— v. Maheshtri	... 205
Gitabai v. Balaji	... 745	— v. Nainu	... 944
— v. Shivbakas	160, 184, 214, 281,	— v. Narayan	... 290
	866, 867, 868	— v. Raghunath	... 780
Giyana v. Kandaswamy	... 1030	— v. Ramchandra	915, 1108
Gnalimelia v. Bollozd	... 895	— v. Siva	... 886
Gnanabhai v. Srinivasa	... 787
Gnanambal v. Ammalu	... 787

	PAGE.		PAGE.
— v. Vishnu	287, 388, 347	Govindayyar v. Dorasami	345, 346
Gopalakrishna v. Venkatanarasa	249, 481	Govind Das v. Muta	... 988
Gopala Krishnamaraju v. Venkatanarasuraju	... 693	Govind Nath v. Govind Chunder	... 492
Gopalaswami v. Arunachellam	... 280, 312, 455	— v. Gulal	359, 387
Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan	... 384	Govindrao v. Sitararam	... 505
Gopal Chunder v. Kartickchunder	... 800	Gowri v. Gopal	... 1033
Gopal Das v. Badri Nath	... 512	Gowree v. Rukho	917, 921
— v. Kerparam	... 861	Re Grays, Minors	... 402
Gopalla v. Narayana	... 1025	Greedharea v. Nundkishore	867, 869
Gopal Narain v. Kuddomutty	... 522	Greedharjee v. Raman Lalji	... 879
— v. Muddormutty	... 412	Greender v. Mackintosh	... 595
Gopal Rao v. Berar Manufacturing Co	536, 538	Greendur v. Troyluckys	680, 634
— v. Trimbakrar	... 202	Re Green's Settlement	... 261
Gopee v. Bhagwan	... 677	Greeschund v. Shumbhoo	... 443
Gopee Krist v. Gunga Persad	423, 509, 510, 591, 753, 754, 755	Gray v. Minnethorpe	... 824
Gopee Lal v. Bhugwan	508, 509	Grish Chunder v. Broughton	... 1010
— v. Chandraboleo	317, 373	— v. Dabee	... 538
Gopeenath v. Gooroo	... 850	Grose v. Amritam oyi	482, 1004, 1005, 1053
Gopi v. Jaldhara	... 800	Guddati v. Goanputi	210, 287
Gopibai v. Lakshmidas	... 433	Gudimetta v. Bollozu	... 1025
Gopikabai v. Dattatray	421, 442, 457	Guga Bae v. Administrator General	449
Gopi Krish v. Hemchunder	543, 544	Gulam v. Lal Behari	... 875
Gopi Krist v. Ganga Pershad	509, 677	Gupnan v. Godarao	... 547
Gopi Nath v. Kallydas	... 1032	Gujjalapadi v. Gujjalapadi	... 498
Gorachand v. Basanta	... 658	Gujju Lal v. Patch Lal	... 217
Gordhan v. Churnilal	... 816	Gulab v. Phool	... 938
Gordhan Das v. Ram Coever	762, 805, 813	Gulab v. Thakore Lal	383, 776
Gordon v. Gordon	632, 633, 636	Gulab Chand v. Fulhar	... 229
Goroo Churn v. Goluckmoney	... 470	Gulabdas v. Collector	... 721
Goroo Dass v. Sarat-Chunder	280, 829	Gulabi v. Asa Ram	... 599
Goroo Pershad v. Debee Pershad	424, 508	Gulab Kuar v. Bansihar	446, 933
Gorooca v. Narainswamy	570, 777	Gulam v. Shah Mahomed	... 885
Gossain v. Kishammunes	1087, 1107	Gulappa v. Tayawa	915, 1006, 1086
Gossain Rambharti v. Mahant Suraj bharti	... 231	Gulbai (Re)	393, 394
Gossain Rambharti v. Surajbharti	... 212	Gulchunder v. Tarachurn	... 672
Goura v. Chumman	380, 918	Gul Mohamed v. Wajilugam	... 397
Gourah v. Gujadhur	... 399	Gul Muhammed v. Wazir Begam	174, 397
Goureepershad v. Jymala	... 319	Gumanan v. Jehangira	... 1046
Gouri v. Tirumaya	... 1058	Gundo v. Rambhat	... 147
Gouricharan v. Sita	... 248	Gunesh v. Lal Muttee	... 1056
Gouri Sunker v. Nider Singh	... 971	— v. Moheshur	201, 505, 506
Gour Mohan v. Madan Mohan	... 871	Gungadhur v. Soojoo Nath	... 493
Gour Nath v. Annopoorna	... 314	Gunga Mya v. Kishen Kishore	... 378
Govardhan v. Pearsa	... 926	Gunga Pershad v. Brijessuree	... 378
Goverdandas v. Ventbai	... 830	Gunga Pershad v. Shumboonath	974, 987, 988, 990, 1032
Government v. Gosvani	... 741	Gunjeshwar v. Durga	... 928
— v. Kahanmai	... 741	Gun Joshi v. Sagoona	... 440
Government of Bombay v. Ganga	... 265	Gunnaiyan v. Kamakshi	473, 504, 686
Govind v. Abdul Qayyum	... 1023	Gunnappa v. Sankappa	... 290
— v. Dawalat	227, 1100	Gunpat In re	... 228
— v. Malhari	... 768	Guntapalli v. Guntapalli	... 1068
— v. Moro	359, 641, 642,	Guracharya v. Bhimacharya	... 500
— v. Radha	191, 192, 426, 584	Gurappa v. Tayawa	... 399
— v. Sakharam	... 595	Gur Charanlal v. Badri Narain	... 466
— v. Sankaram	... 620	Gurdayal v. Jhandu	... 216
— v. Tayammal	1048, 1048, 1049, 1059	Gur Dayal v. Kaunsilla	... 445
— v. Vasudeva	... 1061	Gurdit Singh v. Sber Singh	770, 811
Govindarazulu v. Devarabhotlu	223, 249, 481, 698	Gurivi v. Chinnamma	... 1007
		Gurja v. Mohersingh	899, 401
		Gurlinga v. Rama	245, 831
		Gurmukh v. Mukhan	... 829
		Gur Nanak v. Jai Narain	1072, 1075
		Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal	1038, 1046

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

Ixxiii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Gur Pershad v. Dhani Rai	506, 894	Hardi Narain v. Ruder Perlash	656, 657
Guru v. Nafar Das	914, 1008, 1012, 1013	Hardyal Singh v. Bishan Singh	... 507
Guru Das v. Matilal	261, 285	Har Dayal v. Radhan	... 444
Gurugovind v. Anand Lal	916, 920, 992	Hardial v. Kali Ram	... 287
Gurmuksh v. Malta	... 926	Harduari Lal v. Gomi	389, 776
Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshammam	373	Harekchand v. Bejoy Chand	378, 379
	384	Harendra Nath v. Shibo	... 787
Gurumurthi v. Gurammal	466, 470, 474	Hargawan v. Baijnath	1000, 1046
Gurunath v. Krishnaji	... 998	Hargobind v. Dharamsing	424, 425, 936
Guru Prasad v. Nafar Das	... 1087	Hargraee v. Hargraee	... 278
Gururao v. Secretary of State	721, 723	Hari v. Bajrang	1022, 1060
Guruswami v. Chinna	... 589	— v. Damodar	... 915
Guruvappa v. Timma	... 517	— v. Ganapatraj	658, 683, 699
Guruvayya v. Dattatraya	... 580	— v. Lakshmi	... 668
Gyandra v. Kristo	... 876	— v. Mainakshi	... 1073
Gyan Coowur v. Dookhurn	... 1000	— v. Mero	... 780
Gyanendra v. Kalapahar	... 289	— v. Radhica	... 914
Gyanendro v. Lobongomunjori	... 1053	— v. Secy. of State	... 830
		— v. Vasudev	... 965
		— v. Vital	647, 1007
H		Haribhat v. Damodarbhat	... 998
Habibulla v. Nayac	... 756	Hari Das v. Ramachurn	982, 984, 989, 993
Habibur v. Ashife	658, 660	Haridas v. Narotam	... 691
Hafzoonissa v. Pulury	... 1018	Hari Das v. Pran Nath	656, 658, 682
Hafzoonissa v. Rudhabinoda	1037, 1065	Harihar v. Dasarati	... 1078
Haidan Ali v. Tasadduk	... 778	— v. Jung Bahadur	... 908
Haimun v. Gunsheam	... 298	Hari Kishen v. Kushi Pershad	1037, 1039, 1040, 1041
Haimunchoh (Raja) v. Gunsheam	... 300
Haji Ismail In re	... 186	Hari Kumari v. Mohan Chandra	... 1026
Haji Mahomed In re	... 832	Hari Lal v. Pranulal Das	... 1003
Haji Noor Mahomed v. Macleod	... 581	Hari Lal v. Pranulal Das	... 1003
Hajiokhan v. Tnitee Juddin	... 542	Hari Lal v. Rewa	... 828
Hajmu v. Bhadooun	... 1100	Harimohan v. Shonaton	... 914
Haker v. Mahtalesing	... 241	Harish v. Atir	... 926
Hakim v. Jagat Sing	... 211	Hajivan v. Naran	... 762
Hakma v. Maman	... 619	Haria v. Kanhaya	... 243
Hulima v. Asibai	... 1004	Haridas v. Narotam	... 515
Hall v. Darby Sanitary Authority	... 815	Hari Dayal v. Grish Chunder	... 195
— v. Hall	267, 790, 791	Hari Gopal v. Gopaldas	523, 550
— v. Nottingham	... 208	Hari Har Baksh v. Bharat	... 537
— v. Warren	... 824	Harihar Pershad v. Bhoji Pershad	... 522
Hamangini v. Kedar Nath	426, 449	Hari Lal v. Bai Mani	... 393
Hamonorton v. Honey	... 200	— v. Bai Rava	... 372
Hancower v. Hancower	... 287	— v. Nagari	... 619
Hanmant v. Bhimacharya	290, 292, 383	— Mullic ( In re )	617, 619
Hanmantapa v. Jiyabai	... 473	Hari Ram v. Jitam Ram	... 418
Hansbutti v. Ishri Dutt	1009, 1011, 1012, 1013	Harish chunder v. Gourae Pershad	... 494
		Harish Chunder v. Nafur Chunder	... 500
Hansraj v. Ananth	... 890	Harisingh v. Gulaba	... 349
— v. Bapusaheb	... 617	Harku Singh v. Nanda Kuar	... 428
— v. Kesarbai	... 915	Harmabh v. Mandil	... 1006
— v. Mangi bai	... 915	Harman v. Partalu	... 393
Hanuman v. Bhagwant	1073, 1078	Harnath v. Mandal Das	... 216
— v. Chirrai	348, 350	Harole v. Bhagwan Singh	... 1043
— v. Daulat	... 533	Haroon Mahomed In re	... 581
— Persad Pandey v. Babooee	406, 408, 413, 415	Haspal v. Lekhraj	738, 1048
Hanumansingh v. Nanukchand	... 590	Harpal v. Bishan	725, 728
Hanumantamma v. Rami	... 287	Har Prasad v. Bakshi	... 521
Hanwata v. Padam	... 787	Harris v. Brown	818, 819, 820
Hara v. Basanta	... 841	Harwacondery v. Rajesawree	... 918
Haradhu v. Issur Chunder	... 1053	Har Saran v. Nandi	218, 440, 927
Haranchander v. Hurro Mohun	340, 342, 343	Har Shankar v. Lal Raghuraj Singh	369, 373
Hardei v. Bhaguwun Singh	1048, 1074	Harba v. Kanhya	... 237
		Harwood v. Baker	... 793

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Harwood v. Tooks	... 744	Huebat v. Govind Rao	310, 848, 852
Hashim Ali v. Abdul Rahman	... 214	Hulodhur v. Goosoo	... 688
Hasmat v. Mhd. Umar	... 689	Humphreys v. Polak	... 395
Hassan Ali v. Naga Mal	285, 359	Hunsraj v. Kesarbai	... 1087
Hassan Bibi v. Fazalkadi	635, 637	— v. Mogibai	1082, 1038, 1042
Hayes v. Harendra	... 1042	Honuman Persaud v. Mt. Baboosa	480, 518,
Hazari v. Lallu	... 416	523, 576, 594, 600, 601, 602, 603, 607, 608,	609, 795, 856, 1028, 1064
Hazarimal a. Abani Nath	507, 584, 590, 729
Hazura v. Chanda	... 484	Hunter v. A. G.	... 811, 817
Heeralal v. Bidyadhar	508, 677	— v. Bullock,	... 822
Heeralal v. Kaunsaillah	444, 445	Huradhan v. Muthoranath	362, 364
Heeranath v. Borm Narain Singh	203, 506	Hurbjee v. Hurgobind	... 581
Heeransund v. Oheerun	... 743	Hurdeo Bux v. Jawahir Singh	... 505
Heera Singh v. Buryar Singh	... 378	Hurday Narain v. Rooder	616, 617
Helan v. Durga Das	630, 681, 682	Hureehur v. Judoonath	... 214
Hema v. Ajoodhya	... 482	Huri Dayal v. Girishchander	998, 1084
Hemadri v. Ramani Kanta	589, 658, 682	Hurlidhur v. Ram Nath	... 696
Hemanchohal v. Maharaj Singh	... 939	Hur Narain v. Arur Singh	... 536
Hemangini v. Kedarnath	... 582	Huronath v. Indra	... 1028
Hemangini v. Nobin Chand	... 813	Hurwoosonderee v. Chundermoney	... 331
Hemchand v. Tara	1027, 1037	Hurosoonduree v. Doorga Doss	... 498
Hemchunder v. Saramoyi	1000, 1032, 1034, 1085, 1082, 1053, 1054	Huro Pershad v. Sheo Shunkuree	192, 194
Hern Sutta v. Goluck Chunder	... 998	Bursperhad v. Sheo Dayal	199, 220, 779
Henries Peerage Claim	... 273	Hurrinath v. Mothoor Motum	... 1078
Heonee v. Dhurum	... 676	Harriebander v. Rajundar	... 762
Heranath v. Ram Narain	... 734	Hurromohum v. Auluckmonee	... 482
Hermanage v. Ram Gopal	... 1025	Hurrunath v. Bandhur	... 1028
Hetnarain v. Modnarain	630, 633	Hurrowpershad v. Sheo Dayal	504, 505
Hill v. Crock	... 823	Hurrowscondery v. Cowar	... 298
Hirat Singh v. Ganpat Singh	... 544	Hurrydoss v. Dossee	... 1052
Himmat v. Bhawani	597, 1027	— v. Upoonath	1000, 1052, 1053
Himmathi Singh v. Ganpat Sing	... 728	Hurry Mohun v. Gonesh Chunder	406, 407, 410, 1028, 1080, 1068
Himmath Bose In re	... 332	Hurry Mohun v. Shonatum	1037, 1108
Hingeston v. Sidney	... 811	Hurry Mohan Roy v. Nyantara	... 437
Hira v. Jowula	... 229	Hurry Shankar v. Krishnarao	1093, 1104
Hirabai v. Lakshmi	... 828	Husen v. Rajaram	... 417
Hirakore v. Trikamdas	682, 689	Hussainamma v. Collector.	881, 888
Hiralal v. Chandrali	536, 587, 538
Hiralal v. Parmeshar	... 614	I
Hiralal v. Tripura	265, 1110	Iburamsa v. Thirumalai	... 514
Hiramoni v. Radhachurn	687, 689	Iburamsa v. Theruvencataswami	546, 656, 657, 658, 659, 661, 662
Hiranath v. Ram Narayan	... 738
Hiraram v. Udhamam	... 533	Ichhari v. Kyfaso	... 957
Hira Singh v. Gangra	... 642	Illata v. Illata	... 423
Hirbai v. Gorbai	186, 212	Ilhas v. Eulagichand	... 689
Hidiait v. Abzul	... 884	Imam v. Balamma	... 434
Himulla v. Puddo	... 917	Imambundi v. Mutsaddi	269, 415
Hiran v. Sohon	1072, 1074, 1075	Imami v. Mahomed Yusuf	... 888
Hutendra v. Rameshar	... 615	Imamuddin v. Liladhar	... 581
Holmes In re	... 420	Imrit v. Roop Narain	... 1074
Homabae v. Punjeathae	... 285	Imrit Koonwar v. Roop Narain	... 353
Honamma v. Timannhat	265, 433, 441, 926	Inamullah v. Aisha Bi	... 756
Honda Ram v. Desu Ram	... 575	Inananjan v. Adurmoney	... 859
Bookash Koer v. Khasee Prashad	670, 675	Inda v. Jehangira	... 372
Hoolas Kunwar v. Man Singh	... 659	Indar v. Jawa	... 211
Hossain v. Ali Ajain	... 770	Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad	482, 483, 484, 1028, 1029
— v. Ali Hossein	... 699
— v. Mahanta	... 856	Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal	288, 318, 782
Hosseini Ali v. Bhagwanas	... 876	Indar Narain v. Nanak Chand	... 590
Hotchand v. Manghammal	644, 923	Indar Narain v. Onkarlal	... 821
Hoymobutty v. Kerona	... 446	Indar Sen Singh v. Harpal Singh	507, 725
— v. Saekishien	... 757		728, 738
Huchrao v. Bhimrao	... 354

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxx

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh	522, 537	Jagernath v. Shama Pandey	... 588
Indar Comar v. Doolal	... 492	Jagibun v. Deo Shankar	... 1025
Indarun v. Ramaswami	231, 232, 243,	Jagneswari v. Ugneshwari	790, 794
245, 260, 269, 270, 273, 424, 425, 934, 940		Jagrup v. Ram Soonder	... 518
Indro Kuar v. Abdool	... 1074	Jagun Kooer v. Raghonundan	... 499
Indromani v. Behari Lal	345, 351	Jagunnath v. Mannu Lal	512, 520, 521
Indu Bhushan v. Sailaja	... 681	Jahabhai v. Rustomji	... 581
Indur Chunder v. Radha Kishore	... 417	Jai Bansi v. Chaffar Dhari	... 853
Indurj v. Chundeman	... 846	Jaikisondas v. Harkisondas	227, 229 219,
Ireland v. Livingstone	... 211		273, 1100
Ishen Chander v. Bhyrub Chander	... 990	Jai Narain v. Bajrang	... 595
Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh	726, 734, 779	Jai Narain v. Bankey Lal	... 890
Ishwar v. Janki	... 1056	Jaint Singh v. Gosain	... 1056
Ismail v. Jagannath	... 1042	Jai Ram v. Atma Ram	... 660
Israel v. Shamsher	... 542	Jai Ram v. Keshav	... 1087
Isri v. Hansbati	915, 1005, 1008, 1009,	Jai Ram v. Kessouree	... 799
1010, 1011, 1012, 1013, 1048		Jai Ram v. Kurverbai	... 805
Issar Chander v. Rani	... 924	Jai-Ram v. Nathu	652, 693
Ittappan v. Manavikrama	... 542	Jai Nath v. Kamala	... 521
		Jairam ( In re )	... 523
J		Jairam v. Kuverbbhai	... 770
Jabah v. Mehtab	... 526	— v. Musan	300, 301
Jaddo v. Sheo Shankar	522, 613	— v. Sheo Shankar	... 591
Jadia v. Baldeo	... 696	Jai Singh v. Bijai	... 842
Jadoonath v. Basunt Coomar	... 269	Jaiwanti v. Gajadhar	... 338
Jadub v. Benodebehary	... 708	Jaiwantee v. Nugreeda	... 881
Jadubans v. Mahpal	... 1067	Jaipal v. Indar Bahadur	... 1049
Jadumani v. Kheytramohun	... 435	Jalandhar v. Jharula	... 852
Jadumani v. Saroda	... 1032	Jalidar v. Ram Lal	512, 514
Jadunath v. Bhabuti	... 641	Jamaluddin v. Muylawa	... 886
— v. Bussunt	... 915	Jamandas v. Mulchand	... 687
— v. Ramnarain	... 1014	Jamolah v. Pagul Ram	... 206
— v. Sitaramaji	816, 858	Jamigatram v. Parbhudas	... 595
Jafar v. Ibrahim	... 841	Jamiyatram v. Jamma	998, 1006
Jafar v. Mahomed Khan	... 944	Jamna v. Machul	421, 425, 438, 439, 445,
Jafar Khan v. Dhan Shaw	... 888		446
Jagatbai v. Vijbhukandas	... 580	— v. Mulraj	... 264
Jagadamba v. Dakhina	369, 370	— v. Nainsukh	593, 606, 608
Jagadindra v. Hemanta	740, 837, 846, 853,	N. Jamna v. Sardar	... 484
875		Jamabhai v. Dharsee	... 816
Jagadindra v. Madhusudan	... 831	— v. Khimji	770 816, 939
Jagdish v. Sheo Partap	... 927	— v. Raychand	222, 328, 332, 347
Jagunnada v. Papamma	... 352	— v. Vasanta	... 521
Jagunnath ( In re )	... 523	— v. Nanabhai	... 445
— v. Akali Dassia	... 177	J. mnidas v. Ram Autar	... 829
— v. Bidyandana	284, 720, 926	Jamna Prasad v. Ram Partab	465, 466
— v. Champa	... 921	Jamoon v. Boma Soonderi	... 293
— v. Dibho	... 1046	Jammuna Pershad v. Ganga Pershad	569
— v. Jai Kishen	... 799	Jamna v. Jugdeo	... 548
— v. Kanhiyalal	... 520	Jamoonah v. Mubben	... 531
— v. Narayan	192, 227, 269, 1099,	Jamsetji v. Hirji Bai	... 832
1104, 1110		Jamshedji v. Soonabai	... 835
— v. Ranjit Singh	196, 227, 269,	Jamuna v. Ganga	... 539
1099, 1100, 1101		Jamunbai v. Khimiji	810, 811
— v. Sita Ram	... 596	Janaka v. Mewa Ram	... 454
— v. Tripura	... 1110	Janaki v. Dabi Prasad	... 1083
— v. Tulsi Das	... 533	— v. Gopal	... 869
— v. Ramabadra	... 504	— v. Narayanaswamy	1000, 1016, 1046,
Jagat Narain v. Sheo Das	521, 954		1050, 1051, 1055 1059
Jagat Ram v. Mahesh	... 1023	Janaki Setty v. Miriala	914, 915, 1084, 1089
Jagdish v. Sheo Partab	158, 784, 788	Janali v. Ram Nath	882, 883, 884
Jagendra v. Pheni Bhushan	... 998	Janardhan v. Anu	... 1000
Jagernath v. Bibi	... 858	Janardhan v. Gopal	291, 923
		Janda Lal v. Dharendra	... 619

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Jandub v. Benodebehary	... 991	Jinnuk Kishoree (Mt.) v. Raghu-	...
Janendra Nath v. Nabaloo	... 596	nadan	... 611
Jaglubai v. Jetha	... 1095	Jitan v. Manbasta	... 766
Janidi v. Kanshi Ram	... 928	Jivabai v. Vadilal	... 642
Janki v. Kallu	779, 780	Jivani v. Jirru	... 385
Jansi v. Mahadu	... 1060	Jivan Lal v. Ram Chand	... 548
Janki v. Nand Ram 223, 423, 429,	466, 470,	Jivanlal v. Kallumal	... 341
	582, 908	Jivi v. Ramji	452, 459
Janki v. Rai	... 300	Jivubhai v. Krishnaji	... 671
Janki v. Sudasheo	... 297	Jiwan v. Dit	... 201
Jankibai v. Shrinivas.	... 432	— v. Gunoo	... 547
Janki Bai v. Sundara	... 1006	— v. Harpam Das	... 290
Janki Das v. Sanchi Ram	... 484	— Mal v. Jamma Das	286, 359
Janki Nath v. Janki Nath	... 502	Jnanjan v. Adoremoney	860, 861, 865
Janki Nath v. Mothura	... 647	Jodhi v. Basdeo	846, 870, 875
Janki Prasad v. Dwarka Prasad	... 507	Jodomoney v. Sadaprosunno	... 1037
Jankiram v. Venkiah	... 938	Jodoonath v. Brojunath	438, 650, 652,
Jan Mahomed v. Dattu	... 636	Jogdamba v. Secretary of State	196, 917, 921
Janmajay v. Keshab Lal	... 261	Jogeddra v. Atindra	... 832
Janman v. Neelakantan	... 864	Jogendro v. Baladeb	663, 679
Janoke v. Gopaul	347, 851	Jogendro v. Funindro	522, 613
Janokee v. Kisto Komul	... 493	Jogendra v. Harry Doss	... 266
Jonoke v. Mothura	540, 584, 937,	Jogendro v. Jagadandhu	... 656
	1007	Jogendranandani v. Haryadas	... 267
Janumajay v. Keshublal	... 285	Jogendro v. Jugo Bundhu	658, 684
Jaswanti v. Tej Narain	... 590	Jogendro v. Nityanund	506, 643, 726, 734,
Jutha v. Venkatappa	1073, 1075		737, 936
Jatkar v. Mukunda	741, 864	Jogendro v. Srich Chandra	... 655
Javerbai v. Kalli Bai	764, 783, 805	Jogendro Nundini v. Hurry Doss	... 267
Jawahir Singh v. Gayan Sing	... 474	Jogendro Sundari v. Hurry Doss	... 266
Jwahir Singh v. Mohan Lal	... 590	Jogeshchandra v. Nriyakali	... 331
Jwahra v. Akbar Hussain	... 879	Jogeshwar v. Jagatdhari	... 832
Jaya Madhav v. Manjunath	... 1110	Jogeswar v. Ramchandra	... 473
Jayanti v. Alamelu 432, 433, 434,	435, 438,	Jogeswar v. Panch Kauri	... 228
	445, 450	Jogeshwar v. Ramachandra	776, 800
Jayanti v. Mangamma	445, 598	Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram	520, 589, 592
Jeev. Audley	... 826	Jogo v. Codal	836, 893
Jeebpath v. Court of Wards	... 953	Jogodishuri v. Kailash Chandra	... 704
Jeebo v. Sundboo	... 266	Jogodumba v. Rohinee	495, 508, 509
Jeet Nath v. Lokenath	... 736	Jogul Kishore v. Jatendro	... 1073
Jeewun v. Puttoo	... 459	Jegundro Nundini v. Hari Dass	... 264
— v. Sona	829, 1087	Joharmal v. Nain Sukh	... 248
— Bai v. Manordas	618, 619	Johnson v. Clerk	214, 219
Jenkins v. Harvey	... 221	Johnston v. Moppin	... 779
Jeolal v. Loke Narain	... 678	Joharra v. Sreegopal	434, 435, 445, 518, 576
Jeram v. Veerbhai	1072, 1074		577, 578
Jesoda v. Sheo Pershad	898, 941	Joitram v. Ramakrishna	... 763
Jes want Sing v. Jet Sing	... 278	Jokharmal v. Eknath	... 584
Jetha v. Harichai	... 965	Jonalgodda Venkamma v. Jonala-
Jethibai v. Putlibai	... 412	godda Subramaniam	321, 324
Jewan v. Vetha	... 1071	Jones v. Roe	... 744
Jewan Dass v. Kabeeroodeen	... 769	Jones v. Williams	... 815
Jeyangarulu v. Dhurna	... 884	Joshay Assam In re	398, 404, 421
Jeyangarulavaru v. Sri Hati	... 875	Joshytasam In re	... 390
Jhabbu Singh v. Ganga Bishan	401, 523	Jotilal v. Durani	... 942
Jhamman v. Tiloki	... 1078	Joti Ram v. Srastri	495, 799
Jhandu v. Tarib	... 1057	Jowahir v. Guyan Singh	469, 473
Jharula v. Jalandhar	862, 1073	Jowar v. Kailasu	... 907
Jhiti Bai v. Jejmah	408, 411, 412	Jowar Dhari v. Narsingh	... 676
Jhuna v. Ram Sarup	... 456	Joy Chunder v. Bhyrub Chunder.	284, 816,
Jianutullah v. Romanikont	... 217		818
Jijamba In re	... 1059	Joy chunder v. Bippro churn	... 542
— v. Saginram	... 521	Joy Deb v. Haroputty	... 85,
Jijoyiamba v. Kamakshi	647, 939, 1007	Joy Kishore v. Panchoon	378, 379, 1102

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxvii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Joykisto v. Nityanand	406, 408, 445, 576, 578	Kailash v. Bitto	... 648
Joymoney v. Sibasoondery	... 348	Kailash v. Grijee	1067, 1075
Joymoney v. Sibasoondery	... 338	Kailash v. Keahi	... 627
Joy Narain v. Girish Chander	588, 624, 625, 674	Kailash v. Karuna	985, 993
Joy Narain v. Joy Narain	... 628	Kalaisha v. Bitto	... 1005
Joy Narain v. Roshun Singh	... 548	Kailasnath v. Biswanath	... 1004
Joyram v. Mahadeb	... 776	Kajikar Lakshmi v. Maru Devi	399, 401
Joytara v. Ramhari	439, 454, 1007	Kakarla v. Venkata	... 214
Judoobansee v. Asamn	... 1007	Kakarlapudi v. Kanukuri	... 744
Judoonath v. Bassant	1086, 1087, 1089, 1108	Kalappa v. Akkappa	... 597
Jugalal v. Audh Bahari	596, 597	Kalavagunta v. Kalavagunta	211, 229
Jugal Kishore v. Jotendro	1076	Kalee Kishen v. Juggat Tara	... 594
Jugal Kishore v. Lakshman	870, 874	Kalepersaud v. Kupoor	... 437
Jugal Kishore v. Shib Sahai	... 642	Kaleswara v. Nataraja	... 879
Jugal Kishore v. Tulasi Ram	... 576	Kalgavda v. Sonnappa	338, 339
Jugdanand v. Kessubnund	... 995	Kali v. Namale	... 548
Juggamoni v. Nilmoni	... 845	Kalian v. Ramachandar	946, 947
Juggernath v. Doobo	519, 539, 572	Kalian Singh v. Sanwal Singh	... 778
Juggat Narain v. Collector	... 992	Kaliapa v. Deiva Singamani	... 415
Juggernath v. Odhiranee	433, 445	Kali Baksh v. Ram Gopal	303, 1062
Juggendranath v. Rajendranath	... 1053	Kalicharan v. Bangshi	... 868
Juggessur v. Nilumbhur	411, 481	Kalicharan v. Gulabi	... 881
Juggessur v. Rodro	... 856	Kalichurn v. Mohananda	... 688
Juggodamba v. Puddomoney	... 875	Kalidas v. Gor Parjaram	878, 880
Juggomohun Ghose v. Manikchand	... 220	Kali Das v. Krishna	919, 920, 923
Juggurnath v. Kishen	... 863	Kalidas v. Nathu	... 581
Juggut Mohini v. Sokhcemoney	... 850	Kalidas a. Subbamma	... 404
Jugmohan Das v. Mangal Das	465, 466, 470, 473, 515, 539	Kali kanta v. Gouri Pershad	... 681
Jugodumba v. Rohinee	... 677	Kalika Prasad v. Mathura Prasad	... 553
Jugomohun v. Sarodamoyee	... 652	Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker	377, 378, 381
Jugunnath v. Bidianund	... 184	Kalikashay v. Gouree Sunkur	678, 674
Jukni v. Q. R.	... 265	Kali Krishna v. Raghunath	506, 597, 725
Jullessur v. Uggur	954, 998	Kali Krishna v. Secretary of State	... 216
Jumoona v. Bamasoondari	282, 303, 331, 1048, 1053	Kali Pershad v. Anand Roy	723, 730, 904, 973
Jumoona Pershad v. Dignarain	... 517	Kali Pershad v. Bhoirboee	990, 991, 992
Junmejoy v. Russomoyee	1022, 1023	Kalisahoo v. Kedarnal	... 756
Juro Ram v. Gobind	... 878	Kali Shankar v. Nawab Singh	548, 571, 572
Jusoda v. Lalla Nettya Nettiylal	391, 396	Kalisunder v. Koylash Chunder	... 280
Jusondah v. Ajoodhia	... 498	Kalka v. Badri	... 526
Jwala Nath v. Kulloo	1056, 1059	Kalko v. Mathura	980, 951
Jwala Sing v. Sarder	... 935	Kalka Prasad v. Banki Lal	... 689
Jymoney v. Ramjoy	... 917	Kalka Singh v. Sheoraj Singh	... 1027
K		Kallappa v. Venkatesa	... 573
K v. Grenwhill	... 420	Kallativ. Palat	... 620
Kachi Kalyana v. Kachiyuva	506, 927	Kalliyana v. Subba	... 1007
Kachoo v. Khushaldas	... 312	Kally Prosonna v. Ananda	... 764
Kachubai v. Krishnabai	... 639	Kallu v. Faiyaz Ali	... 1068
Kadeerun v. Lallun	... 758	Kally Prosonao v. Gopee Nath	... 769
Kadegon v. Periyar	... 661	Kallu In re	... 269
Kadir v. Abdul	687, 689	Kallu v. Nur Mahi	... 290
Kagal Ganpaya v. Manjappa	... 616	Kalova v. Padapa	... 350
Kahandas In re	158, 154 754,	Kalpagaathachi v. Ganpathi	... 449
Kaihur Singh v. Roop Singh	408, 485	Kalu v. Barsu	525, 527, 528
Kailas v. Nityanand	... 655	Kalu v. Kasbi Bai	... 426
Kailasa v. Ponuukkannu	410, 521	Kalub Hussain v. Mehroon	... 884
Kailasam v. Nataraja	846, 866, 867, 875	Kalu Chand v. Surb Dial	... 548
Kailasgi v. Kishore Gir	... 927	Kalyan v. Bhawani	... 596
		Kalyanasundaram v. Urama	... 882
		Kalyanarajji v. Mofussil Co., Ltd.	... 210
		Kalyan singh v. Pitambur	... 417
		Kamakshy v. Chakrapany	526, 527
		— v. Ohidambara	640, 641, 643
		— v. Nagarathanam	231, 1110

	PAGE.		PAGE.
— v. Ramaswami	287, 417	Kartick Chunder v. Gour Mohon	1025
Kamala v. Bhagirathi	1095	Karuna v. Jai Chandra	990, 992
Kamalambal v. Krishnaswamy	669	Karuppai v. Sankaranarayanan	473, 921, 1098
Kamal Kumari v. Dava Narendra	630, 634	Karuppan v. Bullockaman	936
— v. Narendra	632	Karuppan v. Veriyal	581, 589
Kamarazu v. Venkataratnam	829	Karuppannan v. Bulokam	641
Kamavadhani v. Joysa	1004	Kaseeram v. Gendheneo	266, 268
Kambinayani v. Kambinayani	1075	Kashee Nath v. Khettur Monee	428
Kameswar v. Run Bahadur	1017, 1020	Kashee Pershad v. Bunseedhur	377
Kemeswara v. Veeracharu	223, 249, 412, 481, 693	Kashee Shuree v. Ganesh Chunder	446
Kemeswarama v. Venkata	538, 535	— v. Greesh Chunder	294
Kamikhprasad v. Jagadamba	1021	— v. Krishnakaminee	844
Kamikhya v. Hari	1016	Kashi v. Chidambaramath	868
Kamini v. Ashutosh	853	Kashi v. Jamna Das	427
— v. Krishna	1062	Kashi v. Raj Gobind	992
— v. Promatho	860	Kashibai v. Moreshwar	948, 964, 966
Kamini Dasi v. Chandra	428, 582	Kashibai v. Sitabai	964, 966
Kamineyunmonee in re	1110	Kashibai v. Tatia	947, 348
Kamona v. Hurro Lal	832	Kashib Chunder v. Gour Kishore	1087
Kamubai v. Dossa	749	Kashi Nath v. Chinnaji	520, 580, 614, 764
Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi	1100, 1104	Kashi Pasad v. Indar Kunwar	1012
Kanakrav v. Gurrav	691, 692, 69	Kasi v. Simathu	860
Kanakasabhaiya v. Seshachella	545	Kasim v. Sudhindra	857, 861
Kanaye v. Anund Lal	617, 619	Kaseo v. Goluck Chunder	998
Kandaswami v. Akkammal	1053	Kasturbai v. Shivajiram	433, 438, 442, 454,
— v. Dorasami	641, 669, 674	Kasturibhavani v. Appu	800
— v. Murugammal	441	Kasturi v. Chiranjil Lal	263
— v. Rajagopalaswami	1027	Kasturi v. Pannalal	285
— v. Somaskanta	517	Katama v. Dorasinga	939, 940, 942, 998, 1000, 1052, 1053
Kandukuri v. Kandukuri	306	Katama Nachiar v. Srimat Raja Mootoo	492, 504, 506, 715, 725, 726, 784, 198, 893, 894, 918, 927, 938, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073, 1098,
Kanewar v. Krishna	585, 586	Kateeram v. Gendheneo	223, 249, 403,
Kanhai Lal v. Brj Lal	1050, 1075	Kathapurumal v. Venkubai	1007
Kanhai Ram v. Amori	1086, 1090	Kaulera v. Jorai Kasaundhan	174
— v. Biddya	397, 404	Kawasji v. Sirinbai	264
Kanhialal v. Debi Das	508, 509, 584	Kazi Hassan v. Sagun	879
Kanhyalal v. Satiya	338	Kedar v. Amritlal	993
Kaniz v. Saheba	881, 882	— v. Atul	811, 816
Kankipati v. Racherla	407, 411	— v. Kedar	875
Kanhu v. Parvaty	454	— v. Ramoni	627
Kannammal v. Virasami	369, 370	Kedari v. Atmarabhat	619
Kanni v. Ammakannu	1007	Kedar Nath v. Hari Das	998
Kanniammal v. Ammakannu	646, 648	Kedarnath v. Hemangini	582
Kinnoi Dai v. Lacy	1005	Kedar Nath v. Jai Narain	641
Kanoi v. Ammakannu	1018	Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh	504, 505, 630, 684
Kantai v. Ameri	914	Keerutnarain v. Bhoobunesree	889
Kantammal v. Meenakshi	799	Keerut Singh v. Koolahul Singh	998
Kanta Mohini v. Nanchora	435	Kelly v. Kelly	268
Kanuram v. Kashi Chandra	1000, 1033, 1034	Kenchava v. Ningapa	332, 345
Kapilnauth v. Government	507	Keni v. Moneeram	860
Kapurohand v. Narainjan Lal	379, 383	Kermatulla v. Kermatulla	635
Karamali v. Rahimbhoy	419	Keerutnarain v. Bhoobinesree	388
Karimchand v. Bulchand	617, 618	Kesar v. Ganga	403
Karamsi v. Karsandas	375	Kesarbai v. Hunsraj	828, 1087, 1101, 1102, 1108, 1107
Karan Singh v. Bhup Singh	596, 606, 607	Kesar Bai v. Mangaibai	1101
Kareti v. Kareti	1033	Kesarbai v. Valab	269, 942, 943, 965, 966
Karim v. Pardhan	1099	Kesaree v. Samardhan	237, 247, 986
Karimuddin v. Gobind	482, 485, 596, 677, 1016, 1027, 1028, 1029	Kesari v. Ganga	946, 947
Karistoremoney v. Norendrekrisna	507	Kesharam v. Venkkrishore	708
Karoonamoyee v. Administrator General	437
Karsandas v. Gangabai	468, 486
Karsandas v. Ladvavahu	316

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lix

	PAGE		PAGE.
Keshav v. Daulat Khan	... 407	Kishen Mohan y. Khetter Moni	... 402
Keshav v. Govind	326, 328	— Monee v. Ashee Soonduree	... 369
Keshav v. Vinayak	... 743	— Pershad v. Har Narain	512, 520, 522
Keshava v. Bhagirathi	... 851		523, 581
Keshava v. Lakshminarayana	... 1056	— Prasad v. Tipan Prasad	533, 607, 608
Keshoro v. Naor	... 273	Kisnee v. Khealee Ram	... 1058
Keshub Lal v. Radha Raman	... 1062	Kishni Bai v. Hembai	... 816
Kesub Chunder v. Bishnu	... 931	Kishore v. Durga Charan Lal	... 1032
Keval Bhagvan v. Ganpati	... 531	— v. Girdhari	... 682
Keyake v. Yedattil	... 864	— v. Kali	... 885
Kayarahana v. Subbatay	921, 924	Kishori v. Mundra	474, 800
Khairu v. Fakirchand	... 243	— Lal v. Bhusai	... 1063
Khakro v. Jhoonnucklall	... 444	— Lal v. Chunnilal	301, 362, 364, 367,
Khajilall v. Gobind	... 595		368
Khalil Rahman v. Gobind Pershad	535, 608	— Mohun Ghose v. Moni Mohun	438
Khandacharya v. Govindacharya	164, 166		652
Khandubai v. Balwantrao	... 692	Kissen v. Javallah	198, 959
— v. Pirbui	... 467	Kissenchunder v. Baidum	... 179
Kharagai v. Debi	... 957	Kojadu v. Lakshmi	924, 925, 940, 1110
Khashalal v. Administrator-General	789	Kokilasari v. Rudranand	... 853
Khater Monee v. Kishen Mohun	... 403	Kolandaya v. Vedamuthu	... 1042
Khedroo v. Deo Rancee	... 721	Kollany v. Luchmee Pershad	778, 779, 829
Khem Keer v. Joy Keer	... 927	Komalambal v. Krishnaswamy	623, 675
— v. Umishankar	247, 427, 454, 544	Kamineymoney In re .	... 265
Kherode money v. Deorgamony	767, 803, 805	Komul v. Sitakunt	... 921
Khotramanilasi v. Kasbi Nath	428, 429, 482	Konnul Manes v. Alhadmonee	... 1059
	582	Konhappa v. Subba	522, 1027
Khotter v. Hari	... 863	Kanjibeharee v. Gyaadeen	... 492
Khettar Moni v. Kashinath	... 426	Konvidi v. Venkataswami	... 384
Khettar Moni v. Kedambini	... 925	Koomud v. Seetakanath	... 957
Khetterpal v. Khelal	... 631	Koonj Behari v. Premchand	718, 729, 828
Khettramoni v. Shyama Charan	... 1054	Kooldeop v. Government	... 724
Khilut Chunder v. Koonj Lal	... 493	Koonj Beharee v. Khetur Nath	... 493
Khinji v. Morarji	... 805	Koobai v. Ramabai	... 425
Khirode Chandrr v. Saroda Prasad	687, 689	Koobu v. Jan Kansama	... 266
Khodabai v. Bahadur	... 942	Koomud Chunder v. Seetakanth	191, 192,
Khoderam v. Rookinee	... 971		194
Khojendra v. Narain	... 1027	Kopil Nath v. Government	713, 716
Khoderam v. Rookinee	... 284	Korab v. Pancham	351, 353,
Khoorshed v. Nubee Fatima	684, 704	Kosala v. Saluckai	... 727
Khooshe v. Bhugwan	... 230	Kotta v. Bangasi	... 731
Khub Lal v. Ajodhya	1020, 1024, 1025, 1026	Koul Nath v. Jagrup	... 473
Khudi Ram v. Bonwarilal	402, 403	Koyalogi v. Shiva	... 498
Khuggender v. Sharupgir	... 971	Koyalasnath v. Gyaamonee	... 918
Khulroo v. Saraswati	... 1007	Krishendra v. Dabendra	... 634
Khunnilal v. Govind	174, 630, 634 637, 677,	Krishna v. Atwaram	... 763
	926, 1073, 1074,	— v. Badammal	... 468
Khushalchand v. Bai Mani	223, 224, 235,	— v. Hemaja	... 686
	260	— v. Kali Sunkur	852, 854
Kidar Nath v. Mathu Mal	... 1066	— v. Lalbhari	... 864
Kilambi v. Tirumala	471, 526	— v. Parameshri	354, 355
Kinji v. Narsi	... 230	— v. Krishnaswami	517, 578
Kirbal v. Sukurmani	... 936	— v. Nagamani	... 517
Kirpa Mayee v. Damodar	... 990	— v. Sambasiva	... 1043
Kirp v. Ramjas	... 942	— v. Sami	622, 643, 645, 666
Kirut Singh v. Kulbal	... 938	— v. Secretary of State	... 392
Kisan Singh v. Moushwar	... 517	— v. Sinnapponnu	... 433
Kisar v. Ganga	... 402	— v. Subbanna	... 692
Kishen v. Janokee	... 677	— v. Sukhas	... 860
Kishen Giri v. Buggeot	1032, 1037, 1039	— v. Vasudev	516, 518
Kishen Rao v. Rukhma	... 762	— v. Vankatalakshmi	... 659
Kishen v. Bhagwan	... 590	— v. Venkatrama	956, 958
Kishen Komul v. Jonogee	493, 498	Krishnabai v. Babaji	... 438
Kishen Lal v. Garurudwaj	... 590	Krishna Bai v. Notan Das	810

	PAGE.		PAGE
Krishna Bhat v. Kapa Bhat	162, 741	Kumud v. Jogendra	... 821
Krishnadeb v. Krishnadeb	... 801	Kumor Gungadheer v. Kumar Hira Lal	165
Krishnadhan v. Sanyasi	... 591	Kummud Krishna v. Jogendra	... 830
Krishna Dhoni v. Bhagwan	... 416	Kumud Lal v. Jogendra	... 540
Krishnai v. Shripati	1101, 1103	Kunbacha v. Kutti Mammi	... 475
Krishnaji v. Balaji	... 617	Kunbali v. Keshava	607, 613, 616, 617
— v. Gajanaou	... 741	Kunchi v. Ammu	... 545
— v. Moro	467, 476, 501, 502,	Kundan Das v. Denmal	... 689
— v. Panduraog	196, 944	Kuneez v. Subba	... 848
— v. Sakharan	... 518	Kunhamed v. Kundbanbi	... 507
— v. Varamai	... 762	Kunhya v. Bukhtawar	... 531
Krishnalal v. Naneshwara	... 628	Kunje Behari v. Nemiohand	... 495
Krishnamani v. Ananda	... 748	Kunj Behari v. Premchand	... 1087
Krishnamma v. Balammal	... 249	Kunja Lal v. Narasamba	... 618
Krishnan v. Sankara	... 857	Kunjamani v. Nilkunj	... 865
Krishnanath v. Atmaran	... 805	Kunj Lal v. Venkataramanjulu	... 619
Krishnappa v. Ramaswamy	... 465	Kupil Rai v. Radha Prasad	... 210
Krishnarao v. Benabai	805, 821, 823	Kuppa v. Duraiswami	... 865
Krishna Rao v. Bhagwant Rao	... 447	— v. Singaravelu	267, 280, 424
Krishnaraw v. Ramaraw	... 721	Kuppa Gurukul v. Dorasami	... 212
Krishnaraw v. Rangaraw	... 380	Kuppusami v. Venkata Lakshmi	... 345
Krishnaraw v. Shankaraw	326, 327	Kuppi v. Sebak Ram	... 1025
Krishna Singh v. Nur Din	... 198	Kur Ali v. Mawaz Khan	... 290
Krishnaswami (In re)	... 185	Kurdaram v. Hunibhai	... 1087
— v. Gomatuni	... 873	Kureeun chand v. Odung	... 946
— v. Rajagopala	513, 529, 684	Kurothedatta v. Mele	... 926
— v. Ramaswami	... 595	Kuru Mal v. Bhanna Mal	... 399
— v. Sumaram	878, 879, 885, 886	Kuriyali v. Mayan	... 516
Krishnayya v. Pichamma	... 957	Kurum Singh v. Fyzali	... 967
Krishnayyan v. Mutbuswami	985, 986, 987	Kushlal chand v. Ibrahim	... 619
Krishnaswami v. Bagubali	... 956	Kusum kumari v. Satya Rajan	181, 331, 337
Krishnier v. Lakshmiammal	941, 1049	Kuta v. Kuta	706, 707
Kristayya v. Narasimham	655, 661	Kutti v. Radhakrishna	954, 967, 968, 998
Kristaramani v. Ananda	... 764	Kutti Amma v. Ragyi Seth	... 517
Kristiengar v. anamamalay	... 342	Kuttushari v. Vallotil	523, 581
Kristo v. Hem Chunder	1068, 1071	Kurverji v. Babai	... 373
Kristo dhone v. Nandarani	... 742	Kylash-Chunder v. Gooro Churn	... 991
Kristo Kissore Neoghy v. Kadermoye	893.
	394, 396
Kristoremoney v. Norendro	767, 826	Labb Singh v. Gurcharan	... 216
Kristo Monee v. Poosunno	... 1068	Lachhan Kuwar v. Anant Singh	... 1078
Kristraya v. Venkataramayyc	... 708	Lachman v. Akluar	213, 214, 216, 217
Kuar Sen v. Mamman	... 205	Lachho v. Gopi	... 792
Kubera v. Jirai	... 397	Lachman v. Kanhaya	355, 359
Kuchoo v. Avzoo	... 392	— v. Khunnulal	... 532
Kudapa v. Kakarla	... 768	— v. Mardan Singh	287, 247
Kudatamma v. Narasimah	525, 526	— v. Rupechand	... 387
Kudomee v. Joteeramma	224, 265	— v. Sarman	605, 606
Kudithio v. Medu	... 1018	— Kuar v. Debi Prasad	... 501
Kulada v. Kali Das	... 848	— Lal v. Kanhayalal	... 355
Kulada Prasad v. Haripada	595, 677, 919	Lachmin v. Eham sundar	... 1069
Kulada Prasad v. Hari Prasad	192, 195	Lachmi Narain v. Kunji Lal	... 596
Kuleda v. Jageshar	... 444	— v. Bolaram	... 391
Kullyanerruree v. Dwarka Nath	... 423	— v. Nothro	... 1057
Kulponath v. Mewah Lal	669, 674,	Lachman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh	... 533
Kumara v. Kumara	748, 749, 769	Lachmeshwar Singh v. Manowar	... 541
— v. Pela	... 522	Lachmi v. Dabi Prasad	473, 476
Kumarappa v. Manavala	... 214	— v. Durga	... 636
Kumarasami v. Palanayappa	... 521	Lachu v. Dal Singh	... 241
— v. Subharaya	... 753	Ladcoiah v. Sanvaley	... 1065
Kumaravelu v. Veeranna	942, 968	Lahar v. Purn	... 853
Kumari v. Golab	... 865	Lakshi v. Barub	923, 989
Kumla v. Muneeshunker	... 435	— Priya v. Bhairab Chandra	992

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Lakshmana v. Chinnathambi	... 419	Lalla Gunput v. Toorun	... 481
Lakshmichand v. Gatto Bai	180, 285, 359	Lalla Mahaber v. Mt. Kundun	190, 198
Lakhraj v. Harpal Singh	... 507	Lalla Sreedhur v. Lalla Madho	... 498
Lakshman v. Jannabai	467, 470, 473, 476, 501	Lall Behary v. Thacomoney	617, 619
----- v. Radhabai	... 380	Lall Soonder v. Hurry Krishen	... 1058
----- v. Ramachandra	539, 570, 665, 775	Lallu v. Jugmohun	... 828
----- v. Sarasvati Bai	433, 445, 449	Lallu v. Tribhavan	... 581
Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada	956, 957, 967, 968	Lallubai v. Cassibai	265, 906, 908, 910, 921, 963
Lakshmanaswami v. Rangamma	... 864	Lallubai v. Mankuvarbai	331, 903, 904, 906, 908, 910, 916, 921, 938, 943, 947, 954, 963, 1103
Lakshman v. Kameswara	... 639	Lallumal v. Chabindi	... 829
Lakshman v. Gopal	680, 638	Lal Mahomed v. Brijee Kishore	... 889
----- v. Ramachandra	664, 691, 692, 699	Laloo v. Laloo	... 941
----- v. Satyabhama Bai	435, 445, 449, 458, 1027	Lalti Kuor v. Ganga Bishen	... 432
Lakshmappa v. Ramava	338, 348, 349, 350, 374, 425	Laluchand v. Girjappa	... 589
Lakshmi v. Bijnath	811, 816	Latchumammal v. Gengammal	638, 639
----- v. Dada	... 965	Latifun v. Moorti	... 279
----- v. Kallyan Singh	... 245	Latifunnessu v. Nasi Ram	... 886
----- v. Lakshmidas	... 430	Lavett v. Lavett	790, 791
----- v. Murari	841, 879, 889	Laxman v. Vinayak	... 623
----- v. Subramanya	351, 777, 778	Laxmibai v. Shri Krishna	... 854
Lakshmiamma v. Subhammal	... 453	Laxmipatrao v. Venkatesh	... 854
Lakshmi Bai v. Ganpat	630, 706, 775, 998, 1003, 1006	Leathes v. Newitt	... 218
----- v. Jagrave	... 964	Lakruj v. Muhpal	... 217
----- v. Jairam	965, 1103	Lenga v. Penguri	... 266
----- v. Rajaji	... 316	Leelanund v. Monoronjan	... 723
----- v. Madhavrao	... 458	Le Herstedt v. Broers	888, 889
----- v. Ramachandra	... 347	Leigh v. Dickson	... 695
----- v. Sarasvati	... 238	Lekhray v. Harpal	... 734
----- v. Shridhar	... 591	Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill	418, 419
----- v. Vishnu	297, 311, 329	Lilitagar v. Suraj Bai	... 268
Lakshminarain v. Dasu	1022, 1023, 1025	Limji v. Bapuji	... 769
Lakshpati v. Rambodh Singh	... 1056	Lingappa v. Kesudasan	174, 425
Lala v. Hirasing	... 212	Lingayya v. Kanakamma	482, 454
Lala Narain v. Lala Ramanuj	... 413	Lochan v. Babai	652, 653, 921, 928, 954, 967
Lala Parbhu Lal v. Mylne	... 301	Lochan v. Sant Chander	... 614
Lala Ram v. Dal Koer	... 829	Lochan Singh v. Nemdharee	... 474
Lal Bahadur v. Kunhaiya Lal	473, 477, 495, 504	Lockwood v. Wood	200, 206
Lalchand v. Mt. Thakur Devi	211, 260	Loganada v. Ramaswami	... 1016
Lalchand v. Nand Lal	... 848	Login v. Princes Gouramma	... 194
Lal Das v. Moti Bai	... 502	Lookenath v. Shamsundaree	... 378
Lal Hajandra v. Lal Mathuramath	... 202	London Corporation v. Cox	... 213
Lal Hurro Prasad v. Dasuruth	... 417	Longford v. Purdon	... 792
Lali v. Murlidhar	372, 375, 376, 778	Re M <sup>r</sup> Longhlin's Estate	... 271
Lalita v. Sita Ram	... 354	Lopez v. Lopez	175, 176, 245, 269, 677
Laliteshwar v. Rameshwar	506, 712, 725, 728, 738, 920	Lord Dunraven v. Mlewellyn	... 219
Lalit Mohun v. Chukun Lal	745, 747, 820, 821, 827, 829	Lord Rivers v. Adams	211, 219
Lalit Pandey v. Sridhar	... 1021	Lowji v. Mithabai	... 958
Laljeet v. Rajcoomar	641, 651, 652, 658, 680, 699, 999	Lucas v. Lucas	245, 269
Lalji v. Kurki	... 1069	Luchman v. Kallichurn	1087, 1088, 1089
Lal Kunwar v. Chiranjil Lal	362, 367	Luchmedhar v. Fqbal Ali	... 603
Lalla Beharee Lal v. Lalla Madho		Luchmee Koer v. Fatchsingh	... 757
Persaud	... 498	Luchmi v. Rookmani	... 879
Lalla Gobind v. Dowlut	... 264	Luchmun v. Giridhur	533, 607, 608
		Lucman v. Mohan Tall	346, 358
		Luchmanen v. Sivapiakasa	576, 580
		Luchmes v. Rookmanee	853, 879
		Luchmaswar v. Manawar	... 683
		Luchmi Koer v. Roghu Nath	269, 273
		Luchmi Narain v. Janki Das	... 662
		Luchmun v. Debee Pershad	... 934

	PAGE.
Luckeenarain v. Modhoosoodun	... 387
Lkhea v. Gungabobind	... 192
Lukhud v. Modheemokhee	... 492
Lukmee v. Umar Chand	... 393
Lukmeeram v. Khooshalee	... 1027
Lutchman v. Sivaprakasa	... 575
Luthmeeput Singh v. Sadautla	... 211
Luximan v. Mullar	... 684
Luxman Row v. Mullar Rao	475, 476, 677
Lyde v. Mynn	... 744
Lyons v. Blatin	... 393

MI

Ma Burk v. Ma Yin	...	360
Maccandas v. Ganpatrao	...	547
Machh Bai v. Hic Bai	...	240
Mackenzie v. Mackenzie	...	264
Macloed v. Manikchand	579,	581
Mada Abdulla v. Ram Lal	...	1035
Madan v. Erlandi	...	212
Madana Mohana v. Purushotama	318, 925,
326, 348
Madan Mohun v. Rajah Ali	...	542
Madanji v. Tribhawan	927,	1006
Madan Mohan v. Akharyar	...	1078
Madan Mohan v. Purn Mal	1032, 1035,
	...	1042
Madari v. Har Dayal	...	420
Madari v. Malki	...	1056
Madavarayya v. Tirtha	...	829
Madala v. Vadappalli	...	887
Madha v. Sarat Kumari	844, 848,
Madhav Ram v. Davc	966, 998,	1005
Madasook v. Budree	...	761
Madhavrao v. Atmaram	...	505
Madhav Row v. Balkishna	...	204
Madhao Rao v. Dave	...	954
Madhavrao v. Kashi Bai	...	763
Madho v. Bindeesury	...	945
Madho v. Janki	...	951
Madho v. Kamta	...	865
Madho v. Mehrban	...	876
Madho v. Ramratan	857,	864
Madho Das v. Kampta Das	184, 185
Madho Pershad v. Mehrban Singh	569, 572,
	538, 605, 609,
Madhub Bose v. Soodha	...	499
Madhumala v. Laxman	916, 921,	998
Madhusudan v. Bhan	...	523
Madhu Sudan v. Debogobinda	...	201
Madhu Sudan v. Mohendra	...	1039
Madhusudan v. Radhika	...	865
Madhusudan v. Rocke	1017, 1064
Madhava v. Vengataramanjulu	...	618
The Magistrates of Dunbar v The Duchess of Rox Burghc	...	210
Ma Gyi v. Maung Tha	...	360
Mahabalya v. Timmsya	...	578
Marabir v. Adhicary	...	1078
Mahabir v. Basudeo	586, 587, 593,
Mahabir v. Kundan	626, 669, 673, 674
Mahabir v. Moheswar	606, 609, 613, 615, 616
Mahabcar v. Ramvad	569, 571, 606

	PAGE.
Mahableswar v. Durga Bai	... 809
Mahableshwar v. Ramachandra	392, 401, 417
Makadei v. Baldeo	1071, 1072, 1074
Mahadso v. Devkoer	... 647
— v. Shevkaram	... 1067
Mahadev v. Lakshman	540, 641, 642
— v. Loshman	... 401
— v. Neelamoni	... 1022
Mahadevi v. Rama	476, 481
Mahadevi v. Pammakka	... 545
Mahadray v. Ganga Bai	438, 455
Mahalakshammamma v. Venkataramamma	433, 444
Mahalinga v. Vencoba	884, 885
Mahamaya v. Haridas	206, 211, 212, 864
Mahantapa v. Gangava	... 965
Mahantava v. Gangava	243, 244
Mahanund v. Penimadhub	... 1028
alabaraja Mahtab u. Government	... 205
Maharaja of Benares v. Ram Kumar	536, 538
Maharaja of Bobbili v. Kaminayani	... 728
— v. Zemindar of Chundi	... 1068
— v. Venkataramarajulu	546, 588
Maharajulengar v. Puntilu	... 725
Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh	530, 533
Maharani Hiranath v. Baboo Ram Narayan	... 218
Mahar Singh v. Het Singh	... 847
Mahasundar v. Ratan Prasad	... 831
Mahataf Chand v. Tej Chandra	... 841
Mahbub v. Abdul	683, 699
Mahderi v. Mahomed Ismail	... 888
Mahender v. Jokka Singh	... 202
Mahendra v. Giris Chandra	... 1031
Mahesh v. Taruck	... 239
Mahesh Goswami v. Banwari Lal	... 534
Mahesh Partab Singh v. Dimgpal Singh	437, 455, 729
Mahesh v. Ratnasingh	... 1027
Maheshwar v. Kishen Singh	607, 608
Mahim Chandra v. Hara Kumari	798, 799, 829
Mahoda v. Kulcani	... 992
Mahomed v. Ahmedbai	... 890
Mahomed v. Ganapati	... 865
Mahomed v. Haji	... 685
Mahomed v. Kallu	... 689
Mahomed v. Mahomed	... 638
Mahomed v. Shama	... 482
Mahomed v. Yeoth	... 418
Mahomed Arif v. Saraswati Debya	... 418
Mahomed Ashraf v. Brojessurree	482, 1022
Mahomed Buksh v. Hossein	... 1062
Mahomedinissa v. Bachelor	... 634
Mahomed Ismail v. Gaur Pershad	... 415
Mahomed Rissut Ali v. Hasin Banu	1078
Mahomed Shamsool v. Shewakram	... 475
Mahaomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed.	185, 186, 470
Mahomed Umar v. Man Kuar	... 440
Mahomed Yusuf v. Satar	... 886

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Mahomed Zahoor Ali v. Rutta Kōer	458	Mankamma v. Balkishan	800
Mahtub Ali v. Bharat	757	Mankuvar v. Lachman	1050
Mahtuba v. Jaimul	944	Mammabini Dasi v. Balav Chandra	426
Mailathi v. Subbaraya	192, 193	Manmatha v. Rohilli	1050
Majibunnessa v. Abdul	848	Mannox v. Greener	819
Makham Lal v. Gayon	482, 485, 1023, 1025, 1029, 1030	Manohar v. Lakhmiram	842, 870, 874
Makhilachar v. Faizur	890	Manohar v. Tambkar	875
Makunda v. Monmohini	988	Manohar Lal v. Bansari Das	338
Malgauda v. Babaji	297, 300	Manohar v. Kesharom	770
Malgirappa v. Shivappa	1027	Manokarni v. Haripade	1048, 1049
Mallan v. Purushotama	504	Manorama v. Kalicharan	770, 839, 843, 845
Mallesam v. Jugala	598	Mansa Ram v. Sundar	341
Mallika v. Ratanmani	864	Mansha v. Jiwan Mcl	426
Mallikarjun v. Sridevamma	852	Manshadevi v. Jiwanmal	433
Mallikarjuna v. Durga Prasad	453, 505, 655, 722, 927	Manshanna v. Ma Chin Taw	881
Ma Me Gale v. Ma Sayi	360, 361	Mansoor Ali v. Iamdayal	387
Ma Mye Me v. Maung Ba Dun	361	Mantappa v. Baswantrao	630, 632, 634, 637, 732
Mana v. Rama	230	Manu v. Thompson	804
Manally v. Vaidyalinga	834	Mari v. Chinrammal	197, 198, 652, 653, 956, 957
Manashram v. Ahmed Hoosein	415	Marian v. Kadir	679
Mambahalal v. Gopal	533	Marina v. Doddiseti	249
Mancha v. Narotam Das	467, 473, 475, 492	Marquis of Salisbury In re	405
Mancharam v. Franshunk	212, 507, 685, 859, 869	Marudimthuv. Srinivasa	1034
Mancherji v. Narayan	784	Marudayi v. Doraswami	934, 937, 938
Manchershan v. Ardershir	752, 753	Maruti v. Babaji	616
Mandakni v. Arunbala	824, 825	— v. Lilachand	517
Mandaleswar v. Prayag	728	— v. Rana	698
Mandappayya In re	885	— v. Vishvanath	500
Mandhar v. Lakshmi Ram	740	Mary v. Siva Bagyattachi	1100
Mandit Koor v. Phoolchand	110	Mashin v. Maung Chit Pan	396
Manekbai v. Narayji	948	Ma Shwe Yin v. Ma Shwe Nyun	359, 360
Maneya v. Felix Slym	392	Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali	437
Mangal v. Rukhmim	425, 430	— v. Sheikh Ahmad	415
Mangal v. Rupchand	688	Matangini v. Jogendra	266, 423
Mangala v. Dinanath	349, 434, 435, 449	Re Mathews Ex-parte Powell	219
Mangalasami v. Raja of Ramnad	860	Mathlu v. Maung Po	891
Mangaldas v. Abdul Razhak	185	Mathura v. Bikhan Lal	778, 829
Mangal Das v. Railaram	928	— v. Esu	154, 287
Mangal Das v. Ranchoddas	749	— v. Jagat	1043
Manghirmal v. Vithalram	686	— v. Kalka	911
Mangtu v. Jowala	832	Mathuranath v. Eusuff	954
Ma Ngwe Yin v. Maung Po Taw	280	Mathuraswamy v. Bangarammal	777
Mangherulal v. Vithal Ram	724	Matigaru Coal Co. v. Shragers Ltd	660
Mami v. Subbarayar	308	Ma Tin Shive v. Maung Ba Gyi	361
Manick v. Bhugobutty	348	Matungini v. Ram Rattan Ray	248, 440, 1001, 1018
Manickam v. Ramalinga	1046	Maung Man v. Darama	244, 245
Manickchand v. Jagat Settani	180, 190, 359, 959	Maung Thwe v. Maung Tun Pe	360
Manisa v. Balagopala	865	Ma Wun Di v. Ma Kie	261, 272
Manikka v. Soubagiammal	453	Maya v. Rishen	244
Manikyamala v. Nanda Kumar	318, 326, 828	Maya Devi v. Ramchand	263
Manilal ( In re )	999, 401	Mayaram v. Jayvantrao	618
Mani Lal v. Rewa	915, 1084	Mayaram v. Motiram	1003
Mani Lal v. Tara	431, 435	Mayor of Lyons v. A. G.	814, 815, 890
Manjama v. Padmanabhayya	805	Ma Ywet v. Ma Me	360, 861
Manjamma v. Seshagiri Rao	287	Mazhir Ali v. Budh Singh	285
Manjanatha v. Narayana	658, 665, 667	Mc Dowell v. Raghava Chetty	535, 536
Manjappa v. Lakshmi	432	In re Mc Grath	399, 405
Manjaya v. Shanmuga	657, 660	Meda v. Mitla	829
Manjunath v. Shankar	868	Meenakshi v. Muniandi	1109, 1110
		— v. Rama	429, 432
		— v. Chetumbra	761

	PAGE.		PAGE.
———— v. Rajam	... 1047	Mohroo v. Gunsoo	673, 674
Meeraw v. Girjanundan	... 1078	Mohon Das v. Krishna Bai	908, 933, 145, 956
Meghu Rai v. Ranu Khelawan	... 1057	Mohun Pershad v. Kishen Mohun	... 1102
Megonath v. Molich	... 547	Mohon Singh v. Chuman Rai	... 934
Meherbon v. Sheo Kunwar	432, 916	Mohru v. Moti	... 284
Mehta Ram v. Rewachand	... 501	Mohun v. Narendra	... 858
Main Gale v. Ma Kin	... 360	Mahunee v. Mohunna	... 957
Mellora v. Surre	... 1054	Mohun Lal v. Sironmune	986, 1037, 1039
Mercoer v. Denne	206, 207, 214, 218	Mahunkoomar v. Zoramuh	... 1017
Metaram v. Thanoomram	... 266	Moidin v. Ambi	... 476
Mewa Kunwar v. Hulas Kunwar	... 1048	Moji Lal v. Chandrabati	... 269
——— Singh v. Basant Singh	... 684	Mokhoda v. Nand Lal	428, 430, 433, 444, 454
Mg sin v. Mg Po	... 587	Mokondo v. Ganesh	745, 748
Mhalsa Bai v. Vithoba	231, 331, 338, 348	———— v. Bissesuree	... 1100
Midnapore Zemindary v. Appaya-swami	1046, 1047	——— v. Bykunt	... 378
Mile v. New Zealand Alford Estate & Co.	629, 630	Mondakini Dasi v. Adinath Dey	319, 320, 323
Millechamp v. Jhonson	... 207	Monemotha Nath v. Onath Nath	289, 299
Miller v. Runga Nath	... 519	Monilal ( In re )	... 523
Mills v. Naylor of Colchester	206, 208	Moniram v. Keri	159, 196, 351, 376, 918, 925, 998, 1001, 1017, 1018
Milroy v. Lord	... 753	Monjilal v. Chandbarati	223, 231, 269, 278
Mi Me v. Mi Shwa Ma	... 237	Mookond v. Nobodip	335, 398, 400, 404
Minakshi v. Appakutti	936, 937	Moola v. Nundy	... 164
——— v. Immudi	... 616	Moolchand v. Krishna	... 538
——— v. Ramanada	335, 340	Moonshlee Buzloo Raheem v. Sham-soo Nissa	... 264
——— v. Veerappa	... 702	Moosa v. Abdul Rahim	... 195
——— v. Visvanatha	... 786	Moosabbai v. Yakubhai	... 762
Mirabivi v. Vellayanna	... 220	Moosa Haji v. Paji Abdul	232, 1099, 1100
Mir Azmat Ali v. Mahmudala Nissa	... 230	Mooses Hiji v. Hasi Abdul Rahim	... 227
Misri Lalsa v. Harlalsa	... 260	Moothoormohum Roy v. Soorendro	... 162
Mitta v. Neerunjun	683, 863	Moothuswami v. Lutchimydavummah	332
Mittard In re	... 265	Mootia v. Uppen	... 377
Mocury v. Brindabun	... 542	Movaiji v. Nanbhai	816, 817
Madhoosoodun v. Jadub Chunder	386, 391	Moro v. Balaji	1032, 1038
Moggridge v. Thackwell	... 826	Moro v. Ganesh	488, 498, 672, 699, 380
Moghli v. Lidli	914, 1086, 1090	More Narayan v. Balaji	... 380
Mohan Lal v. Amrat Lal	204, 210	Morris v. Davies	263, 270, 273, 278
——— v. Mul Chand	... 658	Morrison v. Verchyoole	406, 408, 445, 576, 578, 579
——— v. Tekchand	547, 588	Morse & Co. v. Trustees v. Gibbs	... 856
Mohanund v. Nafur Mondul	406, 407	Morun Mose v. Bejoy	342, 378
Moharance v. Naddu Lal	... 1059	Motee Dass v. Modhoosoodun	856, 860
Mohananda v. Baikuntha	... 1033	Mothoor v. Surendra	... 387
Mohar Singh v. Het Singh	770, 810, 816	Moti v. Lal Das	... 1092
Mohebdro v. Ashutosh	... 683	Motilal v. Advocate General	797, 820, 823
Mohendra v. Rakhal	... 829	Moti Lal v. Rati Lal	... 1087
——— v. Shamsunnessa	1073, 1075	Motil Bouli v. Bhagwan	... 491
——— (Raja) v. Jokha Singh	... 212	Motilal v. Kasbi	452, 453
Mohendro v. Rookinny	... 368	Mohiahu v. Mamubai	764, 781, 782, 810, 811
Mohenia v. Gowri Nath	... 1068	Motiahoo v. Purshotam	... 756
——— v. Ram Kishore	... 1068	Mouji Lal v. Chandrabati	231, 268
Mohesh v. Maylosh	... 878	Moult v. Halliday	... 219
Mohesh v. Ugrakant	... 1058	Moulvie Sayyad v. Bebee Ultat	... 759
Mohesh Chunder v. Chunder Mohun	642, 923	Mountain v. Bennet	... 789
Mohesh Chunder v. Satrugan	718, 736	Mrimalini v. Abinash	... 1053
Mohesh Narain v. Taruck Nath	... 370	Muchoo v. Arzoan	164, 174, 264, 266, 391, 897
Moheshur v. Kishen Singh	512, 533	Muddan Gopal v. Khikhinda Koer	502, 503, 923
Mohidin v. Shivalingappa	... 205	Muddan Gopal v. Ram Buksh	... 478
Mohin Chunder v. Kasbi	914, 1086, 1090
Mohima Chander v. Durga Monee	... 264
Mohiuddin v. Sayududdin	... 879
Mohin v. Gordon	... 853
Mohan v. Madhu Sudan	... 853

lxxv

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Muddan Lal v. Kunnel	842, 844, 848	Muthoor v. Bootun Singh	... 539
Muddan Thakur v. Kantoo Lall	... 595	Muthoormohun v. Soorendrao	... 301
Mudhu Gopal v. Rani Buksh	... 761	Muthu v. Dora	... 915
Mudoobun v. Kishen	... 971	Muthu v. Gopalan	... 545
Muhammad v. Husain	735, 736	Muthu v. Sellathammal	... 1089
Muhammad v. Mankuar	... 248	Muthu v. Shunmoogatha	... 848
Muhammad v. Mithu Lal	... 573	Muthu v. Udayan	... 726
Muhammad v. Shamsunnissa	... 213	— Karuppaiy v. Shellathammal	158
Muhammad Askari v. Radha Ram	... 528	— Krishna v. Ramachandra	... 890
Muhammad Inam Ali v. Hussain Khan	202,	— Kumara v. Udayan	... 477
	216, 503	— Ram Krishna v. Mari Muthu	491
Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano	... 212	— Sami v. Bangarammal	... 507
Muhammad Niazuddin v. Mhd. Umar Khan	... 290	Muthusamier v. Sreemethanathi	... 860
Muhammad Salim v. Sadalroddin	... 213	Muthusawami v. Govindaswamy	... 637
Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Naizuddin	... 372	Muthusami v. Masilamani	163, 189, 228,
Mukhoda v. Kulicani	... 1025		224, 232, 234, 244, 245
Mukta v. Dad	... 1078	Muthuswami v. Muthukumara	955, 956, 957,
Mukunda v. Jogesh Chandra	... 663		958
Mukunda v. Leburau	660, 682	Muthuswami v. Muthuswami	... 636
Mula v. Chando	... 241	Muthusawmy v. Narayana	... 405
Mula v. Partap	248, 927	Muthuswami v. Seemambeedu	907, 947, 956,
Mula Bai v. Maharaj Singh	... 1007		956, 958
Mulchand v. Bhudia	245, 260, 263	Muthusamy v. Venkatasubba	... 424
Mulchand v. Mancha	775, 828	Muthusamy v. Venoteswara	280, 445
Mulchand v. Sidlu Singh	... 576	Muthuvaduvanatha v. Periasami	927, 938,
Mulji v. Gomti	229, 280		942
Mulji v. Ujam	433, 438, 442	Muthuverra v. Vythilinga	1041, 1043, 1046
Mullangi v. Venkatasubbamma	... 869	Muthu Veerappa v. Ponnuswami	386, 391,
Mulugu v. Mudigonda	1032, 1033, 1035		393
Mulund Kam v. Rama Ratan	... 547	Muthuvelayuda v. Parasakti	... 291
Mulla v. Raghubar	... 477	Muthuveli v. Aiyaswamy	... 860
Munda v. Timmaju	... 684	Mutivilaya v. Parasakti	... 923
Munee v. Devnarayan	... 297	Mutsaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal	297, 298, 301,
Munia v. Puran	914, 1087		312, 313, 315
Munusamy v. Murrugappa	... 888	Muttammal v. Vengalakshmi	... 942
Mun Mohinee v. Soodamonee	... 498	Muttayyan v. Sangili	582, 594, 725
Munna v. Kabutra	... 443	Muttayyan v. Virapandia	... 473
Munni v. Umrao Singh	... 227	Muttayyan v. Zemindar of Sivagiri	... 473
Munshi Ram v. Govinda	... 675	Mutterum v. Gopal	... 482
Munugarra v. Munugarra	... 1032	Muttu v. Dora Singha	198, 725, 732, 942,
Muonye v. Lomun	... 492		997, 999, 1084, 1104
Murari v. Mukund	671, 673, 674	Muttu v. Perianayagam	... 867
Murari v. Tayanu	407, 411, 416, 417	Muttu Kannu v. Paramesami	... 287
Murari Lal v. Kundan Lal	... 375	Muttumarran v. Lakshmi	... 761
Muraji v. Parbatibai	642, 923	Muttuswamy v. Venkata	... 544
Murie Das v. Manick	192, 195	Muttuvaduganatha v. Periasami	726, 734,
Murli v. Joy Singh	... 924		736, 737
Murlidhar v. Harilal	399, 401	N
Murugappa v. Ayyadorai	... 572	Naba Kumar v. Bhabasundari	... 1021
Murugappa v. Nagappa	323, 324, 351	Nachiappa v. Rangaswami	1032, 1033
— v. Rangasawmy	... 860	Nachiappa v. Chinnyasami	725, 728, 734
Murugappa v. Palaniyandi	641, 693	Nachiappa v. Sivasubramaniya	725, 728, 834
Murugayi v. Viramakali	248, 440, 1001,	Nada v. Nur Muhammad	... 290
	1018	Nagabhushanam v. Sheshamma	... 290
Murugesam v. Manickavasaka	861, 862	Nagalinga v. Subhramaniya	198, 540, 641
Muteeram v. Gopal	1058, 1060	Nagalinga v. Vaidelinga	... 968
Muthammal v. Kamakshy	... 441	Nagalingam v. Chinammal	... 886
Muthappudayan v. Ammani	914, 1087	Nagalutchmee v. Gopal	... 777
Muthappannaryan v. Ammani	... 198	Nagamma v. Virabadra	428, 441
Muthayya v. Minakshi	... 377	Nagappa v. Subba	... 290
Muthia v. Perianna	... 841	Nagar v. Ramappaya	... 848
Muthiah v. Veerammal	... 444

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Nagarampalli v. Nagarampalli	... 307	Narainbati v. Ramdhari	... 1031
Nagendra v. Amar Chandra	... 517	Narain Das v. Har Dayal	... 539
Nagendra v. Benoy.	902, 904, 925, 1097	Narain Das v. Tirlok	168, 265, 925
Nagesh v. Gururao	... 941	Narain Dass v. Mahtab	... 425
Nagindas v. Bachoo	377, 378, 380, 381, 383, 1098	Narain v. Chandi Din	956, 957
Nahal Chand v. Hemchand	... 966	Narainsami v. Arunachala	... 777
Naikram v. Soorjubans	... 1057	Narain Singh v. Shiam Kali	... 387
Nainachand v. Dayan	... 548	Narana v. Vasteva	... 1062
Najibulla v. Nadir	... 290	Naranbhai v. Ranchod	539, 577
Naku v. Ragava	... 545	Naraoji v. Bhavandas	... 522
Nallapp v. Balammal	... 644	Narasamma v. Balaramcharlu	341, 377
Nallatambi v. Mukunda	474, 761, 896	Narasamma v. Maugammal	954, 968
Nallakandiyil v. Chatu	... 545	Narasanna v. Gangu	... 1110
Nallana v. Ponnal	921, 954, 957, 966, 967, 968	Narasimha v. Anantha	... 865
Nalluri v. Kanapalli	287	Narasimha v. Gopala	... 860
Namasevayam v. Annamalai	235, 249	Narasimha v. Parthasarathy	286, 315, 319, 320, 321, 505, 807
Namasivoya v. Sivagami	999, 1027	Narasimha v. Rangaya Appa Row	315, 320
Nana v. Appa	... 573	Narasimha v. Veerabhadra	... 919
— v. Manobhai	... 1003	Narasimha v. Venkata	998, 1003
— v. Rama	... 435	Narasimham v. Madhavarayudu	... 1000
— v. Rameshchandra	... 234	Narasimharow v. Ambaji	... 531
Nenabai v. Achratbai	... 828	Narasimharow v. Antai	... 592
Nannabai v. Janardhan	... 235	Narayan v. Anaji	508, 509, 677
Nannabhai v. Nathab Bai	658, 682, 691	Narayan v. Bholaagir	... 1066
Nanaji v. Sundrabai	201, 941	Narayan v. Chelluo	695, 696
Nanakchand v. Munna Lal	... 359	Narayan v. Chengalasuna	... 1056
Nanak Singh v. Sant Singh	... 1022	Narayan v. Chintaman	861, 946
Nana Narain v. Huree Punth	... 473	Narayan v. Chulban	... 686
Nanda Gopal v. Pareshmani	... 797	Narayan v. Gamnaji	... 697
Nandalal v. Dhivendra	... 618	Narayan v. Gobind	... 939
Nandan v. Ajudhia	... 249	Narayan v. Gunga Ram	... 618
Nandan v. Harikishen	... 406	Narayan v. Jagannath	... 590
Nandan Prasad v. Ajudhia Prasad	... 412	Narayan v. Kannan	... 745
Nandan Singh v. Harikishen Singh	... 411	Narayana v. Krishna	... 678
Nandi Singh v. Sitaram	... 827	Narayan v. Lal Ramesh	... 782
Nandkumar v. Radha	... 1073	Narayan v. Laving	... 211
Nandkoomar v. Rainiduranarain	... 1037	Narayan v. Lokenath	... 726
Nand Ram v. Mangal Sen	591, 700	Narayan v. Luxmee Baee	... 397
Nanhi v. Gouri	921, 957	Narayan v. Manohar	... 989
Nanhi v. Nathu	... 800	Narayan v. Nabaji	... 691
Nanjaya v. Shanmuga	546, 589	— v. Nana	196, 202, 295, 331
Nanjundiah v. Venkatasubbayya	... 477	— v. Nathaji	512, 515, 691
Nanomi v. Modhun Mohun	531, 532, 590, 613, 614, 616	Narayan v. Pandurang	618, 655
Nanti Chundar v. Bisheshwar	... 406	Narayan v. Political Agent	... 516
Narain v. Chandi Din	... 953	Narayan v. Rajaram	... 516
— v. Chintaman	... 946	Narayana v. Rama	1089, 1059
— v. Hiralal	... 893	Narayan v. Roodur Narain	... 741
— v. Lakshmi	... 938	Narayan v. Satyaji	617, 619
— v. Rakhel	... 986	Narayan v. Vasudev	... 743
— v. Roodur	... 836	Narayan v. Venkatacharya	536, 538
Naragunty v. Venkama	492, 493, 506, 724, 725	Narayana v. Chengalamma	... 505
Navagunty v. Venkatachala	725, 784, 785, 786	Narayana v. Krishna	508, 509
Narain v. Gopal	... 294	Narayana v. Ranga	... 212
— v. Lokenath	... 507	Narayanan v. Raman	... 475
— v. Nana	682, 700	Narayana v. Ramalinga	481, 526
— v. Pandurang	... 661	Narayana v. Venkatarana	... 522
— v. Raghoobar	... 518	Narayanawamy v. Irulappa	875, 888
— v. Rakhal	243, 244	Narayanawamy v. Kumaraswami	871, 888
— v. Tirlok	... 1110	Narayanawamy v. Kuppaswamy	196, 381
		Narayanawamy v. Managammal	307, 328
		Narayanawamy v. Rameswami	... 351
		Narayanasami v. Periatambi	... 768
		Narayanasami v. Samidas	... 587

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxvii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Narayanawamy v. Tirumal	... 657	Nelson v. Dahl	... 219
Narayan Rao v. Ramabai	488, 485, 487, 440, 442, 444, 452, 454, 459	Nemichand v. Radha Ballabh	... 618
Narbadaibai v. Mahadeo	482, 446, 447, 449, 453	Nem Roy v. Laimun	638, 639
Narendra v. Dinanalli	287, 1098	Nepentala v. Sittikanta	... 187
— v. Nalini	... 459	Neti Rama v. Venkatacharlu	... 889
— v. Raicharam	... 521	Nevalram v. Nandkishore	1000, 1006
— v. Ram Gobind	... 278	Newton v. Liddiard	... 365
— v. Sarada Kanta	... 681	Nga Tin (Yi) v. Ng. Twe Aung	... 756
Narottam v. Narsandas	... 473	Nhanee v. Hurteeram	535, 536
Narhar v. Dirgnath	442, 443, 444	Niadri v. Kura	... 941
Narmada v. Bhagwant Rai	914, 1084	Niamal v. Nura	... 201
Naro v. Patugowda	... 480	Nibal Kuar v. Secretary of State	... 829
Narsappa v. Sakharum	942, 1003, 1005	Nidhoomani v. Saroda Pershad	... 375
Narasingdas v. Narain Das	... 503	Nihala v. Bhuti	... 213
Narsingh v. Durjan	... 853	Nibalchand v. Sasoon	... 638
— v. Lalji	... 593	Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand	659, 700
Narudamuthu v. Srinivasa	... 1032	Nihal Devi v. Ship Dial	... 435
Narumayya v. Tiruvangadathan	... 265	Nihali v. Khanak Singh	... 927
Nash v. Morley	... 815	Nihalkhan v. Hur Churn	... 1015
Nasir Hussain v. Mata Prasad	... 772	Nilmadhub v. Bishumbur	354, 363, 366,
Nasir Khan In re	... 269	Nil Madhub v. Jotindra	... 926
Nasirul Haq v. Fyazul Rahman	... 744	Nilamoney v. Boneshur	... 582
Nataraja v. Karutha	... 868	Nilmoni v. Bukronath	723, 730
Natasayyam v. Ponnusami	481, 535, 593	Nilmoney v. Ganga	... 677
Natoliarammal v. Gopalakrishna	... 445	Nilmony v. Kingoo Lal	426, 430, 712, 729
Natesa v. Rama	407, 637	Nilmoney v. Jagabandhu	... 865
Natesa v. Rathai	... 572	Nimaye v. Jogendro	... 936
Nath v. Bhag Singh	... 269	Nimoney v. Rudhamoney	... 930
Natha v. Jamni	... 1073	Nimbalkar v. Jayavantrao	... 350
Nathabai v. Ranchor Das	... 577	Ningareddi v. Lakshmana	423, 424, 427
Nathaji v. Hari	... 338	Ningareddi v. Lakshmanwa	... 267
— v. Sitaram	... 518	Ningawa v. Ramappa	... 372
Nathu v. Gangodattar	... 884	Nirad Mohini v. Shibdas	... 963
— v. Keshwaji	177, 880	Nirunjun v. Padaruth	184, 185
— v. Kishori	... 890	— v. Shib Prasad	... 1012
— v. Kundan Lal	... 586	Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya	392, 407
— v. Nai Babu	... 1078	Nissur v. Dhanwantha	... 987
— v. Tulsha	... 1027	Nistarini v. Makhan Lal	449, 456, 458
Nathubai v. Mulchand	... 617	Nitradayee v. Bhola Nath	... 338
Nathuni v. Baijnath	... 592	Nitrapal Singh v. Jaipal Singh	202, 218
Nathu Rai v. Din Dayal	... 488	Nitto Kissoree (Sreemutti) v. Jogendro Nath	437, 439, 442, 443,
Nathu Ram v. Chhugan	407, 411	Nitri Pal v. Jai Pal	717, 718, 720,
— v. Shoma	... 410	Nobe Gopal v. Amrit Moyee	... 455
Nathu Singh v. Gulab Singh	... 372	Nobin Chandra v. Hemchandra	... 1077
Natukher v. Chowdhry Chintamun	... 212	Nobin Chandra v. Khedar Nath	... 498
Naulakhi v. Jai Mangal Singh	... 1056	Nobin Chunder v. Guru Persaud	... 999
In re Naven	... 339	Nobin Chunder v. Janardhan	191, 193
Navroji v. Perojbat	... 800	Nobin Chunder v. Romesh Chunder	617, 618
— v. Perozbai	188, 801	Noble v. Durell	... 210
Nawab Ray v. Bhubhutte	281, 286	Nobo Krishore v. Harinath	1032, 1033, 1035,
Nawabuddin v. Kami	... 465		1037, 1043
Nayamvaru v. Errappa	... 727	Noberdoss v. Modhu Sundari	1032, 1037
Nayendra v. Ama Chandra	... 516	Nogendra Nandini v. Benoy Krishna	770
Nazim v. Ahmad	... 888	Nogendro v. Benoy	810, 847
Neelkaunt v. Munc	... 665	Nogendro v. Kishensoondery	... 391
Neel Kisto v. Beerschunder	204, 220,	Nonera v. Gurrov	... 512
	492, 493, 725, 733, 736, 990	Norendra v. Atul	... 860
Neelmoney v. Ganga Narain	492, 508, 503	Norendra v. Kamalbasini	... 813
Nalinikanta v. Sarnamoyi	... 680	Normon v. Thompson	... 634
Nellaikumar v. Marakathammal	... 1029,	Nowbut Singh v. Lad Kooer	223, 230
	1086, 1088	Nowlao v. Lalloe	... 516
Nelliappa v. Thangama	684, 886	Nowrat v. Trimbrick	... 589
		Nritya Gopal v. Mani Chandra	... 856

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Nagarampalli v. Nagarampalli	... 307	Narainbati v. Ramdhari	... 1081
Nagendra v. Amar Chandra	... 517	Narain Das v. Har Dayal	... 589
Nagendra v. Benoy,	902, 904, 925, 1097	Narain Das v. Tirlok	168, 265, 925
Nagesh v. Gururao	... 941	Narain Dass v. Mahtab	... 425
Nagindas v. Bachro	377, 378, 380, 381, 383, 1038	Naraini v. Chandi Din	956, 957
Nahal Chand v. Hemchand	... 966	Narainsami v. Arunachala	... 777
Naikram v. Soorjubaas	... 1057	Narain Singh v. Shiam Kali	... 337
Nainachand v. Dayan	... 548	Narana v. Vasteva	... 1062
Najibulla v. Nadir	... 290	Naranbhai v. Ranchod	539, 577
Naku v. Ragava	... 545	Naraoji v. Bhavandas	... 522
Nallappa v. Balammal	... 644	Narasamma v. Balaramcharlu	341, 377
Nallatambi v. Mukunda	474, 761, 896	Narasamm v. Maugammal	954, 968
Nallakandiyil v. Chatu	... 545	Narasanna v. Gangu	... 1110
Nallana v. Ponnal	921, 954, 957, 966, 1067, 968	Narasimha v. Anantha	... 865
Nalluri v. Kanapalli	287	Narasimha v. Gopala	... 860
Namasevayam v. Annamalalai	235, 249	Narasimha v. Parthasarathy	286, 315, 319, 320, 321, 505, 807
Namasivoya v. Sivagami	999, 1027	Narasimha v. Rangaya Appa Row	315, 320
Nana v. Appa	... 573	Narasimha v. Veerabhadra	... 919
— v. Manobhai	... 1003	Narasimha v. Venkata	998, 1003
— v. Rama	... 435	Narasimham v. Madhavarayudu	... 1000
— v. Ranaachandra	... 934	Narasimharow v. Ambaji	... 531
Nanabai v. Achratbai	... 828	Narasimbarow v. Antai	... 592
Nanabhai v. Janardhan	... 235	Narayan v. Anaji	508, 509, 677
Nanabhai v. Nathabai	658, 682, 691	Narayan v. Bholaagir	... 1066
Nanaji v. Sundrabai	201, 241	Narayan v. Chellan	695, 696
Nanakchand v. Munna Lal	... 359	Narayan v. Chengalasuna	... 1056
Nanak Singh v. Sant Singh	... 1022	Narayan v. Chintaman	861, 946
Nana Narain v. Huree Punth	... 473	Narayan v. Chulban	... 686
Nanda Gopal v. Pareshmani	... 797	Narayan v. Gamnaji	... 697
Nandalal v. Dhirendra	... 618	Narayan v. Gobind	... 939
Nandan v. Ajudhia	... 249	Narayan v. Gunga Ram	... 618
Nandan v. Harikishen	... 406	Narayan v. Jagunnath	... 590
Nandan Prasad v. Ajudhia Prasad	... 412	Narayan v. Kannan	... 745
Nandan Singh v. Harikishen Singh	... 411	Narayana v. Krishna	... 678
Nandi Singh v. Sitaram	... 827	Narayan v. Lal Ramesh	... 782
Nandkumar v. Radha	... 1073	Narayan v. Laving	... 211
Nandkoomar v. Rainiduranarain	... 1037	Narayan v. Lokenath	... 726
Nand Ram v. Mangal Sen	591, 700	Narayan v. Luxmee Baee	... 397
Nanhi v. Gouri	921, 957	Narayan v. Manohar	... 989
Nanhi v. Nathu	... 800	Narayan v. Nabaji	... 691
Nanjaya v. Shanmuga	546, 589	— v. Nana	196, 202, 298, 381
Nanjundiah v. Venkatasubbayya	... 477	— v. Nathaji	512, 515, 691
Nanomi v. Modhun Mohun	531, 532, 590, 613, 614, 616	Narayan v. Pandurang	618, 655
Nanti Chundar v. Bisheshwar	... 406	Narayan v. Political Agent	... 516
Narain v. Chandi Din	... 953	Narayah v. Rajaram	... 516
— v. Chintaman	... 946	Narayana v. Rama	1089, 1059
— v. Hirulal	... 893	Narayan v. Roodur Narain	... 741
— v. Lakshmi	... 938	Narayan v. Satyaji	617, 619
— v. Rakhel	... 986	Narayan v. Vasudev	... 743
— v. Roodur	... 836	Narayan v. Venkatacharya	536, 538
Naragunty v. Venkama	492, 493, 506, 724, 725	Narayana v. Chengalamma	... 505
Naragunty v. Venkatachala	725, 734, 785, 786	Narayana v. Krishna	508, 509
Narain v. Gopal	... 204	Narayana v. Ranga	... 212
— v. Loknath	... 507	Narayanan v. Raman	... 475
— v. Nana	682, 700	Narayana v. Ramalinga	481, 526
— v. Pandurang	... 661	Narayana v. Venkatarana	... 522
— v. Raghoobar	... 518	Narayanawamy v. Irulappa	875, 886
— v. Rakhal	243, 244	Narayanawamy v. Kumaraswami	871, 888
— v. Tirlok	... 1110	Narayanawamy v. Kuppaswamy	196, 381
		Narayanawamy v. Managammal	307, 328
		Narayanawamy v. Ramaswami	... 351
		Narayanasami v. Periatambi	... 768
		Narayanawamy v. Samidas	... 587

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxvii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Narayanaswamy v. Tirumal	657	Nelson v. Dahl	219
Narayan Rao v. Ramabai	488, 485, 487, 440, 442, 444, 452, 454, 459	Nemichand v. Radha Ballabh	618
Narbadabai v. Mahadeo	482, 446, 447, 449, 453	Nem Roy v. Laimun	638, 639
Narendra v. Dinanalli	287, 1098	Nepenbala v. Sittikanta	187
— v. Nalini	459	Nebi Rama v. Venkatacharlu	889
— v. Raicharam	521	Nevalram v. Nandkishore	1000, 1006
— v. Ram Gobind	278	Newton v. Liddiard	365
— v. Sarada Kanta	681	Nga Tin (tyi v. Ng. Twe Aung	756
Narottam v. Narsandas	473	Nhanee v. Hurreeram	535, 536
Narhar v. Dirgnath	442, 443, 444	Niadri v. Kura	241
Narmada v. Bhagwant Rai	914, 1084	Niamal v. Nura	201
Naro v. Punagowda	480	Nibal Kuar v. Secretary of State	829
Narsappa v. Sakharum	942, 1003, 1005	Nidhoonani v. Saroda Pershad	375
Narasingdas v. Narain Das	503	Nihala v. Bhuti	213
Narsingh v. Durjan	858	Nihalchand v. Sasoon	638
— v. Lalji	598	Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand	659, 700
Narudamuthu v. Srinivasa	1032	Nihal Devi v. Ship Didi	435
Narumayya v. Tiruvangadathan	265	Nihali v. Khanak Singh	927
Nash v. Morley	815	Nihalkhan v. Hur Churn	1015
Nasir Hussain v. Mata Prasad	772	Nilmadhub v. Bishumbur	354, 363, 366,
Nasir Khan In re	269	Nil Madhub v. Jotindra	926
Nasirul Haq v. Fayazul Rahman	744	Nilanoney v. Boneshur	582
Nataraja v. Karutha	868	Nilmoni v. Bukronath	723, 730
Natasayyam v. Ponnusami	481, 535, 593	Nilmoney v. Ganga	677
Nate'iarammal v. Gopalakrishna	445	Nilmony v. Hingoo Lal	426, 430, 712, 729
Natesa v. Rama	407, 637	Nilmoney v. Jagabandhu	865
Natesa v. Rathai	572	Nimaye v. Jogendro	936
Nath v. Bhag Singh	269	Nimoney v. Radhamoney	930
Natha v. Jamni	1073	Nimbalkar v. Jayavantrao	350
Nathabai v. Ranohor Das	577	Ningareddi v. Lakshmana	423, 424, 427
Nathaji v. Hari	338	Ningareddi v. Lakshmanwa	267
— v. Sitaram	518	Ningawa v. Ramappa	372
Nathu v. Gangodattar	884	Nirad Mohini v. Shibdas	963
— v. Keshwaji	177, 880	Nirunjam v. Padaruth	184, 185
— v. Kishori	890	— v. Shib Prasad	1012
— v. Kundan Lal	586	Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya	392, 407
— v. Nai Babu	1078	Nisur v. Dhanwantha	927
— v. Tulsha	1027	Nistarini v. Makhan Lal	449, 456, 458
Nathubai v. Mulchand	617	Nitradayee v. Bhola Nath	338
Nathuni v. Baijnath	592	Nitrapal Singh v. Jaipal Singh	202, 218
Nathu Rai v. Din Dayal	488	Nitto Kissoree (Sreemutty) v. Jogendro Nath	437, 439, 442, 448,
Nathu Ram v. Ohhugan	407, 411	Nitri Pal v. Jai Pal	717, 718, 720,
— v. Shoma	410	Nobe Gopal v. Amrit Moyee	455
Nathu Singh v. Gulub Singh	372	Nobin Chandra v. Hemchandra	1077
Natukher v. Chowdhry Chintamun	212	Nobin Chandra v. Khedar Nath	438
Naulakhi v. Jai Mangal Singh	1056	Nobin Chunder v. Guru Persaud	999
In re Naven	339	Nobin Chunder v. Janardhan	191, 198
Navroji v. Perojbat	800	Nobin Chunder v. Romesh Chunder	617, 618
— v. Perozbai	188, 801	Noble v. Durell	210
Nawab Ray v. Bbugbutte	281, 286	Nobo Krishore v. Harinath	1032, 1033, 1035, 1037, 1043
Nawabuddin v. Kami	465	Noberdoss v. Modhu Sundari	1032, 1037
Nayanvaru v. Errappa	727	Nogendra Nandini v. Benoy Krishna	770
Nayendra v. Ama Chandra	516	Nogendro v. Benoy	810, 847
Nazim v. Ahmad	888	Nogendro v. Kishensoondery	391
Neelkaunt v. Mune	665	Nonerra v. Gurrov	512
Neel Kisto v. Beerohunder	204, 220, 492, 493, 725, 733, 736, 990	Norendra v. Atul	860
Neelmoney v. Ganga Narain	492, 508, 509	Norendra v. Kamalhasini	813
Nalinikanta v. Sarnamoyi	680	Normon v. Thompson	634
Nellaikumar v. Marakathammal	1029, 1086, 1088	Nowbut Singh v. Lad Kocer	223, 230
Nelliappa v. Thangama	884, 886	Nowlao v. Lalloe	516
		Nowrat v. Trimbrik	589
		Nritya Gopal v. Mani Chandra	856

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Nrityamoni v. Lathan Chander	... 756	— v. Sreenath	479, 484, 520, 858, 859, 860
Nufur v. Ram Koomar	... 998	Palanisawmy v. Vanjiammal	... 309
Nugender v. Raminnee	... 1071	Palanivelappa v. Mannaru	... 546
Nullit v. Bhagala	... 924	Pallaya v. Ramadhanalalu	... 842
Nund Coomar v. Ruzeeddeen	469, 470, 473, 474	Palukkavandy v. Periakaruppa	... 517
Nund Kishore v. Kanee Ram	... 1046	Panachand v. Manohar Lal	1024, 1025
Nund Kishore v. Ram Tewary	... 1046	The Panama Telegraph Co. v. India Rubber Co.	... 543
Nundlal v. Tapeedas	... 273	Panchnan v. Shib Chunder	655, 660
Nundram v. Chotoo	... 492	Panchanand v. Lal Shan	... 914
Nundram v. Kashee	341, 357, 548	Panchapakasa v. Kanaka	424, 442
Nunko Lal v. Sohodra	... 398	Panchappa v. Sanganasawa	331, 440
Nunko Singh v. Purn Dhun Singh	... 340	Pandara v. Karutha	... 858
Nur Baksh v. Rukum Singh	... 415	Pandhari Nath v. Govind	... 1003
Nurli Singh v. Joy Singh	... 928	Pandaya v. Pali	... 424
Nuronath v. Goda Kolita	... 499	Pendurang v. Bhaskar	573, 697
Nursing v. Bhuttan Lal W. R.	... 281	Pankhabati v. Nonihal Singh	... 1049
Nursing In re	... 658	Pannalal v. Bamasundari	... 1029
Nursingh Das v. Rai Narain Das	476, 509	Papamma v. Appa Ram	332, 338, 376, 384, 385
Nusserwan v. Laxman	... 618	Papamma v. Appa Rao	... 378
O.		Papariyudu v. Rattamma	... 1058
Oatway Hertzlet v. Oatway	... 874	Papaya v. Ramana	... 857
Obhay Chunder v. Patee Mohun	... 691	Paramesari v. Girdhari	... 887
Ojoodhya v. Rama Sarun	... 761	Parami v. Mahadevi	423, 433, 441,
O'keefe v. Casey	... 402	Parasara v. Rangaraju	306, 309
Olati v. Vardarajulu	1000, 1048	Parashmani v. Deriyanti	... 917
Omrit v. Luckee Narain	902, 957	— v. Dinanath	919, 928
Ooday Chand v. Dhunmanee	... 1053	Parash Ram v. Morari	... 572
Oodaychurn In re	... 992	— v. Sherjit	... 542
Oodey Singh v. Phoolchund	1012, 1030, 1066	Parbati v. Ainuddin	656, 657, 658, 660, 681
Oolagappa v. Arbuhnott	... 798	— v. Bai Kunth Nath	508, 509, 510, 766
Ooma Dutt v. Hanuman	... 698	— v. Chandrapal	202, 214, 216, 726, 734
Ooman Dutt v. Kunhia	... 358	— v. Jagadis Chunder	191, 192, 214, 477, 507, 712, 731, 737
Oomrao v. Mankuwar	... 280	— v. Maharaj	659, 700, 709
Oomra Singh v. Mahtab Kunwar	... 298	— v. Naunihal Singh	625, 627, 674
Oorhya v. Rajoo	... 946	— v. Ram Barun	... 770
Opendur v. Baonn Moyee	... 348	Parbhu v. Jwala	... 709
Oseri v. Bawa	... 879	— Lal v. Mylne	372, 1021, 1037
Otumchunder v. Obhoychurn	101, 192	Parbuti v. Rambharun	811, 816, 817
P.		Parbuty v. Sudabut	... 492
Pabitra v. Damodar	799, 829	— v. Mudho	... 211
Padaajrav v. Ramrav	... 320	— v. Furno Chunder	... 217
Padala v. Madavarapa	514, 668	Paraman v. Bhattu	536, 586
Padam Kumari v. Suraj	Kumari 201, 244	Parfitt v. Lawless	... 791
— Lal v. Tek Singh	... 820	Parichat v. Zalim Singh	... 424
Padata v. Madavarapu	... 657	Parker, ex-parte Turquand	... 219
Padarath v. Ram Narain	... 1063	Paramanund v. Krishna	... 678
Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards	196, 326, 959, 993, 1102	Parmappa v. Shiddappa	944, 1101, 1103
Padmaker v. Mahadev	... 613	Parmeshar v. Bishesar	261, 285
Padma Krishna v. Nagamani	... 411	Parmeshri v. Debi	... 596
Padmamani v. Jagadamba	647, 658, 682, 683	— v. Mohammed Syed	... 205
Padmanand v. Jagadambai	... 658	Parmeshwar v. Gobind	512, 515, 516, 691
Padojirav v. Ramrav	... 372	Parreelal v. Bukhuree Lal	... 492
Padm Singh v. Koer Oodey Singh	... 317	Paranna v. Gharlei Das	... 819
Pahaladi v. Luchmunbutti	680, 681	Parshad Singh v. Mahali	... 934
Pahlwan v. Ram Bharose	... 763	Parson v. Sori	474, 1098
Paigi v. Sheonarain	223, 264, 266, 267	Parsons In re Stockby v. Parsons	... 744
Palaniappa v. Daivasikhamony	214, 769, 1017	Parsoam v. Dat Gir	866, 868
		Partab v. Tilukdharee	... 473
		Partappa v. Altar Singh	... 1056
		Partbasarathi v. Thiruvengada	770, 811, 817

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxix

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Parvati v. Chander Pal	... 940	Pirojshah v. Manibhai	507, 654, 714, 782
Parvati v. Ganpat Rao	425, 430	Pirsab v. Gurappa	352, 780
Parvati v. Govind	1046, 1051	Pirtheelal v. Doorgalal	... 401
Parvati v. Kisansingh	... 435	Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir	539, 573
Parvathi v. Saminathan	... 372	Pirthisingh v. Bhola	... 211
Parvati v. Thirumalai	655, 737, 937, 938	Pirthisingh v. Raj Kower	433, 435, 438
Parvati v. Tarwadi	... 429		442, 453, 454
Parvati Bai v. Chatru	433, 435, 442, 452	Pirtheesingh v. Sheo Soondaree	192, 214
Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna	369, 370	Pirthu Rai v. Jowahir Singh	... 683
	371, 384	Pitambur In re	269, 270
Pateswari v. Rudra Narain	... 716	Pitum v. Joy Kishan	... 776
Patel Vandran v. Patel Manilal	207, 209	Pitamsingh v. Ujagar Singh	473, 474, 512,
Patnimul v. Manohar Lal	... 938		520
Patra v. Srinivasa	526, 527	Pium v. Babaji	1032, 1042
Pattiya v. Venkamma	... 288	Pukar v. Ranjit	... 998
Pauliem v. Pauliem	467, 473, 476, 501	Pohumal v. Naroomal	... 249
Paxton v. Courtenay	... 211	Pokhpal Singh v. Chhidu Singh	... 534
Payappa v. Appanna	328, 225	Ponnappa v. Pappuvayyengar	531, 589, 594
Peari Lal v. Chandi	481, 536, 556		761
Pearse v. Pattinson	... 814	Ponnusami v. Dorasami	... 187
Pearry Mohan v. Narendra	861, 876	Ponnuswami v. Thatha	... 546
Pedda Ammani v. Zemindar of Marungapuri	278, 734, 738	Pool v. Secretary of State	... 639
Fedamuthu v. Appa	... 917	Poona v. Nirpat Singh	... 504
Feddamuthulaty v. Timma	373, 384, 546	Pooran v. Kasheesuree	... 851
Feddayya v. Ramalingam	... 546	Pooran Mul v. Tolsi	... 237
Peet v. Dharee	... 853	Poorendra v. Hemangini	438, 455, 652, 998
Pelham v. Gregory	... 754	Poorna v. Kalidan	... 927
Pellisari v. Sendamorai	... 1088	Porat V. Mehta	956, 958
Penta v. Mudiya	... 683	Portal and Land, In re	... 825
Periaswami v. Periaswami	505, 726, 737,	Postlethwaite v. Freeland	... 212
	538	Pottala v. Pulicat	... 546
Porkash v. Ramestwar	... 729	Pottarary v. Audimulu	... 660
Perumaul v. Pottee	... 348	Pratulla v. Jagendra	770, 842
Perut v. Palut Roy	... 1078	Prag Das v. Giribar Das	... 419
Pertab Narain v. Subhao	... 786	Pragnarain v. Heeralal	... 666
Peru v. Ayyappan	... 545	Prahalad v. Behary	... 860
Peruappavanalingam v. Nallasivan	... 513	Pramada v. Poorna	856, 861, 865, 875
Perumal v. Ramalinga	... 525	Pranbullabh v. Deocristian	... 531
Petheperumal v. Muniandy	... 758	Prandhar v. Ramchender	... 1100
Patachi v. Sangili	615, 616	Pranjivandas v. Ichharam	691, 699
Pettachi v. Chinnatambi	... 725	Pranjiwan v. Rewa	... 941
Pheggan v. Puta	... 944	Pranjiwan Das v. Devkurarbai	1000, 1008,
Phani Singh v. Nawab Singh	... 541		1006
Phatambi v. Haji Musa	... 864	Frankishen v. Bhugwatcc	... 998
Phene's Trusts In re	... 285	Frankishen v. Mothoora	493, 508, 509, 677
Phoolbas v. Jogeshur	... 893		706, 707, 708
Phool Chand v. Rughoobans	1021, 1058, 1060	Frankishan v. Nayanomone	... 998
Phool Koer v. Debi Pershad	483, 1029	Frankoonwar v. Devkonwar	430, 435, 449
Phukar Singh v. Ranjit Singh	... 1085	Frankristo v. Bhageerutee	493, 495
Phulchand v. Jodha	... 1028	Pran Nath v. Kashi Nath	492, 508, 509, 677
Phulchand v. Lakkhu	... 768	Pran Nath v. Sarat Chunder	... 982
Phulchand v. Man Singh	... 519	Pran Nath v. Surrit	983, 985, 989, 992
Phundan v. Srimatarya	810, 817	Pran Shankar v. Pran Koonwar	... 918
Phundan Lal v. Arya Prathinithi	... 770	Pravullabh v. Dookristu	... 377
Phundo v. Janginath	340, 342	Prasanna v. Secretary of State	... 860
Phutjhari ( In re )	... 674	Pratap v. Joy Monee	... 1032
Piare v. Ghasi Ram	... 518	Pratap v. Kishoro	... 305
Piare v. Ram	... 548	Pratapchand v. Joy Monee	... 1085
Pichuvayyan v. Subtayyan	... 838	Pratap Narain v. Tirloknath	... 1078
Piers v. Fiers	269, 278	Prattipati In re	1086, 1090
Pike v. Babaji	... 1098	Prawn Kissen v. Pam Sundari	... 674
Pinkhewari v. Chunoroo	... 881	Prayad v. Kriparam	868, 869
Pindiprolu v. Pindiprolu	1046, 1047	Prayag v. Kusi	580, 535
		— — v. Tirumala	888, 889

	PAGE.		PAGE
Preag Singh v. Ajoodya	... 383		Q
Preaj Narain v. Ajoodhya Pershad	... 1030
Premchand v. Hulaschard	... 582	Q. v. Marimuthu	... 265
Premji v. Cassum	... 1066	Q. v. Nesbitt Perry's Co.	... 392
Premoyi v. Preonath	1067, 1069	Q. v. Rani Datt	... 218
Prit Koer v. Mahadeo	... 492		R
Profulla v. Jogendra	... 817
Promode Krishna	... 788
Prmotho v. Nagendra Bala	487, 439, 453	R. v. Clarke	... 398
Promotho v. Radbika	... 770	R. v. Joliffe	... 205
Prosunno v. Koonjo	... 879	R. v. Karson	... 211
Prsonno v. Umedar	... 1068	R. v. Lady Portingdon	... 840
Prosonna Kumar v. Srikantha	... 385	R. v. Loxdale	... 349
Prosunno v. Golab	846, 860, 861	R. v. Nash	... 395
Prosunno Kumar v. Baroda Prosunno	857, 860	Rabutti v. Shihchunder	... 1006
Protap v. Brojo Nath	... 884	Radha v. Bashhaman	... 652
Pryag Narain v. Ajudia	... 482	—v. Bhaktawar	... 1056
Public. Prosecutor v. Kannammal	... 210	—v. Bishessur	914, 1087
Puddo Kumari v. Jugul Kishore	196, 326, 879.	—v. Doorga	... 991
Puddu Lal v. Ram Gopal	... 884	—v. Judoomonee	848, 851
Puddum Mookhee v. Rayee Moree	... 430	—v. Kour	... 1053
Pudmacoomari v. Court of Wards	359, 377, 378, 379, 381	—v. Narasimha	... 317
Pudmanund v. Hayes	767, 832	—v. Nawwatan	... 1029
Pudmavati v. Doolar Singh	... 194	—v. Phoolkoomaree	... 492
Pudo Monee v. Dwarka Nath	... 654	—v. Raj Kuer	... 935
Pudum Singh v. Koer Oodey Singh	298, 300, 365, 366, 368	Radhabai v. Anantrao	... 729
Pugalia v. Vettor	... 653	—v. Chinnaji	879, 883, 884
Puhoop Singh v. Khomian	... 935	—v. Damodar	... 352
Pulin Chandra v. Bolai	... 1038	—v. Ganesh	... 784
Puljhari Koer ( In re )	... 626	—v. Nanarav	... 474
Pulliah v. Varadarajulu	520, 521	—v. Ragho	... 432
Pulukkavandey v. Periakaruppa	576, 579	—v. Anant Rao	712, 865
Pulyampatti v. Kuppier	... 756	Radhachurn v. Kripa Sindhu	500, 625, 658
Punamchand v. Lal Shan	... 1000	Radha Kanta v. Bipro Das	647, 658, 660
—v. Narayan	... 1027	Radha Kishen v. Ram Mundul	... 987
Puncha v. Bindeswari	213, 864	Radha Krishna v. Neuratan	... 1074
Punchanund v. Lolshan	... 998	Radhamadhub v. Radhabullub	... 369
Punchoo v. Trylucko	... 829	Radhamani v. Alakajeswari	... 1007
Punnabibi v. Radhakissan	451, 459, 490	Radha Mohun v. Rama Dass	... 1059
Puran v. Beja	... 210	Radha Prasad v. Ranees Mani	378, 797, 799, 828, 829
—v. Darson	... 850	Radhi Bai v. Vessammal	... 400
—Dai v. Jai Narain	482, 1022, 1025, 1026,	Radhica v. Neelamoni	... 938
Purandar v. Tulsa	... 792	Radhika Prasad v. Dharma Dasi	498, 495
Purappavanalingam v. Nallasivan	... 529	Ragender v. Ragho Nath	... 934
Purnessur v. Hancockman	... 358	Raghava v. Narayanasami	... 777
Purna v. Gopal	817, 846, 923	Ragavendra v. Jayaram	256, 257, 336, 340, 343
Purnasashi v. Kalidhari	... 507	Raghoba v. Jiboo	... 514
Purshottam v. Atmaram	655, 658, 662, 663	Raghoji Rao v. Lashman Rao	... 477
—v. Rakhmabai	351, 352	Ragho v. Kassy	... 741
—v. Sheo Shankar	... 532	Raghubanand v. Krishna Charan	... 383
—v. Vasudev	881, 473	Raghubanand v. Sadha Charan	380, 383, 674
—Das v. Mani	281, 267	Raghubands v. Bhagwant	... 453
Purshottam Das v. Purshottam Das	228, 280	Raghubar v. Akhtar	... 1060
Pursid v. Hancockman	649, 651	Raghubar v. Keshav	... 886
Putlabai v. Mahadu	... 331	Raghubir Singh v. Mote	670, 706
Puttu Lal v. Parbati	342, 848	Raghunandan v. Sheonandan	... 699
		Raghunath v. Govind	574, 849
		—v. Mahadev	... 502
		—v. Munnan	956, 957
		—v. Natesa	... 538
		—v. Ruheem	... 484

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxxii

	PAGE.		PAGE
Raghunatha v. Brozo	... 306	Rajendra v. Pulta Soondery	... 444
307, 380, 483, 442, 725		Rajendro Nath v. Jogendro Nath	369, 370, 784, 785
Raghunatha v. Damodara	... 249	Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar	859, 862, 863, 864
Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay	406, 408, 411, 445, 517, 520, 575, 576, 577, 579, 580		870, 874
Raghunathji v. Shah Lal	... 579, 580	Rajeswari v. Subramanya	... 852
Raghupati v. Tirumalai	... 1056	Raja Vyankatray v. Jayavantrao	... 245
Rahi v. Govind	196, 211, 247, 280, 424, 425, 936, 937, 940	Rajendra v. Saroda Soondaree	283, 303
Rahimatbai v. Hirbai	175, 186, 212, 214, 217	Rajeswara v. Vipratapali	... 731
Rahman v. Govind Pershad	... 533	Raj Kishen v. Jaheerul Huq	... 1065
Rahmat v. Salamat	... 541	Rajkishori v. Debendranath	745, 746, 747
Rahmatullah v. Secretary of State	... 384	Rajkishen (Raja) v. Ramjoy	206, 729
Rai Bishen v. Asmaide	... 795	Raj Kishore v. Gobind	195, 196, 464, 982, 983, 990
Rajoharn v. Suroopchunder	... 1017	Raj Krishna v. Bipin	... 854
Raiji v. Bai	... 348	Rajkristo v. Kishoree Mohun	... 1037
Rayi v. Desai	... 162	Raj Kumar Nohodip v. Birchandra	... 237
Rai Kishore v. Debendra Nath	... 769	Raj Sukhee v. Gokool Chunder	1023, 1037, 1053
Rai Madikchand v. Madho Ram	... 213	Rajmoney v. Shibchander	... 428
Rai Shan v. Kran Kishen	... 917	Raj Narain v. Ashutosh	... 829
Rai Upendra v. Hemchandra	... 764	Raj Narain v. Ilira Lal	... 665
Raja v. Krishnabhat	... 212	Raj Narain v. Katyayani	798, 829
Raja v. Subbaraya	379, 381, 383,	— v. Universal Life Assurance Co.	373
Rajabali v. Wajirali	... 415	Rajomoyee v. Troylukhoo	753, 810
Raja Dei v. Umed Singh	1035, 1042, 1056	Raju v. Ammani	... 998
Rajagopala v. Nattu	362, 372	— v. Ramaswamy	... 923
Raja Haimun Chul v. Coomer Gun	... 310	Rajunder v. Shamchand	... 838
Rajahvurmah v. Ravi Vurmah	212, 863, 864, 865, 867, 868	Rajyalakshmi v. Suryanarayan	... 715
Raja Lakshmi v. Katyayani	1072, 1074	Rakhmabai v. Keshav	... 1078
Rajammal v. Authiammal	779, 780	— v. Tukaram	... 943
Rajamoyee v. Troylekho	... 764	— v. Joterao	... 663
Raja of Kalahasti v. Achigadu	725, 728, 734	— v. Radha Bai	310, 320, 328
— v. Ganapathi	886, 887, 888	— v. Radhabai	... 196
Rajalakshmi v. Suryanarayana	... 206	Ram v. Basdev.	... 941
Rajamannar v. Venkatakrishna	... 794	Ram v. Bishen	... 944
Rajamma v. Ramakrishnaayya	... 477	Ram v. Lurind Das	... 927
Rajam v. Basuva	373, 384	Ram v. Rewati	... 1036
Rajani Kanta v. Abinsha chandra	... 407	Rama v. Dasji	1072, 1074
Raja Nugandar v. Raghunath	... 218	Rama v. Ranga	1025, 1026
Rajaram v. Ganesh	763, 772, 863, 864	Rambai v. Ganesh	... 446
— v. Gopal	617, 619	Rama Bai v. Jogan	... 663
— v. Lakshmi	... 874	Ramabhai v. Ramohandra	... 756
— v. Luchmun	... 534	Ramabai v. Rangrav	... 1053
— v. Tewary	591, 761	Ramabai v. Trimbak	421, 425, 428, 430, 432, 438, 442
Rajarao v. Nanarao	... 46	Ramabhadra v. Virabhadra	... 515
Rajendar v. Shamchand	654, 767, 770	Ramchand v. Audaito	... 229
Raja Kathansingh v. Ram Beni Bae	437	Ramachandra v. Kandayya	... 595
Raga Kathnaswamy v. Anji	... 700	Ramachandra v. Kasinath	... 856
Raj Chunder v. Bhuboram	... 1028	Ramachandra v. Krishnarao	339, 401
Raj Chandra v. Dhunmunee	... 482	Ramachandra v. Parameswaran	... 887
Raj Chunder v. Gocul Chand	194, 992	Ramachandra v. Radha	... 1027
Raj Coomar v. Bissessur	174, 286, 162,	Ramacharya v. Anantacharya	... 655
Raj Coomaree v. Gopal Chunder	... 685	Ramadhuri v. Bisheswar	... 674
Raj Coomaree v. Nobcooomar	... 374	Ramakal v. Ramasami	648
Raj Coomar Lall v. Bissessure	... 341	Ramakanta v. Shamanand	206, 208
Rajender v. Bijai	630, 632, 633, 635	Ramakal v. Kamakshi	... 939
Rajender v. Pulta Soondary	... 443	Ramakrishna v. Chimnaji	... 836
Rajendra v. Raj Coomaree	... 816	Ramakrishna v. Narumuthu	... 1090
Rajendra v. Satis Chandra	... 688	Ramakrishna v. Tirupurabai	... 380
		Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha	151, 160, 199, 206, 212, 213, 710, 712, 734, 737

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Ramalinga v. Pavadei	937, 938	Rambhojan v. Gircharan	... 786
Ramalinga v. Sadasiva	... 292	Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur	... 214
Ramalinga v. Sivaohidambar	842, 844	Ram Bromo v. Kaminee	... 194
Ramalinga v. Virupakshi	... 654	— Bunsee v. Soobh Koonwar	235, 286, 386, 393
Ramasami v. Kulanthai	244, 279, 307	Ramchand v. Venkatarao	... 721
Ramamirtham v. Ranganathan	... 800	Ramchandra v. Bapu	... 316
Raman v. Ittimayamina	... 545	Ramchandra v. Bhikambar	... 477
Raman v. Jajivandas	... 1098	Ram Chandra v. Bhim Rao	617, 619
Ramanadan v. Pulikutti	... 705	— Chandra v. Damodar	539, 573
Ramanadan v. Vava	848, 849, 858	Ramchandra v. Dinker	... 689
Ramanand v. Ram Saran	1013, 1014, 1028	Ramchandra v. Gopal	257, 386
Ramananda v. Rai Kishore	195, 116, 925, 1110	— v. Krishnaji	... 699
Rama Nand v. Surgiani	... 942	— v. Mudeshtar	... 716
Ramanatham v. Rangammal	433, 434, 435, 445, 450	— v. Muliwan	... 450
Ramanandan v. Janaki	726, 737, 738	— v. Mulji	... 309
Ramanarasu v. Buchamma	267, 423, 427	— v. Narayan	... 372
Ramanath v. Durga	... 925	— v. Radha	617, 618
Ramanath v. Kusum Kamini	... 584	— v. Ram Krishna	... 853
Ramanathan v. Anantanaryana	... 885	— v. Sagunabai	437, 438
Ramanathan v. Murugappa	512, 513, 528, 529, 854, 871, 890	— v. Saktharam	728, 728
Ramanaya v. Venkataratnam	... 523	— v. Savitribai	445, 449, 356
Ramangauda v. Shivaji	258, 259	— v. Venkat Rau	... 786
Ramanna v. Venkata	... 546	— v. Vijayaragavulu	... 829
Ramansar v. Raghubar	416, 417	— v. Vinayak	254, 902, 903, 905, 906, 907, 909, 910
Ramanund v. Raghunath	... 503	Ramcharan v. Bhagwati	... 768
Ramappa a. Arumugath	921, 954, 968	— v. Gaya Prasad	... 521
Ramappa v. Sitammal	... 934	— v. Jasodha	... 662
Rama Rau v. Raja Rau	... 384	— v. Kauleshar	... 541
Rama Row v. Rajah of Pittapur	219, 430, 431, 506, 507, 596, 712, 713, 725, 728, 777	— v. Harihar	... 729
Ramasami v. Alagirisami	656, 657	— v. Rakkul	871, 878
Ramasami v. Mangai Karasu	1004, 1026	— v. Rohim Baksh	955, 956, 958
Ramasami v. Narasamma	... 942	— v. Van Haktaru	... 587
Ramasami v. Ramasami	1046, 1047	Ram Chunder v. Ganga Govind	... 1025
Ramasami v. Sabu Kai	... 1073	— v. Hari Das	... 1032
Ramasami v. Venkatasami	708, 709	— v. Rai Kishori	... 925
Ramasamy v. Chinnan	... 764	Ram Churn v. Jushoda	... 447
Ramasami v. Ulaganatha	592, 593, 595	— v. Nunhoo	859, 861
Ramaswami v. Appavu	... 217	Ramchurn v. Partap	... 887
Ramaswami v. Seshachalla	... 570	Ramcomary In re	263, 265
Ramasami v. Sundaralingeswami	205, 237, 244, 737	Ramcomary v. Johur Lal	... 618
Ramasami v. Vengidusami	525, 526, 653, 1027, 1031	Ramcoomar v. Ichmonyi	426, 1029, 1068
Ramasundaram v. Savundrathammal	852	Ram Coomar v. Jogender	887, 843, 859
Ramaswami v. Papayya	799, 800, 829	Ram Das v. Baldeoasji	... 970
Ramaswami v. Venkatramanaiyen	... 352	Ram Das v. Budri Nazain	887, 888
Ram Autar v. Mumtaz Ali	... 420	Ram Das v. Chabildas	512, 630, 637
Ram Autar Singh v. Chowdhuri Nursingh	407	Ram Das v. Chandra	190, 191, 198, 195
Ramavati v. Manjhoori	432, 440, 444, 454	Ram Das v. Moheshur	... 856
Ramayya v. Venkatarathnam	... 593	Ram Das v. Vria Behari	... 597
Ram Baran v. Kamla	... 957	Ram Dayal v. Moti Ram	520, 521, 538
Ram Baran v. Rajwanti	... 951	Ram Dei v. Abu	1061, 1078
Ram Barti v. Suraj Barti	... 927	Ram Deo v. Gopi	... 598
Ram Bhejan v. Gurucharan	... 1049	Ramdhan v. Bihari	... 940
Rambhaji v. Harnarain	... 389	Ramdhan v. Dalmir	184, 869, 871
Ram Bheran v. Kamala	... 930	Ramdhari v. Permanund	... 1067
Ramachandra v. Ranjit Singh	872, 768, 848	Ramdhin v. Bisheswar	... 627
Rambhat v. Lakshman	480, 381, 779	Ram Dayal v. Sumer Singh	... 1018
Rambhat v. Timmayya	228, 229, 281	Ramdulal v. Joymoney	... 1087
		Ram Dyal v. Magnes	954, 990
		Rameshwar v. Arjun Singh	... 726
		— v. Ishan Chunder	... 871
		— v. Lachmi Prasad	478, 507, 642
		— v. Provabai	... 1068

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxxiii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Rameswazr v. Ram Bahadur	... 420	Ram Naresh v. Sadhu Ram	... 637
Ramful v. Punwati	... 921	Ram Nath v. Bulaqi	... 590
Ram Ghulam v. Ram Behari	... 493	Ram Nath v. Durga	174, 195, 1110
Ram Gopal v. Narain	1086, 1108	Ram Nath v. Kusum Kumari	... 495
Ram Harakh v. Ishar Dat	... 214	Ram Nandan v. Janki Koer	504, 505 715, 735
Ram Huree v. Tribee Ram	706, 707, 709	Ram Nand Singh v. Gobind Singh	... 548
Rami v. Rangamma	... 308	Ramnarayan v. Mhd. Hadi	... 756
Ramiengar v. Gnana	... 882	Ram Nirunjun v. Prayag	636, 744
— v. Secretary of State	... 535	Rampardip v. Salig Rai	... 607
Ramjewan v. Dal Koer	... 829	Ram Parkash v. Anand Das	851, 867, 868, 869, 877
Ramji v. Ghaman	297, 310, 320, 326, 328	Ram Parson v. Kalab Husain	... 679
— v. Lachhu	... 869	Rampeary v. Bhogis	... 327
— v. Nurshah	... 921	Ram Pershad v. Court of Wards	... 696
Ramjiwan v. Rewa	... 941	— v. Deokarin	... 547
Ramjoshi v. Lakshmi Bai	... 647	— v. Lakhpati	625, 627, 628, 674, 675
Ram Jowaya v. Amrit Ram	... 694	— v. Sheochurn	... 466
Ram Kali v. Jamma	... 934	— v. Sreemuree	836, 848
— v. Joniba	... 936	Ram Pertab v. Fooli Bai	576, 579
— v. Kedar Nath	... 1078	Ramphul v. Deg Narayan	508, 509, 677
Ram Kanai v. Narayan	836, 865	— v. Panmati	... 958
Ram Kewal v. Ram Kishore	482, 1025, 1026	— v. Ram Prasad	... 1043
Ram Kisanji v. Ganga Bai	... 424	Ramphal v. Tula Kuari	1032, 1035, 1042
Ramkishan v. Beli Ram	... 399	Rampiari v. Mulchand	165, 1007
— v. Dibia	... 328	Ram Prakash a. Anand Das	... 852
— v. Medh Singh	... 927	Ramprasad v. Lakpati	496, 668, 670
Ram Kishore v. Bhoobunmoyee	338, 339	— v. Mt. Subbu Rai	227, 925, 1110
— v. Jagannath	... 231	— v. Rattan Chand	575, 581
— v. Jai Narayan	... 588	Ram Purtab v. Fooli Bai	406, 408, 411, 445
— v. Kalli Kanto	... 1069	Ramrao v. Yeshwant Rao	... 739
Ram Konye v. Collychurn	... 618	Ram Ratan v. Lachman Das	... 517
Ram Kore v. Jannadas	... 235	— v. Sahu	... 705
Ram Krishna v. Hari	... 366	Ram Rau v. Raja Ram	... 373
— v. Padamacharan	... 861	Rama Rao v. Yeswant	Rao 712, 718, 724, 729
— v. Shama Rao	318, 320, 326, 327	Ramrup v. Sujaram	... 889
— v. Subbakka	... 287	Ram Sahai v. Kewal Singh	616, 617
— v. Tripurabai	1043, 1078	Ram Sahye v. Laljee	490, 644, 923
— v. Vinayak	... 618	Ram Saran v. Raghunandan	... 875
Ramkristo v. Bhageerutee	... 495	Ramsaran v. Rakhai	... 230
Ram Kuar v. Ummer	917, 918	Rama Saran v. Tekchand	643, 986
Ram Kuber v. Ram Dasi	... 512	Ram Sarup v. Ramde	... 1063
Ramkumar v. Jogender	... 859	Ram Sebuk v. Ramlaly	576, 577, 581
Ramkumari In re	163, 174, 231	Ram Shanker v. Ganesh	... 1048
Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai	438, 444	Ram Shewak v. Sheo Govind	1068, 1078
	446, 450	Ram Singh v. Bhant	... 923
Ramkutti v. Kallaturaiyan	... 545	Ram Singh v. Tursa	674, 675, 676
Ramlal v. Akhoy	243, 244	Ram Singh v. Ugur Singh	776, 949, 958, 955
Ram Lal v. Debi Dat	... 674	Ram Sundar v. Berham Deo	... 573
Ram Lal v. Haran Chandra	617, 619	Ram Soonder v. Ram Sahye	431, 490, 644, 923
Ram Lal v. Kanai Lal	760, 795, 803, 804, 805	Ram Sumran v. Shyan Kumari	... 1075
Ram Lal v. Lakmichand	406, 408, 445, 479, 576	Ram Soondur v. Surbanee	315, 326
Ramlall v. Lakhmichand	518, 577, 578, 579, 580	Ram Soondur v. Taruck Chunder	... 871
Ramlal v. Secretary of State	767, 820	Ramtonoo v. Ram Gopaul	... 770
Ram Lechun v. Rughobur	... 699	Ram Tutvel Singh v. Biseswar	417, 1066
Ram Mohan Lal v. Mulchand	... 658	Ramula v. Andalammul	... 1038
Rammonir v. Ram Gopal	... 775	Ranbijay v. Jagat Pal	... 642
The Ramnad Case	... 715	Ranchara v. Kalingappa	948, 963, 964
Ram Nandan v. Janaki	... 927	Ranchhodas v. Rawal	... 941
Ram Narain v. Peary	739, 828, 829	Ranchood v. Ajubhai	923, 924
Ram Narain v. Peary Bhagat	... 1087
Ram Narain v. Pertum Singh	470, 893, 896
Ram Narain v. Ramoon	... 850

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Rangammal v. Echammal	428, 429	Rayacharlu v. Venkataramaniah	... 546
Ranganaiiki v. Ramanuja	... 235	Rayadar ( In re )	469, 473
Ranganatha v. Bhagirathi	... 805	Rayaningarlu v. Venkata	917, 968
Ranganatha v. Narayanaswami	501, 700	Rayappa v. Ali Sahab	... 531
Ranganayakamma v. Alwar	292, 303, 322, 345, 364	Rayawa v. Shivayaogappa	... 434
Ranganmani v. Kashinath	... 691	Raybould v. Turner	... 861
Rangappa v. Kampti	1033, 1034, 1038, 1043, 1057	Rayee Monce v. Puddum Mookhee	... 430
Ranga Rao v. Ranganayaki	... 1063	Raynor v. Missouri Bank	... 752
Ranga Reddi v. Narayana	... 416	Reade v. Krishna	392, 398
Rangaswami v. Chinnaswami	... 888	Rechenoweth In re	... 219
Rangaswami v. Krishnayan	... 546	Reed v. Harris	... 787
Rangaswami v. Nachiappa	1032, 1033, 1034, 1035, 1037, 1038, 1042, 1044	Reed v. Jackson	... 219
Rangaswami v. Ranga	... 864	Reg v. Kurson	... 247
Rangaswamy v. Sundararajulu	... 641	Regella v. Nimushakari	... 1068
Rangaswami v. Verodappa	... 888	Ratki v. Lakpati	346, 369,
Rangathayee v. Nelimuneeswami	... 437	Retoo v. Laljee	... 1056
Rangayya v. Thanikaachella	... 923	Re Umay	... 676
Rangilbai v. Vinayak	... 1028	Revaji v. Vasudeo	... 857
Rango v. Balaji	617, 619	Rewen Persad v. Radha	492, 918, 919
Rango v. Chinto	... 639	Rhodes v. Rhodes	... 789
Rango v. Mudyappa	... 285	Rider v. Kidder	... 756
Rango v. Yamunabai	430, 438, 442, 454	Rikhai Rai v. Sheo Pujan Singh	... 1067
Rangubai v. Bhagirathi Bai	331, 332, 348	Rindabai v. Anacharya	... 965
— v. Gopal	395, 396	Rindabai v. Girdharlal	... 395
— v. Subaji	... 454	Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh	1048, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073
Rani v. Khogendra	... 953	Rivett Carnac v. Jivi Bai	... 1012
Ranidhun v. Kishen	... 941	Roda v. Amar	... 944
Ranjeet Singh v. Koer Gujraj Singh	624, 625, 626, 674	Rohin Singh v. Hodding	... 541
Ranjit v. Rada Rani	248, 440, 927	Rojomoyee v. Troylukho	740, 770
Ranjit Lal v. Bijoy	... 319	Ramonath v. Rajonimoni	428, 433, 438, 441
Ranjit Singh v. Amulya	513, 517	Romesh Chunder v. Soorjo Coomar	... 543
Ranjit Singh v. Basanta	... 865	Romon v. Hurrolall	... 521
Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath	... 156	Ronno v. Laxmi	... 437
Ranku v. Hukmi	... 658	Rookmonee v. Krishno	... 785
Rammalsingji Maharana v. Vajill	411, 413, 418, 521	Roomoyee v. Troylukho	... 1054
Ranoji v. Kandoji	... 937	Roop Churn v. Anundlal	993, 1037
Rao Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori	161	Roopchand v. Chool Chand	... 965
Raoji v. Bala	... 743	Roop Dharee v. Sarain	... 758
Reshid v. Sherbanoo	... 186	Rooplal v. Lakshmi	... 641
Rash Moni v. Soorjakanta	406, 407	Roop Shunker v. Shunkerjee	... 342
Rasik Lal v. Singeswar	... 538	Roopud v. Roy Qeotee	... 548
Rasul v. Ram Sarun	248, 440, 1001, 1018	Roshen Singh v. Balwant Singh	280, 424, 425, 643
Ratau v. Nathu Singh	... 269	Roy Mukhun Lal v. Stewart	483, 484
Ratanse v. Amerbabai	1004, 1030	Roy Nadha v. Nan Ratan	... 1072
Rathna v. Thirvenkata	... 743	Rozario v. Ingles	... 278
Ratna v. Narayanaswamy	773, 806	Rudra Narain v. Rup Kuar	... 829
Ratnam v. Govindarajulu	479, 515	Rudrappa v. Irava	... 965
Ratnamasari v. Akilandemmal	372, 459	Rughoobar v. Bhakarree	... 1057
Ratnasubba v. Ponnappa	... 959	Rukabai v. Ganda Bai	... 443
Rattanchand v. Ghasita	... 639	Rukhab v. Chunilal	180, 190
Rau Gramony v. Amani	... 198	Rukhal v. Chunilal	... 383
Raveneshwar v. Chandri Prasad	734, 894	Rukhma v. Rango Bai	... 437
Ravichand v. Somal	... 852	Rukhmanjiv. Keshav Lal	... 1007
Ravivarma v. Narayana	... 543	Rukkani v. Kadermath	... 990
Raviji v. Gangadhar	... 543	Rakman v. Ganga Ram	... 1093
Raviji v. Lakshimbai	351, 352, 370, 371, 373	Rulyat (Bai) v. Jeychand	... 260
Rawa Singh v. Har Dayal	... 547	Rumea v. Bhagge	... 939
Raya v. Gopal	... 515	Rummal v. Kakal	... 882
		Rumone v. Baluck Das	... 860
		Runchordos v. Parvatebai	811, 817, 1078
		Rungama v. Atchama	284, 307, 376, 378, 380

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxxv

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Runganaigum v. Namasivaya	... 342	Sajedav v. Gour Mohon	886, 887, 888, 890
Rungum v. Kassinath	516, 583	Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali	308, 1062
Rungayya v. Subramania	... 547	Sakarlar v. Parvatibai	... 596
Runjeet Ram v. Mhd. Waris	485, 1025	Sakhabhai v. Magon Lal	... 1068
Runjeet Singh v. Madud Ali	... 498	Sakharam v. Govind	... 531
— v. Narain Singh	... 342	— v. Hari	... 674
— v. Obhya Singh	... 358	— v. Janki Bai	428, 1029
Rup Chand v. Basanta	... 575	— v. Motiram	... 899
— v. Jambu Prasad	338, 359	— v. Ram	... 424
— v. Rakhmabai	... 326	— v. Sitabai	942, 964, 1005
Rup Narain v. Gopal	1042, 1043	Sakhyabani v. Bhavani	1048, 1055, 1059
— v. Gopal Devi	341, 369, 371, 374	Sakrabhai v. Maganhal	411, 575, 577, 579, 598
— v. Junko	... 864	Sakvarbai v. Bhamanji	... 455
Rup Ram v. Iawar	... 1028	Sala Mahomed v. Janbai	... 794
— v. Rewti	... 1033	Salemma v. Lachmun	1086, 1087, 1088, 1090
— Singh v. Baisni	506, 720, 732, 734, 738	Salikram v. Janka	... 399
— v. Hirbhu	202, 507, 730	Salimullah v. Probbat Chandra	... 540
Rusi Mendli v. Sundar	707, 709	Sallay v. Janbai	... 805
Russell v. Russell	... 264	Salta v. Kashinath	... 880
Russio Lal v. Purashmonee	... 987	Salu v. Hari	425, 427
Russoobai v. Zoolakhabai	943, 966	Samalbai v. Someshur	... 579
Rustom v. Moti Singh	1027, 1030	Samantha v. Sallappa	... 858
Rutoheputty v. Rajender	192, 197, 934	Samat v. Amra	929, 944
Ruttan Singh v. Chundan	... 425	Samatsang v. Bavaji	... 399
Ruvee Bhuder v. Roop Shunker	340, 916	Sambanda v. Narasambandapandara	861
Ryohurn v. Peary Monee	... 1046	Sambasiva v. Ragava	... 1078
S		— v. Venkateswara	... 1006
S. v. S.	... 223	— v. Visvam	799, 1006
Sabapathy v. Ponnuswamy	... 527	Sami Ayyangar v. Ponnammal	583, 608
Sabha Mal v. Nanackchand.	... 311	Saminatha v. Manikaswami	1004, 1013
Sabapathi v. Somasundram	... 777	— v. Purushothama	... 861
Saboo v. Ayeshabai	... 442	— v. Sellappa	866, 867, 868, 874
Saboo Sidick v. Ally Mahomed	... 186	— v. Thangathanni	473, 474, 896, 941
Sabta Prasad v. Dharmi Kirti	... 680	Samsuddin v. Abdul Hussain	... 1050
Sachit v. Budhua	1071, 1073	Samu v. Swaminatha	... 521
Sada v. Baira	... 737	Samudrala v. Samudrala	... 708
Sadabart v. Foolbash	... 519, 548, 571, 893	Sandani v. Kamalakant	... 399
Sadai v. Serai	1017	Sangili v. Mookun	... 705
Sadanund v. Bonomales	... 381	Sani v. Pancham	... 763
Sadashiv v. Bapooji	... 547	Sanidas v. Sahib Devi	... 500
— v. Dinkar	590, 607	Sanjivi v. Jalajakshi	... 210
— v. Hari	388, 352, 370	Sanka v. Bank of Burma	407, 408, 409, 576, 580
— v. Trimbak	... 631	Sankamurti v. Chidambara	... 875
Sadat Ali v. Hara Sundari	... 1068	Sanker v. Bejoy	... 1017
Sadho Lal v. Murlidhar	... 388	Sankaralinga v. Rajeswara	870, 872, 875
Sadraddin v. Nooruddin	... 684	Sankaralingam v. Subhan	211, 265,
Sadu v. Baiza	643, 936, 937	Sankaram v. Madan	638, 639
Sadu v. Ram	... 680	Sanku v. Pattamma	... 684
Sadulla v. Bhana Mal	... 522	Sant v. Geo Suram	941, 1071, 1072, 1074
Saduphadyaya v. Ravaneshwar	... 890	Santappaya v. Rangappaya	292, 331, 370, 371
Safuram Umar v. Emna	... 185	Santok Sing in re	... 269
Sagut v. Dwarka	... 775	Santash v. Gera	... 266
Saguna v. Sadasiv	946, 955, 956, 965	Sant Singh v. Mula	... 351
Sahadur v. Kaiwanta	... 164	Sanyal Das v. Bismallah	... 614
Sahoo Sidick v. Ally Muhomed	... 185	Saodamini v. Administrator General	1064, 1068, 1010, 1012, 1014, 1015
Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh	463, 520, 524, 531, 532, 538, 585, 595, 605, 606, 609, 750, 751, 855, 1018	Saodamini v. Broughton	... 1010
Saithre in re	392, 398, 820	Saperundhwaj v. Garurdhwaj	... 206
Saiyad v. Ali Khan	... 888
Saiyed Iltifat v. Sanurul Singh	... 548
Sajedev v. Baij Nath	... 886

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Sarabjit v. Inderjit	206, 213, 217, 407, 715, 731	Seeta Ram v. Fukeerchand	... 992
Saradaprasad v. Mahananda	510, 584	Sefton v. Hopwood	790, 793
Sarada Prasad v. Rama	319, 320	Segu v. Segu	628
Sarappalli v. Fota	... 217	Selby v. Robinson	... 208
Sarasuti v. Manu	937, 940	Sellam v. Chinnammal	... 547
Saraswati v. Kadirama	... 940	Sengamalathammal v. Velayuda	914, 915, 998, 1084, 1097, 1104
Sarsuti v. Mannu	424, 936	Sepahdar v. Badi Bi	... 687
Saraswati v. Kashi Ram	... 425	Serumah v. Palathan	203, 213
Sarat Chandra v. Forman	892, 898	Seshadri v. Ranga	870, 878, 874
Sarat Chandra v. Mahapet	... 660	Seshagiri v. Ramarao	... 660
Sarat Chunder v. Bhupendra	... 882	Seshammal v. Munisami	... 249
Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder	... 373	Seshan v. Veera	... 581
Saravana v. Muttayi	... 481	Sespuri v. Dwarika	231, 244
Sarabachand v. Chandasingh	... 639	Sethurama v. Maruswamier	... 666
Saradar Shah v. Haji	... 415	Sethurama v. Ponnammal	... 959
Sarda Sundari v. Gobind	... 261	Setrucharla v. Setrucharla	512, 528, 691, 707
Sarado v. Tincowry	... 785	Shadi v. Anup Singh	... 542
Sardul Singh v. Partab Singh	... 424	Shah Khanam v. Kalandhar	... 212
Sariatullah v. Pran Nath	... 220	Sham v. Kishun	... 947
Sarja Prasad v. Golab Chand	... 594	Shama Chandra v. Gadadhur	... 416
Sarode Charan v. Durga Ram	... 521	Shamacharan v. Abhiram	886, 846, 860
Sarodosoondery v. Tincowry	... 364	Shamacharan v. Kumed Dasi	... 547
Saratj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari	104, 220, 502, 507, 712, 716, 725, 727, 730, 732, 927	Shama Soonderee v. Jardine Skinner & Co.	683, 686
Sarup Singh v. Jassi	... 342	———— v. Shurat Chunder.	1032
Sasha Chella v. Ramasamy	... 545	Sham Chandra v. Gadadhur	... 407
Sashi v. Jagati	... 729	—Koar v. Dab Koer	... 1078
Sashi Bhusan v. Jadu Nath	... 418	—Kuar v. Gaya Din	... 376
Sashi Bhusan v. Rajendra	... 1107	—Kuar v. Mahanada	399, 401, 523
Sasi Bhushun v. Tara Lal	... 591	—Lal v. Amarendro	... 787
Sasman v. Silenrain	... 829	—Lal v. Banna	433, 445, 450
Sasmiar v. Sibnarain	799, 829	—Lal v. Bindo	... 420
Sasry v. Sembecutty	269, 270, 272, 273	—Lal v. Hurosondry	... 895
Sathappayyar v. Periasami	877, 881, 882, 884, 886	—Lal v. Joharilal	... 766
Sathanama v. Saravantabagi	231, 839	—Narain v. Court of Wards	491, 944
Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya	433, 441	Shamnugger Jute Factory v. Ram Narain	542
Sati Prasad (Raja) v. Manmatha	... 200	—Rathi v. Jaichha	1032, 1038
Satish Chandra v. Chunder Kant	... 416	Shamrathisingh v. Kishen Pershad	576, 581
Sattiraju v. Venkataswami	301, 321, 323, 324	—Shivendra v. Janki Kuar	771, 800
Satya v. Satya	... 638	Shamsingh v. Santa Bai	331, 332, 397
Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal	632, 633, 634, 636, 638, 689	—Sul v. Shewakram	778, 797, 798, 799, 1058
Satyalakshmi v. Jagannatham	... 1035	—Sunder v. Achan Kuar	... 1039
Satya Sri v. Kartik	... 860	—Sunder v. Achan Kunwar	1039, 1046
Saundanappa v. Shivbasava	... 592	Shamsunder Lal v. Achan Kunwar	321, 741, 1000
Savitril v. Anandaro	712, 729	Shanakrahawa v. Bavaji	... 619
Savitribai v. Laxmibai	421, 423, 425, 426, 428, 430, 431, 432, 438, 440, 442, 455	Shankar v. Babaji	... 619
Sawannmal v. Pinnumal	575, 581	Shankar v. Hardeo	529, 539, 682, 691, 714
Sayad Hussain v. Collector	886, 888	Shankar v. Venkapa	... 857
Sayad Muhammed v. Fattah Muhammad	791	Shanmuga v. Veeraragava	... 885
Sayamalala v. Saudamini	... 350	Shanmugam v. Mira	... 686
Scales v. Kay	207, 214	Shashi Bhushan v. Jotindra	... 683
Secretary of State v. Kamakshi	539, 720, 731, 734	Shaw v. Mc Mahan	... 805
Secretary of State v. Rangaswamy	... 676	Sheebunker v. Manakohunder	... 887
Secretary of State v. Rashidul Haq	... 477	Shee Shankar v. Ram Shewak	... 417
Seeni Ammal v. Angamuthu	249, 525, 527	Sheikhchand v. Hiralal	... 518
Seerja v. Koer Nath Bucksh Singh	... 446	Sheo Bai v. Gowreen und	... 480
Seetaram v. Dhunook	... 847	Sheobarat v. Bhagwati	... 957
		Sheo Buksh v. Pottah Singh	... 665
		Sheo Churn v. Goodur	... 216
		———— v. Juman Lal	... 548
		———— v. Sheo Sahay	... 548

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxxvii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Sheo Dayal v. Jagannatha	... 534	Shivaganga case	... 1016
Sheo Dyal v. Judoonath	432, 477, 625, 651, 652, 674, 999	Shivaji v. Vasantrao	645, 666, 702, 708
Sheo Gobind v. Sham Narain	475, 700	Shiv Golam v. Barran Singh	493, 494, 495
Shelabai v. Jafar	... 1073	Shivji v. Datu	... 387
Sheolatan v. Bhirgan	345, 346	Shivmurtappa v. Virappa	661, 682, 684, 700
Sheolochun v. Saheb Singh	1008, 1011, 1013	Shiyale v. Calve	... 300
Sheo Narain v. Janaki Prasad	... 652	Shomesankar v. Rajesar	... 937
Sheo Narain v. Khurgo	1072, 1074	Shookmoy v. Monoharri	512, 515, 654, 746, 747, 749, 769, 819
Sheopal Singh v. Basant Singh	590, 591	Shosinath v. Krishna	... 345
Sheo Parson v. Ramnadan	1050, 1052	Shree Mahant Kishora v. The Coimbatore etc. Co.	231
Sheo Partab v. Lal Bahadur	... 1087	Shridhar v. Hiralal	230, 236
— v. Allahabad Bank	915, 998, 1045, 1081, 1084	Shri Dutt v. Hasbutti	... 1004
Sheo Pershad v. Dedab Singh	... 543	Shrinivas v. Balwant	... 372
— v. Ayaram	... 853	Shrinivashabmant v. Gurunath	... 704
— v. Jung Bahadur	... 594	Shumsheree (Raja) v. Dilraj Kunwar	800
— v. Leelab Singh	... 543	Shumsher Mull v. Ram Dilraj	348, 354
— v. Saheblal	576, 578	Shunmugaroya v. Manikka	... 792
Sheo Ratan v. Gour Behary	... 492	Shurfoonnissa v. Koolsoonu	... 848
Sheo Ratan v. Ram Parkash	... 882	Shushee Mohun v. Aukilchande	... 492
Sheo Sahai v. Omed	... 941	Shyama v. Naba	... 817
Sheo Shankar v. Debi Sahai	915, 998, 1081, 1084, 1087	Shyma Charan v. Prafulla	... 385
Sheo Shankar v. Jado	522, 610, 613	Shyamlal v. Bijay Narain	... 597
— v. Ram Shewak	523, 856	Sib Chunder v. Treeporab	... 988
Sheo Singh In re	... 1063	Sibsoondery v. Bussoomuty	... 652
Sheo Singh v. Dakho	180, 181, 189, 359, 927, 938, 1006,	Siddappa v. Ningangauda	... 328
Sheo Singh v. Lekha Singh	... 698	Siddessury v. Janardun	421, 429, 430, 433, 442, 454, 459, 582
Sheo Singh v. Raghubans	... 714	Sidessur v. Doorga	... 289
Sheo Soondery v. Pirthee Singh	464, 787, 982, 990	Sidlingapa v. Sidava	266, 428
Shepuri v. Dwarka	... 244	Sikhamani v. Ammani	... 627
Sherajooddeen v. Harel Singh	... 499	Sikki v. Venkatasamy	424, 427
Sher Bahadur v. Ganga Baksh	189, 822, 823	Simboochunder v. Ram Durga	... 990
Shere, Bahadur v. Dariao	504, 505	Simbunath v. Golabsingh	615, 616
Shere v. Bishop	... 826	Simmani v. Muthammal	927, 940
Sheshagiri v. Girema	... 936	Simpson In re	... 365
Sheshapa v. Igapa	... 500	Simpson v. Bachman	... 587
Shewak Ram v. Bhawani	... 1066	Sinammal v. Administrator General	211, 224, 265
Shiamanand v. Har Lal	... 1068	Sinaya Pillai v. Muni Sami	... 416
Shibbessuree v. Beckwille	... 857	Sinclair In re	... 815
Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad	432, 437, 488, 440, 591	Sinde v. Sinde	... 741
Shibditta v. Bela	245, 271	Sindigi v. Sindigi	313, 374
Shibessonree v. Mothooranath	845, 857, 860, 861	Singa v. Venkataramana	... 641
Shib Koeree v. Joogun	... 1058	Singa Aiyar v. Venkataramana	... 659
Shibkorea v. Joogun	... 858	Singam v. Draupadi	1021, 1058, 1060
Shib Nath v. Alliance Bank	... 590	Singamma v. Vinjamuri	345, 346, 347
Shibo Koorees v. Joogun Singh	298, 358	Singarachari v. Krishnaswami	... 884
Shibsoondery v. Rakhal Doss	418, 508	Singhji v. Raisingji	... 425
Shibpershad v. Gangamonee	... 492	Sinnachamy v. Ramasamy	... 827
Shib Sabitri v. Collector	785, 787	Sinthayee v. Thanakapudayan	441, 453, 459
Shib Sahay v. Nur Singh	... 659	Sipal v. Madho	... 761
Shib Sahay v. Sarasuti	... 905	Sita v. Deonath	... 775
Shib Saran v. Kesho Pershad	... 1013	Sitabai v. Ramachandra Rao	266, 464
Shib Shankar v. Soni Ram	1000, 1048	Sitabai v. Vasantrao	1093, 1103, 1104
Shidhojirao v. Nikojirao	202, 212	Sitai v. Nachiar	... 917
Shijamanand v. Ramakanta	... 208	Sital Prasad v. Bansidhar	... 671
Shimbu v. Gayachand	212, 216, 1006	Sitanath v. Haimabutty	223, 266, 423
Shivada v. Shivada	... 287	Sitaran v. Aheeree	... 264
		— v. Chintamun	... 966
		— v. Hurihar	321, 324, 351, 772
		— v. Inkla	... 896
		— v. Laxman	919, 925

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Sitara v. Mhd. Ishaq	... 756	Soondur v. Kishori Lal	... 368
Sitaram v. Sitaram	... 851	Soonkoro v. Soonkoro	... 366
— v. Zalim Singh	... 590	Soorendranath v. Heeramonee	191, 192
Sitaramasami v. Midatana	... 608		201, 784, 917
Sitaramji v. Sitaram	... 212	Soorja Koer v. Nath Baksh Singh	... 445
— v. Harihar	525, 534	Soorjamoney v. Dencbundoo	464, 475,
Sitaramayya v. Venkataramanna	536, 538		764, 767, 770, 802,
Sitaramji v. Jadunath	... 769		812, 915, 1004, 1014
Sitlabaksh v. Gajraj	... 985	Soorjoo v. Krishnan	1027, 1029
Siva v. Palani	... 1078	Soorjoo Pershad v. Krishnan	... 481
Sivagiri v. Tiruvengada	594, 596	Sootrugun v. Sabitrya	... 274
Sivarama v. Bagavan	... 278	Sorabjit v. Indrajit	... 450
Sivarama v. Veerappa	... 269	Sorolah v. Bhoobun Mohun	... 438
Sivaganga Zamindar v. Lakshmana	478	Soshbeddi v. Boolaram	... 498
Sivaganga v. Periaswami	506, 507	Soshi v. Ganesh	542, 548
Siva Rao v. Vitla	... 829	Soudamoney v. Jogesh Chunder	540, 767,
Sivasami v. Sevugan	... 518		808, 805
Sivasangu v. Minal	287, 940, 1110	Soundararajan v. Arunachallam	211, 986
Sivasubramania v. Krishnammal	202, 507, 725	Southampton Dock Co. v. Richards...	849
Sivasubramania v. Subramania	... 927	Southey v. Somerville	... 826
Sivayya v. Rami	... 884	Speight v. Gaunt	... 872
Skinner v. Orde	390, 393, 396, 399	Spencer v. Chesterfield (Earl)	... 402
Slatterie v. Pooley	365, 367	Sprackling v. Ramier	... 804
Smith In re	... 269	Sreeman Chander v. Gopal Chunder...	757
Sabadur v. Rajwant	... 264	Sreemuttu v. Sibchunder	... 795
Sobhanadri v. Sri Ramulu	410, 412, 521	Sreenarain v. Bbva Jha	298, 957, 1004, 1098
Sobuns Lal v. Harbuns Lal	... 473	Sree Narain v. Kishen Soondery	... 321
Sodamuney v. Jogesh Chunder	... 987	— v. Kishensoondery	... 388
Sodhi Karter v. Sher Singh	... 271	— v. Lalut Narain	... 358
Sodlie v. Sleursing	... 245	Sreenath v. Menhohinee	... 492
Sohan Lal v. Durga	... 927	Srenath v. Probodh Chunder	421, 438, 439
Sohna v. Khalak Singh	... 396	— v. Surbo	1096, 1106
Sohodra v. Roy Jung	... 1018	Sreenivassein v. Sashyammal	... 338
Sohraj Ram v. Ram Lal	... 306	Sreepada v. Sreepada	1049, 1058
Soiru v. Narayan	... 516	Sreeramulu v. Kristamma	380, 1018
Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha	462, 582	Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu	153, 161, 162, 165
Soloman v. Abdul	... 636		196, 245, 282, 348, 349, 350, 363
Solukhna v. Pande	300, 317, 318	Srichand v. Surajkuar	... 498
— v. Ramdalal	... 297	Sri Gajapathi v. Sri Gajapathi	... 175
Soman Koeri v. Goshain	... 588	Sri Ganesh v. Keshavray	... 216
Somasekhararaja v. Subhadramaji	178, 303,	Sri Gopal v. Amba Devi	... 477
	322, 323, 348, 365	Srikant Hossein v. Sasi Kar	... 1028
Somasundara v. Duraisami	... 295	Srimohan v. Brij Behari	482, 485, 1023
Somasundara v. Gangam Bissen	476,		1028, 1031
	806, 831	Sri Mohan v. Mac Gregor	... 684
Some v. Dhandu	... 515	Sri Narain v. Raghubans Rai	536, 590
Somungowda v. Bhurmogowda	... 500	Srinath v. Probodh	681, 708
Sonaluxmi v. Vishnu Prasad	... 181	Sri Nath v. Ruttan	... 1028
Sona Moyee v. Secretary of State	... 1110	Srinatha v. Prosonno Kumar	... 1078
Sonatun v. Juggut Soondaree	746, 836,	Srinibash v. Monmhini	... 812
	837	Srinivas v. Balwant	... 337
— v. Ruttum	191, 192	Srinivasa v. Dandayuthapani	... 942
Soudamuney v. Jogesh Chunder	... 767	Srinivasa v. Krishnaswamy	... 676
Sonet Koer v. Himmat	... 969	Srinivasa v. Kuppam	198, 377
Soni v. Panram	... 762	Srinivasa v. Municipal Council	... 537
— Ram v. Kanhaya Lal	... 1048	Srinivasa v. Rangaswami	308, 663,
Soobah Firthe Lal v. Soobah Doorga			956, 957
Lal	... 392	Srinivasa v. Tiruvengadathaiengar	... 698
Soodshun v. Lokenath	... 268	Srinivasammal v. Vijayammal	780, 784
Soogun Chand v. Gopal Gir	184, 971	Sripal v. Surajbali	915, 999, 1084
Sookheemoney v. Mohendro	... 948	Sripat Singh v. Tagore	589, 616
Sookraj v. Government	504, 505	Sri Raghunadha v. Sri Brozo	648, 644
Soonder v. Gudodhur	295, 312, 313, 362	Sri Raja Viravara v. Sri Raja Viravara	782
— Narain v. Benud Ram	... 407	Sri Ram v. Inchi	... 247

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxxxix

	PAGE.		PAGE
Sri Ram v. Sri Gopal	512, 513, 528, 529	Subramanian v. Vembammal	443, 444
Sri Ramulu v. Kristamma	1018, 1078	Subrao v. Mahadevi	... 572
Sriramulu v. Ramayya	385, 340, 342, 348	Subraya v. Nagappa	... 532
Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo	309, 310, 318, 323,	Sucaram v. Kalidas	... 408
	381, 543	Sudalai v. Gomathi	... 1007
Stapilton v. Stapilton	... 631	Sudanand v. Bonomalle	284, 378, 761
Stewart v. Sheffield	... 805	Sudanand v. Soorjo	... 784
Strimuttu v. Dorasinga	... 988	Sudaminee v. Jogesh Chunder	... 584
Sturla v. Freccia	... 219	Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu	486, 490, 491,
Suba Sing v. Sarafaraz	902, 908, 946,		501, 625, 674, 893
	947, 955	Sudindra v. Budan	... 865
Subba v. Chengalamma	... 1053	Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards	... 787
Subba v. Venkatarama	923, 924	Sufa Chund v. Hemraj	... 466
Subba Ayyar v. Ganesa	... 642	Sugeeram v. Juddobun	... 1058
Subbammal v. Ayudaiyammal	... 1007,	Sujawat v. Busheeroodeen	... 860
	1027, 1072	Sukalal v. Babu	617, 618
Subba Naicker ( In re )	... 527	Sukhamoni v. Ishan Chander	... 521
Subba Rao v. Rama Rao	... 660	Sukbhasi v. Guman Singh	245, 352, 373
Subbaraya v. Chellappa	... 873	Sukh Dei v. Kedar Nath	780, 792
Subbaraya v. Ramaswami	925, 926	Sukh Dial v. Ram Ditti	... 429
Subbaraya v. Subrahmania	... 889	Sukkho v. Ramcharan	... 244
Subbaraya v. Subbammal	332, 347	Sukh Lal v. Bishambar	741, 864
Subbarayudu v. Katayya	... 864	Sukhram v. Uderam	... 631
Subbareddi v. Alagammal	... 656	Sukram v. Nand Kishore	... 885
Subba Reddi v. Changalamma	... 1016	Sukumari v. Ananta	291, 345
Subba Reddi v. Doraisami	786, 787	Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad	... 689
Subba Row v. Aranthanarayana	546, 658	—Singh v. Bahadur Singh	... 704
Subbayya v. Bhawani	... 265	—Singh v. Hashmut	... 415
Subbayya v. Chellama	... 677	Sumb Chundar v. Gangachurn	... 992
Subbayya v. Krishna	886, 888	Sumbhoo Chunder v. Narain	377, 78, 381
Subbia v. Rangiah	... 400	Sumasuddin v. Abdul	... 744
Subha v. Alagammal	... 70	Sumundra v. Kale Charn	... 675
Subbanna v. Venkatakrishna	... 1073	Sumuran Singh v. Khedun Singh	... 218
Subbanarayana v. Narendra	... 412	Sundanand v. Bonomallee	... 591
Subbaraya v. Chellappa	... 740	Sundar v. Parbati	646, 647
Subharaya v. Kamu	... 504	Sundara v. Arunachellam	625, 676
Subharaya v. Kylasa	956, 957	Sundara v. Tegaraja	... 545
Subharaya v. Mudali	... 1087	Sundarabai v. Jayawant	618, 619
Subharaya v. Ramasami	265, 1110	Sundarabai v. Shiv Narayana	223, 249, 481
Subharaya v. Subhakha	... 425	Sundarammal v. Rangaswami	954, 968
Subharazu v. Venkataratnam	... 662	Sundararaja v. Pattanathusami	... 411
Subhayya v. Bhavani	... 423	Sundaralingaswami v. Ramaswami	... 737
Subhayya v. Chellamma	... 509	Sundaram v. Krishnaswami	475, 525
Subhayya v. Surayya	473, 509, 780	Sundaramani v. Gokulanand	... 893
Subrahmania v. Arumuga	391, 410, 411, 412	Sundaramayya v. Sitamma	525, 526, 527
	517, 521	Sundarambal v. Yogavana Gurukkal.	851
Subrahmania v. Gopala	480, 537		852, 865, 876
Subrahmania v. Kaliani	432, 445, 453	Sundaramma v. Kamakotiah	... 700
Subrahmania v. Muthammal	... 453	Sundaramma v. Kamakshi	... 688
Subrahmanian v. Muthuswamy	... 198	Sundar Bahu v. Monhur	... 647
Subrahmania v. Nagarathna	... 862	Sundaresa v. Krishnamoorthy	... 660
Subrahmania v. Padmanabbha	... 662	Sundari v. Kristo	... 829
Subrahmanyan v. Paramaswaram	... 359	Sundari v. Nemye	265, 1110
Subrahmania v. Ponnuswami	... 1058	Sundari v. Pitambari	174, 265, 925, 1110
Subrahmania v. Rathnavelu	... 936	Sundari v. Subrahmania	249, 481
Subrahmania v. Sadasiva	... 590	Sunder Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen	664
Subrahmania v. Sitha	... 598	Sunderlal v. Brijlal	... 572
Subrahmanya v. Siva	539, 726, 738, 784, 736,	Sundar Lal v. Ohhitar Mal	... 517
	737	Sundar Moni v. Bangsidhar	... 242
Subrahmanya v. Velu	280, 424	Sunimani v. Mullammal	197, 198
Subrahmanyam v. Venkamma	806, 808, 309	Shunkar v. Gourey Pershad	... 516
Subrahmaniam v. Arumachellam	914, 1008,	Sunram v. Chander	649, 651
	1018, 1086, 1088, 1097
Subrahmaniyyan v. Subrahmaniyyan	... 517

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Suntosh v. Gera Pattuck	267, 403	Taliwar Singh v. Phulwan Singh	... 665
Suppammal v. Collector	... 848	Tanistry Case	... 211
Suraj v. Desa	... 603	Tara v. Ghasiram	... 762
Suraj Bunsil v. Sheo Pershad	494, 490, 519, 523, 530, 532, 539, 570, 572, 589, 589, 590, 593, 609, 611, 612, 613, 656, 657, 761	Tara v. Krishna	... 1110
Suraj Narain v. Iqbul Narain	623, 625, 627, 671, 678	Tara v. Reela	... 512
Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal	473, 475, 504	Tarachand v. Nobinehunder	779, 784
Surajpal v. Gajraj	659, 700	Tara Chand v. Pudum	708, 709
Suraj Prasad v. Golabohand	... 608	Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram	202, 217, 515, 692
Surampalli v. Surampalli	265, 433, 454	Tarachurn v. Joy Narain	493, 495
Suraneni v. Suraneni	... 674	Tarakeswarroy v. Shoshishikareswar	507, 767, 771, 826, 916
Surayya v. Lakshminarasimba	946, 947	Tara Kumari v. Chaturbhuj	506, 507, 734, 737
Surbessur v. Gossain Doss	500, 514, 678	Tara Mohun v. Kripa Moyee	379, 380, 383
Surbomingola v. Mohendronath	... 816	Tara Monee v. Mottee	... 1110
Surdurbab v. Haji	... 415	Tara Munev v. Devnarayan	300, 332
Surendra v. Dorgasoondary	851, 852	Tara Naikin v. Nana Lakshman	... 210
Surendra v. Hari Mohun	... 641	Tarinas v. Sharoda	307, 331
Surendra v. Kalanand	351, 381	Tarini v. Bholanath	1022, 1027
Surendra v. Sailaja	296, 317, 725	Tarit Bhoosun v. Tara Prosonno	679, 680
Surendra Nath v. Atul Chandra	411, 413	Tarnakhunder v. Jogeshur	... 492
Surendranath v. Hiramun	... 214	Tarokessur v. Soshi	... 805
Suresur v. Mohesh	1084, 1085, 1043	Taruckohunder v. Hurro Sunker	373
Suriya v. Raja of Pittapur	202, 298, 821, 916	Taruck Chunder v. Jodeshur	493, 495, 584
Surjakant v. Mohesh	878, 879	Tarunginev v. Dwarkanath	444, 445
Surjamani v. Rabi Nath	829, 830, 1006	Tatawa v. Basava	... 1097
Surja Prasad v. Golab Chand	510, 533, 537	Tatayya v. Ramkrishna	1022, 1023, 1025, 1031
Surja Prasad v. Khwahish Ali	... 522	Tayammal v. Annamalai	... 917
Surjyamani v. Kal Kianta	228, 264, 266, 267, 258, 269, 403	Tajj Singh v. Konsillah	... 926
Surti v. Narain Das	642, 923	Tara v. Krishna	... 940
Surya Narain v. Sirdhari	... 617	Taramonee v. Luckheemonee	... 988
Suryanarayana v. Sammana	... 684	Tayammal v. Scshachelliah	289, 303, 322, 364
Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana	314, 315, 316	Tajabai v. Mohanlal	... 368
Suryanarayana v. Patanna	... 721	Tejluk Chunder v. Shama Churn	284, 920, 926
Suryudu v. Hanumayya	... 915	Teja Singh v. Sachet Singh	... 348
Sutroogun v. Sabitra	323, 362, 364	Tejpal v. Ganga	... 416
Swamirayachari v. Hairs of Mudgalachari	500	Tej Protap v. Champa	625, 674
Swamiyar v. Chokalingam	641, 643	Tekait v. Basanta	223, 224, 264, 265, 266
Swarup v. Basdeo	... 941	Tekhu v. Waliah	... 944
Swinfen v. Swinfen	... 794	Teku v. Busti	291, 926
Syed Habibur Rasul v. Ashita	... 657	Tellis v. Saldhana	175, 187, 188, 677
Syed Munir In re	... 269	Tencowree v. Dino Nath	... 1098
Syud Ali v. Gopal Dass	... 214	Teranath v. Lakshmi	... 871
T		Tet Tun v. Machain	360, 361
Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society	856	Thadi v. Moola	... 572
Tagore v. Tagore	290, 489, 507, 702, 712, 714, 745, 746, 763, 764, 765, 767, 770, 773, 776, 777, 782, 795, 696, 801, 802, 805, 813, 816, 826, 839, 866, 902, 915, 916, 918, 927	Thakersay v. Hurbhum	859, 870, 874, 879, 886
Tahalai v. Gaya Pershad	... 942	Thakoor v. Balukram	... 965
Tahboonissa v. Sham Kishore	... 858	——— Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram	197, 913, 1003, 1084, 1087
Taj Singh v. Konsilla	... 174	Thakro v. Ganga	914, 1087, 1092, 1093
Talemand v. Rukmina	434, 435	Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram	269, 987, 998, 1031, 1099, 1100, 1101
Tandavarayya v. Valli Ammai	... 518	Thakurain v. Mahan Lal	907, 957, 967
Tandayuthapani v. Raghunath	... 628	Thakuria v. Gerdhari	... 921
Tangirala v. Manikya	... 852	Thakur Prasad v. Bhagabati	429, 661, 659
		Thakur Singh v. Nokhe Singh	... 829
		——— Titnath v. Loknath	... 212
		Thakusi v. Ganda Mall	... 484
		Thakur Din v. Seetla Sahai	... 572
		Thamardas v. Goni	... 435
		Thandavan v. Valliamma	... 689

xcī

	PAGE.
Tukaram v. Gunaji	... 264
———— v. Narayan	... 196
———— v. Ramachandra	411, 412, 547, 571
Tukarambhat v. Gangaram	586, 588
Tuljaram v. Mothur Das	954, 998, 1003,
1005, 1006
Tulaba v. Gopal Rai	... 425
Tulshi Ram v. Babu	584, 548
Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal	... 178,
	196, 298, 301, 350
Tuni Orain v. Leda Orain	... 204
Turner v. Hellard	... 824
Turner v. Meyers	223, 231, 263
———— v. Thompson	... 223
Tyson v. Smith	207, 209

Uchhap v. Lakhan	...	681
Uda v. Imamuddin	...	378
Udaichander v. Ashutosh	1032,	1027
Udai Raj v. Bhagwan	...	779
Udaram v. Ranu	531, 570, 573, 588,	658, 697
Udaram v. Sonkabai	426,	430
The Udayarpalayam case	715, 734, 735,	736
Udaydev v. Jaduv Lal	507,	716
Uddoy v. Jadub Lal	...	712
Udhar Singh v. Ranee Kuar	...	1036
Udit Narayan v. Rang Lal	...	510
Udu v. Durkadin	...	1050
Uji v. Bathi	211,	247
Uji Narain Das v. Tirlok Tewari	...	163
Ullee In re	...	395
Umabai v. Bhavu	642,	923
Umabeswara v. Singaperumal	...	614
Uma Dayi v. Bhagirathi Bai	...	335
Uman Parshad v. Gandarp	756,	757
Umaid v. Udoi	902, 904, 907, 909,	910, 956, 957, 958
Uman Prasad v. Debi Prasad	...	951
Umar Baksh v. Dhanda	...	290
Uma Shankar v. Bai Ratan	...	500
Uma Shankar v. Nageswari	907, 908, 955,	956, 957, 958, 959, 961
Uma Shunker v. Kali Komul	877,	778
Uma Sundari v. Bencdelal	657,	682
Uma Sundari v. Sornobinee	298,	301
Uma Sunkar v. Kali	195,	126
Umatortupagam v. Palanarayana	...	673
Umayortupagam v. Palanarayana	...	625
Umbica Prasad v. Ram Sahay	...	615
Umda Bi v. Mahomed Sarwar	...	185
Umduli v. Mahomed Sarwar	...	187
Un ed v. Goman	...	596
— v. Khushalbai	...	664
— v. Nagindas	228, 229,	280
Umra v. Mahomed Hayat	...	278
Umrao v. Badri	...	1049
Umrao Sing v. Lachman Singh	...	637
Umed v. Goman	...	614
Umrit v. Kidernath	...	437
Umritunath v. Goureenath	206,	465
Umrit Kowaree v. Kider Nath.	...	433

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Umroot v. Kulyandas	... 1003	Veerasingappa v. Rudrappa	... 915
Underwood v. Wing	... 261	Veerasawmi v. Subba	... 884
Unni v. Kunchi	... 417	Veerayya v. Gangamma	917, 941, 1048, 1049, 1059
Unnopoorna v. Gunga	581, 595	Veerayya v. Sunpura	... 1049
Unnopoorna In re	... 999	Velaga v. Bandlamudi	... 372
Upendra v. Bindesari	... 1075	Vellanki v. Venkata	299, 306, 309, 310, 315
Upendra v. Hem Chander	740, 770, 782, 810, 811, 847	Vellappa In re	... 317, 942, 968
Upendra v. Mahomed Faiz	... 681	Velu v. Gnanasambanda	... 1030
Upendra v. Nobo Kishore	1012, 1013, 1018	Velu v. Kumaravelu	... 865
Upendra v. Thanda	... 917	Veluganada v. Dorasinga	... 683
Upendra Lal v. Prasamamayi	... 363	Vembu Aiyar v. Srinivasa	... 941
Upendranath v. Bindeshri	... 630	Vencatachella Reddiar v. Vencatachella	... 408
Upendur Lal v. Prasanna	... 348	— v. Parvatham	430
Upoma v. Bholaram	... 244	Veneall v. Veness	... 211
Upooroop v. Bandhee	... 519	Vengamuthu v. Pandavesware	... 223
Urjun Singh v. Ghunsiam	... 201	Venku v. Muttukannu	177, 880
Utharankat v. Utharankat	... 454	Venkaji v. Vishnu	... 1110
V		Venkamma v. Aitamma	... 1021
Vachoor v. Vachoor	... 288	Venkamma v. Savitramma	... 458
Vadali v. Kotipalli	... 1007	Venkamma v. Venkateswara	392, 393
Vadilal v. Sheikhushal	575, 581	Venkappa v. Holyava	... 965
Vaidyanatha v. Aiyasamy	500, 663, 693, 700	Venkappa v. Fakirgowda	... 352
Vaidyanatha v. Appu	... 334	Venkata v. Bhassayakalu	507, 516, 684
Vaikuntam v. Kallapiram	229, 249, 412	Venkata v. Court of Wards	381, 465, 506, 712, 715, 716, 725, 726, 730, 732
Vaithilingam v. Murugaian	373, 384, 385	Venkata v. Lakshmi	... 228
Vaithinathan v. Gangarazu	227, 229	Venkata v. Laxman	... 938
Vallabh Ram v. Bai Hariganga	196, 1109	Venkata v. Narasingappa	1016, 1017
Vallabha v. Madusudan	... 215	Venkata v. Narayana	... 722
Vallinayagam v. Pachche	... 776	Venkata v. Papayya	... 362
Valu v. Ganga	433, 441	Venkata v. Parthasarathy	... 505
Valu v. Gangu	... 265	Venkata v. Ponnuswamy	... 877
Valubai v. Govind	345, 346, 347	— v. Purushottam	642, 928
Vamon v. Vasudev	... 689	— v. Rangayya	818, 321, 928, 376
Vamanji v. Atmaram	... 658	— v. Subhadra	982, 342
Vandrayan v. Manilal	... 286	— v. Surenani	... 967
Vank v. Goodfellow	... 792	— v. Tulja Ram	... 588
Vappuluri v. Marinalla	... 653	— v. Venkata	506, 916, 1011, 1087, 1089, 1090
Varadaprumal v. Ardaneri	... 894	Venkatachalapati v. Subbarayudu	880, 885
Varadoyya v. Muniswami	... 887	Venkatachella v. Chinnaya	546, 662
Vardun v. Suckpathy	... 806	— v. Parvatham	985, 986
Varjiban v. Shelji	... 1043	Venkatagiri v. Chandra	956, 958
Vasudev v. Ramchandra	307, 326, 327	Venkatagiri v. Subbarayudu	... 521
Vasudev v. Bhagwan	... 619	Venkata Krishnamma v. Annapur-	... 306
Vasudev v. Krishnaji	... 590	namma	... 232, 288, 260, 268
Vasudev v. Narayan	... 762	Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu	280, 280
Vasudev v. Venkatesh	539, 547, 570, 571	Venkatachella v. Parvatham	753, 762
Vasudevan v. Secretary of State	192, 201, 265, 354, 998,	Venkata Krishnayya v. Lakshmi-	... 227
Vathiar In re	... 187	narayana	... 1043, 1053, 1055, 1056, 1059
Vato v. Rowshum	... 626	Venkatarama v. Subbammal	998, 1097, 1104
Vayidinada v. Appu	... 160	Venkatarama v. Meera	... 658
Vaidyanatha v. Appu	840, 341	Venkatarama v. Senthil	... 596
Vedammal v. Vedanayaga	165, 361, 924, 925, 926	Venkatarama v. Krishnama	... 885
Vedanayaga v. Vedammal	165, 212, 861	Venkata Subramanyam v. Thaya-	... 954, 967, 1102
Vedavalli v. Mangamma	... 347	rammal	... 885
Veera Basavaraju v. Bala Surya	306, 809	Venketesa v. Bammampalli	... 438, 434, 445, 450, 651
Veerabhadra v. Marudoga	... 1068	Venkatammal v. Andiyappa	...
Veeraperumal v. Narain	382, 346
Veerappa v. Muthusawmi	... 412

xciii

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Venkatarama v. Bappamma	... 306	Vithal v. Anant	... 212
Venkataramanaya v. Venkataramana	533, 608	— v. Ganpat Rao	... 957
Venkatesan v. Ethirajammah	... 394	— v. Haribayee	... 965
Venkata Surya v. Court of Wards	... 507	Vithal Das v. Jeshubai	... 965
Venkayalahatti v. Nagendra	... 288	— v. Nand Kishore	... 588
Venkayamma v. Venkata	941, 997, 998, 1007, 1049	Vithu Rao v. Ram Rao	946, 947
Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayama	939, 947, 1098	Vithappa v. Savitri	... 1007
Venkayya v. Lakshmayya	658, 662, 682	Vithoba v. Bapu	297, 308, 309, 311
Venkayya v. Venkata	... 402	— v. Govind	... 691
Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayamma.	470, 473, 786, 787	— v. Hariba	... 699
Venkataramama v. Kasturiranga	... 862	Vithoba v. Sakharam	415, 418
Venkatarama v. Srinivasa	865, 873	Vithu v. Govinda	248, 440, 1001, 1018
Venkopadhyaya v. Kaveri	453, 459	Vithu v. Mendli	1058, 1060, 1061
Venku v. Mahalinga	... 210	Vitta v. Chatakondur	... 1001
Venolal v. Parjaram	... 954	Vitla v. Yamenamma	... 777
Venugopala v. Ramanadhan	... 591	Vitta v. Chatakondur	... 248
Verabadra v. Marudaga	... 1028	Vitla v. Yamenamma	546, 547
Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba	286, 301, 325, 326, 327, 941	Vranjabandua v. Yamuna	... 544
Verrprashiya v. Santanraja	... 316	Vrijbhukan Das v. Parabati	997, 998, 1005
Vesonji v. Chandabai	... 1000	Vuppuluri v. Garimalla	1022, 1023, 1025, 1031
Vidyapurna v. Vidyaniidhi	... 877	Vyenkata Rao v. Anand Rao	... 348
Vigneswara v. Bapayya	... 522	Vyankatrao v. Mahadev	... 399
Vidyapurna v. Vidyaniidhi	858, 861, 865, 866, 867, 870, 872, 874, 875	Vyas v. Vyas	... 336
Vijaya v. Sripathi	... 443	Vyasacharya v. Venkubai	... 352
Vijbhukan v. Dayaram	1060, 1066	Vydinada v. Nagammal	... 776
Vijarungam v. Lakshman	273, 292, 332, 1000, 1003, 1080, 1084, 1086, 1094, 1102	Vythilinga v. Vijithammal	206, 238, 256
Vijli v. Magan	... 500
Vijli v. Prabhalakshmi	... 958	Waddell v. Waddell	... 266
Vikrama v. Vikrama	1008, 1015	Waghela v. Shekh Masludin	412, 413
Vinayak v. Gopal	654, 782	Wahia Ali v. Toori Ram	1008, 1012, 1013
Vinayak v. Govind Rao	784, 787	Wahid v. Safet	... 573
Vinayak v. Laxmibai	196, 964, 998, 1000, 1003, 1005, 1006	Wajibun v. Kadir Buksh	410, 521, 522
Vinayak v. Ramkrishna	... 680	Walbhai v. Heerbai	335, 336, 339, 341
Vinayak Rao v. Vidyashankar	... 1066	Wadiul Hasan v. Gopal	1042, 1043
Viraragava v. Ramalinga	338, 339	Wallingford v. Mutual Society	... 825
Viraramamurthi v. Singaravelu	260, 424	Waman v. Balaji	... 212
Virasami v. Appasami	224, 423	Waman v. Krishnaji	... 348
Virasangappa v. Rudrappa	178, 211, 247, 998, 1084	— v. Atmaram	... 699
Viraswami v. Ayyaswami	545, 546, 570	Watson & Co. v. Ramchand	541, 685, 885, 836, 843
Virayya v. Hanumanta	337, 340, 342, 343	Weeks, In re	... 781
Virbudra v. Bae	... 310	Weeks v. Sparke	... 219
Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava	399, 401, 528	Welch v. Phillips	787, 788
Visalatchy v. Mahalinga	... 528	Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort	... 395
— v. Sivaramien	351, 352, 353, 641	Walters v. Woodbridge	... 856
— v. Annasamy	429, 432, 433, 441	Williams, In re	... 826
Visalatothami v. Subbu Pillai	... 801	Wethered v. Wethered	... 744
Vishnu v. Govind	... 638	White v. Bistoo Chunder Bose	... 517
Vishnu v. Krishnan	... 841, 373	Williams v. Gonde	... 790
— v. Manjamma	265, 428, 441, 454, 458	Williams v. Williams	628, 631
— v. Ramchandra	500	Wing v. Angrave	... 261
Vishvanath v. Krishnaji	705, 706	Wiseman v. Roper	... 744
— v. Kamulu	507, 726, 737	Wooma Dae v. Gokulanand	342, 350, 354, 355
— v. Saminathan	229, 273	Wooma Pershad v. Guish Chunder	... 642
Vithabai v. Balwant Rao	... 777	Woomesh Chunder v. Rashmohini	791, 792, 794
		Wright v. Horton	... 349
		Wright v. Moldgate	... 278
		Weir v. Crum Brow	... 810
		Whitebread v. Lord St. John	... 804

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Y		Yeshoda Bai v. Lal Talobashet
Yamunava v. Luxman	... 336	Yeshvantrav v. Kashi Bai	424, 427
Yamunabai v. Balshet	... 372	Yethirajulu v. Mukunthu	474, 782
Yamuna v. Narayan	264, 266, 268	Young v. Davies	... 805
Yamunabai v. Manubai	429, 430, 433
Yamuna Bai v. Nanabai	... 448	Z
Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda	430, 452, 453, 459 625, 712, 735	Zahre v. Lallu	.. 548
Yekeyamian v. Agniswarian	... 534	Zemindar v. Trustee	506, 507
Yelamanchili v. Yelamanchili	... 249	Zemindar of Shivaganga v. Lakshmana	727
Yellappa v. Desayappa	... 412	— of Sivagiri v. Alwar	... 727
Yenumala v. Yenumala	488, 489, 506, 509, 725	Zuburdust v. Indurmun Agra	... 595
		Zambaco v. Cossavetti	... 1054

TABLE OF ACTS, REGULATIONS AND STATUTES.

	PAGE		PAGE
ACTS : IMPERIAL.
XXI of 1850 (Freedom of Religion)	lix, 164, 178—174, 290, 397, 398 486, 926	XIII of 1898	... 155
XV of 1856 (Hindu Widow's Remar- riage)	lix, lx, 247, 248, 331, 440, 922, 927, 988, 1001	II of 1899 (Stamp)	... 512
VIII of 1859 (Civil Procedure)	... lxxv	III of 1907 (Provincial Insolvency)	... 1047
XIV of 1859 (Limitation)	... 742	V of 1908 (Civil Procedure)	... 214, 419, 420, 521, 595, 536, 697, 888, 1068, 1070
XLV of 1860 (Penal Code)	lxxv, 210	IX of 1908 (Limitation)	... 268 371, 372, 415, 452, 453, 521, 637, 639, 1090
XXV of 1861 (Criminal Procedure)	... lxxv	XVI of 1908 (Registration)	282, 312, 638
XX of 1863 (Religious Endowment)	881, 882, 883	III of 1909 (Presidency Towns Insol- vency)	... 1047
XVII of 1864 (Official Trustees)	... 891	III of 1911 (Criminal Tribes)	... 293
X of 1865 (Indian Succession)	lx, 187, 192, 321, 747, 766, 774, 784, .803, 807, 810, 825, 827, 829	IV of 1912 (Lunacy)	... 290
XXI of 1866 (Native Converts Mar- riage)	lx, 164, 248, 235, 426	XV of 1916 (Hindu Disposition of Pro- perty)	763, 768, 769 lxi, 746
I of 1869 (Oudh Estates)	311, 724, 769, 778	X of 1918 (Usurious Loans)	... 619
IV of 1869 (Divorce)	... 188	ACTS : LOCAL.
XXI of 1870 (Hindu Wills)	lx, 318, 321, 769, 773, 778, 823, 842	XI of 1852 (Bombay)	... 881
I of 1872 (Evidence)	lxxv, 201, 212, 215, 218, 269, 270, 418, 500, 589, 1070	VII of 1863 (Bombay)	... 881
III of 1872 (Civil Marriage)	181, 239, 247	II of 1864 (Madras)	623, 660
IV of 1872 (Punjab Laws)	... 198	I of 1866 (Madras)	... 623
IX of 1872 (Contract)	lxi, 209, 265, 329, 412, 575, 579, 618, 619, 634, 635, 849, 872	VII of 1866 (Bombay)	lxiii, 155, 581, 592, 595
XV of 1872 (Christian Marriage)	... 188	I of 1869 (Madras)	... 713
X of 1873 (Oaths)	... lxi	VI of 1871 (Bengal)	... 154
XV of 1874 (Laws Local Extent)	... lix	IV of 1872 (Punjab)	... 155
IX of 1875 (Majority)	lx, 227, 235, 301, 387, 776	IV of 1872 (Bengal)	... lxiv
XX of 1875	... 155	LV of 1872 (Punjab)	... lvii
I of 1877 (Specific Relief)	lxxv, 228, 383, 384, 414, 1052, 1054, 1056	III of 1873 (Madras)	... 155
V of 1881 (Probate and Administration)	lx 179, 388, 774	XII of 1878 (Punjab)	lvii, 155
XXVI of 1881 (Negotiable Instru- ments)	lxxv	V of 1879 (Bombay)	623, 660
II of 1882 (Trusts)	842, 870	IX of 1879 (Bengal)	... 293
IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property)	... lxi 408, 414, 435, 448, 519, 546, 595, 601, 618, 619, 728, 741, 747, 753, 766, 808, 835, 849, 920, 1066	XII of 1881 (N. W. P. Rent)	... 210
VI of 1890 (Charitable Endowments)	889, 891	XVIII of 1881 (C. P. Acts)	... 713
VIII of 1890 (Guardian and Ward)	267, 268, 282, 386, 388, 389, 390, 391, 396, 403, 405, 406, 410, 414	XV of 1882 (Bombay)	... 155
IV of 1893 (Partition)	623, 687, 690, 695	XII of 1887 (Bengal)	154, 155
XV of 1895 (Crown Grants)	... 715	XVII of 1887 (Punjab)	623, 660
X of 1897	... 741	VI of 1888 (Bombay)	... 623
		XXIV of 1899 (Central Provinces)	... 293
		III of 1901 (United Provinces)	623, 660, 687
		I of 1903 (Bombay)	... 293
		V of 1897 (Bengal)	623, 660
		I of 1902 (Madras)	... 293
		II of 1908 (Punjab)	... 293
		II of 1904 (Madras)	... 713
		VII of 1912 (Bengal)	... 293
		I of 1914 (Madras)	... 708
		II of 1917 (C. P. Acts)	623, 650, 713
		REGULATIONS :
		I of 1781 (Bengal)	... lvii
		XI of 1793 (Bengal)	... 164
		XXXVI of 1793 (Bengal)	... 721

	PAGE		PAGE
XLIV of 1795 (Bengal)	... 154	9 Geo II C. 36	766, 840
X of 1800 (Bengal)	... 154	13 Geo III C. 63	... lvi
II of 1802 (Madras)	... 155	21 Geo III C. 70	... lvii
V of 1804 (Madras)	... 293	37 Geo III C. 142	lvii, 151
XII of 1805 (Bengal)	... 154	39 and 40 Geo III C. 79	... 154
I of 1830 (Madras)	... lxi	51 Geo III C. 37	223, 231
XI of 1825 (Bengal)	... lxiv	53 Geo III C. 159	... 891
IV of 1827 (Bombay)	154, 155	5 Geo. IV C. 114	... lxi
LV of 1827 (Bombay)	... lvii	3 and 4 Will IV C. 27	... 678
VII of 1832 (Bengal)	... lix	3 and 4 Will IV C. 85	... xli
III of 1877 (Bombay)	... 155	6 and 7 Vic. C. 98	... lxi
III of 1890 (Baluchistan)	... 155	49 and 50 Vic. C. 37 S. 3	... 396
STATUTES.		51 and 52 Vic. C. 42	... 766
		53 and 54 Vic. C. 16 (1890)	... 840
27 Hen. VIII C. 10	... 781	61 and 62 Vic. C. 58 (1898) S. 6	... 234
32 Henry VIII C. 38 (1543)	... 257	7 Edw. 7 C. 47	... 247
1 Edw VI C. 14	... 840	5 and 6 Geo. V C. 5	154, 193

GENERAL INTRODUCTION.

I

1. THE true prototype of the institutions peculiar to Hindu Law is to be found in the primeval tribal customs which are the common stock of all sections of the Indo-European race. Genesis of Aryan Institutions. The law of joint Hindu family, of adoption, marriage and succession is not the peculiar feature of archaic Hindu Law. It was a part of the customs of the ancient Greeks, Romans and other nations who claim their descent from the common parent race. The system of Hindu law is, indeed, not a peculiar feature of the Aryan races. It is to be found up to the present day in countries such as China and Japan, though somewhat modified by the force of modern circumstances. The joint family is but the natural outcome of the gregarious instinct of man. Indeed, in one sense there are joint families even among certain classes of lower animals. They play a necessary part in the growth of civilization and the development of society. But the joint families as now known to the Hindus are not the joint families as known to their primeval progenitors. To them a family meant a body of men united for purposes both offensive and defensive, to which were necessarily attached a number of women as dependant serfs. It was both natural and necessary that this band of men should have a leader, and what can be more natural than that in such a society respect should be paid for age, for with age went experience and with experience, wisdom. The oldest male would naturally become the leader of such a flock. This is then the genesis of the particular society which in its primitive and rude simplicity may still be observed in several remote parts of India such as e.g., in the case of Santals, the Oraons, the Bhils and other aboriginal hill tribes. Writing of the Oraons, an aboriginal tribe inhabiting the Chota Nagpur and the adjoining tracts of the Central Provinces plateaus and describing the institution of Dhumkuria or Bachelors' Dormitory, Sir H. Risley says: "In all the older Oraon villages where there is any conservation of ancient customs, there is a house called the Dhumkuria in which all the bachelors of the village must sleep under penalty of a fine . . . I not long ago saw a Dhumkuria in a Sirguja village in which the boys and girls all slept every night." (1) Sexual intercourse before marriage, he continues, is tacitly recognized and is so generally practised that in the opinion of the best observers no Oraon girl is a virgin at the time of her marriage. "To call this state of things immoral is to apply a modern conception to primitive habits of life. Within the tribe, indeed, the idea of sexual morality seems hardly to exist, and the unmarried Oraons are not far removed from the condition of modified promiscuity which prevails among many of the Australian tribes. Provided that the exogamous circle defined by the totem is respected, an unmarried woman may

---

(1) Ethnography, p. 248

bestow her favours on whom she will. If, however, she becomes pregnant, arrangements are made to get her married without delay, and she is then expected to lead a virtuous life." (1)

Such was the social order in the administration of the cyclops of which Homer wrote :

" Meetings, that counsel bring, to them are not,
 " Nor legal Judges. On the high hill tops
 They dwell, or in the hollow cave and each
 To wife and children gives the law, nor care
 Aught have they of each other." (2)

2. In this primitive State of Nature idealized by the modern man as the golden dawn of history, there was little to choose between the grim battle for life which the human hunter fought and his animal prey upon which he subsisted. For, as Hobbes has pointed out, the primitive state of human society was not that of Universal peace but one of indiscriminate war, and even when men were not actually engaged in war their condition was at all times one of armed neutrality. "For war consisteth not in battle only, or the act of fighting ; but in a tract of time wherein the will to contend by battle is sufficiently known ; and therefore the notion of 'time' is to be considered in the nature of war, as it is in the nature of weather. For as the nature of foul weather lieth not in a shower or two of rain, but in an inclination thereto of many days together : so the nature of war consisteth not in actual fighting, but in the known disposition thereto during all the time there is no assurance to the contrary. All other time is peace." (3) This state of insecurity from without necessarily dictated the assurance of society within. The tribal units were too loosely formed and unwieldy for a strict discipline in detail which necessitated their splitting up into smaller groups held together by the combined forces of personal and sexual affinity, and dictated by the natural instincts of self-preservation. Strangers would be freely admitted into this social group. The modern social order is thus the result of modified promiscuity. (4)

3. The formation of hordes and the formation of familial groups are the two facts which mark the dawn of history. But which of these preceded the other is a question upon which ethnologists are still at variance. There are those who trace the growth of family relations from the primitive promiscuous hordes, while there are others who with Maine hold that "the conclusion which is suggested by the evidence is not that all early societies were formed by descent from the same ancestor, but that all of them which had any permanence or solidity either were so descended or assumed that they were. An indefinite number of causes may have shattered the primitive groups, but wherever their ingredients recombined it was on the model or principle of an association of kindred." (5) But the very conception of kindredship postulates an earlier era ; and while it is true that the earliest speculation starts with a dominant affinity for familial ties, it is not safe to predicate that it must have been necessarily the very first stage in social evolution. Even Sir Henry Maine suggests several causes which may have led to the predominance of one over the other while the numerical inferiority of the sexes suggests a variation which makes the working of the two theories

(1) 2 Tribes and Castes, p. 141.

(2) Odyssey, IX. 12.

(3) Leviathan, Ch. XI. I.

(4) Maine's Early Law and Custom, Ch. VII, p. 200.

(5) Ancient Law, Ch. V.

simultaneously possible in different surroundings. Society must have been circumstanced by its environment. Maine thinks it "more than probable that, since the appearance of mankind on the earth, an indefinite portion of the race has suffered at different times from a serious inferiority in numbers of women to men." "It must further be acknowledged," he continues, "that the advance in intelligence of which Darwin speaks <sup>(1)</sup> would lead men to establish institutions in conformity with this proportion between the sexes, if only for the purpose of keeping within bounds that sexual jealousy which could not fail under such circumstances to produce, if unrestrained, a perpetuity of violence and bloodshed."<sup>(2)</sup> "Patriarchal theory," he adds, "supposes that the motive which led to the exertion of power was sexual jealousy. The counter-theories assume the abeyance during long ages of sexual jealousy."<sup>(3)</sup> But Maine allows for the promiscuity of intercourse; and the polyandry even practised up to the present day in certain parts of Southern India makes one pause before applying to the diverse human institutions a single a priori test. Moreover, those who strive for a logical sequence of social evolution seem to ignore that it is not only possible for the two units to come into existence in response to local conditions, but it is equally possible for both of them to co-exist at the same time and in the same place. This will be evident if regard is had to the fact that a tribe in its original form is distinguished from a caste by the fact that its basis is political rather than economic or social and that the impelling demand of social necessity may equally be combined with political exigency. To these causes might be added other adventitious causes leading to the formation of tribes and families side by side.

4. One thing is certain. The ancient nomadic groups all practised female infanticide. Daughters were an incumbrance to the people who had every moment to turn their strength to account in defence of their property and person, while grown-up women afforded an attraction for hostile attacks enhancing the worries of an insecure existence. Each primitive group depended for its necessary supply of women upon women-stealing for which marauding excursions were frequent which are immortalized by the legend of the founder of Rome. That such wife-hunting expeditions were common long after the Hindus had established a settled social order is evident from the forms of marriages described in the law books to which particular reference will be presently made. This practice had a far reaching effect upon the history of the Aryan people. They appear to have early discovered the evils of consanguinous inter-breeding which in many cases afforded ample ocular demonstration of transmitted maladies and deformities. Exogamy was, therefore, not only the acknowledged necessity but became the prevailing rule. But in this way some of the groups became sufficiently large to dispense with exogamy. Endogamy then took its place and thus arose the notion of a gens and gentiles, self-centred and self-contained, who all claimed descent through males from a common male ancestor. It was a further bond for cementing the ties of association. The mimetic faculty of man traceable to his simian ancestry would play a conspicuous part in shaping all groups after a settled model once it was well formed and its utility sufficiently demonstrated. There would also be the equally natural egoism, that pride of self or something like self, which accounts for the continuance of clans, castes and races. But here again one must not lapse into the danger of a too wide generalization. For while it is true that the

(1) 2 Descent of man, p. 362.

(3) Ib. p. 216.

(2) Early law and custom, Ch. VII, p. 214.

Aryan gens, such as, of the Hindu, the Greek and the Roman types, trace their ancestry in a continuous agnatic line, there are instances on records of groups, such as, the so-called aborigines of Australia or the American islands among whom kinship is traceable exclusively through the female parent. These groups mark their bodies with a common mark or "totem" (1) to preserve their clannish identity and members of the same group never inter-marry. This "totem" becomes a symbol of great cohesive value. People of the same "totem" will often travel long distances to assist their fellow-totems. But kinship so created is naturally apt to become confused in course of time, and even where it is not so, it naturally yields the palm to the agnatic group which represents the flower of its masculine strength and mind whose exploits and achievements would naturally out-distance the cognatic clans.

5. This fact accounts for the ancestor worship as to which Sir John Lubbock wrote: "Although descent amongst the lowest Ancestor worship. savages is traced in the female line, I do not know of any instance in which female ancestors were worshipped."

The worship of female ancestors marks yet another stage in the evolution of society. Here again, the genesis of the custom is laid in the dawn of history. The savage races believed in the continued existence of their dear departed dead who had assisted them in life and who they fondly believed could not do otherwise after their death. The primitive conception of a great warrior leading the same life and following the same occupation before and after death led to the funeral offerings of food, clothing and weapon, and so tenacious are these rites and beliefs of a by-gone age that they linger even yet in several parts of Europe, where the Britons leave the remains of the 'All Souls' supper on the table for the ghosts of the dead kinsfolk to partake of, and Russian peasants set out cakes for the ancestral manes on the ledge which supports the holy pictures, and make dough ladders to assist the ghosts of the dead to ascend out of their graves and start on their journey for the future world; while yet another provision for the same spiritual journey is made when the coin is still put in the hands of a corpse at an Irish wake. (2) The strewing of flowers on the graves, the lighting of tapers and other offerings of love are but relics of the same thought which have survived the combined attacks of science and the testimony of reason. The gorgeous funeral pageants of the ancient Greeks and Romans were inspired by the same thought. Those who were most endeared in life offered their utmost homage to the vanished spirit and the test applied by the Dayabhagh for determining the heirs thus becomes at once intelligible. Those were the nearest of kin who offered the largest obsequial feasts. That these should

(1) A "totem" is an animal or thing which members of a totem group regard as sacred and who consequently regard themselves as members of the same family amongst whom inter-marriage or co-habitation is not permissible. Totemism prevails amongst the Dravidians in India who have for totems the month of June, Wednesday in every week, the moon, the rainbow, and the constellation pleiades, besides the entire flora and fauna of the country where the tribe is settled—Risley's Cens. Report. 1901-Pt. 1, § 890; People of India, p. 105; Spencer and Gillen, Native Tribes of Central Australia, 1899; Totemism and Exogamy, 1910 Vol. 1, p. 91 et seq. For totems in the C.P. See C. P. Census Report, 1901 Vol. 1, p 189 et seq.; in Madras E. Thurston's Castes and Tribes of Southern India. 1909; Coochin Tribes and Castes, Vols. 1 and II-1909-12. For Assam-Census Report 1911, Vol 1, p. 72; Bombay-Ethnographic Survey (1909) 184, pp. 1, 12; (1904) No. 12, p. 2; Census Report Bombay (1911) Vol 1 p. 268; Central India Census Report (1901), p. 198.

(2) Tylor "Primitive Culture," Ch. I, III, IV, XI, XII. Early History of Man-kind, Ch. VI.

be confined to the priestly class of Brahmins, is only due to their sacerdotal influences. They were the scribes of old and naturally placed their class interest before the public weal. But it marks a later epoch in the development of society. As adoption was necessary to strengthen the patriarchy, so ancestor worship was persisted in to preserve its identity. The two institutions now peculiarly Hindu have thus persisted in the march of ages. The law of inheritance is only a necessary corollary of the ancestor worship. Those who performed the obsequial rites were naturally the offspring of the deceased. By a confusion of cause and effect ancestor worship and inheritance became a part of the established usage of classic antiquity. Those who conferred the utmost benefit upon the deceased were admitted to preferential claim for participation in his worldly effects. The medieval Christian Church made the one a condition precedent to the other, and upon it, it founded the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court in which all moveable and personal property of the deceased vested in the first instance, before it could be distributed; and this jurisdiction, extended to the powers over executors in the case of wills and of administrators in the case of intestacies, has descended to the modern Court of Probate.

6. The clear line that now divides the secular from the ecclesiastical law did not exist. One special feature of archaic society was
Law and religion. the blending of law with religion and of both with social duty. The clear line that divides the three is of recent growth. In ancient society all passed under the garb of religion as religious conceptions were the first to develop; and as the executive was necessarily weak, there was a distinct gain in appealing to divine authority for the government of society. It tended to ensure implicit obedience by hushing all doubts and silencing all dissent and opposition.

7. "Of all the problems," writes Hunter, "that the human race had to confront the greatest perhaps is to know what conduct is really injurious to mankind, and what is the best way to secure good conduct. Scarcely less important is it to know the degree in which conduct is injurious. On all these points, early societies had every thing to learn; and, as was unavoidable, the lesson was acquired slowly and imperfectly. It would be rash to assume that even now the classification of wrongs and offences is satisfactory or final; and it is universally admitted that the art of punishment or rather of prevention is still far from perfect. The first great step in the progress of law is when the distinction between acts that are harmful to human society, and acts that may not be so, but are hateful to supernatural beings is thoroughly grasped. The distinction between sin and crime, between an offence against some god, and an offence against the State, lies at the root of all legal development. It is impossible to make any advance towards rational classification of offences, until the elementary conception of an offence—as an act injurious to man living in society—is thoroughly apprehended and firmly grasped." (1)

8. Judged by this test Hindu Law never emerged out of its pristine infancy. Indeed, its social development as portrayed in the law as now administered remains far behind that of the earliest Roman Institutions as seen in the Twelve Tables promulgated about 500 B. C. It is not even comparable to the regal period which heralded the establishment of the Republic in 509 B. C. This period was marked by very strong religious feeling. Nothing could be done in private or public life without consulting the gods who exercised a direct supervision over the affairs of men through the agency of the priests of which there were three colleges or guilds, namely, the pontiffs, the augurs and the fetials. Of these the pontiffs were most intimately connected with the law. "In the earliest times they were in exclusive possession of the civil as well as of the religious law. They alone regulated the calendar, and determined the dies fasti on which alone legal business could be lawfully transacted; they alone were in possession of the technical forms according to which law suits must be conducted; they convoked the assembly of the wards when wills were to be received or adoption was to take place. In some cases of deep moral offence they might even pronounce the sentence of death; but a right of appeal lay to the people. In spite of the intensity of Roman religious feeling the religion of the State was always absolutely subject to the political authority." (1)

---

(1) Roman Law, 1068.

9. In classical Grecian history priests played even a less conspicuous part in the administration of law. The fact is that Hindu Law took the turn suitable to the genius of the people as the Grecian and Roman Laws overtook the fast developing republican genius of the people. Consequently, while the early laws of these people furnish close analogies, which are to be expected by reason of their common ancestry, their later developments furnish matters only for contrast rather than for comparison (§ 23).

10. The early development of Hellenic culture on account of the emancipation of the people from the thralldom of priestcraft

The Laws of Solon. gives to the laws of Solon promulgated in 594 B. C. a comparative modernity which is not found in the laws of Apastamb and Baudhayan who promulgated their sutras 800 years later. The fact is, as Solon observed, the trend of laws is determined by the genius of the people. Their usages are transformed with the permeation of new ideas. The welding of law with religion can only stand so long as the people are in their habits and thoughts implicitly religious, and childishy credulous. With the growth of political institutions the divine law becomes separated from human commands as the conception of civic duty becomes disentangled from religious piety. The laws of Solon, inscribed on wooden tablets arranged in pyramidal blocks turning on an axis, announced to the people the distinction between civil law and religious duty. They were at first deposited in the Acropolis, but afterwards for greater convenience of inspection they had to be brought down to the Prytaneum. They mark an epoch when the people had already risen against their tyrants, driving out Pisistratus and installing Lycurgus in his place. At the same time they show the struggle that was still raging between religious fears and civic liberty. To allay the fears of the superstitious, Solon is said to have invited Epimenides of Crete who was reputed to possess the power of magic. He performed certain rights which appeased the superstitious Athenians, offering, it is said, even a human sacrifice to allay their fears. He founded a temple to Eumenides on the Areopagus not forgetting the two altars which appeased the malignance of Hubris and Anaideia under which Athens had been suffering for years. He curtailed the extravagant funeral expenses, released the pledged lands from their incumbrances, and repealed the law which enabled the creditor to enslave his debtor, and had led debtors even to sell their own children. The nobles had appropriated all the lands. He substituted property for birth as a qualification for citizenship. As such, he divided the Athenian citizens into 4 classes and assigned to them their respective duties. The first consisted of persons whose rent or yearly produce yielded 500 measures, the second whose income yielded 300, the third whose income yielded 200, while the rest were relegated to the fourth which was a servile class. All the highest offices were reserved for the first class, the second and third performed military duties and were on that account lightly assessed. The people were given a democratic constitution. The archons retained their judicial powers but appeals were allowed to the Senate and the Areopagus, which were popularly elected bodies. The fact that Solon prohibited women from going abroad with more than three changes of apparel and a limited quantity of provisions, and not to pass through the streets at night otherwise than in a carriage with a light carried before them, shows the freedom they had previously enjoyed and the necessity felt for restraining their licence—a restraint which in later years introduced a semblance of purdah amongst them.

---

(1) Hunter's Roman Law, Ch. I, p. 10.

11. The education of the Athenian was an affair of the State. Up to his sixteenth year he was educated at home. But on attaining that age he was compelled to spend two years in a gymnasium under publicly appointed masters. At 18 he was enlisted as a citizen. He could then inherit his patrimony, but was liable to attend to public duties. This Hellenic influence tended to greatly influence the course of Roman legislation. The genius of both people was, as already remarked, democratic, and even during the regal period of its history (B. C. 754-509) the popular assembly or the comitia curiata was, in Rome, the final Court of appeal with power to revise even the King's decrees.

12. Under the Republic established in 509 B. C., the people became divided into two classes—the patricians and the plebians, and while both possessed theoretical equality, the patricians in fact enjoyed all the powers and emoluments of office. But the plebians were not long in asserting themselves. The first thing they forced the patricians to do was to define the constitution which led to the codification of the customary law which was published to the people on twelve bronze tables, known as the Laws of the Twelve Tables which are the foundation of the whole fabric of Roman Law. Of these the first two tables prescribe the procedure for the trial of cases. They provide for the hearing of both sides, and for an ex parte decree against the absent party. The third table prescribes a mode of execution. The debtor was to be made over to his creditor in bondage. The latter might bind him with thongs or with fetters which were not to weigh more than 15 pounds. The creditor must provide a pound of bread a day for the maintenance of his debtor who could, moreover, live on his own means. The maximum period of his bondage was 60 days during which he was brought in 3 times before the praetor who publicly proclaimed his debt. After the third market day he could be put to death or sold beyond the Tiber, and if there were several creditors they might cut and divide amongst themselves the several portions of his body. The fourth table permitted parents to put to death their deformed children. They had the power of life or death over their legitimate children. The fifth table codifies the law of guardianship and inheritance. All women except the vestal virgins were always to remain under the guardianship of their agnates. The pater familias could will away his property in the absence of which the property devolved upon his sui heres failing which the agnate and the gentile succeeded. By the Praetorian edicts these terms were explained to mean as follows:—

(1) Sui heres—children and grand-children by son.

(2) Agnates—statutory heirs.

(3) Gentiles—cognates and husband and wife.

It will be noted that women were not excluded but brothers and sisters equally participated in their patrimony.

13. The system of joint family, yet an established institution of Hindu Law, was as has been already seen (§§ 1-4) an institution dictated by the necessity of all archaic societies, for it was the one condition of safety to be a member of an organized group. The family was such a group, and the history of the Roman Law commences with such a family. From a legal standpoint such a family consisted of a Head Ruler or patriarch called the pater familias, and the members who were absolutely subject to his despotic sway. His own sons had no rights in the family any more than the slaves attached to the household. They could possess no property of their own. All they acquired became his. He could flog or imprison them regardless of their position or age. He possessed the supreme power of life and death in the exercise of which he usually destroyed all the elder female children excepting only the eldest. As already remarked the primitive man preferred to steal his wives instead of rearing them (§ 4). This power of life and death continued until it was revoked by an edict of Constantine (318 A. D.) who also curtailed the power of sale, permitting only the poor to dispose of their new-born babes reserving to them, however, a right of redemption.

14. In this state of society the adoption or affiliation of children was a matter of course. In early times adoption was known as arrogatio and required the sanction of the Pontiff and the people in their comitia curiata, in accordance with the following formulæ addressed to the person about to be arrogated and to the people:—

To the person to be arrogated. “Do you formally agree that Lucius Titius shall have power over you, as over a son, the power of life and death?”

To the People. Is it your will, your order, Quirites, that Lucius Titius by right and statute a son as if by birth the child of Titius and his mater familias and that Titius should have over him the power of life and death?

Law prohibited the adoption of an only son, while the arrogator could not adopt unless he was married, childless and of sixty years of age, or if on account of illness or other reason there was a probability of his dying childless. In early law women could not be arrogated; but later on their adoption was sanctioned. A person of any age could be adopted. The arrogator might adopt one as his son, grandson, great-grandson, grand-daughter or great-granddaughter.

The old juridical character of adoption was to bring the adoptee within the potestas of the pater familias. Justinian permitted adoption but allowed the natural father to retain the potestas. He also simplified the procedure by allowing adoption to be completed by a declaration in writing made before a Magistrate. (1) At first women could not adopt as they had no potestas but Diocletian and Maximian relaxed this restriction in A. D. 29.

---

(1) Gaius, I—99. Just., 1-11-1.

Adoption could not be repeated. The adopted son succeeded to his father in case of intestacy.

15. The Greeks also practised adoption. But while the primary object of their adoption was to ensure that some one should make the proper sacrifices and offer the funeral cake, the underlying principle of a Roman adoption appears to have been to strengthen the family and to avoid its extinction by securing an heir.<sup>(1)</sup>

16. It will be thus seen that while both the Hellenic as well as the Roman Laws in their inception furnish many interesting and close analogies to Hindu Law, their early secularization and rapid development makes the relationship look like that of a child to a grown-up man. In regard to the law of inheritance however, the Roman and the Hindu systems retained close association for a longer period. But the point of divergence between them was also equally striking. Under Hindu Law the institution of the joint family has a peculiar significance. But the Roman joint family resembled more a Dayabhagh family than the one contemplated by the Mitakshara. The patria potestas excluded the law of co-parcenership. At the same time in both the systems inheritance is inextricably connected with the performance of obsequial rites. Both the Romans and the Greeks inherited the tradition of their forbears that life in some form persists after death and that the dead needed the same nourishment and comforts as the living. The performance of the obsequies was a concern of the State, as much as of the individual. For the disconsolate spirit not only inflicted the family but also the State as an abettor of the family, if it suffered it to do wrong. But the early secularization of Roman Law led to restrictions upon lavish expenditure on funerals and the tenth Table is directed towards the curtailment of all such expenditure. It restricted mourners to three and flute-players to not more than ten in numbers. "Women shall not tear their cheeks nor indulge in wailing." "No person shall have more than one funeral, or more than one bier." "Gold shall not be burned or buried with the dead, except such gold as the teeth have been fastened with." Both the Greeks and the Romans cremated their dead, as do the Aryan Hindus, but while burial supplanted cremation in the western countries till its modern revival, the twice-born Hindus now cremate their dead though like the Romans the Vedic Hindu both buried and cremated their dead and it appears that of the two, burial was more common.<sup>(2)</sup> But this means of disposal is now exclusively confined to the Shudras.

17. The one outstanding difference between the two branches of the Aryan family, migrated in opposite directions, is in their mental outlook on life. The one migrating to the East were meekly submissive to the usages which they continued to regard as records of divine wisdom, while the others threw the divine influence into the back ground, and secularized their laws which they modified with the growing earnestness of the age. Ethnologists have not adverted to this radical distinction which has produced such far reaching results.

18. It was a part of the education of the Roman youth to commit to memory the laws of the Twelve Tables. But though they long continued to enjoy this distinction they did not long remain the sole repositories of the existing law for within 500 years three thousand brass plates did not suffice to record the growing laws of the people which had to be supplemented by the Edicts of the Praetors. These were the supreme Judges of the City annually elected and upon ascending the tribunal it was their duty to announce by the voice of the crier the rules which they proposed to follow in softening the rigour of ancient statutes and in the decision of doubtful cases. These rules were then inscribed on a white wall. They are monuments of chicanery intended to circumvent the old statutes which could not be repealed but which could no longer be followed. "Subtilities and fictions were invented to defeat the plainest meaning of the decemvirs, and while the end was salutary, the means were frequently absurd."

(1) Cicero Pro Domo 13, 15 Dig. 1, 7, 15, 2.

(2) Cf. the funeral hymn in Rig. Veda, X—18.

19. Heirs who had been excluded under the archaic agnatic succession dictated by the sterner requirements of a ruder age could no longer be superseded. The indulgent Praetor admitted their claims on the assumption that it was the secret or probable wish of the deceased. Compensation was substituted for the absolute rigour of the Twelve Tables, and recourse was had to infancy or fraud to dissolve the ties of an unequal contract. This was the fountain head of the praetorian equity which in practice led to most scandalous abuses due to the individual vagary, prejudice or self-interest of the praetor. But as his office had to be vacated at the end of the year, his successor was free only to propound whatever he considered right and thus precedents became established which were cited before the tribunal as the reported cases are to-day. But nevertheless to minimize individual aberrations the Corucial Law (67 B. C.) made all the Praetors adhere to the letter and spirit of their first proclamation and in 131 A. D., the Praetor Salvius Julianus compiled the perpetual edict which was ratified by the Emperor and the Senate thereby fusing both law and equity in a well-digested code, which finally superseded the Twelve Tables. Still these laws continued to be supplemented or supplanted by the Rescripts or replies of the Judges on questions put to them on doubtful points, the epistles, orations and supplementary edicts, grants, decrees and pragmatic sanctions inscribed in purple ink by the Emperors and transmitted to the provinces as general or special laws for the magistrates to enforce and the people to obey. The cumulative volume of these was sought to be reduced to three codes, the Gregorian, the Hermogenian and the Theodosian Codes.

20. These three codes were supplemented by other laws and legal opinions which filled many thousand volumes which rendered the study of law beyond human capacity. In 528 A. D., the Emperor Justinian appointed a commission of ten lawyers headed by Tribonian to codify this mass of ill-digested legal learning which they did in fourteen months, compiling their Code in twelve books or tables. It received the royal assent and became the authorized Code of the Roman Empire. Notaries and scribes were employed to make copies which were sent out to the European, Asiatic, and African provinces where they were proclaimed and their authority published on solemn festivals from the door of churches.

21. On the completion of this Code in 530 A. D., Justinian appointed Tribonian and seventeen other lawyers to digest the two thousand treatises in which lay imbedded the forgotten wisdom of praetors and lawyers of a thousand years. Within three years (in 533 A. D.) this commission was able to reduce three millions of sentences to a hundred and fifty thousand. This became known as the Digest or Pandects and it likewise received his royal authority. Another legal work specially designed for students and called the Institutes was also ordered to be simultaneously prepared and it was got ready a month before the Digest.

22. Thus then the Codes, the Institutes and the Digest constituted the system of civil jurisprudence which alone were taught in the academies and admitted in the tribunals. They were supplemented by the new constitutions (novellae constitutiones) called the Novels from time to time which corresponded to the modern Amending and Repealing Acts.

23. "Greece and India, are, indeed, the two opposite poles in the historical development of the Aryan race. To the Greek, existence is full of life and reality; to the Hindu it is a dream, an illusion. While Gibbon sees the affinity between the Laws of Solon and those of the Twelve Tables comparing them to those of the Egyptians and Phœnicians and while he rightly discards as incredible the embassy suggested both by Livy and Dionysius to the Athens of Pericles to borrow her laws, he naturally fails to suggest the true explanation since discovered in the science of language of the common heritage of the three peoples. The Greek is at home where he is born; all his energies belong to his country; he stands and falls with his party, and is ready to sacrifice even his life to the glory and independence of Hellas. The Hindu enters this world as a stranger, all his thoughts are directed to another world; he takes no part even where he is driven to act; and when he sacrifices his life, it is but to be delivered from it." (1)

24. That climate had played an important part in shaping the destiny of these two peoples appears to be unquestionable. The ancestors of the western emigrants found themselves settled on rugged hills and the hardening influence of a colder climate and the growing congestion in cramped surroundings led to the overthrow of religious conventions which grew unchecked in the more spacious and fertile plains and enervating climate of the East. The one fell an easy prey to the toils of a wily priestcraft. The other shook off as early as the dawn of their authentic history their subtle and baneful authority. The religious rites and duties were, indeed, not altogether abolished, but they were clearly separated from the secular law and relegated to the domain of moral duties or to the care of the Pontifex Maximus. It was the duty of the latter to see that the family worship was perpetuated and the religious observances duly performed by the heir. But there was nevertheless a complete severance of his right as heir and his obligation to observe the rituals. This early divorce of law from religion furnishes the master-key to the comprehension of the two great systems, the oriental and the occidental jurisprudence. The one is but a fossil, an inert mass, a relic of a by-gone age applied to a people who have long since outgrown it, but as to whom it is perpetuated only by legislation; the other is a living organism full of life and vigour.

25. While the hierarchical rule of India is in no way comparable to the early institutions of Greece and Rome, it bears a favourable comparison with the rule of Egypt under the Ramses. There as in ancient India, the influence of the priests was paramount, with this difference, that while in India they continued the gilded litterateur of the land, in Egypt the priests who had monopolized most of the wealth of the country and established the temples at Heliopolis, Memphis and Thebes did not rest content till they had usurped the reins of Government. The High priest of Thebes, or as he styled himself "the first prophet of Amon" at first took precedence of all after the king who originally nominated him. But in the reign of Ramses III the high priest nominated his own son as successor and thenceforth the office became hereditary with the result that for some years the spiritual and the secular leader ruled the kingdom side by side. The king became luxurious and indolent and the high priest carried on the dual administration, when at last with the death of Ramses XIII in 1181 B. C., the twentieth dynasty became extinct and Her-Har the High priest of Anedu ascended the throne as the sole ruler of Thebes and Southern Egypt. The rule of the priests led to discontent and the eventual dismemberment of the kingdom. It had long been the custom to bury the wealthy Egyptians with ornaments and jewels, for the same reason as the dead in India, Greece, and Rome were cremated with their earthly paraphernalia. There was no caste system in Egypt and the high and low cultivated the fine arts with an assiduity which made Egypt the prized seat of ancient learning. Their tribal movements did not obscure them to the feeling of nationality. They maintained a national army but the predominating spirit was religious. The kings lavished large sums upon tombs, temples and monuments. The taxation was heavy and the people were subjected to forced labour, though they were allowed a mere subsistence.

26. The patriarchal system equally prevailed amongst the Hebrews whose original home was Egypt. Abraham the founder of their race had several wives and many sons. The latter migrated to the East and became progenitors of tribes who driven by recurring famine and want settled down in the Sinai peninsula where they established a pure monotheistic religion and a republican form of government. A written constitution was drawn up under which all tribes though in offensive and defensive alliance with one another were internally free and independent.

27. It is sometimes difficult if not impossible for those born and brought up in a modern state with its developed form of society and government to realize the condition of insecurity and constant struggles which heralded the dawn of civilization. The primitive man had not only to wage war with the forces of nature and brute creation, but also with his fellow-men whose savage instincts for spoil and strife rendered existence precarious and in the case of women and children, impossible. The gregarious instincts which man inherited from his brute progenitors first asserted themselves in the formation of alliances and aided by the self-same instinct of parental protection and control, family groups were naturally formed in which the wives, sons, and slaves came under the sway of the adult men of whom the eldest, usually the father, became soon recognized as the headman and leader. His authority was supreme and all things came under his sway. The idea of property was then in its embryo. No distinction was made between his dependants and his belongings. All were alike his property. The virile ruled the weak. As women and sons were weak and defenceless he afforded them protection in return for their services which he commanded without any restraint of social conventions. For social conventions were of slow growth and could not influence his action till their utility was demonstrated by experience and acknowledged by tradition. But since the first requirement of the patriarchal age was the accession of adult men, they were seized and sold, appropriated and employed at the sweet will of the patriarch.

28. This condition continued for long ages and when the Hindu Smritis were written it was the prevailing practice. Wives, sons and slaves fell into the general category of this property and could own no property of their own. Accordingly Manu says : " A wife, a son, and a slave are devoid of property ; whatever they acquire become his whose they are." (1) Even when some order was established their position of positive dependence continued undisturbed and the courts were disinclined to interfere with the paternal control which had led to the establishment of peace. So in a Smriti cited in the Mitakshara, it is said : " Even when there is a cause of dispute between preceptor and pupil, between husband and wife, between father and son, between master and slave, no action is maintainable." The infusion of religious ideas into the fabric of society merely gave to it a new reason and an added solemnity. The wife became even more dependent upon her husband who continued to be her Swami or master. The father was free to sell his children and as such he sold his daughters in bondage or marriage. The Asur form of marriage was thus the precursor of the Brahma form in which the daughter was to be gifted to the bridegroom. But in either case it was a transfer, whether by sale or by gift—and little distinguishable from the transfer of a chattel such as a goat or a cow. The patria potestas was transferred by marriage to the husband. She still continued a chattel and as the husband was himself a dependent in the family of his father his acquisition of her was an acquisition of, and for, the family who could use her for her primary purpose of procreation. This enabled them to use her independently of her own volition which did not count ; for she was foredoomed to life-long dependence upon her husband and his relations. "The younger brother of the husband, a sapinda, or a sagotra, being anointed with clarified butter, and with the permission of the Guru, may go to a sonless widow, when in season, with the desire of raising a son." (2) If the wife is withdrawn after marriage the delinquent is punishable for theft (3) and the punishment of a thief is that his head be cut off. (4) This was the stage of development when the earlier Smritikars ending with Yadnyavalkya described the status of women.

29. This property in women, sons and slaves was no peculiar feature of the Hindu system for it is equally shared by the ancient Greeks and Romans who sold or lent their wives to their friends either for pleasure or procreation. So Plutarch describing the life of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver wrote : "He laughed at those who revenge with wars and bloodshed the communications of a married woman's favours ; and allowed, that if a man in years should have a young wife, he might introduce to her some handsome and honest young man, whom he most approved of, and when she had a child of this generous race, bring it up as his own. On the other hand, he allowed that if a man of character should entertain a passion for a married woman on account of her modesty and the beauty of her children, he might treat with her husband for admission to her company, that so planting in her beauty bearing soil, he might produce excellent children, the congenial offspring of excellent parents." (5) Lycurgus justifies this regulation on the ground that children were not so much the property of their parents as of the state which

(1) VIII-416.

(2) Yad. I-68.

(3) Yad. III, 68, Narad XII-80, 81, See § 29 post.

(4) Narad, XII. 82.

(5) Plutarch's Lives—Lycurgus (Ward Lock), p. 86.

was interested in seeing that they were begotten by the best men in it. The regulation was held to have had the most salutary effect upon the morals of the women themselves. The privilege of lending and receiving a wife was esteemed a high privilege of the Spartan citizen and its forfeiture was deemed a condign punishment reserved for serious delinquencies. The lending of wives to friends was regarded as one mark of favour in Athens, and Socrates is said to have lent his wife Xantippe to his young disciple and friend Alcibiades. That the wife was friendship's offering is illustrated in the life of Cato the younger. When he married his second wife Martia after divorcing Atilia, his friend Quintus Hortensius "a man of great dignity and politeness" requested Cato to lend him his married daughter Portia for the purpose of propogation. "Cato answered that he had the greatest regard for the friendship of Hortensius, but he could not think of his application for another man's wife," whereupon Hortensius requested him to lend him his own wife which Cato did not only lend but presented to his friend with the consent of the lady's father. <sup>(1)</sup>

30. The Athenian Law permitted divorce but required that the wife should appear in person to present her bill before the Archon when the husband was free to seize her person and carry her off if he was so minded. <sup>(2)</sup> Both in the ancient Hellenic and Roman Republican days, women lived in seclusion, married early and when their husbands became old young men were welcome to improve the breed. Lycurgus argued that when men took care to improve the breed of dogs and cattle why should they not take the trouble to improve their own race. He ridiculed the vanity and absurdity of other nations where people study to have their horses and dogs of the finest breed they can procure either by interest or money; and yet keep their wives shut up that they may have children by none but themselves, though they may be doting, decrepit or infirm. <sup>(3)</sup> This was the prevailing view of the classic age shared alike by the Egyptians, Persians, Assyrians and the Babylonians and it was the underlying current of the Indo-Aryan thought.

The second stage marks some improvement in her status, but her dependence still continues. She is still a chattel in her husband's home. Her sole purpose is still to breed sons to strengthen her husband's household.

31. Marriage under Hindu Law is a sacrament. So was the marriage of the Romans who denoted the communion of the married life by the necessary elements of fire and water, and the divorced wife resigned the bunch of keys by the delivery of which she had been invested with the government of the family.

Polygamy was from the earliest time prohibited both in Greece and Rome <sup>(4)</sup> but concubinage was common and customary in both countries and from the age of Augustus to the tenth century it was regarded as a secondary marriage, as real marriage was only permissible between free citizens and the concubines were ordinarily drawn from the plebian or servile stock; but nevertheless the humble virtues of a concubine were often preferred to the pomp and insolence of a noble matron. The children of such unions were classed as natural offspring of concubinage as distinguished from the spurious breed of adultery, prostitution and incest. Justinian allowed the former

(1) Plutarch's Lives—Cato the younger
(Ward Lock) pp. 588, 539.

(2) Ib. Alcibiades, p. 144.

(3) Ib. Lycurgus, p. 85

(4) 2 Gulab, XLIV.

one-sixth of their reputed father's inheritance while he reluctantly allowed the latter a bare maintenance. He also made provision for adopting without reproach the out-castes of every family as the children of the State.

32. Ancient law contains no prohibition against incestuous marriages. Abraham had espoused his own daughter, while in Egypt the marriage of uterine brothers and sisters was admitted as a customary and even a favoured alliance. As such Cleopatra had to marry her younger brother though it led to endless misery. The Spartan might espouse the daughter of his father, an Athenian that of his mother, and the nuptials of an uncle with his niece were applauded at Athens as a happy union of the dearest relations. But the Roman lawyers prohibited these incestuous alliances and laid down the rules of prohibited degree for marriage. And later jurisprudence has more or less copied those restrictions. Under Hindu Law the prohibited degree has been extended much further beyond the Roman Law. The relation of guardian and ward, or to quote the Roman words, of tutor and pupil, occupies an important place both in the Institutes and the Pandects.

33. Roman Law condemned females to the perpetual tutelage of their parents, husbands or guardians; a sex created to please and obey was never supposed to have attained the age of reason and experience. This is her place in Hindu Law. For says Manu, "In childhood must a female be dependent on her father; in youth, on her husband; her lord being dead, on her sons; if she have no sons, on the next kinsmen of her husband; if he left no kinsmen, on those of her father; if she have no paternal kinsmen, on the sovereign; a woman must never seek independence." (1) "Day and night must women be held by their protectors in a state of dependence; but in lawful and innocent recreations, though rather addicted to them, they may be left at their own disposal." (2) "Their fathers protect them in childhood; their husbands protect them in youth; their sons protect them in age; a woman is never fit for independence." (3) As regards males Roman Law placed all youths up to their fourteenth year in charge of their tutors and afterwards up to the twenty-fifth year in charge of a curator. The tutor held a public office. Without his consent no act of the pupil could bind him to his own prejudice though it might oblige others for his personal benefit.

34. Under the laws of Rome both the son, natural or adopted, and the wife, were classed not as a person but as a thing in the family of the pater familias over whom the latter exercised absolute jurisdiction of life and death. If the wife was seduced by another, the action maintainable against the seducer was not that for adultery but one for theft. As both the son and the daughter occupied the position of a chattel they could not marry without their parents' consent. But a Roman marriage differed from a Hindu marriage in that the contracting parties in the one case were the husband and wife, while the husband and wife play no part at all in a Hindu marriage which is arranged for them by their parents.

35. Marriage in ancient Rome was a sacrament, called confarreatio, in which the wedded pair partook of a salt cake of far or rice to symbolize the union of their minds and bodies. But such a union could be put an end to by the husband though not by the wife. Her barrenness was a sufficient cause for divorce but public opinion soon rallied to the support of the wife who was entitled to divorce her husband as freely as she was liable to be divorced in her own turn by the husband. This new found liberty the Roman wife enjoyed to her fill and Juvenal and the other poets satirize the matron who in five years could submit to the embraces of eight husbands. (1) This was the logical result of the freedom of marital contract the end of which horrified the lawyers, who could not have foreseen it. In Rome marriage commenced as a sacrament. It ended as a loose and voluntary contract which could be put an end to at the will of either party. This was its state till the advent of Christianity when its dignity was once more restored and its original validity and duties prescribed by the precepts of the Gospel, the tradition of the synagogue and the canons of the general or the provincial synods.

(1) V-148.
(2) IX-2

(3) IX-8.

36. As in ancient and modern India so in ancient Greece and Rome early marriage was customary. Numa (715-672 B. C.) fixed the age of the wife at 12 so that the husband might educate to his will a pure and obedient virgin. This had also been the practice in Greece till Lycurgus (884 B. C.) raised the age to insure a robust progeny. According to the custom of antiquity which still survives in the ceremonies of a Hindu marriage, the husband purchased his bride of her parents and she fulfilled the co-emption by purchasing with three copper pieces a just introduction to his house and household deities. The pontiff who performed the marriage seated the bridal pair on the same sheep skin and then offered a sacrifice of fruits offering to the pair a salt cake of far or rice, called confarreation which was the food of ancient Italy and which served as an emblem of the nuptial union of their mind and body.

37. In Greece which lived for the worship of Beauty marriage never assumed the same dignity. Before the reforming zeal of Lycurgus, early marriages of girls even when not older than 14 were customary and in Sparta all marriageable girls used to assemble in a dark room sparsely attired on stated occasions which the boys entered and selected for their wives from amongst them such as they could lay hold of. Girls used also to appear naked on certain days of festivity and wrestle in a public assembly promiscuously with boys of equal age with themselves. Lycurgus raised the marriageable age and permitted mothers to destroy their feeble and deformed offspring.

38. Greek custom allowed of marriage between half brothers and half-sisters when not descended from the same mother. Their position was subordinate. They never mixed with men except on days of festivals and religious celebrations. The women lived in a separate part of the house situated in the upper story at the back and no men except the nearest relations were allowed to enter it. Except in Sparta they could acquire no property.

39. Unnatural vice infected all ancient society and it grew with the increase of wealth. Marriages became unpopular so much so that in 131 B. C. the censor Metellus urged marriages as a patriotic necessity. The position of a married woman among the Romans compared favourably with her position in Greece. In both countries she was no doubt subordinate to her husband, but while in Greece the wife looked after and performed other menial offices, in Rome the wife was the mistress (domina) of her household. In Greece the women lived in seclusion and appeared only veiled in public. In Rome the wife appeared at religious services, at meals, in the theatres and even in the courts.

Women's position compared.

40. In both countries while polygamy was prohibited, concubinage took its place and the offspring of such an alliance were not treated as illegitimate. As compared to this, the Hindu wife occupies by no means an unfavourable position. With her, marriage is a lottery as it was with the ancient Greeks. But the position of a Hindu wife in the household is more that of the domina than that of a dependent. She is entitled to own and hold separate property. She succeeds to the separate estate of her husband in the absence of male issue though her right is restricted to the enjoyment of the estate without impairing it except in the case of legal necessity. But with all this although the position of her western sister has immeasurably improved in recent years the status and lot of the Hindu wife have remained unaltered for over 3,000 years.

41. The laws of a people are the best index of their character. The ancient Romans were neither benevolent nor generous but they were strictly honest and cheerfully discharged their most onerous obligations. In this respect they differed from the Greeks who were astounded at the simplicity of the Romans adhering to their contracts from which they saw an easy escape. But in later years wealth and prosperity had the effect of entirely converting their national character. The Romans became immoral, corrupt and lazy, preferring the dialects of the conquered countries to their own. The Greeks and the Romans with most other ancient nations, were addicted to unnatural vice which grew with the growth of prosperity and power. (1)

The History of Hindu Law falls into three epochs (i) the first from the earliest time down to the writing of Mitakshara (1300 B. C., 1150 A. D.), (ii) the second from the Mitakshara to the establishment of British rule (1150 A. D.—1772 A. D.), (iii) and the third from that date onwards which marks its modern development by the British Courts.

II

42. As the four Vedas are regarded by the Hindus as the main repository of all their laws, sacred and secular, a brief reference to them is necessary in order to assign them their proper place in the legal literature which is ever growing and changing with the progress and altered condition of society.

43. All Hindu sacred literature is divided into two main groups—the Sruti and the Smriti, the former being synonymous with the Vedas; while the latter comprises most of the early post-vedic literature which has by its antiquity acquired the halo of sacredness. The words Sruti (which means heard) and Smriti (which means remembered) though now used as conveying a secondary meaning really point to a time when writing was unknown, and the sacred lore had to be memorized to be preserved for posterity. The Sruti matter was embodied in set forms of language, mostly in metre, so that the words could be recited and sung. The Vedas have become so known because of their antiquity when literature was scanty and the Aryan could devote more time to memorize the very words, instead of only the substance and purport which he commenced to do as soon as his memory became loaded with the fast accumulating traditions of custom and conduct, which knit together the ancient Aryas in spite of their scattered settlements and lengthening distances. These were the Smritis which represented the substance though not the text of the compiler.

---

(1) Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Ch. 45; (Virtue's Ed.). Vol II, pp. 128, 129.

44. All laws of the Hindus are nominally traceable to the Vedas which are the only records of direct revelation. <sup>(1)</sup> Originally there was only one Veda—the Rig Veda ; but later on it put forth other sakhhas or offshoots due to differences in ceremonial observances and readings of the original unwritten Veda after the introduction of writing, and the three main branches became known as (1) the Rig Veda Sanhita, containing now 1,017 verses, (2) Yajur Veda Sanhita, (3) Sama Veda Sanhita, to which was subsequently added, (4) the Atharva Veda. These main branches put forth other offshoots which were designated either Sakhhas or charanas, each in turn giving rise to a collection of its hymns, tradition and precepts as understood by the schools, which have come down to us as the Dharma Shastras ascribed either to some god, or sage, or a princely patron, or to the school of which it was the approved manual. The Vedas contain a collection of hymns in two parts, one teaching the sacrifice, the other teaching the Supreme being or Brahma. The latter portion is called the Upanishad, and appears to have been added after the ceremonial section later on. As there are three branches of the ceremonial, the Veda is, for the better performance of the sacrifices divided into three : the Rig Veda, Yajur Veda, and Sama Veda which were really the records of ceremonies as performed by three priestly families, namely, Hotri, Adhvaryu and the Udgatri. The Atharva Veda is not used for solemn sacrifices and is very different from the others, as it teaches only expiatory, preservative, or imprecatory rites.

45. Rig Veda is the oldest Veda and judging from its allusions to scenery near Ambala, it is said to have been compiled there. Professor Max Muller computes its age to be above 1200 B.C. It is a compilation which manifests differences of thought, style and poetical ability, though hardly any difference of dialect. It is divided into ten books of which the general character is not identical. "Six of them <sup>(2)</sup> are homogenous. Each of these, in the first place, is the work of a different seer or his descendants according to the ancient tradition, which is borne out by internal evidence. They were doubtless long handed down separately in the families to which they owed their being. Moreover, the hymns contained in these 'family books', as they are usually called are arranged on a uniform plan differing from that of the rest. The first, eighth and tenth books are not the production of a single family of seers respectively, but consist of a number of groups based on the identity of authorship. The arrangement of the ninth book is in no way connected with its composers ; its unity is due to all the hymns being addressed to the single deity Soma, while its groups depend on the identity of metre. The family books also contain groups, but each of these is formed of hymns addressed to one and the same deity."<sup>(3)</sup> The Rig Veda contains 1,028 hymns which equal the surviving poems of Homer. The tenth book <sup>(4)</sup> is distinctly a later addition. The rest were compiled or collected during a period extending over some centuries.

46. The Yajur Veda as its name implied is a book of sacrificial prayers (Yajus). It comprises verses borrowed from the Rig Veda to which are added original prose formulæ. It is sub-divided into two parts, <sup>(5)</sup> the black (Krishna) in which the text is accompanied by explanatory commentary and the white (Sukla or

(1) Consequently they alone constitute the Śruti (or what was directly heard i.e., revelation), as distinguished from the Smṛiti (or what was remembered i.e., tradition.) Even the Vedic Sūtras belong to the latter class—Max Muller's A. S. Lit.—49

(2) Books II to VII

(3) MacDonnell, S. L. 41.

(4) Each book is called the Mandal or cycle.

(5) MacDonnell, S. L. 180, 181.

clear) which contains only the hymns to be recited at the sacrifices without any explanatory matter which is relegated to the Brahmanas. It is a later recension than the back Yajur Veda on whose confused arrangement it is a distinct improvement. Internal evidence discloses that at the time of its compilation the Aryan settlement had extended further east to what is now the modern district of Sirhind. This Veda was the prolific source of new schools into which its adherents split up and which were widely diffused in India. The Kathas and Kalpas were two of its best known schools whose doctrines according to the grammarian Panini were proclaimed in every village. Those schools were highly honoured in Ajudhia (Oudh) itself till they were superseded by the two younger schools—the Taittriyas to be found only south of the Nerbudda and the Hiranyakesins to be found still further south. The Apastambas are a new offshoot of the Taittriyas to be found in the Godavari region; while the school of Vajasaneyas having spread towards the south-east down the Gangetic Valley are now to be found in the North-east and Central India.

47. "The Yajur Veda resembles the Sama Veda in having been compiled for application to sacrificial rites only. But while the Sama Veda deals solely with one part of the ritual, the Sama sacrifice, the Yajur supplies the formulas for the whole sacrificial ceremonial. Like the Sama Veda, it is also connected with the Rig Veda, but while the former is practically altogether extracted from the Rig Veda, the Yajur Veda though it borrowed many of its verses from the same source is largely an original production." (1) This Veda marks a new epoch in the social evolution of the Aryan people. "The relative importance of the gods and of the sacrifice in the older religion has now become inverted. For while the Rig Veda places the gods above all sacrifices, the Yajur Veda places sacrifices above the gods. In the one the gods are omnipotent; in the other the sacrifice is all in all. It compels the gods to obey the officiating priest who holds them in the hollow of his hand. This Veda represents the cult of symbolism in which the form and the formula, the rites and the ritual, are held to control all the forces of nature, can secure victory and obtain rain."

48. The Yajur represents an age when the office of the priest which was previously purely personal had become hereditary and when not only the system of caste had become firmly established but its many sub-divisions had become well recognized. It marks a distinct advance in the enslavement of the people in the net work of caste and canonical ceremonies.

49. As previously remarked (§ 44) the Sama Veda has no independent value, as it consists entirely of stanzas (except only 75) taken mainly from the eighth and ninth books of the Rig Veda and arranged solely with reference to their place in the Soma sacrifice. This sacrifice goes back to the Indo-Iranian age. Its hymns were chanted by the special class of Udgatri priests who performed these sacrifices. It contains 1,549 stanzas divided into two books called Archikas or collection of rikh verses.

The Samavedis founded two schools—the Kauthumas and the Ranayaniyas—the one still exists in Guzerat and the other in Eastern Hyderabad.

50. The Atharva Veda is the latest of the four Vedas and has attained to that position after a long struggle. It is a heterogeneous collection of spells, incantations, and witchcraft derived from an immemorial antiquity. As the Rig Veda deals with the higher gods so the Atharv is almost exclusively devoted to the demons and the lower grades of the spirit world. It teems with, charms and cures <sup>(1)</sup> against diseases <sup>(2)</sup> death, noxious animals, demons wizards, foes and oppressors of Brahmins, though it also contains many spells to secure harmony in family and village life, the reconciliation of enemies health, long life and prosperity, besides prayers for a safe journey and for luck in gambling which was the favourite pastime of the Aryan settlers. "In its main contents the Atharva Veda is more superstitious than the Rig Veda. For it does not represent the more advanced religious beliefs of the priestly class, but is a collection of the most popular spells current among the masses, who always preserve more primitive notions with regard to demoniac powers. The spirit which breathes in it is that of a prehistoric age. A few of the actual charms date with little modification from the Indo-European period, for as Adalbert Kuhn has shown, some of its spells for curing bodily ailments agree in purpose and content, as well as to some extent even in form, with certain old German, Latic, and Russian charms. But with regard to the higher religious ideas relating to the gods, it represents a more recent and advanced stage than the Rig Veda. It contains, indeed, more theosophic matter than any of the other samhitas. For the history of civilization it is on the whole more interesting and important than the Rig Veda itself." <sup>(3)</sup> But the lawyers of the day condemned this Veda as calculated to compass harm to the enemy by its sorcery. Its practices were consequently pronounced impure and on that account the Veda itself was regarded as inferior to the other Vedas. Such was the view of Apastamb <sup>(4)</sup> and Vishnu <sup>(5)</sup> though many others thought it as a powerful weapon of the Brahmins against their enemies. <sup>(6)</sup>

The Atharv Veda is really a cyclopædia of medicine and charms, though blended with it are a miscellaneous collection of the then current folklore assiduously collected, to which are added the Brahmanas and the Upanishads, breathing perhaps the loftiest sentiments to be found in all the Vedas. <sup>(7)</sup>

51. No description of the Vedas would be complete without a passing reference to two supplementary treatises appended to them—the Brahmanas <sup>(8)</sup> and the Upanishads. <sup>(9)</sup> The former are ritual text-books explanatory in prose of sacrificial ceremonies, while the latter are philosophical

Brahmanas, and Upanishads.

dissertations intended for a post-graduate course of select pupils at the end of their ordinary term of apprenticeship. The first was intended to make the pupil an intelligent priest, the second a thoughtful one. These latter are known as the vedanta <sup>(10)</sup>, i.e., those learnt at the end of the Vedas. As the Brahmanas taught the ritual, so the Upanishads taught the dogma—the doctrines as to the nature of the Atma or Brahma, the supreme soul. Both these appendices are later additions made about 800-500 B. C. They are more interesting to the student of ethnology and metaphysics than to the student of law. Of these Yadnyavalkya is the hero of the most important Brahmana called the Satapatha Brahmanas or the "Brahmanas of the

(1) The charms are accompanied by the use of appropriate herbs.

(2) Such as fever, leprosy, jaundice, dropsy, scrofula, cough, opthalmia, impotency, fractures and wounds, snake-bite and the bites of other insects and the effect of poison, mania and other ailments.

(8) MacDonnell, S. L. pp. 185, 186.

(4) II.11.29; 2 S. B. E., p. 169.

(5) VIII.8; XXXI.7; LV.10.

(6) MacDonnell, S. L. p. 186

(7) Cf. eg. IV.16—the hymn to Varuna.

(8) Literally "priestly ceremonies."

(9) Literally Skt. upa near, nishad to sit—sitting down beside," i.e., confidential session. Secret or esoteric doctrine.

(10) Vēda-anta "end of the Vedas."

hundred paths" so called because it comprises one hundred lectures delivered somewhere in Ajudhia. The key-note of the Upanishads is pantheism. The part of the Veda more interesting to the lawyer is that which contains the Dharma Sūtras which deal with the customs of every-day life. Three such Sūtras attached to the Taittiriya division of the Black Yajur Veda are extant. Of these the most important are the Sūtras of the Apasthambas to be presently considered. (§§ 88-90) Next in importance is the Dharma Sūtra of Baudhayana (§§ 92-101) which appears to be earlier than the Apasthambas. The third such sūtra of Hiranyakesin is a branch of the Apasthamba and represented the doctrine of Hiranyakeshin's school founded in the Konkan country on the south-west near Goa in about 500 A.D.

52. The Sūtras or legal aphorisms of Gautam (500 B. C.) and Vashisth also claim a vedic connection. Of these the former is composed in prose while the latter is not available to the student. A bald manuscript text without the explanatory commentary is stated to be extant to preserve the views of the Northern India schools. It is composed partly in prose and partly in verse, and has been translated in "The Sacred Books of the East." (1)

53. From their very nature the Vedas cannot be expected to contain any legal precept, nor in fact do they contain any. They may, therefore, be dismissed from consideration. But the following ethnological facts deducible from them are interesting to the lawyer presenting as they do a vivid portrait of ancient manners which constituted the then laws, regulated the lives of the people and which are the parent of all laws of the present day.

54. An examination of the four Vedas brings to light the following facts.

Vedic Society.

The oldest of them all, the Rig Veda, was composed when the Aryan immigrants had settled down in the Punjab and had reached as far south as Ambala. They were struggling for mastery of the Gangetic plain which they obtained by the time the Atharv Veda was composed. It mentions the Provinces of Magadh (Behar) and the Angas (Bengal). The Rig Veda mentions "the five tribes" which though in political alliance with one another did not always preserve their amity. The tribe was the political unit scattered over a number of settlements comprising an aggregate of villages and ruled by a king, who was ordinarily hereditary, though occasionally elected by the districts of the tribe. There were no taxes, the king being maintained by voluntary offerings by his people. The basis of Vedic society was the patriarchal family. The Indian patriarch (Grihapati) wielded the same power over his family as did the patriarch in Rome. His power was strictly limited by the will of the people expressed in the tribal assembly (Samiti). As such he possessed no greater power than the pre-republican Roman King.

55. The social life reflected in the Vedas is closely analogous to the contemporary life of the western settlers. The patriarchal family was well established. The father possessed the right to sell or kill his sons. The price of a son was a hundred cows. Adoption was legal. So Viswamitra had adopted Ajigarta who had left his home owing to parental cruelty. He adopted other sons as well. Polygamy was practised then as now. Viswamitra had a hundred sons. Education was confined to the Aryas who afterwards comprised the three higher castes. Women were left in ignorance. The practice of Sati was common and extolled as the highway to heaven. (2) The education was purely religious. The Aryans were harassed by the Dasyas who stole their cattle and plundered their grain. They even stole their women. Life was otherwise simple and uneventful. The Arya was religious first and religious last. His government was a theocracy. Consequently, his leisure and spare wealth were spent in elaborate sacrifices, some of them lasting a whole year. Cattle were killed in sacrifice and their flesh eaten. There are traces of the practice of Niyog which was common to all ancient Aryan races.

(1) Vol. XIV.

(2) Rig Veda cited in I. Cole. Mis. Essays, p. 116.

56. The earlier Vedas contain no reference to any caste. They only refer to the Aryas and the Dasyas, the former being the Aryan immigrants and the latter the aboriginal natives of the country. The latter are also at times described as Shudras. The Vedas were composed when the Brahmanical ascendancy over the people had not only become established in India (1) but when his lust for pelf and political power had also been gratified. So it is stated in the Rig Veda : " Breath does not leave him before time, he lives to an old age ; he goes to his full time, and does not die again, who has a Brahmin as guardian of his land, as Purohit. He conquers power by power ; obtains strength by strength the people obey him, peaceful and of one mind. " (2) " Unopposed he conquers treasures, those of his enemies and his friends, himself a king, who makes presents to a Brahmin ; the gods protect him. " They had already obtained precedence over the Kshatriya kings : " The king before whom there walks a priest, lives well-established in his own house ; to him the earth yields for ever, and before him the people bow of their own accord. " (3) There is a whole class of hymns in praise of gifts (called Dan stuti) received from princely patrons.

57. The gods of the Vedic pantheon were the Varun, (Rain) (4), Agni (fire) (5), Indra who " is greater than all " (6) Soma the king of the world (7), Mitra (8), Aryaman (9) and the other forces of nature ; but above them all stood the Supreme God whom the Vedic sage invokes as " my father. " " That One breathed breathless by itself ; other than it nothing since has been ". " That One breathed and lived, it enjoyed more than mere existence ; yet its life was not dependent on anything else, as our life depends on the air which we breathe. It breathed breathless ". " They call Him Indra, Mitra, Varun, Agni ; then He is the well-winged heavenly Garutmat ; that which is One the wise call it in many ways ; they call it Agni, Varun, Matarisvan ". (10) As Max Muller observed : " Even in the invocation of their innumerable gods the remembrance of a God, one and infinite, breaks through the mist of an idolatrous phraseology, like the blue sky that is hidden by passing clouds ". (11) " Language blushes at such expressions, but her blush is a blush of triumph. " (12)

58. The code of Manu is the first and foremost repository of Hindu Law. It is not a work of any single author, but rather a compilation used as a text book of the school of Manavas held in high reverence from all time. Even the Veda declared that " whatever Manu pronounced was a medicine for the soul. " From the fact that many passages are quoted by later writers from what is called Vrihat (or great) Manu and Vrida (or old) Manu it is surmised that

(1) Max Muller's, A. S. L. it. 242.

(2) Rig. Veda, IV. 50.7.

(3) Ib.

(4) Ib II 2710.

(5) Ib II.19

(6) Ib X.86.

(7) Ib IX.59.

(8) Ib I.162.

(9) Ib

(10) Ib VI.164, 46.

(11) A. S. L. 288

(12) Ib 289,

the code now extant is only one of the many, probably successive, redactions. The laws of Manu reflect the customs and practices of the society then extant but which have long since become obsolete, though technically the work still remains a standard authority upon the unchangeable laws of the Hindus. They show the fast grip of the sacerdotal influence upon the community. The four castes had already become well established but they had not as yet crystallized into their latter rigour. For instance, while a Brahmin is recommended to take for his first wife a woman of his caste <sup>(1)</sup> for subsequent marriages he is permitted to marry of the next lower twice-born order <sup>(2)</sup>; but the marriage of a twice-born with a Sudra woman is strongly reprobated, but should such marriage take place then the progeny is degraded to the status of Shudra, <sup>(3)</sup> while the marriage itself is denounced as an inexpressible sin, <sup>(4)</sup> which suggests that such alliances were becoming so common as to menace the purity of the Aryan race. But many probably knew that no amount of denunciation could effectively restrain the strongest of human passions in a community where female infanticide was in vogue, and there was no other means of adjusting the balance between the two sexes; and it is safe to suspect that such misalliances continued despite the sacerdotal sermon. As between the twice-born the term marriage was used in its loosest sense comprehending as it did "the reciprocal connection of a youth and a damsel with mutual desire" which is denominated Gandharv <sup>(5)</sup> "while the seizure of a maiden by force from her house, while she weeps and calls for assistance after her kinsmen and friends have been slain in battle, or wounded, and their houses broken open, is the marriage styled Rakshas. <sup>(6)</sup> After this who would doubt the legality of the rape of the Sabine women? Even "when the lover secretly embraces the damsel either sleeping or flushed with strong liquor, or disordered in her intellect, there results that most sinful marriage called Pishach which is the eighth and the basest." <sup>(7)</sup> But it is nevertheless a marriage.

59. Manu describes these eight kinds of marriages; but of these he regards Marriages in Manu's the first four as approved in the case of Brahmins. <sup>(8)</sup> The time rest he reprobates. These are:—

Approved marriages.

1. Brahma
2. Daiva
3. Arsha
4. Prajapatya

Disapproved marriages.

5. Asur
6. Gandharv
7. Rakshas
8. Paishach

60. In short, the first four are godly, the last four, demoniac. There was a difference of opinion whether the fifth should go into the first class or be relegated to the second, and Manu cuts the gordian knot by holding it legal or not according to the caste of the husband. The difference between the first four lay in the price paid for the bride. The first two were marriages without consideration; the third and the rest were less meritorious, because they were marriages for a price or were otherwise non-consensual.

61. Wives in Manu's age enjoined considerable liberty. The marriage itself was not a mere contract but a sacrament. <sup>(9)</sup> To the wife is assigned the duty of the hostess. <sup>(10)</sup> A man is recommended to consult his guide before

(1) Manu. Ch III v 12.
 (2) Ch III v. 12.
 (3) Ib. v. 15
 (4) Ib. v. 19.
 (5) Ch. III v. 32,

(6) Ib. v 33.
 (7) Ch III v. 34.
 (8) Ib v 24
 (9) Ib v. 18
 (10) Ib. v. 4

marriage. (1) All men are enjoined to honour women : "Where females are honoured, there the deities are pleased ; but where they are dishonoured, there all religious acts become fruitless." (2) The married man is to dispense hospitality with a lavish hand—an injunction which is to this day obeyed and is one of the sweetest phases of the Hindu religion.

62. Manu disapproves of widow marriages (3) likening it to a "practice fit only for cattle," (4) but he allows the deceased husband's brother to espouse his virgin widow. (5)

Child marriages appear to be common ; girls below 8 are mentioned as possible brides, (6) and the following verse is suspiciously suggestive of the union of December and May. "A man aged thirty years, may marry a girl of twelve, if he finds one dear to his heart ; or a man of 24 years a damsel of 8 ; but if he finish studentship earlier, and the duties of his next order would otherwise be impeded let him marry immediately."

63. Manu and the later text writers do not regard marriage as an end in any sense, but only as a means to the sole end of securing the male issue to pull the begetter out of the torments of hell. (7) Consequently, as Manu treats every alliance between a man and a woman as marriage, he regards the son anyhow procreated, whether by the procreator or not, as a legitimate son. He classifies the following twelve as sons (1) son by married wife of the same caste, (2) son by married wife of a lower caste than the husband, (3) by a wife two or more degrees lower, (4) by twice-born who have not assumed the sacred thread, (5) by a wife who had conceived and delivered of a son before her marriage, (6) son purchased, (7) son of an appointed daughter, (8) son of an impotent or ailing husband born of his wife by another with his permission (a case of Levirate or Niyog), (9) son of a woman pregnant with or without the knowledge of the bridegroom, (10) adopted son—the latter being of the same caste as the adopter, (11) any boy deserted by his parents and received as such by the putative father, (12) son of a remarried woman.

64. Of these twelve the Hindu had brought with him the practice of Niyog and adoption from his ancestral Aryan home. The practice of Levirate or Niyog and arrogation or adoption was quite established in Greece and Rome. If it fell into disuse it was because of the early establishment of settled Governments and the absence of caste which soon restored the equilibrium of sexes so seriously deficient in the case of oriental settlers, in whose case the necessity of combined and corporate existence continued down to very recent times and in whose case the interwelding of law with religion with the attendant horrors of hell presented to the sonless man, created a thirst which could only be gratified by begging, borrowing or stealing a son. The practice of early marriage was probably also traceable to the same source. And the little scrutiny exercised in obtaining a son appears to have been due to their great scarcity and the high prices claimed for obtaining them.

65. The slaughter of cattle bulls, buffaloes, cows and horses for food or sacrifice was permissible even to Brahmins (8) while the Aswamedh or horse

(1) Manu. Ch. III 56 c.f. v., 55, 62.

(2) III-56.

(3) IX-65, 68

(4) IX-65.

(5) IX-59.

(6) IX 88

(7) IX-188.

(8) V 22.

sacrifice is spoken of as specially meritorious (1) ; and a human sacrifice was not unknown. But Manu is not consistent with himself. In some places he condemns flesh-eating altogether ; (2) in another place he exalts both the beef-eaters as well as the slaughtered cattle to the summit of beatitude ; (3) but probably the latter verses were penned after a delicious dish off a fatted calf.

66. The age of Manu was the age of pastoral life. All the goods and chattels that the Aryan had, consisted of cattle, goat and sheep.

67. These records of contemporary customs fell into desuetude in later times. In the western countries where they had received legislative authority that authority revised and repealed such customs according to the force of altered public opinion, but in India the laws had been placed above the reach of secular authority, and the secular authority was in the hands of the priest for their interpretation. The rest of the proletariat never rose above their rustic occupation. They continued to remain uneducated and untrained in public affairs. In Rome, even in the days of the pre-Republican kings, their authority was defined to be derived from an assumed contract with the people and the comitia curiata closely scrutinized their procedure ; as for Greece, it could endure no kings or wielders of irresponsible power whom it denounced and dethroned as tyrants. In India the Divine right of kings was acknowledged, and so long as they remained, which they continued to do, under the tutelage of their priests, there was the combination of spiritual and temporal power against which the poor Aryan semi-nomad could not hope to make a stand. Any progress in the infiltration of new ideas into a society so constituted must of necessity have been hesitatingly slow. But nevertheless there was a little progress and some change, and these had to be explained away without shaking the authority of the Divine Law. The explanation was that the laws of Niyog, widow remarriage, the slaughter of bulls and the indiscriminate recognition of sons were suited to the first three ages and not to the Kaliyug (4), i.e., the present age of sinfulness, falsehood and deceit—which seems true enough at times.

68. The Code commends strict conjugal fidelity. It prohibits polyandry, a practice which appears to be of later growth. Of course polygamy was then, as it is now, legal. References such as, "If two sons begotten by two successive husbands who are both dead" (5) are of course to widow remarriage. (6) The right of a married woman to her separate property was recognized in verses which will have to be considered in another place. (7)

69. As might be expected, the Government was on a par with the rest of the ordinances of Manu. Brahmins were wholly exempt from the payment of taxes, and kings even though dying were bound to see that the Brahmins were neither taxed nor left hungry. (8) Not only Brahmins but their benefactors were free from having to bear the burden of the State (9) which was thrown on the rest of the community. In times of prosperity 1/12th of the crops and 1/50th of the personal effects to be enhanced to 1/8th of crops and 1/6th or even 1/4th of the personal effects in times of distress, was the rate : "but a

(1) V. 53.

(2) V. 87, 47 56.

(3) V. 41-42.

(4) Vrihaspati ; Parasar, Narad ; See post ; Hindus divide time into four ages (1) Satya, (2) Dwapur, (3) Treta, and (4) Kaliyug, the first three being ages of purity and piety while the fourth—the present—is stated to be one of sinfulness, falsehood and deceit

(5) 1X-191.

(6) 1X-190

(7) 1X-194, 197.

(8) VII-133

(9) VIII-394.

twentieth of their gains on money and other moveables is the highest tax." (1) In another place it is stated that taxes are to be assessed only on saleable commodities. (2) They were levied in specie (3) and the king's share was fixed in the following ratio: "Of cattle, of gems, of gold and silver, added each year to the capital stock, a 1/50th part may be taken by the king; of gram a 1/8th part, a 1/6th or 1/12th according to the difference of the soil and the labour necessary to cultivate it. He may also take a 1/6th part of the clear annual increase of trees, flesh-meat, honey, clarified butter, perfumes, medical substances, liquids, flowers, roots and fruit, of gathered leaves, pot-herbs, grass, utensils made with leather or cane, earthen-pots and all things made of stone." (4) The taxes are computed in specie though fines are payable in coins of which gold, silver and copper pieces were well established. (5)

70. Justice was administered by the king with the assistance of three Brahmin assessors. (6) Law could, however, be interpreted by any of the twice-born. (7) The procedure is elementary and for the most part fair. Indeed, Manu is fair in other respects except where his judgment is warped by prejudice or prepossession. And even as regards Brahmins, while they are singled out for every privilege they are also enjoined to practice severe austerity—the only difference in practice being that while the one is real the other is ideal. "A Brahmin should constantly shun worldly honour as he would shun poison; and rather constantly seek disrespect, as he would seek nectar; for though scorned he may sleep with pleasure; with pleasure may he awake; with pleasure may he pass through life; but the scorner utterly perishes." (8)

71. Only Brahmins are to be appointed as Judges (9) "The very birth of Brahmins is a constant incarnation of Dharma (10) for the Brahmin is born to promote justice and to procure ultimate happiness". (11) He is exalted to the status of the gods but not yet above them. Later on he rose above them; and the gods in the heavens lived by his sufferance. Manu's rules on the law of inheritance call for detailed examination and refer as they do to a subject which is still technically the current law. Their examination must be reserved for the ensuing commentary dealing with the subject.

72. All transgressions are punishable by Manu but the difference between punishment and penance is not yet discerned. Even murder may be atoned for by penance and amercement regulated according to the caste and kind of the murdered. The fine was the delivery of cattle.

73. The first written characters devised by the Hindus were the Devanagri alphabet adopted from the Hebrew script which in its turn was an adaptation of the Egyptian hieroglyphics. It is difficult to judge with any measure of certainty when writing first became known in India. The earliest written records do not go back beyond the 9th or 10th century. But from the fact that writing was made on Bhoj leaves or birch bark and these materials are perishable, shows that the scarcity of earlier records does not prove that writing was then unknown. At first it was naturally known only in the

The Script of the Hindus.

- (1) X 120.
- (2) VII-127.
- (3) VII-130.
- (4) VII-130 132.
- (5) VIII-131-138
- (6) VIII 10-11.

- (7) VIII-20.
- (8) II 162-168
- (9) VIII-11.
- (10) God of Justice.
- (11) I-98.

towns, hence the word Nagari <sup>(1)</sup> while the prefix Dev is merely euphemistic and intended to emphasize that it was the script of the gods.

74. Archæologists compute the date of the introduction of writing in India at about the third century A. D. It must have taken several centuries for the script to become settled and sufficiently popularized to embody the floating matter which was recorded in the memories of generations of professional reciters whose duty it was to remember and recite the sacred classics. Max Muller thinks that the end of the mnemonic Sanskrit literature marks the birth of the Sutras (or aphorisms) to which all the earliest Smritis, such as those of Manu, Apastamb, Baudhayan, Vashisth and others were reduced. The advent of writing tended to fix the texts of the early scriptures but the old difference between matter of which the form and substance, and of that of which only the substance was preserved still remained, and has in fact become stereotyped in the history of Sanskrit literature. At all this period usage was slowly growing up and modifying the established practices. And with the invention of writing the literature grew apace, necessitating its classification and codifications. This may be called the third stage of Samhitas or compilations of which the first fruit was the Dharm Shastras which were merely codified treatises dividing the subject into three parts, that is those which dealt with rituals, duty, and penances.

75. The transition from the age of Samhitas to that of commentaries was a natural one. As the Samhitas tended to crystallize the law, the commentaries tended to enlarge it. All these constitute the Codex Juris of Hindu Law of which the following tabular statement is an attempt to fix both their age and place in the Corpus Juris of Sanskrit Law. <sup>(2)</sup>

76. The table gives a short synopsis of the works ordinarily regarded as the source of Hindu Law. There are no certain data to ascertain their date, and even as regards their order, scholars differ. From internal references, Mandlik places the leading Smritis in the following order:—

Mandlik's Order of Smritis.

Manu	Apastamb
Atri	Prajapati
Gautam	Harit
Vyas	Yadnyavalkya
Vasissth	Yama
Katyayan	Sankha
Parasar	Bhrigu
Brihaspati	Narad
Usanas

77. But in view of the fact that names such as Manu, Gautam, Vyas and the rest did not signify the same person, being assumed by several writers at various epochs whose works are now not all traceable, internal evidence is by no means a reliable guide for determining order. The ensuing table is an attempt in the same direction.

(1) From Skt. Nagar = town.

(2) Six systems of Indian Philosophy, p. 6.

Serial No.	Name of the work	Name of author.	Probable age	Remarks.
I. The Shrutis or the Vedas.
1	Rig Veda	... Vyas (nominally) but really by various writers.	1300 B. C.	There was originally only one Veda. Vyas is said to have divided it into four portions. Moral and religious Code. No legal value. Original prose-work lost. Metrical abridgment extant. Cited in Apastamb, Gautam and Vashishth. From internal evidence the Vedas appear to have been composed while the Aryan immigrants had settled down in the Punjab in the neighbourhood of Ambala and were still struggling for mastery over the people of the Gangetic plain. (See MacDonnell's History of the Sansk. Lit. pp 141, 142). " Rig Veda " lit " The Hymn book " (From Skt-Rik hymn and Ved (Lat) Video to know. The Rig Veda is the oldest The Sama contains hymns taken from the Rig while the two Vedas are its intermediate reductions
2	Sama Veda (1549 stanzas).		1000 B. C.	Sama contains hymns for sacrifices, while the Rig Veda, which is the foundation of them all, contains mainly hymns and prayers to the deified forces of Nature, such as the Sun, Moon, Wind, Fire, Indra, Mitra, and the like. All the Vedas have two treatises supplemental to them called the Brahmanas (which are ritual text books written in prose) and the Upanishads which deal with metaphysics. Rig Veda composed near Ambala, the Yajur near Kurukshetra near Delhi.
3	Yajur Veda (a) black, (b) white	Katyayan	... 1000 B. C.	Yajur Veda is white (Sukla) or clear, i.e., free from explanatory text and black (Krishna) because interspersed with explanatory matter.
4	Atharva Veda ...	...	800 B. C.	The Atharva Veda contains a collection of charms and cures.

Serial No	Name of the work.	Name of author.	Probable age.	Remarks.
5	Upanishads	... Vyas	.. 1600 B C	Moral and religious Codes. No legal value. Original prose-work lost. Metrical abridgment extant. Cited in Apastamb, Gautam and Vashisth. From internal evidence the Vedas were composed while the Aryan immigrants had settled down in the Punjab in the neighbourhood of Ambala and were still struggling for mastery over people of the Gangetic plain (See MacDonnell's H. S. L. pp. 141, 142)
II. The Smritis.
6	Manu	.. Was the text book of the Manava School.	800 B. C.	There are four versions of Manu i.e., (1) Bhṛigu Saṁhita, (2) Nārada, (3) Bṛhaspati and (4) Angiras. In sanctity the work is regarded by the Hindus as next only to the Vedas.
7	Harit	... Harit : a teacher of the Black Yajur Veda.	850 B. C.	In this and subsequent entries up to No. 11 the name of the work is the " Smṛiti " of the authors mentioned in the second column, though for the sake of shortness the works are now so called; e.g., Shakespeare—meaning Shakespeare's work. The only version of Harit available is that translated by Manmath Nath Dutt. It has no legal value, being entirely devoted to rituals.
8	Gautam	... Gautam : a teacher of the Sama Veda School.	750 B. C.	Cited both in Baudhayan and Apastamb. Gautam cites only "many" and "some" with out name showing that though old, there were older Smṛitis . Gobindaswami the commentator of Baudhayan says that Gautam was the text book of the Chhandogas or followers of the Sama Veda. Translated in 2 S. B. E.
9	Baudhayan	... Yajur Veda School ...	650 B. C.	Translated in 14 S. B. E. Pt. 2. As to age see Ib. Intr. p. XXIV. Govindaswamin has written a commentary on this Smṛiti .

Serial No.	Name of the work	Name of author.	Probable age.	Remarks
10	Apastamb ...	Yajur Veda School. Author's patronymic "Apastamb", probably a native of the "Andhra" Province of South India	500 B. C.	See 2 S. B. E. Intr. Apastamb XVIII. The whole Smṛiti is translated in that volume. The school of Apastambs flourished in South India (i.e., India south of the Nerbudda river---both the Bombay and Madras Presidencies.)
11	Hiranya Kesin ...	Do.	...	8, 9, 10, and 11 composed in Southern India.
12	Vashishth ...	Composed in Northern India for followers of the Rig Veda School.	...	Translated in 14 S. B. E. Pt. 2. Probably named after Vashishth, a Rishi mentioned in the Rig Veda. Existing text, probably a restoration.
13	Kasyayan ...	...	400 B. C.
14	Vishnu ...	Text book of the Katha School of the Black Yajur Ved: was probably composed in the Punjab	300 400 B. C.	Date relates to the existing recension. Has 160 slokas in common with Manu, with which the original work was intimately allied. By subsequent editing, the work has been altered out of recognition. A commentary on Vishnu called Vaijayanti was composed by Nanda Pandit of Benares (in 1622 A. D.) He is also the author of the well-known work on adoption called the Dattak Mimamsa .
15	Katyayan ...	}	...	All fragmentary extracts from larger works. Of no legal value.
16	Kasyap ...
17	Usanas Sutrās Budha.
18	Bhrigu Sanhita Katyayan.	...	200 A. D.
19	Bṛihaspati ...	...	200 A. D.	It is the oldest of the memorial laws. Though much of the work is obsolete the pious explain it away on the ground that it was not written for Kali Yug.
20	Yadnyavalkya ...	Author's name unknown, but from Mithila, capital of Tirhut.	350 A. D.	Contains 1,009 slokas. Probably based on a Dharm Sutra of the Vajasn̄eyi priests following the white Yajur Ved, but its third section is unmistakably connected with the Black Yajur Veda compiled by a follower of Yadnyavalkya

Serial No.	Name of the work.	Name of author.	Probable age	Remarks.
20	Yadnyavalkya ...	Author's name unknown, but from Mithila, capital of Tirhut.	350 A D	(Mandlik's Hindu Law Intro. Li.) This work is better known in its annotated edition by Vidyaneshwar called the Mitakshara (1150 A. D.) See post . Yadnyavalkya's institutes have been translated by V. N. Mandlik in his Hindu Law (pp. 157-274). Yadnyavalkya like Janak is not the name of any person but is rather the title or surname of a class (Mandlik Intr. lii).
21	Narad	Narad	400 A. D.	Contains 12,000 slokas. First to limit Dharam to law Complete work extant and translated in 38 S.B.E.
22	Brihaspati	Brihaspati	500 A. D.	Only fragments extant His enlightened views on the subject of women's rights and the advanced character of his teaching generally mark a distinct advance on Narad Translated in 38 S.B.E.
23	Angiras	...	1000-1100 A D.	Secondary redactions being abridged compilations from earliest works. Incomplete and of no legal value. Angiras is translated by M. N. Dutt.
24	Atri	...	...	Translated by M. N. Dutt. Mandlik places Atri next only to Manu.
25	Daksha	...	...	Do.
26	Devala	...	...
27	Prajapati	...	...
28	Yama	...	...
29	Likhit	...	...	Translated by M. N. Dutt
30	Vrihaspati	...	...
31	Vyas	Veda Vyas	...	Translated by M. N. Dutt. The author was a hermit resident in Benares. Vyas v. 1. Mandlik places Vyas next to Gautam and before Vashishth, Katyayan, Parasara and Brihaspati.

Serial No.	Name of the work.	Name of author.	Probable age.	Remarks.
32	Sankha ...	...	...	Translated by M. N. Dutt.
33	Sankha Likhit ...	..	...
34	Vridha Satatap...	...	...	Translated by M. N. Dutt.
35	Parasar ..	..	...	Enlarged edition. Contains 8,800 slokas against 581 or 592 of the older book.
36	Asvalayan ...	...
37	Brihat Shaunak	A Vaishnava follower of the Ramanuja sect.	...
38	Sankhyayan ...	..		Translated by M. N. Dutt.

III. Pious Forgeries.

39	Vrihat Harit	A Vaishnava follower of the Ramanuja sect	...	Forgeries of the Vaishnavas propounding their doctrines under old honoured names.
40	Gautam ...	...	...	Do.
41	Vashishth. ...	...	...	Do.
42	Apastamb, the second Amarta.	...	...	Do.

IV. Commentaries on Manu.

43	Medhatithi ...	...	900 A. D.
44	Dharmidhar ...	.	...
45	Govind Raja	..	...	Is a mere plagiarism of Gobind Raja, a commentator of the 12th century.
46	Bharuchi ...	Lost	...
47	Srikar	Lost	...
48	Kulluk Dharma sar	Kulluk Bhatt Benares	of 1400 A. D.	Was a native of Gour in Bengal but migrated to and lived in Benares Sir William Jones printed it with his translation of Manu and commends it in his preface "as the shortest, yet the most learned, the deepest, yet the most agreeable commentary ever composed on any author ancient or modern, European or Asiatic," p. xvii.

Serial No.	Name of the work.	Name of author	Probable age.	Remarks.
------------	-------------------	----------------	---------------	----------

V. Commentaries on Narad.

49	Ashahaya's Narad Bhashya.	Ashahaya	...	Only a recast by Kalyan Bhati preserved. The original is lost. See Narad, 33 S. B. E., Intr xix-xx.
----	---------------------------	----------	-----	---

VI. Commentaries on Yadnyavalkya.

50	Visvarup	...	...
51	Mitakshara	...	Vidyaneswar	1150 A. D.
52	Aparark	..	Aparark or Aparaditya Dev.	1187
				There are numerous commentaries upon this commentary, such as Subodhini by Visveswara Bhatt and Balam Bhatt Tika by Laxmi Devi Payagunde. Author belonged to the Konkun branch of the princely house of Silaras

VII. Digests.

53	Dayabagh	...	Jmutavahan	...	1400	Is a chapter on inheritance of the work "Dharma Ratna," which is not a commentary on any work but is a Digest of laws. There are several commentaries on this commentary, that by Srinath Acharya being considered the best. Other commentaries are those by (1) Sri Krishna Tarkalankar; (2) Achuta Chakravarti; (3) Maheshwar.
54	Daya Vibhag	...	Madhav	...	1450
55	Sarasvati Vilas...	Pratap Rudra	Deo.	King of Orissa.	1500-1524 A. D.	Of authority in Orissa.
56	Vivad Chandrika	Kara Vira	..		1550
57	Vivad Ratna Kar.	Chandeswar	Thakur...		1500	Probably based on Parijat cited in Ratnakara and other early works.
58	Vyavahar Mayukh.	Nilanth	...		1600	' Mayukh ', (i. e.) ray or division. The chapter on inheritance of the work composed under the auspices of King Bhagwant. Nilant; (author of Mayukh) born in Benares of Deshasth Mahratha parentage and wrote under the patronage of Yuddhashur—a Rajput Prince of the Sargara tribe who ruled over the town of Bharcha near the confluence of the Shambal and the Jamna.

Serial No.	Name of the work	Name of author.	Probable age.	Remarks.
59	Vitamitrodai ...	Mitra Misra ...	1700	The work was composed by order of Mir Singh, a Bundela King of Orchha who murdered Abdul Fazl, the author of Aini Akbari , and a minister of Akbar.
60	Kalpa Taru ...	Lakshmidhar ...	1180
61	Vivad Chintamani	Vachaspati Misra ...	...
62	Vyavahar Chintamani	Do. ...	...

78. The Smriti of Harit has not been translated in the Sacred Books of the East. But a translation of a work of that name appears in the "Twenty Samhitas." If this be the entire Smriti it is devoid of any legal or ethnological significance. The work contains seven short chapters in which the four stages are defined. They merely show that Hindu society had become divided into four castes according to their occupations but there is no indication of their inter-relation, while Harit entirely omits to allude to the Dharma or civil duties which in the earlier and later Codes embody the laws of family relations and inheritance.

79. Next to Manu, Gautam is the oldest Dharm Shastra extant. But it was not the only work composed since the Code of Gautam, 700-800 B. C. Manu, since Gautam refers to other writers whose opinions he quotes without naming them, <sup>(1)</sup> The work belongs to the followers of the Sama Veda. Its age cannot be ascertained but it appears to be older than Baudhayana by several generations, as the customs in vogue in his time appear to have died out when the Baudhayana school was founded just as the customs current in Baudhayana's time had disappeared when the Apastamba school was founded.

80. The dominating note of the Aryan society in the days of Gautam was the same as in the days of Manu. Some changes were no doubt creeping into society. Caste was becoming a trifle more rigid but it was still in a fluid condition as before. For instance, Gautam allows the student to accept alms from men of all castes, <sup>(2)</sup> and a Brahmin may eat food given by any twice-born man, <sup>(3)</sup> and in case of necessity even that given by a Shudra. <sup>(4)</sup> He must not eat the flesh of "milch cows and draught oxen" but he was otherwise free to partake of that and other meat. <sup>(5)</sup> Society is divided into four orders—that of the student, the householder, the ascetic (Bhikshu) and that of the hermit in the wood (*Vaikhana*s). Only the householder can marry; the others are consigned to lifelong celibacy <sup>(6)</sup> The householder must marry in the caste a woman not related to him within six degrees on the father's side, <sup>(7)</sup>

(1) By use of the expression "Some declare" as in II-9, 34, III-1, 19, VI-6, X-52 : XVI-14, XVIII-7
(2) II-36
(3) XVII-1

(4) XVII-5
(5) XVII-27-38
(6) III 8
(7) IV-1-3,

or within four degrees on the mother's side. (1) It recognizes the eight forms of marriages described in Manu (2) including capture (3) and embracing an unconscious female. (4)

81. Inter-caste marriages were customary and their offspring are declared legitimate. (5) But as was the view of all ancient laws, the wife was merely a means to an end. She was married for the sole purpose of procreating a son. If her husband dies sonless she may procreate up to two sons (6) by his brother, (7) or a sapinda, a sagotra, a samanapravar or one belonging to the same caste. (8) The practice of Niyog is preserved in the following verse: "And the child begotten at a living husband's request on his wife belongs to the husband," (9) but if it was begotten by a stranger it belongs to the latter (10) or to both the natural father and the husband of the mother. (11) Another means of raising an issue was to obtain a son by an appointed daughter. (12)

Girls were married off before they attained puberty. (13) "Some declare that a girl shall be given in marriage before she wears clothes" (14) which shows that a tendency had then become established in favour of child-marriages, though Gautam appears to have been comparatively a rationalist. Polygamy was then naturally customary. (15)

82. Gautam's law of inheritance recognizes the rule of primogeniture (16) as the rule of succession, but the rule on that point was fluctuating and the tendency was towards the equality of shares amongst all the sons, the eldest being given two shares. (17) "A legitimate son, a son born secretly, and a son abandoned by his natural parents inherit the estate of their fathers." (18) "The son of an unmarried damsel, the son of a pregnant bride, the son of a twice-married woman, the son of an appointed daughter, a son self-given, and a son bought" (19) receive one-fourth on failure of the other sons. (20)

Idiots and eunuchs were disinherited but the disqualification was personal and they were entitled to maintenance. (21) Cases of inheritance not covered by the express texts were to be decided by the committee (parishud) of ten Brahmins learned in law.

83. Hospitality is enjoined, but Brahmins are to be fed first, Kshatriyas next, and men of other castes are to be fed with one's servants for mercy's sake. (22) Reverence is due to age and "even a Shudra of 80 years or more must be honoured by one young enough to be his son." (23) But an Arya though he be younger must be respected by a Shudra. (24) Prestige!

84. No Arya should grow a beard without a sufficient reason. (25) But the Vedic Arya grew beards as a rule and hid his long hair in a conch-like

- (1) IV-5.
- (2) IV-6 18.
- (3) IV-12.
- (4) IV-13
- (5) IV-16, 17
- (6) XVIII 14.
- (7) XVIII 14.
- (8) XVIII-6.
- (9) XVII-11.
- (10) XVIII-12
- (11) XVII-18.
- (12) XXVIII-18.
- (13) XVIII-21.

- (14) XXVIII-21.
- (15) XXXVIII-14.
- (16) XXVIII 3
- (17) XXVIII-9.
- (18) XXVIII 32.
- (19) XXVIII-33.
- (20) XXVIII-34.
- (21) XXVIII-43.
- (22) VI-43.
- (23) VI-10.
- (24) VI-11.
- (25) IX 7.

pyramidal chignon arranged to the right. The student is now enjoined to shave off his head but merely maintain a pigtail. (1) They walked bare-headed during the day (2) covering their heads only at night. (3) The Arya should not take water offered by a Shudra (4)—a notable restriction on the older law when the Shudra was vigorously anathematized but not yet ostracized.

85. The Aryan ate meals twice a day—morning and evening (5) but unlike that of the Romans, it savoured of the Spartan simplicity. The three duties enjoined on all Aryans are the study of the Vedas, the offering of sacrifices and the giving of alms (6) the additional duties of the Brahmin being to receive them and teaching the making of sacrifices. (7) The payment of taxes follows the rules stated in Manu. (8)

86. The origin of bhet bigar is to be found in Gautam "Each artizan shall monthly do one day's work for the king." (9)

87. The duties of a king are set out in much detail: (10) "The king is master of all, with the exception of Brahmins." (11) "All excepting Brahmins shall worship him...(12)... The Brahmins also shall honour him." (13) "He shall administer justice according to the laws of countries, castes and families which are not opposed to the sacred records." (14)

88. The Apastamb Sutra, the youngest of the trio, represents the doctrines of the school of that name which flourished in South India (15) and whose founder according to tradition, was a native of the Andhra country. As compared to Gautam and Baudhayan it records a change in the Aryan customs which is in many respects modern. In their general structure the three works agree, containing as they do, many verses in common, and setting out only some additional clauses which had forced themselves into the forefront by reason of their acceptance as the acknowledged tenets of the people. For instance, with the growing rigidity of caste, he prohibits intercourse, dining and inter-marriage with those whose great-grandfather's, grand-father's and father's initiation is not remembered. (16) If a Shudra touches him then he shall leave off eating. (17) He shall not eat in a ship (18) or ready-made food purchased in the market (19) but "the meat of milch cows and oxen may be eaten". (20) "Bull's flesh is fit for offerings." (21) But a Brahmin shall not eat in the house of people of the three other castes, (22) but on this point there was still dissent. "According to some, food offered by people of any caste, who follow the law prescribed for them, except that of Shudras may be eaten." (23) Even the Shudra's food may be eaten in times of distress. (24) Apastamb affects puritan piety in forbidding food given by a physician (25) or one who lives by the use of arms, excepting a Kshatriya (26)

- (1) I-97
- (2) IX 35.
- (3) IX-36.
- (4) IX-10.
- (5) IX 59
- (6) X-1.
- (7) X 2
- (8) X-24-80
- (9) X-31.
- (10) XI
- (11) XI-1.
- (12) XI-7.
- (13) XI-8.
- (14) XI-20.
- (15) In a work called Maharnava India is - divided into two equal halves by the river Nerbudda and the School of Apastamb prevailed in the country to its south up to the mouth of Godavari.

- (16) 2 S. B. E. vv. 5, 6.
- (17) Ib p 61 v. 1.
- (18) 2 S. B. E. v 6
- (19) Ib v. 14.
- (20) Ib p 64 v. 80.
- (21) Ib v. 31.
- (22) Ib p 66 v 9
- (23) Ib p. 67 v. 18.
- (24) Ib p. 67 v. 14.
- (25) Ib p. 67 v 21.
- (26) Ib p 67 v. 19.

and several others which, if strictly obeyed, must have left the Aryan very hungry. Niyog had by this time died out and is forbidden. (1) So is the delivery of widows for procreation to the agnatic kinsmen of her deceased husband. (2)

89. Apastamb's law of inheritance follows the beaten track except that allows the daughter to take after the pupil—a very remote chance. (3) The wife's stridhan is better defined as comprising her ornaments and the wealth received from her relations. (4) The doubtful equity in favour of the eldest son is now positively swept away. "Preference of the eldest son is forbidden by the Shastras". (5) It is allowed for a Shudra to prepare the food under the superintendence of men of the three higher castes. That Shudra cooks were employed is apparent from an allusion to that effect. (6)

Baudhayana allowed traffic in sons—Apastamb forbids it. (7)

90. Of the rest of the productions of this age Apastamb occupies a prominent place not only because a comparatively authentic version of this Smṛiti is extant but also because it is an excellent compendium of the followers of Yajur Ved originally compiled for the benefit of the Adhvaryu priests and their acolyte pupils.

Harit, Baudhayana,
650 B. C., Apas-
tamb, 500 B. C.

The term "Apastamb" is the name of the school like Asvalayan, Baudhayana, Bharadwaj or Gautama. It was one of the five branches of Khandikiya school which again was a branch of the Taittiriya, a section of the Brahmanas who studied the Black Yajur Veda.

91. Apastamb and Baudhayana belong to the same school, but of these Baudhayana is about 100 to 150 years older. If therefore Apastamb was compiled in 500 B. C. Baudhayana which portrays customs of a ruder age must have been composed about 650 B. C. Older than both is the work of Harit but though a copy of this work exists, it has no practical value to the lawyer as its Dharma Sutras are meagre and incomplete. So are those of Baudhayana as compared to those of Apastamb though in this case later glossators have performed the work of restoration according to their own ideas. (8)

92. Nevertheless, the following facts may be gleaned from what remains, which has been translated, with an Introduction in the Sacred Books of the East Series. (9) Both Baudhayana and Apastamb originated in the Deccan (10) and both probably belonged to the Andhra country. (11) As to the age of Baudhayana it is manifestly older than Apastamb as it recognizes several customs reprobated in the later work. It is computed that the Apastambs flourished about 500 B. C., probably more but not less. (12) The Criminal Law is draconian in its severity against Shudras. There was one law for the Aryan—another for the Shudra.

(1) 2 S. B. E. p. 180, 181 v. 7. Niyog is a child are not recognized. definitely prohibited Ib. p. 164 v. 2-5.

(2) Ib. p. 164 v. 5

(3) Ib. p. 188 v. 4.

(4) Ib. p. 184 v. 9.

(5) Ib. p. 184 v. 10-14.

(6) Ib. v. 6

(7) Ib. p. 18 v. 11. "The gift or acceptance of a child and the right to sell or buy

(8) 11 S. B. E. XXXIII

(9) XIV Translated by G. Buhler

(10) India South of the Nerbudda—the Bombay and Madras Presidencies—See S. B. E. XX XIV Intr. XLII.

(11) Ib. XLIII.

(12) Ib. XLIII.

93. The outstanding features of Gautam are the recognition of family relations in their widest sense, the growing cleavage between the different castes and their tendency to follow their hereditary occupations. Like the older writers Gautam enters into the trivial details of life and prescribes a mode of living which must have reduced men to mere automata. Women were pre-ordained for procreation. They have no other function. They are excluded from education and inheritance and though Gautam combats the view that they should be married off as they emerge from their cradle he supports their marriage before puberty. Niyog was still in vogue <sup>(1)</sup> and sonship used in the same large sense as before. <sup>(2)</sup>

94. These peculiarities of Hindu society became accentuated with time and the writings of later sages only voice the growing tendency of the time when they applied the cardinal doctrines of their race to the practical problems of sociology.

95. Baudhayana even justifies divorce on the part of the husband: "Let him abandon a wife who does not bear children in the tenth year, one who bears daughters only in the twelfth, one whose children all die in the fifteenth, but her who is quarrelsome without delay." <sup>(3)</sup> With the last sentiment every one from Socrates downwards will agree.

Baudhayana prefaces to his Smriti a long dissertation on personal purity in which he follows Manu, Gautam and other sages of his time.

96. His law of inheritance is contained in the following seven verses <sup>(4)</sup> :—

"Moreover, the great-grand-father, the grand-father, the father, oneself, the uterine brothers, the son by a wife of equal caste, the grandson, and the great-grandson—these they call Sapindas, but not the great-grandson's son :—and amongst these a son and a son's son (together with their father) are sharers of an undivided oblation.

The sharers of divided oblations, they call Sakulyas.

If no other relations are living, the property of a deceased male descends to them after the Sapindas

On failure of them, the teacher who holds the place of a spiritual father, a pupil, or an officiating priest shall take it.

On failure of them, the king Let him give that property to persons well-versed in the three Vedas.

But the king should never take for himself the property of a Brahmin."

97. In Baudhayana's time the law of co-parcenership had not yet developed. There could be no partition during the father's life-time except with his permission. <sup>(5)</sup> The rights of the younger sons to an equal division with their eldest brother was now recognized. He still received an additional 10 per cent. or the most excellent chattel, but it all depended upon the father's volition <sup>(6)</sup>

98. Baudhayana's catalogue of edibles is the same as Gautam's. He believes in limited polygamy allowing four wives to a Brahmin, three to a Kshatriya, two to a Vaisya and only one to a Shudra. <sup>(7)</sup> Inter-caste unions are discussed without being condemned. Their offspring are treated as legitimate. <sup>(8)</sup> His criminal law is hard on the Shudra. The murderer of a Shudra being liable to the same fine as for killing a dog, a crow, an owl, a frog or a musk-rat. <sup>(9)</sup>

99. There was a growing sense of the dignity of marriage. Though he recites the eight forms of marriage, he reserves the Gandharv and the

(1) 14 S. B. E. p. 226-v. 17.

(2) Ib. p. 227, 228, vv. 20-33

(3) II-6.

(4) 14 S. B. E. 178, 179.

(5) 14 S. B. E. 224.

(6) Ib.

(7) 14 S. B. E. 196.

(8) 14 S. B. E. 197, 198.

(9) Ib. 202

Pisach forms for Vaisyas and Shudras—a departure which was not universally acclaimed since “some recommend the Gandharv rite for all castes because it is based on mutual affection.” (1)

The right of women to acquire property was now recognized. Though women possess no independence and are never fit for it, (2) nevertheless “the daughters shall obtain the ornaments of their mother, as many as are presented according to the custom of the caste, or anything else that may be given according to custom.” (3)

100. Baudhayan strikes the dominant note of the time to obtain a son by marriage if you may—by Niyog if you must—but get a son, for “through the procreation of a virtuous son he saves himself”. (4) “Therefore, he should sedulously beget offspring.” (5)

101. The work concludes with a chapter on adoption, (6) in which occurs the text prohibiting the giving and taking of an only son in adoption (7) which is no longer the law and prescribing the following ceremony, the substance of which is still essential, to constitute the giving and taking in adoption.

9. “Then he . . . goes to the giver of the child and should address this request to him : ‘Give me the son.’

10. The other answers ‘I give him.’

11. He receives the child with these words : “I take thee for the fulfillment of my religious duties ; I take thee to continue the line of my ancestors” (8)

If a legitimate son is afterwards born the adopted son gets a fourth of the legitimate son’s share.” Thus says Baudhayan. (9)

102. After the two exponents of the Southern School, Vashishth which belongs to the Northern School, that is to say the school Vashishth, 400 B. C. founded in the country north of the Nerbudda river and the Vindhya mountain, presents some interesting and instructive features.

This Dharma Shashtra was composed by the sage Vashishth, or at any rate by the pupils of his school who followed the Rig Veda.

There are no data to ascertain the age of this work though internal evidence shows it to belong to a period long past the age of Baudhayan.

The author defines Aryavart to be a country between the Himalaya and the Vindhya ranges limited on the east and west by the ocean. (10) The law prevailing there is authoritative.

103. It will be observed that while Apastamb has limited polygamy to four wives for a Brahmin, three for a Kshatriya, two for a Vaisya and only one for a Shudra, Gautam improves on Apastamb by reducing the Brahmin’s allowance only to three, Kshatriya’s to two and one each to the Vaisya and Shudra. (11) Gautam reproduces many aphorisms of Baudhayan and Apastamb ; but they are better arranged and brought up to date. From its general structure it would show that it was written after the rise of Buddhism in India and when the hatred it had aroused amongst the priestly classes was keen. It refers to them as “Atheists” service with whom entails forfeiture of caste. (12) Consequently it would not be far wrong if the age of Vashishth is

(1) 14 S. B. E. 207.

(2) Ib. v. 44-46.

(3) Ib. v. 48

(4) Ib. 272 v. 8.

(5) Ib. 272 v. 11.

(6) Ib. 384-386.

(7) Ib. 384-v. 1.

(8) Ib. 385 v. 9-11

(9) Ib. 386-v. 16.

(10) 1-8, 9

(11) 1-24

(12) 1-23

placed in the fourth or fifth century before Christ. Vashishth denounces the prevailing, though perhaps decadent custom of a Brahmin marrying a Shudra. (1)

104. In regard to the marriage rites, Gautam only recognizes six forms against the eight of his predecessors, namely:—

(1) Brahma (Supreme Spirit). (2) Daiva (Gods). (3) Arsha (Sages). (4) Gandharva (Love-match). (5) Kshatriya (Warrior). (6) Manush (Man). Of these the last two are new though they bear the old meaning, the Kshatriya marriage being seizure by main force, while the Manush marriage is purchase pure and simple. (2) The dependence of women upon men is again insisted on. (8) He allows the widow after six months of widowhood to be appointed to raise an issue to her deceased husband (4) from whose estate she is to be maintained. (5) A woman may marry of her own accord three years after attaining puberty (6) but with Gautam he counsels marriage before puberty (7) and permits re-marriage of virgin widows (9) and of deserted wives to one of the husband's kinsmen, (9) failing him to a stranger. (10) The meat of domestic animals was still eaten and Vashishth adds the interesting fact that camel flesh was equally served at the Aryan table. (11)

105. The law of adoption is a reproduction of the older texts, in places revised, as for instance, the following: "Let a woman neither give nor receive a son except with her husband's permission". (12) "He who desires to adopt a son shall assemble his kinsmen, announce his intention to the king, make burnt-offerings in the middle of the house, reciting the Vyahritis, and take as a son not a distant kinsman, but the nearest among his relatives". (13) This would compare favourably with the Roman Law of adoption, but the oburgation does not appear to have ever attained the dignity of an indispensable condition.

106. Vashishth is quite modern in his law of property. Ten years' continuous adverse possession destroys the owner's right to property. (14) He recognizes possession as evidence of ownership. (15) He entrusts the minor's property to the king. (16) His ideal for the king is noble: "A king will be superior even to Brahmins if he lives surrounded by servants who are keen-eyed like vultures". (17) "Let him live surrounded by servants who are keen-eyed like vultures. Let him not be a vulture surrounded by vultures." (18)

107. Vashishth had an idea of contracts againsts public policy. (19)

He still recognizes the twelve kinds of sons. (20) Sons by inter-caste marriage are still legitimate. (21) But he reverts to the double share allowed to the eldest son on partition. (22) He disinherits eunuchs, madmen and out-caste sons but allows them maintenance. (23) He recognizes the right to self-

(1) 1-25, 26

(2) I-34, 35.

(8) V. 1, 2

(4) XVII 57.

(5) XVII 62.

(6) XVII 67, 68.

(7) XVII-69, 70 Gautam, XVII-23

(8) XVII-74

(9) XVII-78-80.

(10) XVII 80.

(11) XIV-40, 45 46

(12) XV-5.

(18) XV-6.

(14) XVI-17

(15) XVI-10.

(16) XVI-9.

(17) XVI-21.

(18) XVI-25.

(19) XVI 31, o f. Manu, VIII-169, Vishnu, VI-41; Yadnyavalkya, II-47.

(20) XVII-12-89.

(21) XVII-47-60.

(22) XVII-42.

(23) XVII-52-54.

acquisition, but allows the acquirer only a double share. (1) In other respects he follows the traditional law of inheritance.

108. In his closing exordium in support of liberality, Vashishth promises beatitude to him "who gives a house obtains a town" (2) and "he who gives a pair of shoes obtains a vehicle." (3) "Practice righteousness, not unrighteousness; speak truth, not untruth, look far not near; look towards the Highest, not towards that which is not the Highest." (4) "Happiness is the portion of him who relinquishes all desires which fools give up with difficulty, which does not diminish with age, and which is a life-long disease." (5)

109. The Dharma Shashtra which passed under the name of the God Vishnu is for its size equal to the Code of Manu from which its contents are largely borrowed. This is, indeed, the leading feature of all Dharma Shastras the text of which is mainly borrowed from the earlier Codes, only in parts added to or modified to represent the views of the writer of the age. This Smriti contains over 160 slokas from Manu, and it appears that an old recension of this work was older than Baudhayan and Vashishth, for both have borrowed from it. But this recension has been edited by subsequent glossators out of recognition so that the text translated in the Sacred Books of the East Series is comparatively a modern work. (6) It is now impossible to separate the old from the new and the work now extant may then be taken as the only work known to us and which might have been 300 or 400 years old at the birth of Christ.

110. The Smriti belongs to a school studying the Black Yajur Veda but there are passages therein showing the writer's leanings towards the Sankhya philosophy of Buddhism. For instance, in the concluding praise of Vishnu by the Goddess of the Earth for his enlightening discourse, she addresses him as "the Lord of the principle of Mahat (Greek Entity)." (7) Thou art the sage Kapil: (8) thou art the teacher of the Sankhya." (9) As Buddhism was at the zenith of its power in the third and fourth century B. C., and the orange-coloured robes of its monks were a frequent sight in the towns, Vishnu regards it as a good omen that one should come across them.

111. Leaving out of account the ceremonial and penitential matter in which Vishnu does not differ from the earlier sages, his dissertation on the family relations and the law of inheritance call for a passing notice. Vishnu like his predecessors recognizes inter-caste marriages and the legitimacy of offspring. He enumerates twelve kinds of sons the last of whom is a son born by any woman whomsoever. (10) He recognizes the eight forms of marriage, but adds that the first four are only legitimate for a Brahmin while these and the Gandharv are legitimate for a Kshatriya, (11) but this restriction counts for nothing in view of the laxity he observes in counting the sons. In other respects Vishnu voiced the Orthodox Hindu sentiment as to women's dependence upon men (12) and the like. He is the first to regard Suttee or self-immolation with her husband's corpse as a wifely duty (13) but this is regarded as a later interpolation. He recognizes the right of the wife and the daughter to inherit to her husband and father in the absence of male issue. (14) He also allows

(1) XVII-51.
(2) XXIX-14.
(3) XXIX-15.
(4) XXX-1.
(5) XXX-10.
(6) Vol. VII.
(7) CVIII 26.

(8) XCVIII-85.
(9) XCVIII-86.
(10) XV-27.
(11) XXIV-27, 28.
(12) XXVI-13.
(13) XXVI-14.
(14) XVII-4, 5.

the mother to succeed to her son. <sup>(1)</sup> He moreover enlarges the scope of stridhan <sup>(2)</sup> and prescribes the mode of its devolution. <sup>(3)</sup> He gives mothers and unmarried daughters a share on partition. <sup>(4)</sup> Niyog appears to have fallen into disuse and so also the employment of widows to raise offspring to their deceased husbands.

112. Most of Vishnu's law of inheritance has become obsolete with the discontinuance of inter-caste marriages. He apportions the share of each son according to the caste of his mother. <sup>(5)</sup> The balance is in consonance with modern law and will be set out in the ensuing commentary.

Vishnu differs from all the previous sages in expressly prescribing the law of the mortgage of land. <sup>(6)</sup> He allows mortgage of only a bull's hide <sup>(7)</sup> of land at a time. If the mortgagor mortgages more without redeeming that previously mortgaged he shall be whipped or imprisoned. <sup>(8)</sup> In a dispute between two mortgagees the one with possession has priority. <sup>(9)</sup>

113. In his exposition of Criminal Law Vishnu is equally modern. He recognizes the right of private defence <sup>(10)</sup> and punishes adultery, <sup>(11)</sup> defamation <sup>(12)</sup> and insult <sup>(13)</sup> while his refined moral sense does not suffer bestiality to go unpunished. <sup>(14)</sup> A tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye is his standard of punishment for many other offences.

114. The Dharma Shastra of Narad bears so close an affinity to the Code of Manu as to be regarded as one of its versions. From Narad, 300 A. D. references to the Roman gold coin Dinarius which was introduced into India about the first century, the Smriti must have been compiled after that date. But inasmuch as it agrees on many points with the Smritis of Yadnyavalkya, Vishnu, Katyayan, Brihaspati and Vyas and reflects a more developed stage of judicial procedure, it may be safely assigned to the fourth century A. D.

115. In his own preface to the Smriti Narad admits that his work is no more than an abridgment of Manu made for the convenience of study by those who should find Manu unmanageably bulky. But if Narad is an abridgment of that work it is also an improvement thereon in many respects. The opening chapters deal with judicial procedure, the plaint, pleadings and judgment, the constitution of the Courts. He then deals with the subject of debts and pledges which appear to have tormented the old world as it torments the new. He then deals with evidence and ordeals, deposits, the resumption of gifts, breach of a contract of service, rescission of purchase, trespass and boundary disputes which are followed by the law of impotency and marriage.

116. Narad allows the wife to divorce her husband for impotency. <sup>(15)</sup> "Women have been created for the sake of propagation, the wife being the field and the husband the giver of the seed. The field must be given to him who has seeds. He who has no seeds is unworthy to possess the field." <sup>(16)</sup> Narad permits an engagement to be broken in favour of a better suitor. <sup>(17)</sup>

- |  |                  |
|--|------------------|
| (1) XVII-7.  | (8) V-181.       |
| (2) XVII-18.   | (9) V-184.       |
| (3) XVII-19-28. See this subject discussed in the Commentary, post.  | (10) V-189, 190. |
| (4) XVIII-34, 35.  | (11) V-40, 41.   |
| (5) XVIII.   | (12) V-27-29.    |
| (6) V-181-184.   | (13) V-81-86.    |
| (7) "Bull's hide." That land whether little or much, on the produce of which one man can subsist for a year is called the quantity of a "bull's hide."—v. 183. | (14) V-42, 44.   |
|  | (15) XII-16, 18. |
|  | (16) XII-19.     |
|  | (17) XII-39.     |

He regards Niyog as still customary. (1) The sonless widow must have intercourse with her husband's brother till she has begotten a son after which the brother is enjoined to let her go. (2) A married woman could re-marry if her husband does not return after a stated number of years. (8)

117. Narad's law of partition is indistinguishable from that of Manu but most of it is now obsolete. For instance, he concedes to the father the right of partition when he is stricken in years, (4) or when the mother had ceased to menstruate. (6) He allows the eldest son a larger share. (6) His allotment of share amongst the subsidiary sons is, of course, equally obsolete.

But on many other points of partition and inheritance Narad's rules are still in force.

118. Comparing Narad with the older sages, it is evident that the distinction between Duty (Dharma) and Law was becoming more perceptible though it was not so clear as it had become to the contemporary Roman jurists. Narad was probably the contemporary of Justinian and if the two works are compared—they present a contract which is only explicable on the assumption that while the sacerdotal law was still struggling for emancipation from its close confines, the secular law had already assumed a vigorous shape and form in the clear atmosphere of a thinking democracy. (7)

119. Of Brihaspati we have merely a fragment, but its value is held to be in the fact that it affords a key to the age of Manu. Brihaspati, 450 A. D. Brihaspati is, indeed, regarded as one of its many versions—its other versions being those by Bhrigu, Narada and Angiras. Brihaspati mentions the Dinar (Denarius) as a current coin which was a copy of the Roman Denarius introduced into India in the first century A. D. The outstanding feature of Brihaspati is his definite pronouncement against Niyog. On "account of the successive deterioration of the four ages of the world" it must not be practised by mortals in the present age according to law. (8) He also advocates the custom of Sati holding that "whether she ascends the fire after him, or chooses to survive him leading a virtuous life, she promotes the welfare of her husband." (9) It does not appear when and how this custom arose. But one would not be far wrong in ascribing it to the cruelty of the husband's relations, to the contempt with which she was universally regarded and the persecution which was her lot as one whose very sight and presence was unlucky to the beholder.

120. Inter-caste marriages were still legal (10) and the shares of sons are consequently apportioned according to the caste of their mothers, (11) but the tendency to restrict the sonship is outlined in the view that out of the thirteen sons (12) "the legitimate son of the body (Auras) and the appointed daughter (Putrika) continue the family." (13) Brihaspati allows the wife to inherit to her husband's moveable but not to his immoveable property. (14) But he allows the daughter to inherit all property in default of the wife. (15)

(1) XII-58.

(2) XII-80, 81.

(3) XII-98, 99.

(4) XIII-4.

(5) XIII-3.

(6) XIII-1, 13.

(7) Translated in 33 S. B. E., pp 271-890.

(8) XXIV-12.

(9) XXIV-11.

(10) XXV-14.

(11) XXV-27, 28, 29.

(12) Brihaspati adds the appointed daughter as equal to a son, and she with the 12 sons already enumerated make thirteen.

Ib. XXV-95, 99 S. B. E. 375

(13) XXV-33.

(14) XXV-54 but see contra Ib. 65, 66 XXV-35

(15) XXV-55.

Brihaspati for the first time enunciates the condition and the law of re-union, (1)

He cites Manu as having prohibited gambling (2) but the spirit of gambling was abroad and Brihaspati allows it "under the superintendence of keepers of gambling-houses, as it serves the purpose of discovering thieves." (3) For the rest Brihaspati voices the stereotyped views of his predecessor.

121. The Smṛiti of Yādnyavalkya (4) is stated to rank next only to the Code of Manu in its authority. It owes its added importance to one of its commentators Vidyāneshwar, whose commentary thereon called the Mitākshara—is nominally still the current law of the land though in reality most of it has naturally been buried under the dust of ages, and what remains can only be safely relied upon if it is supported by the judicial commentary of the ultimate Court of appeal. But so long as the Dharma Śāstras still adorn and diversify the text of legal treatises both the Smṛiti of Yādnyavalkya and the commentaries thereon must remain the texts round which all law must cluster.

122. The Institutes of Yādnyavalkya are probably a versification of a Dharma Sūtra—or a set of aphorisms on Dharma (or Duty)—belonging to a school of the white Yajur Veda which flourished in the third and fourth century A.D. Internal evidence points to the author being a native of Mithila, the capital of Tīrhut.

123. The work is divided into three parts: the first deals with Achar (or the rules of conduct); the second with Vyavahar (or domestic law); and the third with Prayaschit (or penances). As usual the subject is throughout dealt with in a series of incomplete and often unintelligible aphorisms drawn up for justifying a crop of commentaries to be presently noticed (§ 139). These commentaries possess the leading characteristics and the defects of all commentaries noticed later (§ § 199, 200). As, moreover, these commentaries reflect the view of a later age, it would perhaps be useful, if following the method hitherto adopted, the Institutes are perused without their attendant commentaries.

124. As regards marriage, Yādnyavalkya still allows inter-caste marriages. (5) But he limits with Vāśiṣṭh the three regenerates to three, two and one wife respectively. Niyog is modified but not abolished. The wife is required to co-habit with the husband's younger brother during his absence and failing him with a sapinda or sagotia till a son is born (6). Her perpetual dependence on men is again insisted on (7) but in some minor respects her lot appears to have improved by such allusions as that one should not take food before one's wife. (8)

125. The second chapter deals with legal precepts and procedure. As regards debts Yādnyavalkya enacts the rule of Damdupat (9) whether on secured or unsecured debts. His conception of a mortgage is one with possession, (10) but he attaches special value to writing, holding that "a loan contracted by a written document is re-payable in three generations." (11) He prescribes rational rules for its execution and attestation by an even number of witnesses who must write in their own hands mentioning first the names of their respective fathers: "I am such and such a person, a witness in this document." (12)

(1) XXV-72, 73-77.

(2) XXV II.

(3) XXVI 2.

(4) Translated by Mandlik, (II L.), pp. 167, 274.

(5) I-57.

(6) I 68, 69

(7) I-85.

(8) I 181.

(9) II 62, 65.

(10) II-65.

(11) II 92.

(12) II 89.

A document is of no value if it is obtained by force or threat. <sup>(1)</sup> "A debtor must enter on the back of the deed the payments he makes or the creditor should grant receipt in his own handwriting for the money received." <sup>(2)</sup> "After the discharge of the debt the deed should be destroyed; or for the validity of the transaction, a deed of release executed. What is paid before a witness must be re-paid before another witness." <sup>(3)</sup>

126. Yadnyavalkya's law of partition provides for the shares of different sons; but it is in principle equitable. It is left to the father to either give his eldest son a larger share or to make all the shares equal. <sup>(4)</sup> He allows the wives possessing no stridhan of their own to share equally with the sons. <sup>(5)</sup> The rest of his rules on the important subjects of partition and succession are still authoritative and will have to be set out in the ensuing commentary.

127. Yadnyavalkya lays down detailed regulations for the maintenance of gambling-houses. <sup>(6)</sup> His Smṛiti is interspersed with the usual rules about ordeals, <sup>(7)</sup> disputed boundaries, <sup>(8)</sup> trespass by cattle, <sup>(9)</sup> sale of stolen goods, <sup>(10)</sup> gifts, <sup>(11)</sup> return of articles purchased and the conditions of its return. <sup>(12)</sup> The chapter relating to master and servant opens with a generous clause for the emancipation of slaves obtained by force or of those who from starvation have delivered themselves into slavery or those who being slaves save their master's lives. <sup>(13)</sup> But a higher caste could still enslave one belonging to a lower caste. <sup>(14)</sup>

128 Yadnyavalkya prescribes punishment for abuse, insult and defamation, in which aggravation or mitigation of the offence is measured according to the relative castes of the parties. <sup>(15)</sup> He awards fine as a punishment for petty offences the nature of which was probably determined by their frequency. Murderers were to be impaled, <sup>(16)</sup> women causing abortion were to be drowned <sup>(17)</sup> and those who kill their husbands, children or spiritual guide were to be trampled to death by oxen after having their ears, fingers, nose and lips cut off. <sup>(18)</sup> The punishment for adultery varies with the caste of the offender, varying from a small fine to death. <sup>(19)</sup> Unnatural offence on the wife cost 24 panas. <sup>(20)</sup> The plea of the thief that he had entered the house at the invitation of one of its inmates is ordinarily as false as it is unquestionably ancient. The plea cost the accused 50 panas. <sup>(21)</sup> The king was intolerant of the seditious. "One who indulges in talks affecting the interests of Royalty, one who villifies the king, or one who discloses his secret counsels should have their tongues cut off and be banished". <sup>(22)</sup>

129. The age of Yadnyavalkya was the age of literacy and co-operative industry. The former is manifest from the provision relating to written instruments while the latter is manifest from a short Companies Act incorporated in the Smṛitis. <sup>(23)</sup> But it does not appear that such companies were anything more than trading partnerships from whose profits the king received 5 per cent. as royalty. <sup>(24)</sup>

- (1) II 91.
- (2) II 95.
- (3) II 96.
- (4) II-116.
- (5) II-117.
- (6) II-202,206.
- (7) II-97,116.
- (8) II-153,161.
- (9) II-162,170.
- (10) II-171,177.
- (11) II-179.
- (12) II-180,184.

- (13) II-185
- (14) II-186.
- (15) II-207,232.
- (16) II-276.
- (17) II-202.
- (18) Ib.
- (19) II-286.
- (20) II-296.
- (21) II-804.
- (22) II-805.
- (23) II-262, 268.
- (24) II-264.

130. The third chapter relating to asouch or impurity deals with the obsequial rites and winds up with an epilogue on the origin of man from the Great Soul and his final absorption therein. (1)

131. The Samhita of Angiras is an anathema on the use of indigo-dyed cloth and the eating of food touched by low caste people. This marks yet another step in the growth of caste rigour. But the twice-born were yet mutually tolerant of one another. They were only arrayed against the Shudra. "One may always take a Brahmin's food; a Kshatriya's on parva days; a Vaishya's in times of calamity; but never a Shudra's". (2) The protection of cows was also the special solicitude of Angiras who prescribes various penances for striking or maiming a cow. (3) Angiras' excursion into medical science is wild: "Milk and curds are digested within a month; and clarified butter within six months. It is doubtful if oil is digested in the stomach within a year." (4)

132. Yadnyavalkya was followed by a succession of minor Smritis all of which deserve only a passing notice, as they are either mere reproductions or abridgment of the earlier Smritis. Minor Smritis. The introduction of writing into India by the adaptation of the 22 Semetic ideographic letters into the 52 Devnagri alphabets had given a great impetus to the production of new works modelled upon the old which were copied and put into circulation with great facility. But the hasty production of these works left much to seek. They are all dissertations on rituals, penances and penalties with an occasional fling at the Shudras and women. They, however, record the persistence of old customs, Niyog, for instance. "For knowing a woman brought by another for the purpose of procreating a son one becomes purified by bathing in the water of a river and drinking clarified butter." (5) Caste was growing apace with the diversified occupations. "A washerman, a cobbler, an actor, a varud, a kaivarta, a meda and a Bhilla,—these seven are known in the Smritis as degraded castes." (6) But the house of the twice-born was not as yet divided against itself, though the tendency was to caste exclusiveness. "If a twice-born person drinks water touched by Chandal he becomes purified by a Krichhrapad. So the ascetic Apastamb has said." (7) But "raw-meat, clarified butter, oil and oily substances obtained from fruits even when kept in vessels of degraded castes attain to purification when brought out." (8) Raw meat was not yet taboo to the Aryan table, though the eating of beef had by now become sinful. (9) Most of the work of Atri deals with the penance attending on a connection with a Chandal or Shudra woman. But despite recorded penances and penalties such connections grew apace and they account for the large and aried population of the Indian continent. Vyas regards such marriages as perfectly lawful: (10) and in his time Shudra men appear to have taken to marrying Brahmin girls though Vyas damns the offspring of such unions as Chandals and as devoid of any religious merit. But Vyas was reflecting only the social disgrace implied in such unions.

133. The patriarch Daksha has some excellent advice for the house holder

(1) III-118, 385.
(2) M. N. Dutt's Trans., p. 272, §§ 29-31
(3) Ib. § 47.
(4) M. N. Dutt's Trans S. 55.
(5) Atri, 182
(6) Atri, 195.

(7) Atri, 201, 248.
(8) Atri, 247; Likhita, 89.
(9) Atri, 310.
(10) Vyas, Samhita, 7.
(11) Vyas, 9.

who must rise early and take a bath following his minute directions. He must not eat his meal alone but must extend his hospitality to all comers. (1)

134. How to be happy though married is an eternal problem, and the sage Daksh devotes a whole chapter to connubial canons, (2) amongst which occurs his exhortation in favour of suttee: "A woman who after the demise of her husband ascends the funeral pyre, becomes of good conduct and lives gloriously in celestial regions." (3)

135. The Smriti of Sankha is short and there is nothing to distinguish from the rest of its kind.

136. The sage Likhit idolizes the Ganges, (4) counsels the planting of trees, the excavation of wells and tanks, the letting loose of a bull as an obsequial gift on the eleventh day. A daughter may still be appointed to beget a son. (5) The sin tantamount to an act of procuring abortion is committed, if through the negligence of her giver a girl menstruates before her marriage. He who does not give away a daughter in marriage before she attains her puberty becomes degraded." (6)

137. This is a favourite exhortation backed up by the same simile throughout the Smritis. Vyas recognized inter-caste marriages. Exalted position is assigned to the wife as the better half of the man: "The God of Brahma cleft his body into two, of yore. Out of one part sprang the husband, out of the other the wife. This is what the Sruti relates." (7) But the daily duties of the wife as stated by Vyas are to rise before her husband, take a bath, clean the pots, cook his food and manage the household. He is to eat first. She is to live upon his offals. (8) A change in the Aryan dietary was made by Vyas. "A twice-born one, by eating a cooked flesh of an animal wantonly slaughtered (not killed in any sacrifice) suffers the pangs of hell for eternal time, or as long as the sun and stars would shine in heaven. A Brahmin by abjuring meat acquires the merit of a horse sacrifice, all his desires are fructified and he becomes an emancipated self even though he be a householder." (9) This is then the commencement of pure vegetarianism. The tendency is noticeable in the earlier Smritis but a bold bid for a vegetarian diet enjoined on not only the Brahmins, but all twice-born is for the first time made by Vyas who restricts the Aryan diet to merely boiled rice and milk. (10) There is now a definite and distinct cleavage amongst the twice-born themselves. "He who dies with the boiled rice of a Brahmin in his stomach acquires nectar after death. Dying with that of a Kshatriya in his stomach he is punished with indigence in his next birth; with that of a Vaishya in his stomach he is consigned to the vile necessity of eating a Shudra's boiled rice again; and with that of a Shudra's boiled rice in his stomach, he is consigned to the torments of hell in his next life. (11)

138. About the middle of the twelfth century A. D., the sect of Vaishnavas was founded by one Ramanuj Acharya. He taught the supremacy of Vishnu as the Supreme God—superior to Shiva—at Conjeeveram and commenced his preaching and a converting crusade against the older sect of Saivites who paid their last homage

Plous Forgeries.

- (1) Daksha, 49, 51.
- (2) Ib. Ch. IV.
- (3) Ib. Ch. IV, 19.
- (4) Likhit, 7.
- (5) Likhit, 52, 53.
- (6) Vyas, 7.

- (7) Vyas, 14.
- (8) Vyas, 29.
- (9) Vyas, 58.
- (10) Vyas, Ch. III.
- (11) Vyas, 66.

to Shiva. For twelve years Ramanuj lived in Mysore owing to the persecution of the Saivite King of Sri Ranga, after which he returned to the latter place. The sect has many followers in the Deccan where several hundred monasteries are said to have been founded but of which only four now exist. The worship of Ramanuj followers is confined to Vishnu and his consort Lakshmi. The teachers are Brahmins though all Hindus are equally admitted to the sect. The cardinal canon of the creed is the supremacy of Vishnu over all other gods of the Hindu pantheon. He is to be worshipped in five ways corresponding to his five incarnations, such as Krishna, Bhairav and the rest, and in order to popularize this sect by establishing its antiquity and superior sanctity, a number of new Dharma Shastras were forged which though bearing old and honoured names such as those of Harit, Apastamb and Gautam were written with the object of propounding the doctrine of the newly founded sect. They call for no further comment.

139. The tenth and later centuries are remarkable for their output of commentaries on the old Smritis. As previously observed Commentaries. though in form commentaries they were independent works written "to embody the law then current. Of the several commentaries on Manu that were written that by Kulluka Bhatt a native of Gour, the ancient capital of Bengal, is commended by Sir William Jones to be "the shortest, yet the most learned, the deepest, yet the most agreeable commentary ever composed on any author ancient or modern European or Asiatic." (1) Sir William Jones has incorporated this commentary in his translation of Manu.

140. Next in importance is the commentary of Gobind Raja. But this and all other commentaries have but little value now, as most of Manu is obsolete and whatever of it survives has been reproduced in the Mitakshara (§§ 145—150). The same remark applies to the commentaries of Narad and other sages.

III

141. Of all commentaries that by Vidyāneshwar called the Mitakshara (2) on the Institutes of Yādnyavalkya has obtained the foremost place and is now acknowledged to be the most authoritative record of the Laws of the Hindus. All over India its supreme authority is acknowledged, though in Bengal and Bombay it is more revered than followed.

Mitakshara, 1150 A. D.

142. Of Vidyāneshwar little is known beyond the fact that he was the son of Padmānabha Bhatt of the Bharadwaj Gotra and that he lived at Kalyan, probably now Kalyani in the Nizam's Dominions, and was attached to the Court of King Vikramarka Vikramaditya VI who reigned between 1076-1127 A.D. (3) Vidyāneshwar quotes Bhoje and Dhara who flourished in the first half of the same century, and from which his commentary may safely be assigned a date about the middle of that century. He was an ascetic (Paramhans) and belonged to the Vaishnav sect to whose activity in fabricating Dharma Shastras reference has already been made. Vidyāneshwar was thus a native of Deccan and his book consequently obtained great vogue in the western and southern India from where its authority and fame spread to the Gangetic valley and the rest of India.

(1) Intro. Manu, XVII

(2) Lit. Skrt. mit short Akshara letters (i.e.). short abridgment, compendium, epitome.

(3) V. A. Smith's Early History of India, (3rd Ed.), 432.

143. Though itself a commentary Mitakshara has found other commentators. Consequently, we have first the text of Yadnyavalkya, then its explanation by Vidyaneshwar and then other explanations of his explanation. Now as it is a cardinal rule of all commentators that the Smritis are all consistent and reconcilable with one another, and can in no case contradict one another, whereas in fact they do contradict one another, sometimes hopelessly, the commentators have no light task in setting out the altered law while still conforming to the canon of their creed that they shall never depart from the text which being divinely inspired is above human censure.

144. The two commentaries on the Mitakshara are the Subodhini by Visveshwar Bhatt and the Lakshmi Vyakhyan or Ballam Bhatt Tika by a lady author by name Lakshmi Devi whose patronymic was Payagunde. According to tradition this lady was a victim to early marriage and enforced widowhood. As a child widow she commenced to while away her time in the study of Sanskrit under her father and though adopting the traditional method of interpretation she strives to the utmost to enlarge the rights of her sex, but which unfortunately could not penetrate the iron conservatism of the age which was too well agreed on the ruthless subjection of women. Visveshwar's comments explain only selected passages but Lakshmi Devi gives a full and continuous verbal interpretation of the Mitakshara accompanied by lengthy discussions. She generally advocates latitudinarian views, and gives the widest interpretation possible to every term of Yadnyavalkya. Her views are held in comparatively small esteem and are hardly ever cited by the Shashtris. <sup>(1)</sup>

145. The Mitakshara follows the Institutes of Yadnyavalkya in its tripartite division of the work into, <sup>(1)</sup> Achar, <sup>(2)</sup> Vyvhar and <sup>(3)</sup> Prayaschit parts and contains 1,185 slokas (couplets). Of these only a section of the second division treating of partition and inheritance has direct legal value. Its opening slokas 1-9 deal with invocation and the difference between Dharma (duty) and Adharma (sin). In slokas 4-5 Vidyaneshwar mentions the following 20 Itis whose works must be studied :—

- |                  |                 |
|------------------|-----------------|
| 1. Manu.         | 11. Katyayan.   |
| 2. Atri          | 12. Brihaspati. |
| 3. Vishnu.       | 13. Parasar.    |
| 4. Harit         | 14. Vyas.       |
| 5. Yadnyavalkya. | 15. Shankha     |
| 6. Ushana.       | 16. Likhit.     |
| 7. Angira.       | 17. Daksh.      |
| 8. Yam.          | 18. Gautam.     |
| 9. Apastamb.     | 19. Shatatap.   |
| 10. Samvart.     | 20. Vashishth.  |

146. He says that all these works are authoritative and they only supplement one another, and both must be regarded as authoritative even when they contradict each other but then one is free to follow the one or the other. <sup>(2)</sup>

147. He then enters into the discussion of a Brahmachari, classifying all society into (i) Brahmin, (ii) Kshatriya, (iii) Vaishya, and (iv) Shudra, of whom the first three are Dwija (twice-born) whose life is regulated by the Vedic ritual. <sup>(3)</sup>

(1) W and B. H. L. 17.

(2) Mit. vv. 4-5.

(3) Ib. S. 10.

He then sets out the rituals to be followed in securing impregnation, and the periodical rites to be performed till the child is six months old when it is to be given food. (1) A Brahmin boy should be invested with the sacred thread in his eighth year from the time of conception, a Kshatriya in his 11th and a Vaisya in his 12th year. (2) The remaining few verses detail the mode of cleaning the body and the like and the study of the Vedas. (3) The next few verses deal with marriage. (4) Vidyāneshwar expressly dissents from the view of Manu and the rest permitting inter-marriage between the twice-born and the Shudra. (5) He repeats the earlier text in favour of limited polygamy permitting the Brahmin three wives, the Kshatriya two and the rest one wife each. (6) He recites the usual eight forms of marriages, reprobates re-marriage of widows or their duty to procreate a son to their deceased husband (7) and does not omit to emphasize the woman's perpetual dependence on man. (8) Inter-caste marriages were still in vogue but they were only confined to the twice-born (9) though popular opinion increasingly disfavoured such marriages. (10) The rest of the chapter repeats the old rules relating to ritual and the duty of each caste. The second chapter relating to Vyavhar (or social duty) commences with the rules of common morality, duty of the king, the law of mortgage, the rate of allowable interest, the rules of evidence and the appraisement of oral evidence. (11) His rules about written deeds (12) are mere reproductions of the earlier sages, already mentioned. So are his rules about ordeals. (13) His subsequent sections on partition and inheritance, comprising 307 verses being his commentary on Yādnyavalkya's 36 verses on the subject, have been translated by Colebrooke and are the foundation of the modern Hindu Law of partition and inheritance. As such they will be referred to in the ensuing commentary.

148. The rest of his Smṛiti has no present value. It deals with the subject of boundary disputes, (14) delicts, (15) bailments, (16) contract of service, (17) duties of a king, and an unclassified miscellany of precepts, principles, duties and penalties which must, if ever literally enforced, have made the life of the bewildered Aryan intolerably hard and mechanically monotonous.

149. The third chapter relating to ceremonial purity and impurity closes the work. It has no immediate value to the lawyer. As previously stated what is now accepted by the Courts as the Mitakshara is a translation of Vidyāneshwar's comments on Yādnyavalkya, chapter ii (Dayabhag section) and on this meagre foundation the vast superstructure of the Hindu Law of Partition and Inheritance has been reared by the Courts.

150. The Mitakshara has gained its present ascendancy merely through the accident of its first discovery by the European scholars and the translation of its 'dayabhag' portion by Colebrooke in 1810 under the patronage of Government which obtained wide currency and readily secured the imprimatur of the courts who held it to enshrine all the sacred laws of the Hindus regulating the succession and inheritance to their property. (18) Hindu writers wrote their Dharm Shastras either in the form of Nibandhs (i.e., treatises or

(1) Mit S. 12.

(2) Ib. S. 54.

(3) Ib. Ss. 15-44.

(4) Ib. Ss. 45-75.

(5) Ib. S. 56.

(6) Ib. S. 57.

(7) Ib. S. 75.

(8) Ib. S. 87.

(9) Ib. S. 88.

(10) Ib. S. 90.

(11) Ss. 241-457.

(12) Ss. 458-477.

(13) Ss. 478, 492.

(14) Ss. 602, 625.

(15) Ss. 626-676.

(16) Ss. 669-676.

(17) Ss. 677-687.

(18) See Mandlik's Hindu Law, Intr XLIX, et seq

digests) or Tikas (i.e., commentaries) but whether they were one or the other in form, they were usually both alike in substance, since they were both founded on old texts, in which the writers incorporated or interpolated all the accepted usages then current. How far this was done in each case naturally depended upon the idiosyncrasy of the writer. If he was one with a conservative trend of mind disapproving all new fangled innovations he rigidly excluded them from his text or only alluded to them with a view to condemn them. If on the other hand, he was a reformer he readily welcomed the changes and thus gave them wider currency by according them his support. The authors of the Dayabhog and Mayukh belong to the latter class, while the author of the Mitakshara belongs to the former. He was an erudite pandit but a stern and unbending Tory who overruled all encroachments upon established usages •being of opinion that nothing that is tried by time can fail to be good for the people.

151. The Dayabhog of Jimut Vahan which rules Bengal is only a chapter on Partition and Inheritance of a general work or Digest of religious and civic duty called the "Dharma Ratna."

The Dayabhog.

This work, like the Mayukh and Smriti Chandrika, is in the form of Nibandhs or Digests rather than commentaries and their purpose is to expound the law, and at the same time to inculcate and lay emphasis on the special doctrines which their author specially favoured. The common characteristic of them all is that they quote the same text but draw their own deductions therefrom by a process of reasoning and reference to the rules of construction which are said to justify the gloss. Hindu writers make no distinction between Digests and commentaries and they speak of them both as commentaries.

152. Of Jimut Vahan nothing is known beyond his name, and that he was a Brahmin of the Paribhadriya class and was the author of another work "Kalaviveka," a copy of which in the Library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, bears on it the date 1417 Shak, which corresponds to 1495 A. D. Even his age is a conjecture, though it marks an advance upon the development of Hindu Law as portrayed in the Mitakshara from which it differs upon many essential points on the subject of inheritance. It appears that the works that held the field prior to his appearance were those of Nalayudh, Kulluka Bhatt, and Shulapani. Nalayudh was a Judge of Lakshman Sen the last Hindu King of Bengal, who flourished about the end of the twelfth century, and whose work is lost, though from quotations made from it by other writers it appears to have attained some degree of eminence amongst its contemporaries. Kulluka Bhatt is the celebrated commentator of Manu. He and Shulapani applied the doctrines of the Mitakshara to Bengal till they were overthrown by the Dayabhog of Jimut Vahan. Jimut Vahan quotes the earlier writers, such as Bhoj Deva, (1) Gobind Raja, (2) Chandeswar, (3) and Vachaspati Misra, (4) which furnish data for a rough computation of his own age. The freedom with which Jimut Vahan discusses the doctrines of Vachaspati Misra as contained in his treatise, Vivad Chintamani, is stated to show that the two writers were contemporaries. Jimut Vahan professes to base his treatise on the precepts of Manu which he says, have not been fully comprehended. He then cites Manu, Narad, Gautam, Baudhayan, Sankha, Likhit, Yadnyavalkya and other older sages and upon their authority refutes the doctrines of the Benares and Mithila school, supporting his own by an appeal to reason oftener than to precepts and

(1) Dayabhog XI-2, 22; XI-2, 29

(2) Ib. XI-2, 28; XI-2, 29.

(3) Ib. 11, 27; IV, 3, 23; XI-14; XI-4, 3.

(4) Sarv. Inh., p. 402.

precedents. The fact that Jimut Vahan frequently states and refutes the Mitakshara doctrines clearly shows that after obtaining ascendancy in Bengal they were in a decadent state and Jimut Vahan who voiced the popular view tries to explain them away without directly condemning them as based on fallacious reasoning.

153. The Dayabhog like the Mitakshara became the text for several commentaries, the earliest of which was composed by Srinath, himself an author of a work on Inheritance. The Dayabhog appears to have had its early struggle for fame. Till the early part of the sixteenth century it is mentioned by no other writer. Mr. Ghose opines that Jimut Vahan was attached to the Court of the King Jalaluddin Shah, a Hindu convert to Mahomedanism, who despite his conversion continued to patronize pundits and he thinks that the fact Jimut Vahan strives out for individual rights in property with the power of alienation refuting the old notions of co-parcenary rights with its consequent survivorship is due to the influence of his patron. To it he ascribes also the inclusion of females and the sister's son amongst heirs. This argument would have been plausible if Jimut Vahan had made any effort at the secularization of law. At the same time he has striven to modernize and reform the Orthodox doctrines of the Mitakshara which probably accounts for its neglect for about 200 years till its doctrines were vigorously inculcated and given vogue by Raghunandan and other pundits of Navadwip who were formally consulted and influenced the decisions of the Mahomedan Courts. On the establishment of the British Courts these pundits continued to be consulted and Warren Hastings commissioned them to compile a code which was translated and become known as Halhed's Gentoo Code. As such Jagannath who was a pundit of the old Sudder Court compiled a Digest which became currently known as "Colebrooke's Digest." For long these compilations held the field as original copies of the Sanskrit works were as rare as they were unreliable.

154. Jimut Vahana's Dayabhaga is to Bengal what the Vyavhar Vyahar Mayukh. Mayukh is to Bombay, an authority modifying the Mitakshara wherever it expressly differs from it. In form it is an encyclopædia of the sacred law and ethics of the Hindus which its author Nilakant Bhatt dedicated to his patron King Bhagwant Deo by whom it was inspired. The work as a whole is named after the patron, the "Bhagwant Bhaskar," that is "the sun of Bhagwant." This "Sun" consists of twelve Mayukhs or "rays" dealing with twelve different topics as follows :—

- (1) Samskar Mayukh (Sacraments)
- (2) Achar Mayukh (Rituals)
- (3) Samay Mayukh (Festivals and religious rites)
- (4) Shradh Mayukh (Obsequies)
- (5) Niti Mayukh (Polity)
- (6) Vyavhar Mayukh (Social duty comprising civil and criminal law)
- (7) Dan-Mayukh (Gifts)
- (8) Utsarg Mayukh (Dedication of tanks, wells, etc.)
- (9) Pratishth Mayukh (Consecration of idols and temples)
- (10) Prayaschit Mayukh (Penance)
- (11) Suddhi Mayukh (Purification)
- (12) Santi Mayukh (Propitiation of evil spirits).

155. Of all these rays the sixth is the one which deals with law and as such possesses a direct legal value. This, like the rest of the rays, is merely a compilation based on ancient texts interspersed with explanations, both original and borrowed from other writers, on law.

166. Of the author of Mayukh all that is known is that he was a Deshasth Maratha Brahmin born in Benares about 1600 A. D., and wrote his work under the patronage of Bhagwant Deo or Yuddha Sur, a Rajput Prince of the Sangara tribe who ruled over the town of Bhareha near the confluence of the two rivers Chambal and Jamna, whose obligations are thus acknowledged in his concluding verse :—

“ Thus ends the Vyavhar Mayukh of the Bhagwant Bhaskar composed by Bhatt Nilkanth, son of Shankar Bhatt who was the jewel of learned men, the head of those who have travelled over the Mimansa (ocean) from one end to the other, and compiled under the orders of Sri Bhagwant Deo, the protector of the whole world, who is the Lord of Kings, and an ornament of the progeny of Sagar ”. (1)

167. In the previous verse he describes his patron Bhagwant Deo as the reigning King of Bhara town situate in the vicinity of the confluence of the rivers Charmanvati and the Jumna. It is needless to add that this tract was then as it is now dominated by the Orthodox Mitakshara school.

168. Hindu writers wrote their Dharmashastras either in the form of Nibandhs (i.e., Treatises or Digests) or Tikas (i.e., Commentaries) but whether they were one or the other in form, they were both alike in substance since they were both founded on the old texts in which the writers incorporated all the accepted usages then current. Vyavhar Mayukh is in form a Nibandh and though it is independent of the Mitakshara, it differs from it but little, except that it recognizes the sister as heir to her brother (2) and treats the estate inherited by the daughter as her stridhan. It also prescribes a special rule of succession to stridhan technical and non-technical, following the Mitakshara as regards the devolution of the former but providing for the inheritance of the non-technical stridhan by the male issue in preference to the female issue. (3) While the Mitakshara is nominally paramount in the Bombay Presidency it is subject to the Mayukh which is the accredited work in that Presidency to interpret and supplement it; but only so as to harmonize the doctrines of the two so far as that is reasonably possible. (4)

169. The four marginally-noted works are those which are regarded as possessing special authority in the Madras Presidency. (5)
(1) Dayavibhag Of these the Dayavibhag was written by Madhaviya in the latter half of the fourteenth century. He was a minister of several kings of the Vijaynagar dynasty. The author of Saraswati Vilas is said to be Pratap Rudra Deo a king of Orissa, who was a contemporary of Chaitanya and reigned between 1503-1524 A. D. The work was probably composed by one of his court pandits. It is not only an authority in the Madras Presidency but also in Orissa.

The Smriti Chandrika was written by Devanna Bhatt in the middle of the 13th century; while of Varad Raja, the author of Vyvhar Nirnay, all that can be conjectured is that he was probably a Tamil and lived at the end of the 16th or beginning of the 17th century.

(1) Postscript to Mayukh. Ch. XXII-2-7 (Mandlik H. L., p. 166)

(2) Mandlik H. L., p. 81

(3) Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B 385 (387).

(4) Vasudeo v. Venkatesh, 10 B. H. C. R. 139; Krishnaji v. Pandurang, 12 B. H. C.

R. 65; Gajabai v. Shahajirao, 17 B 114 (118);

Kesser Bai v. Hunsraj, 30 B 431 (442) P.C.

Bhagwan v. Waru Bai, 52 B. 800 (812);

Dayal Das v. Savitri Bai, 34 B. 385 (390)

(5) Collector of Madura v. Muttu Rama-linga, 12 M. I. A. 897; 10 W. R. 17 P.C.

160. Vivad Chintamani, and Vyvhar Chintamani written by Vachapati Misra are held in special esteem in the Mithila country. So are the other two works, Vivad Chandra and the Ratnakar. Vivad Chintamani was probably composed about the middle of the fifteenth century. The Ratnakar was composed under the superintendence of Chandeshwar minister of Harsingh Deo, King of the Mithila in 1314 A. D. Chandeshwar is also the reputed author of other tracts.

But Colebrooke considers Lakshmi Devi to be the author of the works though she published them under the name of her nephew. The name "Vivad Chandra" owes its title to the tenth reigning prince Chandra Singh, grandson of Harsingh Deo.

161 Two special prose works on adoption, the Dattaka Chandrika <sup>(1)</sup> and Dattaka Mimansa <sup>(2)</sup> hold a high place in the estimation of Hindu lawyers in all parts of India. But of these the former work as now extant is said to be a forgery prepared by one Raghumani, Mr. Colebrooke's Sanskrit tutor to support the claim of the plaintiff, an adopted son to share equally with an after-born son in the case of one Gopi Krishna v. Radha Kant which was then pending in the Supreme Court at Calcutta but which was compromised before proceeding to trial. The parties were Kayasths and the property in dispute a valuable Zemindari. According to the older authorities the adopted son gets only a fourth of the estate <sup>(3)</sup> but Dattak Chandrika allows him a moiety.

162. There is a long but by no means an illuminating discussion on the subject in the Dattak Mimansa <sup>(4)</sup> in which however the Chandrika is cited. <sup>(5)</sup> The latter admits the old rule but excepts the Shudras in a long argument, <sup>(6)</sup> which considering its undue length and emphasis is out of all proportion to its usual succinctness, and might be, probably was, an interpolation but it does not prove that the entire work is a forgery as is contended for by several writers on Hindu Law. <sup>(7)</sup> Indeed, it is of the essence of literary forgeries of this character that something new should be inserted into what was old and venerated as such and there was little risk of detection at a time when all such works circulated in manuscripts and the text of no two manuscripts agreed. The work bore for its author the fictitious name of Kuver.

The Dattak Mimansa is written by Nanda Pandit who is the author of other legal works of which his commentary on the Institutes of Vishnu called Vijyanti and that on the Mitakshara called Pratit Akshara are still extant. The Dattak Mimansa has been treated by the Privy Council as a work "which has had a high place in the estimation of Hindu lawyers in all parts of India, and has become embedded in Hindu Law, but that caution is required in accepting the glosses of Nanda Pandit in the Dattak Mimansa where they deviate from or add to the Smritis". <sup>(8)</sup>

(1) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 41, 2 P. C.; Damodajir v. Collector, A. L. J. 927 (931); Nagvadas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P. C.; Asita Mohan v. Nirode Mohun, 20 C. W. N. 901 (910) In Bowbay the Dattak Chandrika and Dattak Mimansa are taken to supplement the Mitakshara and the Mayukh-Laxmipati v. Venkatesh, 41 B. 815 (887).

(2) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P. C.; Radha Mohun v. Hardar Bibi, Ib. 460 P. C.; Puttulal v. Parbati, 87 A. 359 (867) P. C. as to which see post;

Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh, Ib. 604 (618.)

(3) Vashishth, XV.9; Mitakshara 1—11.

(4) Section, VI 15-7.

(5) Ib. 8

(6) Dattak Chandrika, V. 29-34.

(7) Sarkar's Adoption, (2nd Edition), pp. 124, 125, Ghose's Hindu Law (3rd Edition) 664.

(8) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 42 P. C.; Radha Mohun v. Hardar Bibi, Ib. 460 P. C.; Puttulal v. Parbati, 87 859 (867) P. C. in which the gloss of Nanda Pandit was not followed.

163. Two other works the Dattak Tilak and Dattak Siddhant Manjari on the same subject bear similar stamp of suspicion, being, it is said, prepared to support the validity of the simultaneous adoptions of two sons, then questioned in a case in the Supreme Court before whom they were cited. (1) Other special works on the same subject such as Dattak Nirnaya, Dattak Didhiti, Dattak Darpana, and Dattak Kaumudi are also not free from the same suspicion. But with the exception of the Mimansa and the Chandrika they have all passed into oblivion and even their survival is not due to their merit but to the fact that they happened to be the first to fall into the hands of an English translator, Mr. J. C. Sutherland, who in his preface dated 1st July 1819, admits having completed it in his leisure moments in five years. Both these works are written in a style which renders them of little practical value, while what is not obscure is obsolete, as for instance, the view of Mimansa that a widow cannot adopt at all even though she might possess the express authority of her husband, (2) or that a woman cannot adopt her brother's son. (3) On several other points set out in the sequel these books have ceased to count.

164. The age of the Mimansa cannot be ascertained but they both belong to the same critical age when legal texts appealed to divine sanction rather than to human reason for their authority. Of the two the Chandrika preceded the Mimansa.

165. This closes the first period of Hindu Law. Its second stage is one of elucidation and exposition by European writers who charged with the duty of administering the Hindu civil law in determining their personal relations were naturally first anxious to know something of that law at first hand.

166. It is a general principle that the private law of a community is not to be affected by a change of rulers, except on points upon which it conflicts with the public law. The mere establishment of a court to administer the law "according to justice and right" does not of itself imply any change in the law to be thus administered. (4)

167. Both the Hindu and Mahomedan rulers of India followed the same policy, but they mostly left its elucidation to the Shashtris who were not above moulding their opinions to suit the requirements of their patrons. But even the native rulers felt the necessity of a compact and codified statement of Hindu Law and the Emperor Aurangazeb had one such digest compiled by one Raghunandan, a learned Shashtri of Bengal, who divided his work into 27 books comprising every branch of Hindu Law. This work obtained publicity under the title of Fatwai Alamgiri. Sir William Jones possessed a copy of the five large volumes but he evidently regarded the work as too diffuse to be of much value to the courts.

IV

168. The first European settlers who interested themselves in India were the Dutch East India Company which though incorporated in 1602 had really commenced its existence in 1595. Four years later a similar company was formed in England and in the following year it received its charter from Queen Elizabeth. It conferred on the company a trade monopoly for

(1) Monmotho Nath v. Onanthnath, 1 J. (N.S.) 24.

(2) Dattak Mimansa, Ss. 1, 27, 28.

(3) Ib. 34, 35.

(4) In re, Khandas, 5 B 154

fifteen years which was made perpetual by James I in 1609. It conferred on it the power to make laws and ordinances for the government of factors, masters, mariners and other officers employed on their voyages and to punish offenders by fine or imprisonment. These laws and ordinances originally consisted mainly of regulations for the guidance of its factors and apprentices. This charter was renewed from time to time with ever-increasing powers till by the charter of 1661 they were given "power and command" over their fortresses and were authorized to appoint governors and other officers for their government. The Governor and Council of each factory were empowered "to judge all persons belonging to the said Governor and Company or that shall be under them, in all causes, whether civil or criminal, according to the laws of this kingdom, and to execute them accordingly." The first settlement of the company was at Madras and it had been constituted a presidency in 1651. Prior to 1878 petty cases against persons belonging to the settlement were disposed of by two or more officers of the company who sat in the "choultry". But in that year the agent and council at Madras decided that under the charter of 1661 they had the power to judge all persons living under them in all cases, whether civil or criminal, according to the English Laws and in accordance with the decision the Governor and Council commenced their sitting in the fort chapel every Wednesday and Saturday to hear and judge all cases. But this High Court did not supersede the justices of the choultry who continued to decide petty cases. This procedure became a model to be followed in the other settlements of the company.

169. In 1661 the port and island of Bombay was ceded to the British Crown as a part of the dowry of Catherine of Braganza and it was leased to the East India Company on an annual rent of £10, while in Bengal the battle of Plassey in 1757 turned the tide in favour of the company which secured the Divan or the revenue administration of Bengal and Behar by a grant dated 17th August 1765 though the native officials continued actually to collect the revenues till 1772. But though the servants of the company amassed fabulous fortunes during their short stay in the country, the company itself became financially involved. In 1773 it applied to Parliament for pecuniary assistance. It passed two Acts one to relieve it out of its financial embarrassment and another to control its management. This was the Regulating Act of 1773. <sup>(1)</sup> It declared the supremacy of Bengal over the other presidencies and confirmed the appointment of Warren Hastings who had already been appointed Governor-General of the company's territories. It reserved to the crown the power of establishing a Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William which was constituted by a charter dated 26th March 1774 till its suppression by the establishment of the High Court in 1861. It conferred plenary jurisdiction on the Supreme Court over all the inhabitants of Calcutta "provided that their inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party, shall be determined in the case of Mahomedans, by the laws and usages of Mahomedans, and in the case of Gentus by the laws and usages of Gentus; and where only one of the parties shall be a Mahomedan or Gentu by the laws and usages of the defendant". <sup>(2)</sup> This was, however, a mere legislative expression of Warren Hasting's plan for the determination of justice proposed and adopted by the company in 1772 who provided that "Moulvies or Brahmins" should respectively attend the courts

(1) 18 George, III. Ch. 68. In its "short title" this Act is described as an Act of 1772 because Acts then dated from the beginning of the Session in which they were passed.

(2) Ib. 8s. 18, 14.

to expound the law and assist in passing the decrees. (1) Subsequently when the Parliament invested the Governor-General in Council with the power of making regulations, the exact words of Warren Hastings's plan were incorporated into the first regulation (2) enacted by the Bengal Government on the 17th April 1780, S. 27 of which provided "that in all suits regarding inheritance, marriage, and caste, and other religious usages or institutions, the laws of the Koran with respect to Mahomedans, and those of the Shaster with respect to Gentus, shall be invariably adhered to". This section was re-enacted in the following year, in the revised code with the addition of the word "succession" and was repeated in the Parliamentary statute passed in 1780 known as the East India Company Act (3) and numerous subsequent enactments. (4)

170. No sooner were these provisions placed on the statute book than Sir William Jones, then a Judge of the Supreme Court felt the necessity of Digests and authentic translations. For in an address delivered by him on the 19th March 1788 as President of the Asiatic Society while commending the policy of administering their own laws to the conquered people he doubted the integrity of his pandit consultants and strongly advocated the preparation of reliable digests after the model of Justinian and the translations of authentic legal texts. Warren Hastings himself had a code compiled named the Vivadarnav Setu but it was too meagre to be useful. It consisted merely of assorted texts on various subjects of Hindu Law to which were added short notes taken from authoritative commentaries. It was translated by Hales from its Persian version. Another similar Digest was prepared by a lawyer of Mithila whose name Colebrooke gives as Suvern Trivedi. His work was named Vivada Saranava. This was followed by Jagannath's Digest composed in 1796 under H. T. Colebrooke's direction. It differed from Halhed's Digest only in degree, not in kind. It too was a collection of assorted texts on only the two subjects of contracts and succession to which Jagannath had added his own elucidatory gloss. It was named the Vivad Bhagnarnava and was translated by H. T. Colebrooke who published it in 1796 in three volumes under the patronage of the Marquis of Cornwallis, then the Governor-General of India. This work is at times still quoted but it appears to have been intended as a practical manual rather than a learned treatise on Hindu Law. As it is, its part which deals with contracts is practically obsolete being superseded by the Statute Law and even as regards succession it has ceased to be a safe guide in view of the advance in research since made, and the many disputed points of Hindu jurisprudence being set at rest by the decisions of the court of ultimate appeal.

171. The next and last epoch in the development of Hindu Law may be said to open with the publication of independent treatises and of these the works of Sir Thomas Strange, Chief Justice of Madras, and Sir William Macnaughten may be regarded as the pioneers. Both these authors had collected all the materials then available to them for the purpose of compiling serviceable manuals for the use of courts. Macnaughten referred a large number of abstract questions to the Shastries and recorded their responses in his publication, while Sir Thomas Strange devoted his retirement from judicial office in compiling two volumes of Hindu Law in which he essayed the task of stating the leading

(1) Rule 23.

(2) Reg. 1 of 1781, Ss. 17, 21.

(3) 21 George, III C. 70.

(4) 37 George, III C. 142, S. 13; Bom.

Reg. LV of 1827, S. 26; Act, LV of 1872, S. 5 (Punjab Laws Act) as amended by Act XII of 1878.

principles of law in his own language. The courts were meanwhile engaged in the solution of such questions as came before them and the Privy Council equally solicitous of grappling with its numerous complicated problems delivered considered judgments which have gone far to set at rest the legal logomachies with which the Hindu text books teem and which like the figure of the Sphinx equally favour opposing views.

172. Sir William Hay Macnaughten was born in 1793. He came to India as a cavalry cadet on the Madras Establishment and used his ample leisure in acquiring the Persian and other Oriental languages. In 1822 he was appointed Registrar of the Sudder Diwan, and while serving in this capacity, he published three volumes of the Reports of decided cases, his "Considerations on Hindu Law" and "The Principles and Precedents of Mahomedan Law." In 1829 he published his "Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law" in two volumes the first volume comprising a statement of primary rules relative to the doctrine of inheritance, contracts, civil procedure, evidence and ordeals while in the second volume he published a selection of legal opinions on the subject of Inheritance illustrative of his first volume. The next year Macnaughten was transferred to political service in which his distinguished career was cut off by his assassination by the Afghans in December 1841.

173. Most of the topics dealt with in his work, such as those relating to procedure, evidence and ordeals have since been superseded by the Statutory Law, while the remainder of his work would be now considered to be too meagre to possess any but historic interest.

174. For the same reason Sir Thomas Strange's work is equally out of date. Its first appearance in 1825 marked a departure from the conventional garb of commentaries and Digests in which garb all Hindu Law books had hitherto appeared. Sir Thomas Strange was the first to essay the task of stating the first principles in the more intelligible form of dissertations on the following leading twelve topics: (1) Property in general, (2) Marriage, (3) Paternal relations, (4) Adoption, (5) Slavery, (6) Inheritance, (7) Disabilities to inherit, (8) Charges upon the Inheritance, (9) Partition, (10) Widowhood, (11) Testamentary power and (12) Contracts.

175. Mr. Sutherland, the nephew of Colebrooke the Company's Judge at Mirzapur was at the same time busy in the field of translation. To him and Colebrooke Hindu lawyers must tender their acknowledgments for their earnest endeavours to first unlock the treasures of their legal literature. But the value of the sacred texts has never been more correctly appraised than by Sir Thomas Strange who truly observed in his addenda as follows: "To those who have made the Hindu Law any part of their study, it cannot appear strange that it is so unsettled and contradictory. Many of the opposing writers are, in point of credit, equal to each other; and, regardless of consistency, texts are adopted by each for the purpose of sustaining his own particular doctrine. The obsolete, is confounded with the acknowledged, law. The context is often omitted, and passages which ought to be relatively considered, are quoted as if they were absolute and independent in themselves. We cannot, therefore, wonder that so little satisfaction is to be obtained from authority;—nor can we but lament that some effort has not long since been made, to distinguish and separate those which are, from those which are not rules of action."

176. A large number of other books following the same model appeared from time to time but they have long since gone out of print and are now impracticable. Mayne's Hindu Law which still holds the field as a standard work on the subject made its first appearance in 1878. In its preface he wrote "I have endeavoured in this work to show, not only what the Hindu Law is, but how it came to be what it is. Probably many of my professional readers may think that the latter part of the enquiry is only a waste of time and trouble, and that, in pursuing it, I have added to the bulk of the volume without increasing its utility. It might be sufficient to say that I have aimed at writing a book, which should be something different from a mere practitioner's manual." This is indeed true, only too true as every practitioner knows to his cost. The requirements of the court-room do not favour recondite antiquarian research nor will the antiquarian find in a law book sufficient details to satisfy his craving. However, this work set the pace for other works on the subject.

177. The executive and statutory declarations above referred to (§ 169) have not prevented the modification of Hindu Law by statute. Hindu Law modified by Statute. As a part of the religious system, Hindu Law, strictly speaking, could not be amended by the legislature which disclaims all authority to interfere with religion. But the slow evolution of Hindu society and the secularization of their law by its emergence from the thralldom of religion was the natural outcome of the social emancipation which followed the infusion of western ideas into a country to which all portals of knowledge not embedded in their Shastras had been closed. And as social ideas underwent a change a changed view was forced on the legislature, which though ever reluctant to pioneer social reform, is at times constrained to bow to the overpowering pressure of public opinion. Such has been the history of the two Acts—the Freedom of Religion Act, 1850 <sup>(1)</sup> and the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856. <sup>(2)</sup>

178. Under the Shastric Law the loss of caste entails forfeiture of inheritance. So it is stated in the Mitakshara. "An impotent person, an outcaste and his issue one lame, a madman, an idiot, a blind man, and a person afflicted with an incurable disease, as well as others similarly disqualified must be maintained, excluding them however, from participation."<sup>(3)</sup> The injustice of this rule was soon felt by the British Judges who being nurtured in an atmosphere of more tolerant jurisprudence could not understand why the mere forfeiture of caste should entail such dire penalty not only upon the apostate but on all his issue. The missionaries who were hampered in their evangelical enterprise equally pleaded for the removal of this disability. Consequently, in 1832 a Regulation of the Bengal Code enacted that "whenever in any civil suit the parties to such suit may be of different persuasions, when one party shall be of the Hindu and the other of the Mahomedan persuasion, or where one or more of the parties to the suit shall not be either of the Mahomedan or Hindu persuasions, the laws of those religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws they would have been entitled."<sup>(4)</sup> As the territories of the East India Company expanded beyond the limits of the Bengal Code it became necessary to give the Regulation a wider operation; in 1850 an Act was accordingly passed <sup>(5)</sup> which extended its provisions to the whole of British India <sup>(6)</sup> declaring that no loss of caste shall involve forfeiture of any right to property.

(1) Act XXI of 1850.

(2) Act XV of 1856.

(3) Mitakshara, X-1.

(4) S-9 of Reg. VII of 1832 repealed by Act VI of 1871.

(5) Caste Disabilities Removal Act, (Act XXI, 1850).

(6) See Laws Local Extent Act, S-3 (XV of 1874).

179. This Regulation may then be regarded as the first modification not only of the Hindu Law by statute, but also of the declared policy of Government which had found expression in several legislative enactments both here and in England. It subordinates Hindu Law to the Legislature which has the power to amend it in whatsoever manner it deems expedient. But all the same it is slow to move, and its declared policy has been merely to correct outrageous abuses or flagrant injustice, and that only when the public opinion is sufficiently prepared for its favourable reception, and indeed, presses for it. This is illustrated by another Act passed six years later <sup>(1)</sup> on the pressure of the Bengal social reformers, who headed by Ishwarchandra Vidyasagar started an agitation which culminated in the passing of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act <sup>(2)</sup> with a view to minimize the evils consequent upon infant marriage and its attendant infant widowhood. As previously remarked Hindu society enjoyed far greater liberty in its earlier stages than it has done since the growth of monasticism, with the result that in later years while marriage before puberty was enjoined remarriage after widowhood was strictly prohibited; the only course open to a widow being to immolate herself with the body of her deceased lord or lead the life of severe asceticism. The Hindu hierophant had never studied sociology and the evil which the Act was enacted to check, though it could not combat it, legalized the remarriage of Hindu widows. But despite the good intentions of its framers this piece of legislation was passed in advance of the times and it has practically remained a dead letter and is likely to so remain till the Indian womanhood is sufficiently educated to rise in revolt against the tyrannous custom which condemns her to an early marriage and consigns her to lifelong widowhood.

180. Another liberalizing inroad upon the orthodox view influenced by the Christian missionaries was effected by the Dissolution of Native Converts Marriage Act <sup>(3)</sup> which enables a Hindu convert to Christianity to obtain a dissolution of his or her marriage if in consequence either party deserts or repudiates the other. <sup>(4)</sup>

181. The idea of a will is foreign to Hindu Law. It has become established by the force of judicial decisions on the strength of its affinity to a gift. <sup>(5)</sup> And as regards the wills of Hindus resident in Bengal and in the towns of Madras and Bombay or relating to property therein situate, <sup>(6)</sup> the Hindu Wills Act of 1879 assimilates the procedure for their execution, proof and construction to that contained in the Indian Succession Act. <sup>(7)</sup>

182. Similarly the Indian Majority Act <sup>(8)</sup> overrules Hindu Law as regards the age of majority which is ordinarily now attained on completion of the 18th year. According to Manu majority was attained on completion of the 16th year. <sup>(9)</sup>

183. Similarly, the Guardian and Wards Act <sup>(10)</sup> has to a certain extent superseded the provisions of Hindu Law. The inter-relation between the two will have to be discussed in the sequel.

(1) Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, (XV of 1856).

(2) XV of 1856.

(3) XXI of 1866

(4) Ib. Ss. 4, 5.

(5) Beer Pertab Sahee v. Rajendra, 12 M.

1 A. 1

(6) XXI of 1870. See also Probate and Administration Act (V of 1851).

(7) X of 1865.

(8) IX of 1875.

(9) Manu VIII 27; Himnauth, 1 Hyde, 111.

(10) VIII of 1890.

184. Neither writing nor registration was obligatory under Hindu Law to complete a contract or effect a transfer. In this and other respects the Transfer of Property and the Registration Acts <sup>(1)</sup> have superseded Hindu Law except as to matters referred to in sections 2 and 129. Even as regards S. 2 a recent amending Act <sup>(2)</sup> sweeps away the restriction of Hindu Law as propounded by the Privy Council <sup>(3)</sup> that the transferee must be in existence at the date of the transfer.

185. The Hindu Law of contracts has been superseded by the Indian Contract Act <sup>(4)</sup> the only survival of that law now being the rule of Damdupat which still obtains in the Presidency of Bombay, Berar and in the town of Calcutta.

186. The procedure and rules of evidence which the Hindu Law books describe with some particularity, and which accordingly found a prominent place in the works of Macnaughten and Strange have all been rendered obsolete by the new forensic forms forged by the statutory enactments on the subject. Hindu Law like the archaic laws of other nations set much store by the trial by ordeals, of which the only living vestige is to be found in the questionable provisions relating to special oaths embodied in the Oaths Act. <sup>(5)</sup>

187. The Succession Certificate Act has had equally the effect of abrogating the Hindu Law in so far as it prescribes a procedure for the recovery of debts and the Stamp, Court Fee and the Registration Acts are innovations upon the bucolic simplicity of the Shastric jurisprudence.

188. The Hindu Criminal Law had ceased to be a living force after the decay of Hindu power. The establishment of the British rule did not revive its unequal provisions. Before the enactment of the Indian Penal Code the law administered in the country was the English Criminal Law supplemented in parts by local regulations. The Penal Code breaks in upon several cherished notions of Hindu Law. It abolishes the institutions of Suttee and suicide <sup>(6)</sup> against which as far back as 1830 a regulation was enacted <sup>(7)</sup> which declared Suttee illegal and punishable <sup>(8)</sup> and its abettors guilty of culpable homicide. <sup>(9)</sup> The Code punishes infanticide <sup>(10)</sup> abolishes slavery <sup>(11)</sup> in which respect it merely codifies the pre-existing law passed in 1843 which had already abolished it. <sup>(12)</sup> It substitutes the crime for caste as the true measure of punishment.

189. Not only the legislature but the decisions of the court have tended to modify and modernize Hindu Law. The influence of judicial dicta and decisions upon Hindu Law is necessarily slow and piecemeal, and while the decisions determined by the Privy Council have set the seal of finality upon them, those of the High and other superior courts of India have given rise to a divergence of views which have not a little tended to make the confusion worse confounded. The process by which judicial dicta have modified the Hindu Law comprises (a) the enunciation of rules in accordance with the precepts of justice, equity

(1) IV of 1882 and XVI of 1908.
 (2) Hindu Disposition of Property Act (XV of 1916).
 (3) Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W. R. 359 P. C.
 (4) IX of 1872.
 (5) X of 1873, Ss. 8-12.
 (6) Ss. 306-309.
 (7) Mad. Reg. 1 of 1830.

(8) Ib S-2.
 (9) Ib S-4 (1), (2).
 (10) S-316
 (11) Ib S-370
 (12) 3 & 4 W. IV c-85 S. 88 ; 5 Geo. IV C. 111 ; 6 and 7 Vict. C. 93 Ss. 1, 3, 4 ; Act V. of 1843.

and good conscience upon points on which Hindu Law was wholly silent, or guided by the self-same principle (b) the interpretation of ambiguous or contradictory texts, (c) the application of the principle of analogy with (d) the consequent fertile deductions and corollaries. Up to 1861 when the Shastris were attached to the courts to expound the law, the courts were still dependent upon them for its exposition. But since that year the courts took upon themselves the duty of expounding it and it then marks an epoch when Hindu Law may be said to have become secularized with the result that though Hindu Law at the present day is still technically a part of the religion, it has in practice ceased to be so, though its previous association with religion and the fictions which still pervade its laws of partition and inheritance prevent its development by the legislature which watches its slow and measured progress with no uneasy feeling.

190. The growth of education and the accumulation of wealth have however shaken its foundation and even those born and brought up within the vinculum of Hindu society feel that a time has come when it should be codified and brought up to date. Laissez faire has its limits and the discontent and dissatisfaction felt by the wage-earning members of the family and the vanishing potency of the nucleus are an ever increasing source of the misery and embarrassment of which every well to do household is a living witness. The growth of individualism, the new gospel of wealth and the ever increasing results of personal effort have shaken the faith of the most devout adherents of the old order.

191. Another instance where the intervention of the courts or the Legislature was rendered necessary by the gross inequity of the rule which made the son and the grandson liable as a matter of pious obligation or religious duty to repay the debt of his ancestor is afforded by the primitive notion of law which underlies the sacred texts. In the view of the Hindu Law givers all breaches of contract were sins to be atoned for in the next world. Such was the fate of the debtor whose lot is thus depicted by Narad, "when a devotee or a man who maintained a sacrificial fire, dies without having discharged his debt, the whole merit of his devotion or of his perpetual fire, belongs to his creditor." (1) But this is not all. "He who having received a sum lent or the like does not repay it to the owner will be born hereafter in his creditor's house a slave, a servant, a woman, or a quadruped." (2) Sons are coveted to relieve the impecunious father from this torment. The grandson shall pay the debt of their grandfather, which having been legitimately inherited by the sons has not been paid by them; the obligation ceases with the fourth descendant. Fathers desire offspring for their own sake, reflecting—"this son will redeem me from every debt whatever due to superior and inferior beings." "Therefore, a son begotten by him should relinquish his own property, and assiduously redeem his father from debt, lest he fall into a region of torment." (3) This was the accepted doctrine, repeated and even emphasized by other writers. (4) The obligation to pay was, therefore, personal, and perpetual and it was independent of the existence of any paternal assets in his hands. He was bound to pay because it was his duty to pay and not because he had received any real or assumed benefit from the father. (5) But though this law was clear it was

(1) Narad, iii 10.

(2) 1 Dig. 334.

(3) Narad, iii 4, 6

(4) Katyayan, 1 Dig. 299, 301.

(5) Hunoomanpershad v. Mt. Babooee, 6 M. L. A 421; Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prasad, 5 C. 148 P.C. Narayanamasami v. Samidas, 6 M. 293; Bhagbut v. Girja, 15 C. 717 P. C.

equally unjust, and the courts from early times commenced to limit his liability to the extent of the debtor's assets in his possession. (1) But though this relieved the son in other Provinces the court in Bombay held the duty literally binding upon the son (2) till the Legislature had to intervene to limit it to the assets (3).

192. Another attack upon the orthodox doctrine is made by custom whose march, though slow and imperceptible, has nevertheless in course of years altered Hindu Law beyond all recognition. The force of custom as the precursor and progenitor of all laws is well recognized in the codes of all nations. "Immemorial custom is transcendent law" says Manu (4) Custom might owe its origin to any cause habit, convenience or convention, prejudice or predisposition, ignorance or human folly. In its inception custom is nothing but the mode of life adopted by one or more persons. It is copied by others who feel attracted to it by authority or by the community of thought or feeling. Where custom has not the backing of authority it may have to struggle long for its very existence. In this struggle it might be transformed, modified or destroyed. A number of customs which some time held the field are now treated as repellant to morality. Such is the custom of Niyog or the custom of polyandry, which though at one time popular in Malabar, is now fast disappearing under the self-revealing force of education. Hindu family law is mostly based on custom, the origin of which has been already traced to the primitive instincts of man.

193. Custom is unwritten law peculiar to particular localities. It ceases to be custom the moment it is embodied in law. Such law may be statutory or accepted by common consent in which case it becomes the common law of the land. Such is the common law of England which in its origin and continuance is purely customary (5) and has received, its authority as a law from long and immemorial usage, and its general acceptance throughout the realm

194. Though strictly speaking, this is nothing more than custom, still in legal parlance that term has been restricted in its use only to unwritten usage confined to a particular class or locality; when it becomes universal it passes out of the region of custom. The Greeks divided their laws into written (Lex Scripta) and unwritten (Lex non Scripta) the former being well ascertained and authoritative laws while the latter were customary laws which owed their authority to popular acceptance. This distinction between written and unwritten laws was borrowed by the Romans (6) and it has thence been transferred to English Law which, accordingly, defines custom as unwritten law sanctioned by immemorial usage. The distinction between written and unwritten law was, of course, always artificial and indefensible, and is now rendered the more so in view of the modern tendency to incorporate well established customs into the statute law and preserve in written records even those

(1) Strange, H. L. 167 : 1 Dig. 320 ; Aga Hakee Monte 272, Jamoonah v Mudden 16 227 ; Dyanunee v Brindabun, (1856) S.D.A. of 1866, 97, Kunhya v Bukhtwar, 1 N. W. P. S. D. 8; Rayappa v. Ali Sahib, 2 M. H. C. R. 396; Ponnappa v Pappuvayyanganar, 4 M. 9 (21)

(2) Narasimharao v Antaji, 2 B.H.C.R. 61.
(3) Bombay Hindu Heirs' Relief Act (Bombay Act VII of 1866). See this act printed with the statement of objects and reasons in 2 B. H. C. R. 413-416.

(4) Manu 1-108; To the same effect Apistamb, ii, 11, 19, Gutam, IV. 20, Vashishth, 1-17; Mitakshara, I. S. 3 4; Dayabag, 1-33; Mayukh, I, S. 13.

(5) Hale's History of Common Law, c

iii

(6) Institutes, 1-1, T. 2 : Sa. 3, 9, 10.

which still stand outside the statute. But in the latter case the writing is still only evidence of custom. As a branch of Hindu Law custom plays an important part, and within the limits it is still administered, it modifies or supplements the written law however well established or ascertained, while in the Punjab custom is the first rule of decision in all questions relating to betrothal, marriage, divorce or dower, adoption, guardianship, minority, bastardy, succession, wills, legacies, partitions, gifts and family relations including religious usage or institution, and even alluvion and diluvion.<sup>(1)</sup> In the rest of India the law primarily applicable in these matters is the sacred law, but it is yet subject to the influence of custom. In the preceding pages an attempt has been made to trace its evolution in the light of custom which accounts for the variation of law and the verbal jugglery, interpolations and inventions to which an ancient text was subjected in order to accommodate it to the pressure of necessity. A detailed statement of the existing customs affecting the established Hindu Law will be made in the sequel. For the present it is necessary to state that the Hindu Law administered by the courts is not the law of the Shastras but the law as the people acknowledge and follow in their daily lives, that is to say the law as it is modified by custom or usage.<sup>(2)</sup> The Shastric text is merely evidence of such law, but even so it has no more value than the statement of the English Law by Coke, Hale or Blackstone. As the Privy Council observed: "The duty of an European Judge who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law, is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal, and has been sanctioned by usage. For, under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law."<sup>(3)</sup> In other words, what the courts are pledged to administer is the living Hindu Law of the market place, and not the antiquated aphorisms of the epic era.

195. The Smritis follow the tripartite division of the Vedas<sup>(4)</sup> but their three parts deal with three branches of Dharma or duty, viz., (1) Achar (i.e., ceremonies), (2) Vyavahar (i.e., Social duty which includes legal obligations) and (3) Prayaschit (i.e., expiation). The society assumed and commended throughout including the Mitakshara is a society in which wealth counts for nothing and life of religious asceticism is all in all. All Hindu philosophy is pessimistic. Life is not a gift but an ordeal. It cannot be enjoyed but must be endured. Life is an evil and in the cycle of years the present age is the worst. The end of life is the end of all wordly torments and a step hastening to Nirvan or cessation of reincarnations and an absorption into the Divine Spirit which is the be all and end all of existence.<sup>(5)</sup> It is the supreme beatitude.<sup>(6)</sup> To quicken this state what is required is the practice of austerity.

196. The love of life prolongs life. Its prolongation lengthens the span that separates it from Nirvan. Life is an illusion (Maya). Who cherishes an illusion? The Aryan is, therefore, enjoined to divide life into four stages as a compromise between this stern doctrine and his mundane attachments. An Aryan boy is on birth no better than a Shudra. Before reaching a certain age<sup>(7)</sup>

(1) Reg. XI of 1825, S. 2; Art IV of 1872, S. 5

(2) Krishnamamani v. S. Anando, 4 B. L. R. (O. C.) 231 (287, 288).

(3) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (186).

(4) Divided into three parts, viz., Sambita, Brahmana and Aranyak

(5) Manu, VI-61; Ch. XII-1-126.

(6) Manu VI-81, 82; XII-1-126.

(7) Manu ii-38; Yagnyavalkya, 37; Brahmin before his 16th year, Kashatriya up to his 22nd year and Vaishya up to his 24th year.

he must undergo the Upanayan (1) ceremony which makes him a twice-born. He must then study the Vedas under his Guru. His pupilage lasts till then after which he attains the status of a householder. As such, he must strive for and accumulate no wealth. He must marry but the purpose of marriage is merely to raise a male offspring. For the rest he must adhere to, and perform his appointed duties: "Sacrificing, studying, and giving alms are appointed for the Vashyas and Kshatriyas, and to the Brahman there are in addition receiving gifts, assisting others to sacrifice and teaching the Vedas. To the Kshatriya is ordained the protection of their subjects as the chief duty, for the Vaishya lending at interest, agriculture, trade, and tending cattle are laid down. For the Shudras is laid down the service of twice-born (as the chief duty), or if he cannot thereby earn his livelihood he may become a trader, or studying the benefit of the twice-born, he may assist by various mechanical arts." (2) Even these circumscribed duties he could not perform for long: "When the father of a family perceives his muscles become flaccid and his hair gray and sees the child of his child, let him then seek refuge in a forest." (3) Manu then particularizes the life this hermit is to lead in the forest till he can get rid of life by torments and tortures, privations and self-denials, and even suicide if afflicted with any incurable ailment, when he should "advance in a straight path towards the invincible north-eastern point feeding on water and air till his mortal frame totally decay, and his soul become united with the Divine Essence." (4) The young Aryan becomes a householder from sheer necessity. He must leave that state as soon as he has begotten children from choice. Even as a householder he must abjure wealth. His grain store should be sufficient to last only for a year. If it exceeds that limit he must spend it on sacrifices. (5) In this scheme of life this world, its pleasures and passions, its occupations and attachments play a very subordinate part and legal obligations necessarily share the same fate. Even a casual glance at any Smriti will show that rituals loom large in the author's eye who adverts to legal matters as merely necessary for the guidance and government of the family.

197. Now this ideal of Aryan life has long since become obsolete. The scanty wealth comprising a few pots and pans, a few cattle and a little grain which was all that the Aryan householder was commanded to possess and for the disposal of which a few rough and ready legal rules were laid down is a striking anachronism in these days of growing industrialism and the vast accumulation of wealth. He has shaken off the rituals which fettered his enterprise in the days of Brahmanic supremacy because they were a part of his religion as to which the Government was pledged to be neutral.

198. But in administering the law it has by its declaration of following the sacred texts given them an importance which they had never before possessed and it has stereotyped a system and stunted its growth, which though slow, was yet steadily growing. But now like the law of the Medes and the Persians the laws of the Hindus change not. The joint family has all but ceased to exist but all the archaic rules relating to the joint family still apply. One brother earns the money and the rest share his earnings for the fiction of co-parcenership still dominates the courts.

199. The outstanding features of all these sacred compositions and Legal value of the compilations are:—(1) They are professedly and design-
Smritis. edly Moral Codes treating of civil obligations merely

(1) Lit. Going near Skt. upa near Nayan to go, i.e. going near his spiritual preceptor
(2) Yadnyavalkya, 118, 120

(3) Manu, ch. VI 2
(4) Ib 31
(5) Yad. 124, 125.

as a part of the moral duty of an ideal householder. (2) Wherever legal precepts occur they are consequently treated as rules of ethics and not as mandates of law. (3) The Books are sometimes regarded and spoken of as Codes but they are codes in no sense of the term inasmuch as they do not contain any systematic exposition of the legal doctrine. On the other hand, as already remarked (§ 39) they are a mere collection of aphorisms or Sutras intended to aid the memory in teaching and acquiring religious knowledge. (4) As such, unlike the Laws of Solon, of the Twelve Tables, or the Institutes of Justinian, the Smritis were written by private individuals for the edification of their pupils and generally of those who should care to refer to them but they had no binding force as enactments of a lawfully constituted authority. (5) Since the smritis stood upon their own merits they were mostly records of the prevailing customs accommodated in a certain degree to the idiosyncracies of the writer. (6) No smritis can be safely regarded as free from interpolations. There is, indeed, internal evidence in several of them that many of them were subjected to systematic interpolations at the hands of the glossators. (7) The interpolations were due to the desire of the later writers to popularize their own views by passing them off as the views of revered and established ancient authority. (8) Even whole works have been forged and made to bear the imprimatur of ancient sages. (9) On the whole, however the smritis reflected in the main the manners and customs of the times, modified only by the private opinions of the Brahmin writers who have given them a shape and character consistent with their self-interest as members of the priestly class and as such anxious to preserve their supremacy and power. As regards the titles of the several smritis it appears that some of them bear the names of the princely patrons to whose court the composer was for the time being attached. Some bear the names of the several gods of the Hindu pantheon while a few bear descriptive or fancy names or a combination of one or the other. All smritis claim a divine origin as calculated to insure implicit obedience and all disguise, as far as possible, any reference to their modernity.

200. But these Smritis are no more a legal Code than would be a collection of legal maxims or nemonics prepared by a teacher of mathematics or physics. The so-called codes are no codes at all. They are sutras or aphorisms or legal maxims compiled to aid the memory as aids to teaching and study in which a great deal was elliptical which the glossators have supplied according to their own views of what was left out or understood. Such sutras furnish an apt model for engrafting on them new fangled ideas upon the oldstock thereby insuring their acceptance without scrutiny on the accepted authority of revered antiquity. They in their turn were followed by a host of commentators who busied themselves to define the ambiguities, to curtail the latitude, to apply the principles, to extend the consequences, to reconcile the real or apparent contradictions. But while professing to define the ambiguities they created new ones, while applying the principles they enunciated entirely novel ones, while professing to extend the consequences they drew strange deductions, and in reconciling the contradictions they made them wholly irreconcilable.

201. With the growth of a considerable body of legal aphorisms—many of them chaotic and contradictory—some working rules for their interpretation had to be devised. It is not proposed to refer here to rules which are the negation of logic, such as for instance, the rule enunciated by Yadnyavalkya that where any two texts are contradictory they are both good law. In the sixth or seventh century <sup>(1)</sup> Jaimini collected this rule in his "Mimamsa Sūtras" with the object of introducing some critical insight into his students studying the revealed law. His work does not discriminate between civil law and religious duty, <sup>(2)</sup> the performance of which secures merit. <sup>(3)</sup> Jaimini's aphorisms are themselves highly artificial, and in their turn require voluminous commentaries to expound their meaning. An examination of his work discloses the scholastic method of interpretation—obscurum ab obscurius. For example, he postulates four methods of construction, namely (i) the Sruti; (ii) the Linga; (iii) the Vakya; and (iv) the Prakarna. The Sruti construction is stated to be that which discourages the giving of an unnatural meaning to words when their natural meaning makes the sense clear. Where however some word or words are to be understood to complete the sense—that is the Linga construction; and where one clause or sentence, though appearing isolated and independent, has to be read along with another which amplifies or qualifies it—it is the Vakya or syntactical construction; while a greater liberty taken in the same direction, that is to say, the reading of one text as a part of another text, though independent of it, and though it is, indeed, on quite a different topic, is the Prakarana rule of construction. These are the primary golden rules of Jaimini which he applies at his discretion to the construction of texts which supplied the pabulum for the legal logomachies of the learned of an earlier age, though they now carry but a limited conviction.

202. Jaimini, however, stands on surer ground when he enunciates the following rules which still stand as good to day as when they were originally enunciated :

- (1) Obligatory and non-obligatory texts must be distinguished.
- (2) Established and approved usage has the force of law without reference to the causes which brought it into existence <sup>(4)</sup>.
- (3) Foreign words must be understood in the sense in which they are used in the language from which they are borrowed.
- (4) Every word and sentence must have some meaning and purpose attached to it—or as Karika more pithily puts it—"more words more meaning."
- (5) The construction which makes the meaning shorter and simpler is to be preferred; which is another way of saying that more should not be assumed than the words expressly convey.
- (6) No word or sentence should be ascribed a different meaning at one and the same place.
- (7) All words must be understood to bear their primary meaning.
- (8) An effort must be made to reconcile contradictions—or as the English lawyer would put it—Law favours benignant construction.
- (9) When contradictions are inevitable one has an option to adopt any construction.
- (10) All construction must be contextual.
- (11) All words should be given their natural meaning, unless the context justifies their use as terms of art.

203. To bring Jaimini up to date a great many rules which he regards as sacrosanct will have to be ignored, and many others which he omits, added. For example, when he declares that "Duty arises from Vedic commands, all outside the Vedas must be disregarded" <sup>(5)</sup> he contradicts himself for how can he reconcile it with the sanctity of custom and the whole of the Smṛiti: law which is outside the Vedas? And he ignores the facts which stared him in the face when he declaimed: "The Shishta (wise teaching) of Sruti and Smṛiti

(1) Not in the 18th century A. D., as assumed, for Jaimini's aphorisms are quoted in the Mitākshara—See Max Müller's Six systems of Indian Philosophy, p. 118.

(2) Cf. "what is to be fulfilled as the object of a command is Dharma"—Jaimini 1-i-2.

(3) i.e., "Apurva"—lit. what one had not had before" (i.e.), merit or virtue, or divine approval.

(4) Jaimini 1-iii-7.

(5) Jaimini 1-iii-1.

is that which is not contradicted by the latter" while his "matters sanctioned by the Shastras should have preference" is only a pious hope in view of the transformation which Hindu society underwent in spite of the Shastric inculcations.

204. However since Jaimini wrote, the following further rules have become well established :

(13) In case of two Shastras laying down different rules the latter supersedes the earlier rule.

(13) No rule is enforceable unless it is conformable to current custom.

(14) A judicial rule supersedes the Shastric rule.

(15) The legislature is supreme and it can make or unmake all laws.

The previous discussion will justify these rules. But a few pointed instances will further illustrate them.

205. The Shastras lay down (i) that the son is absolutely liable for his father's debts ; (ii) that a Hindu widow cannot re-marry ; (iii) that forfeiture of caste entails forfeiture of one's inheritance ; and (iv) that the adoption of an only son is invalid ; but the first three rules have been overruled by the legislature ; while the last has been equally overruled by the Privy Council. (1)

206. Hindu Law cannot be understood without reference to caste, (2) a division of the people into four graded classes which is determined by their birth and remains unaltered through life. Hindu Society is divided into two main castes (1) Dwijas or twice-born and (2) the Shudras, or the servile people. This distinction is observed throughout Hindu Law, both ancient and modern. There is often one law for the regenerate and another for the Shudra. But on many points the former are subject to many disabilities from which the latter are free. In the confusion of castes created by the policy of the foreign rulers, who for the first time established a secular rule free from the control of the hierarchy, the question of caste at times presents difficulties. It is specially so in view of the general social upheaval created by the impact of western thought and the consequent abandonment by the regenerates of the customary rituals, and the claim of some of the Shudra castes to the position of Dwijas. The question of caste has thus a place in the historical survey of Indian Law but it is a subject at once so stupendous and complicated that nothing but only a succinct resume can be attempted here.

207. A tribe in its original form is distinguished from a caste by the fact that its basis is political rather than economic or social. The members believe that they all have a common origin, but what holds them together is the community of interest and the need of mutual defence ; and aliens who are willing to throw in their lot with the tribe are usually freely admitted. The Hindu literature both legal and religious, teems with allusions to caste from very early times. The Vedas however, contain no reference to caste, though it is alluded to in the Purushasukta (3) which is considered, to be a modern interpolation and though the earliest Sutras of Apastamb and Baudhayan take its existence for granted. But caste in their time was in a fluid state. They mention only four castes which according to the Census Report of 1901 have now multiplied to nearly 2,400. In Burma caste is so little known that the Burmese language possesses no word for it (1) while in the extreme west, Mr. Hughes-Buller records that when a Hindu in Baluchistan is questioned about his caste he "will often describe himself by the name of the tribal group to which he holds himself attached." (2) It may then be premised that caste as such is peculiar to the India dominated by the priestly Brahmins. Manu traces its origin to the anima mundi (the supreme soul) Brahma who "produced by a thought a golden egg," "in which" he himself was born as Brahma, who for the sake of the prosperity of the worlds, caused the Brahmin, the Kshatriya, the Vaishya and the Shudra to proceed from his mouth, his arms, his thighs and his feet and allotted to these their distinctive duties. The Brahman was enjoined to study, teach, sacrifice, and receive alms; the Kashatriya to protect the people and abstain from sensual pleasures; the Vaishya to tend cattle, trade, to lend money and to cultivate land, while for the Shudra was prescribed the duty of service of the three groups.

(1) Sri Balusa v Sri Balusa, 28 M. 398 P.C. (8) Rig Veda X.90.

(2) Port. Castus pure.

208. Modern ethnologists trace the notion of caste as borrowed from the sacerdotal literature of ancient Persia, (3) in which society is divided into four classes—priests, warriors, cultivators and artisans. "The conjecture is that the relatively modern compilers of the law books having become acquainted with the Iranian legend, were fascinated by its assertion of priestly supremacy, and made use of it as the basis of the theory by which they attempted to explain the manifold complexities of the caste system". (4) But whatever may have been the origin of the concept there can be no doubt that caste has always been and remains to this day a unique institution of India. It would seem that the fair-skinned immigrants through the north-western frontiers found themselves confronted with the aboriginal population of the continent who differed from them in colour, physique, religion and customs. Of these the difference in colour was all in all.

209. Indeed, the term caste is of Portuguese origin having been introduced by the adventurers who followed Vasco Da Gama to the west coast of India. (5) It does not really signify what the Sanskrit writers intended to emphasise by the use of the expression Varnas or colours according to which the Hindu society was classified. There can be no doubt that this superficial difference between the fair Aryan settlers and the dark-skinned aborigines first suggested the classification which, however, did not, as was to be expected, at once assume the rigidity which is its modern attribute. In this respect while the idea might have been borrowed from Persia, which appears again to have imported it from Egypt, it was adapted to new surroundings and in a form totally absent in the country of its birth. For while in Egypt and Persia the sub-division crystallized, the Indian system had its origin in the innate and ineradicable colour prejudice and racial antagonism (6) of which there is no trace in the ancient records of Persia and Egypt, but of which abundant evidence is furnished in the Vedas themselves where the antithesis between the white Arya and the black Dasyas had already assumed a suggestive significance. Thus a Vedic hymn thanks Indra for having killed the Dasyas and "protected the Aryan colour". (7) Other hymns contain invoca-

(1) I—Imperial Gazetteer of India—Ch 6 p. 880.

(2) Baluchistan Census Report, 1901, cited in 1 Imp. Gazetteer, Ch 6, p. 380: Risley's Census Report, 1901 § 851.

(3) Spiegel, Iranische Alterthumskunde, 111, 54-670.

(4) I—Imp. Gaz., Ch. 6, p. 395.

(5) Lat. Castus—purity of breed.

(6) Risley's Census Report, §§ 857-862. Contra Nesfield "Brief view of the caste system of the N.W.P." (1885) who traces caste merely to occupation, has been conclusively disproved. See Gait's 1911 Census Report, (1913) Vol. I, §§ 490-495.

(7) III-34, 9.

tions to destroy the black Dasyas. It would seem that the genesis for caste distinction was thus laid in the deep-rooted colour prejudice which has at all times animated mankind.

210. That the modern Shudra arose out of the Dasyas is equally apparent from the Vedic texts. For instance in Vajasaneyi Samhita <sup>(1)</sup> we read the following: "Whatever sin we have committed against an Arya or against a Shudra." But this word does not occur in the Rig Veda where however Indra's thunderbolt is invoked to protect the Aryas and strike down the "Dasa fiends". The sub-divisions of the Aryas into the three regenerate castes is a later development, mainly the result of diversified occupations for there is nothing but laudatory allusions in the earliest sacred writings to the three twice-born castes. The shackles of sacerdotal creation become first apparent in the post-vedic writings—as for instance in the Puranas and the Dharma Shastras. "Yet in the stage of development portrayed in the law books, the system had not hardened into the rigid mechanism of the present day. It is still more or less fluid; it admits of inter-marriage under the limitations imposed by the rule of hypergamy; it represents caste in the making, not caste as it has since been made. This process of caste-making has indeed by no means come to an end. Fresh castes are constantly being formed. We can trace the origin of their evolution. They seem to proceed on the lines followed in the traditional scheme. The first stage is for a number of families who discover in themselves some quality of social distinction, to refuse to give their women in marriage to other members of the caste, from whom they nevertheless continue to take wives. After a time when their numbers have increased and they have bred women enough to supply material for a jus connubii of their own, they close their ranks, marry only among themselves; and pose as a superior sub-caste of the main caste to which they belong." <sup>(2)</sup>

211. "The principle upon which the system rests is the sense of distinctions of race, indicated by differences of colour, a sense which while too weak to preclude the men of the dominant race from intercourse with the women whom they have captured and enslaved, is still strong enough to make it out of the question that they should admit the men whom they have conquered to equal rights in the matter of marriage." <sup>(3)</sup>

212. But while caste in India has owed its origin to the differentiation in colour, many causes have contributed to multiply it, so that at the Census of 1901 no less than 2,300 distinct castes were recorded <sup>(4)</sup> and there can be no doubt that the number now cannot be far short of 3,000. The causes that are stated to have contributed to this appalling multiplication, are differences due to (i) the tribal groups, (ii) functions or occupation, (iii) sects comprising a small number of castes which commenced life as religious sects founded by philanthropic enthusiasts proclaiming the equality of their followers, (iv) cross-breeding, (v) racial tradition, (vi) migration as where two persons of the same caste migrating to different localities become members of distinct castes discontinuing all connubial connection with each other, (vii) changes of custom; to which might be added, (viii) language, (ix) the worship of different gods, (x) the eating of different food, (xi) other social or religious habit; (xii) pride or prejudice; and (xiii) totemism. "The growth of the caste instinct must have been greatly promoted and stimulated by certain characteristic peculiarities of the Indian intellect—its lax hold of facts, its indifference to action, its absorption in dreams, its exaggerated reverence for tradition, its distinctions, its pedantic tendency

(1) S. 20, 17.

(2) Imp. Gaz. I.Ch. VI, p. 386.

(3) Risley's Cens. Rep. (1901), § 873.

(4) Ib. (1901) 821, 822.

to press a principle to its furthest logical conclusion, and its remarkable capacity for imitating and adopting social ideas and usages of whatever origin." (1)

213. The nature and evolution of the institution of caste is thus described by Sir Denzil Ibbetson in his Census Report on the Punjab: (2) "Thus we see that in India, as in all countries, society is arranged in strata which are based upon differences of social or political importance, or of occupation. But here the classification is hereditary rather than individual to the persons included under it and an artificial standard is added which is peculiar to caste and which must be conformed with on pain of loss of position, while the rules which forbid social intercourse between castes of different rank render it infinitely difficult to rise in the scale. So, too, the classification being hereditary, it is next to impossible for the individual himself to rise; it is the tribe or section of the tribe that alone can improve its position, and this it can do only after the lapse of several generations, during which time it must abandon a lower for a higher occupation, conform more strictly with the arbitrary rules, affect social exclusiveness or special sanctity, or separate itself after some similar fashion from the body of the caste to which it belongs. The whole theory of society is that occupation and caste are hereditary; and the presumption that caste passes unchanged to the descendants is exceedingly strong. But the presumption is one which can be defeated, and has already been and is now in process of being defeated in numberless instances. As in all other countries and among all other nations, the graduations of the social scale are fixed; but society is not solid but liquid, and portions of it are continually rising and sinking and changing their position as measured by that scale; and the only real difference between Indian society and that of other countries in this respect is that the liquid is much more viscous, the friction and inertia to be overcome

(1) Ib § 874 Though out of the 4 castes numerous castes and sub castes have sprung up, the Smritis still recognize only the 4 original castes and as they draw the broad division between the Dwijas and the Shudras, there being one law for the former and another for the latter, the question whether a person belonging to any of the 3,000 castes or sub-castes is a Dwija or not, is often one of great practicality, though it is by no means always easy of solution. As affording some help to the solution of this question the Ethnographic appendices to the Census of India published in 1903 trace the history of the following castes:—

Caste	Classed as	Authority.	Caste.	Classed as	Authority.
Jat ...	Kshatriyas ...	Ethnographic App p. 74	Bhills ...	Shudras ..	162-164
Rajputs ...	Do ...	81-84	Khanger ...		165
Prabhu ...	Twice-born, of Kshatriya origin.	86-91	Raj-khan gara.		166
Marathas ...	Better class as Kshatriyas rest as Shudras being Kunbis.	92-10	Chamar ...		167-175
Nayars ...	Twice born, but doubtful.	131-140	Bahhan ...		176-180
Izhavas ...		141-142	Bagoli ...		181-184
Santal ...		143-146	Baidya ...		185-187
Bhunjioj ...		149-154	Bengal Brahman		188-197
Munda ...		155-161	Khasi ...		198-200
			Lumbu ...		201-206
			Anganis ...		207-210
			Aos ...		211-213
			Wa ...		214-221
			Lusheis ...		222-229

(2) Now reprinted in the Census of India, Vol. I, Ethnographic Appendices (1903), pp. 234, 248, infinitely greater, and the movement, therefore, far slower and more difficult in the former than in the latter. The friction and inertia are largely due to a set of artificial rules which have been grafted on to the social prejudices common to them in the centre of the Punjab, while they can now hardly be said to exist on the purely Mahomedan frontier; and I think that we shall see a still more rapid change under the influences which our rule has brought to bear upon the society of the Province. Our disregard for inherited distinctions has already done something, and the introduction of railways much more, to loosen the bonds of caste. It is extraordinary how incessantly in reporting customs, my correspondents note that the custom or restriction is in fact dying out. The liberty enjoyed by the people of the Western Punjab is extending to their neighbours in the east, and especially the old tribal customs are gradually fading away. There cannot be the slightest doubt that in a few generations the materials for a study of caste as an institution will be infinitely less complete than they are even now.

214. Thus, if my theory be correct, we have the following steps in the process by which caste has been evolved in the Punjab:—(1) the tribal divisions common to all primitive societies; (2) the guilds based upon hereditary occupation common to the middle life of all communities; (3) the exaltation of the priestly office to a degree unexampled in other countries; (4) the exaltation of the levitical blood by a special insistence upon the necessarily hereditary nature of occupation; the preservation and support of this principle by the elaboration from the theories of the Hindu creed of a purely artificial set of rules, regulating marriage and intermarriage, declaring certain occupations and foods to be impure and polluting, and prescribing the conditions and degree of social intercourse permitted between the several castes. Add to this the pride of social rank and the pride of blood which are natural to man, and which alone could reconcile a nation to restrictions at once irksome from a domestic, and burdensome from a material point of view; and it is hardly to be wondered at that caste should have assumed the rigidity which distinguishes it in India."

215. The Vedas (1) contain frequent references to the Aryas who are contrasted with the Dasyas and in the oldest of them the word "Aryapatni" is used to designate the wife of an Arya as distinguished from "Dasa Patni" "the wife of a Dasa." But of course at this time caste had not become established. As soon, however, as it began to be recognised, the term Arya became transferred to the three upper castes, viz., Brahmins, Kshatriyas, and Vaishyas who were admitted into the innerfold of Hinduism, the rest of the Hindus being designated Sudras and all non-Hindus as Mlechchas—a term which occurs in Manu in which they are described "as those who speak barbarously" (2). Manu calls India "Aryavarta" or the land inhabited by respectable people. (3)

216. Manu calls people belonging to the three upper castes as Dwijas or twice-born, but he does not refer to them by the term "Aryas" or "Hindus". The Aryan fugitive from arid plains and decimated crops was spell-bound by the sight of the mighty Indus rustling down in torrential stream which he commemorates in one entire hymn. (4) He called it the "Sindhu" (Skr. for river) par excellence. It was the western natural boundary of the

(1) MacDonnell in his Sansk Lit thinks "Aryans" means "kinsmen" as opposed to "Dasyas" or "fiends" also called "Anaryas" or non-Aryans, p 152.

(2) Manu, Ch. 2 v 28.

(3) Ib. Ch 2 v 22.

(4) Rig Veda X-15,

Aryan settlement. It was corrupted into "Indus" by the other nations of antiquity and the Greeks called the land of the Indus as "India". The Persians corrupted it into "Hindu" a term which was at first used to designate the land and not its people. Later on the term "Hindusthan" <sup>(1)</sup> more correctly described the country <sup>(2)</sup> while the term "Hindu" became attached to its people. <sup>(3)</sup>

217. The term "Hindu Law" is consequently comparatively new. In the classic texts the term "Hindu" is not to be found. It appears to have been introduced by the Persian invaders who called India "Hindu" and its residents "Hindus." The Vedas refer to the new settlers in India as Aryas—a word which bears a close etymological affinity to the Zend Arya both derived from the Sanskrit word ar, the earth, <sup>(4)</sup> which gives the term Arya the meaning of one ploughing the earth, a land-holder or a settled farmer as distinguished from a nomadic wanderer. The term is used in later Sanskrit to mean one belonging to a good family. As some of the Aryan emigrants settled down in Persia that country was given the name of Iran, and the same element determined the name of Armenia. In the Zend the term "Arya" is used to describe the people and means venerable. <sup>(5)</sup>

218. The present state of Hindu Law constitutes an anomaly unparalleled in the history of the world. The Hindu Law as expounded by the text writers and commentators has been declared to be the law of the Hindus. Though the Legislature possesses the authority to interfere, it is pledged to leave it alone. The old race of commentators who by interpretation, annotations and analogy brought that law in line with the altered social conditions is extinct, and their occupation gone. Their place is now assumed by the Judges of the British courts who are all subordinate to the Privy Council sitting in London. That high tribunal does not contain a single Hindu Lawyer. It is manifestly out of touch with the current of Hindu opinion. Nevertheless it interprets, applies and at times modifies or extends the law, though it is in fact presumed to do no more than administer it. If in doing so it conforms to the altered opinion it is by a mere accident. If it departs from the accepted view the Legislature has rendered itself powerless to correct it. But nevertheless the slow evolution of human thought is proceeding apace even in the unchanging East. Western education and the adoption of western institutions and standards of life and comfort, the establishment of new industries and the amassing of wealth as a result of individual effort and enterprise have created new problems for which the sacred texts afford no satisfactory solution. For as the Privy Council recently observed: "In construing the texts of the Mitakshara which their Lordships have quoted, it is necessary to bear in mind that education beyond that of a very elementary kind must have been limited to very few of the people for whose guidance the Mitakshara was written, and that for that limited few there could have been then no education attainable in the arts, sciences, and professions of that time comparable with

(1) From Hindu and Skr. sthan—abode.

(2) The term "Hindustan" more appropriately applies only to that part of the peninsula which lies between the Himalaya and the Vindhya ranges, which is the Aryavata of the classic Hindu writers [Vashishth, 18, 9, 14 S. B. E. 2]

(3) MacDonnell. Sankr Lit. pp 140, 141.

(4) Lat. Arro to plough which occurs in all Indo-European languages.

(5) MacDonnell in his Sanskrit Lit. thinks "Aryans" mean "kinemen" as opposed to "Dasyas" or "fiends" also called "anaryas" or non Aryans, p. 152.

the education now obtainable and necessary for a successful career in the arts, sciences, and professions of the present day. It may be assumed that the author of the Mitakshara who was construing and explaining the more ancient texts of the Hindu Law for the benefit and guidance of the Hindu community, could not have intended to penalise an education which was not in his contemplation and of which necessarily he knew nothing. Nor can it be assumed that his intention was to penalise and discourage self-acquired skill, or the exercise of high mental abilities or great individual effort in winning success in an art, or science, or a profession. He must have been writing of education—learning—such as he knew it to be, and when he laid down that the gains obtained from an education received at the expense of a joint family should be partible, he could not have intended that such gains should include the gains which were the result, not of the education received at the expense of the joint family, but of the peculiar skill, mental abilities and individual effort in applying and improving such education exercised by the person who had been educated at the expense of the joint family. Their Lordships cannot find in the texts of the Mitakshara any authority for the contention in this case that the gains made as a clerk, as a broker, or as a money-lender, personally and without the aid of the joint funds by a member of a joint family who received an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family to which he belonged, should in law be regarded as partible and not as his self-acquired property. (1)

219. Despite the avowed policy of Laissez faire adopted by the Legislature, Hindu Law has been in some respects modified, though in doing so it has naturally followed the policy of tinkering rather than of reconstruction. But even in rectifying its glaring defects or enlarging its liberties, its policy has been timid and hesitating and it has at times refused to respond to the volume of public opinion as in the instances when it refused to regulate the Hindu religious endowments or empower the celebration of inter-caste marriages. Even upon the questions of vital importance on which the courts are sharply divided the Legislature has manifested a philosophic indifference leaving the chaos to rule till some one more aggrieved than the rest ventures to take up his appeal to the Privy Council who as often as not strive to steer clear of all knotty questions until they can circumvent them no more. Even then their pronouncement might not be certain and unambiguous or even if certain and unambiguous, it might not cover all the issues upon which the courts here have been at variance.

220. It will thus be seen that Warren Hasting's plan of 1772 did not long survive the shock of Western jurisprudence despite all the efforts made by European scholars, philologists and judges to reduce Hindu Law into a system. Its inherent defects soon became too glaring to remain unremedied. In 1833 an enquiry preceding the Charter Act of 1833 elicited a strong note from the Judges of the Calcutta Supreme Court who complained of the chaotic confusion in the state of the law they had to administer. They complained of the difficulty of ascertaining the law and where it was to be found. This led to the appointment of an Indian Law commission under the Charter Act, 1833 with Macaulay at its head. This commission sat for many years and produced several volumes of report, which in some cases supplied the basis of Indian Legislation. The procedure of the Civil Courts was unified by the Code which became law in 1859 <sup>(1)</sup> and two years later the first Code of Criminal Procedure was enacted. <sup>(2)</sup> The Indian Penal Code <sup>(3)</sup> was passed in 1860 and the Law of Evidence was enacted in 1872 <sup>(4)</sup> the Negotiable Instruments Act in 1881 <sup>(5)</sup> and the Transfer of Property Act and the Trusts Act in 1882. These with the Contract Act <sup>(6)</sup> the Specific Relief Act <sup>(7)</sup> and numerous land and local Acts have eaten into the Hindu Law confining its operation to the domain of family law, such as adoption, marriage, partition and inheritance.

---

(1) Meiharam v. Rewachand, (1917) 45 C. 666, 688, 684 (P. C.)

221. Even on these subjects its leading principles, so far as they are now settled, do not all coincide with the sacred texts, while in Its hope for the future. many cases in which they do, they tend to perpetuate a system which has long outlived its popularity and the society to which it was adapted and applied.

There is no hope for the Hindus unless a new avatar rises to simplify their religion and codify their laws.

(1) VIII of 1859.
 (2) XXV of 1861.
 (3) XLV of 1860.
 (4) I of 1872.

(5) XXVI of 1881.
 (6) IX of 1872.
 (7) I of 1877.

THE HINDU CODE.

CHAPTER I.

OPERATION AND EXTENT OF THE HINDU CODE.

---

Short title. 1. (1) This Code may be cited as the Hindu Code.

Local extent. (2) It extends to the whole of British India :

And except as provided by this Code or by any other law or custom for the time being in force, the rules herein contained are applicable to all Hindus and such other persons as may have adopted them.

Meaning of "Hindu." (3) The term "Hindu" in this connection includes not only those who are Hindu by religion but also those who are commonly known as such.

Hindu Law personal. 2. (1) Hindu Law is personal and is not affected by a change of domicile.

Law of origin. (2) All Hindus are primarily governed by the law of their origin.

Explanation.—The "law of origin" means and includes the law established in the original domicile of the ancestors of the family, and not merely of any members thereof, as determined by the caste, race and language of the family before its migration and the connection since maintained therewith.

3. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary the natives of each of the following provinces are governed by the schools of law noted against them :—

- Lex Loci.
- i. Bengal and Assam ... Dayabhag, supplemented by the Mitakshara.
  - ii. United and Central Provinces ... Mitakshara.
  - iii. Mithila ... Mitakshara, supplemented by Vivadchintamani and Vidvadratanakar.
  - iv. Bombay Presidency, Berar and Guzerat ... Mitakshara, modified by the Mayukh.
  - v. Madras Presidency ... Mitakshara modified by (1) Smriti Chandrika (2) Parasar Madhav (3) Virmitrodaya.
  - vi. The Punjab ... Customary law supplemented by the Mitakshara.

CHAPTER II. CUSTOMARY LAW.

Custom defined. 4. Custom is an established practice at variance with the general law.

Nature of custom. 5. (1) A custom varying the general law may be a general, local, tribal or family custom.

Explanation 1.—A general custom includes a custom common to any considerable class of persons.

Explanation 2.—A custom which is applicable to a locality, tribe, sect or a family is called a special custom.

6. (1) Custom has the effect of modifying the general personal law, but Custom cannot override express-law. it does not override the statute law unless it is expressly saved by it.

(2) Such custom must be ancient, uniform, certain, peaceable, continuous and compulsory.

Invalid Custom. 7. No custom is valid if it is illegal, immoral, unreasonable or opposed to public policy.

Pleading and proof of Custom. 8. (1) He who relies upon custom varying the general law, must plead and prove it.

(2) Custom must be established by clear and unambiguous evidence.

Proof and disproof of Custom. 9. A custom may be proved or disproved in any of the following ways :—

(1) judgments, orders and decrees relating thereto.

(2) entries in any public document made—

(a) by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or

(b) by any other person in performance of a duty especially enjoined on him by the law of the country in which the public document is kept.

(3) a published work dealing therewith,

(4) any transaction by which the custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognised, asserted or denied or which was inconsistent with its existence.

(5) particular instances in which the custom was claimed, recognized, exercised or in which its existence was asserted, disputed or departed from.

(6) opinions of.—

(a) persons knowing of its existence or non-existence ;

(b) persons likely to have known of the custom, given before any controversy as to the custom had arisen, and who are either dead or cannot be called without unreasonable expense or delay ;

(c) a number of persons

(d) experts.

(7) previous deposition of witnesses examined inter partes who cannot be called for reasons stated in clause (6) (b).

(8) admissions of persons adversely affected thereby.

(9) acts and conduct which make the existence or non-existence of the custom highly probable or improbable.

10. Usage is a practice at variance with the general law, and differs from custom in that it need not possess the antiquity, uniformity or notoriety of custom, provided it is well known

Usage defined. and acquiesced in by the community to whom it is made applicable.

CHAPTER III

MARRIAGE.

Marriage defined. 11. Marriage is an alliance between a man and a woman recognized by law.

12. A contract to marry cannot be enforced by specific performance or an injunction, but a party suffering loss thereby may recover damages for a breach of contract.

Effect of a breach of contract to marry.

13. Every man has a right to marry, and such right is not affected by infancy or infirmity.

Right to marry.

14. No prescribed ceremony is necessary to constitute marriage, provided that if any ceremony is customary and regarded by the caste as essential, then it must be performed.

Prescribed ceremonies unnecessary.

Explanation I.—The ceremony of Saptapathi is necessary to complete a marriage performed according to the orthodox rites, and that of Vivah Hom is also usually performed, but their non-performance does not invalidate a marriage, if otherwise completed.

Explanation II.—A marriage celebrated with due ceremony is not invalid by reason of the fact that a party thereto was then an outcaste.

Explanation III.—Co-habitation is not necessary to complete a marriage.

15. The marriage expenses of all members of an undivided family are a legitimate charge on its property.

Marriage expenses.

16. Every marriage is subject to the following conditions, namely:—

No valid marriage within prohibited degree.

(a) That the parties thereto must not be within the prohibited degree of relationship; and

(b) that if the parties thereto are Dwijas, they must be of the same caste.

Explanation I.—The prohibited degree of relationship for the purpose of marriage is regulated by custom.

Explanation II.—A person shall be deemed to be within the prohibited degree of relationship whose marriage is opposed to common morality.

Illustrations.

(a) The Shastras prescribe that Dwijas' sons who are Sapindas, Gotrajs or who belong to the same Pravar should not intermarry. A Dwija wishes to marry B, who is related to A. The validity of their marriage depends upon the usage of the caste.

(b) A has married B, who is his own sister's daughter. The marriage is valid as it is sanctioned by custom.

(c) A Kshatriya marries B who is the illegitimate daughter of a Kshatriya father. The caste people recognize it as a valid union. The marriage is valid.

Invalid marriages. 17. A marriage may be rendered invalid for any of the following reasons :—

- (1) because the parties were related within the prohibited degree,
- (2) because they were of different non-inter-marriageable castes,
- (3) because they did not observe the essential ceremonies,
- (4) because their marriage was brought about by force or fraud.

Marriage by force or fraud

18. A marriage brought about by force or fraud may be avoided by the party affected thereby.

19. Where remarriage is lawful, the wife may remarry, if her husband after leaving her, has not been heard of for seven years, by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive.

Presumption of the death of husband.

Mutual rights and obligations upon marriage.

20. The following rights and obligations arise upon marriage :—

(a) As to the husband.—

1. He is his wife's natural guardian during her minority.
2. He is entitled to her conjugal society.
3. He is bound to maintain her.
4. He cannot divorce her unless he is allowed to do so by custom.
5. Should she predecease him, he is entitled to inherit her property.
6. He has no right over her Stridhan, which he may, however, use in a time of great distress.

(b) As to the wife :—

1. She is bound to live with her husband unless he is guilty of cruelty or misconduct.
2. She is entitled to retain her Stridhan as her separate property.
3. She is entitled to sue, and is liable to be sued, in respect of her Stridhan, as if she were a feme sole.
4. She cannot divorce her husband unless she is allowed to do so by custom.

5. Should her husband predecease her, she may be entitled to inherit his separate property : otherwise she has the right of maintenance and residence in the family dwelling house.

6. She has no right over her husband's property during his life-time beyond the right of maintenance and residence.

21. (1) In a case relating to conjugal rights there must be, except as Proof and presumption of marriage. otherwise expressly provided, proof of the performance of marriage and its validity.

(2) In other cases marriage may be presumed from continuous co-habitation, conduct and repute.

(3) Such presumption of marriage cannot be rebutted by mere proof of its improbability.

(4) When the fact of marriage is proved, it will be presumed that it was performed:—

- (a) in the approved form,
- (b) with due ceremonies and was otherwise a valid marriage and that
- (c) it continued during the life-time of either party.

CHAPTER IV

AFFILIATION AND LEGITIMACY

Children defined.                      22. (1) Children may be natural or adopted. Of these the former may be legitimate or illegitimate.

(2) A legitimate child is one begotten by a person on his lawfully married wife.

(3) An illegitimate child is one begotten by him on one who is not lawfully married to him.

A lawfully begotten son is called Auras putra

(4) An adopted son is one legally adopted by or to a man as his son.

A son taken in adoption is called Dattak putra or adopted son.

Presumption of legitimacy

23. The legitimacy of a child born of a married wife of a person is conclusively presumed in the following cases, namely:—

- (a) where it was born during the continuance of the marriage
- (b) or within 280 days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried, unless it is proved that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when it could have been begotten.

Illustrations.

(a) A had validly married B in the morning. B was delivered of a child in the evening. The child is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to disprove it.

(b) A had validly married B. After his marriage A became an ascetic. He visited B casually now and then. B was delivered of a child. It is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to prove that by reason of his vow A could not have begotten it.

(c) A validly married B. A was then aged 10 and B aged 14. A few months after the marriage, B was delivered of a child. The child is the illegitimate child of B since A could not have begotten it.

(d) A aged 30 married B aged 15. B subsequently gave birth to a child. It is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to disprove it.

(e) A had validly married B. A child was born to them in wedlock. Evidence is led to prove that B was congenitally impotent. The evidence is admissible as proving sexual non-access.

24. Every child, whether legitimate or illegitimate, possesses the right of Children's right of maintenance against its father or his estate. Provided that maintenance. in a family subject to the Bengal School, such right, in the case of an illegitimate child, ceases upon its attaining majority.

CHAPTER V.

ADOPTION.

Adoption defined.

25. (1) Adoption is a formal recognition of a person as the son of another.

(2) No adoption is valid unless it is made in conformity with law.

(3) Any Hindu, not having a son, grandson, or a great grandson, alive at the time of adoption, may adopt a son to himself, and his wife or widow may, with his consent, do the same.

Adopter must be issueless

26. No one can adopt a son unless at the time of adoption he had no living son, grandson, or great grandson.

27. Save as provided by any law for the time being in force, every Hindu who may adopt, has the right to adopt a son provided—

(a) he has attained the age of discretion ;

(b) and has no son, legitimate or adopted, or grandson or great grandson in the male line then living ;

(c) is possessed of sound mind ;

(d) and is not suffering from any mental or physical disability which disqualifies him from inheritance.

Explanation 1.—The facts that the adopter is a bachelor or a widower, or that his wife is pregnant or opposes the adoption, are immaterial to the validity of adoption.

Explanation 2.—A son mentioned in clause (d) does not include a son who suffers from any of the disabilities which disqualify him from inheritance.

Illustrations.

(a) A is a Government ward subject to an Act which prohibits A from adopting without the consent of the Local Government. A adopts. The adoption is invalid unless consented to as provided in the Act.

(b) An eunuch registered under Act (XXVII of 1871) is declared by S. 29 thereof incapable of adopting a son. A cannot adopt.

(c) A suffers from virulent leprosy which disqualifies him to inherit. A cannot adopt.

(d) A has turned a Sanyasi and so renounced the world. A cannot adopt.

(e) A has a son who is deaf and dumb, or suffers from any of the disabilities mentioned in ills. (c) and (d). A can adopt.

(f) A who has an adopted son B adopts C. The adoption is invalid, for a Hindu cannot have two adopted sons at the same time.

Adoption by wife. 28. A wife may adopt a son to her husband with his express consent.

Adoption by widow. 29. (1) A widow may adopt a son to her deceased husband with his express authority :

Provided that, in places not subject to the Bengal and Benares schools, she may also adopt without such authority in accordance with the following rules :—

(2) (a) In the Dravid country she may make an adoption after consulting thereon all her husband's sapindas, and with the assent of all or the majority of them, thereto : provided that if only some of them assent to the adoption made, it will still be valid if it is proper and was made in the bona fide performance of a religious duty.

(b) Provided also, that where the family is joint, the consent of the father-in-law, and in his absence, of its managing member, would be sufficient for an adoption made in their own life-time.

(3) (a) In the Maharashtra, where the widow succeeds to her husband who died a separated member from his family, she may adopt without his consent which is presumed.

(b) But if her husband died a member of an undivided family then she may only adopt with the consent of his undivided co-parceners, in which case in lieu of such consent the consent of persons mentioned in clause (2) (b) will be sufficient, and the provisions of clause (2) (a) mutatis mutandis apply.

Explanation 1.—The consent hereinbefore mentioned must be free and not one induced by fraud or corruption.

Explanation 2.—Where the majority of co-parceners or sapindas as the case may be, have assented to an adoption, it will be presumed that their assent was bona fide.

Exception 1.—A widow in Mithila can make no adoption to her husband with or without his consent.

Exception 2.—In the Punjab, the validity of an adoption by a widow depends upon her compliance with the tribal and territorial custom.

30. The authority by the husband to adopt may be verbal or in writing. Form of authority. but if it is in writing of a non-testamentary nature, it must be stamped and registered.

Construction and limits of authority

31. (1) The authority of the husband to adopt must be liberally, though reasonably, construed so as to advance the purpose he had in view.

(2) Such authority may be general or limited, but it will be ineffectual if it is illegal, vague or void.

(3) The authority to adopt can only be conferred on, and used by, the wife.

(4) He who confers the authority may revoke it at any time before it is used.

Illustrations.

(a) A authorized his wife B to adopt a son. B adopted C who died after the adoption, whereupon B adopted D. The adoption of D is valid for the general authority to adopt empowered B to make any number of successive adoptions.

(b) A authorizes his wife B to adopt C. C dies. B has no power to adopt.

(c) A authorizes B to adopt a son should their son C die unmarried. C dies unmarried B adopts. The adoption is valid

(d) A authorizes his wife B to make an adoption should their son C die. C died leaving his widow D surviving him as his heir. B adopted C. The adoption is invalid as it would divest D.

(e) A authorized B to adopt C. B adopts D. The adoption is invalid for B's authority was limited to the adoption of C.

(f) A authorizes his wife B and executor C to adopt. The authority is invalid as A was legally competent only to authorize B.

32. (1) Where the authority to adopt devolves or is conferred on two or more widows, in the absence of any express direction to the contrary, it may be used by the senior widow then living at the time of adoption.

(2) But no co-widow can make an adoption without the consent of the other co-widow in whom by inheritance from her son the whole estate had become vested.

Illustrations.

(a) A directs that his two wives B and C may jointly adopt a son. Here B, though senior, cannot adopt without C and if one of them dies, the other cannot adopt.

(b) A directs that his two wives A and B should make an adoption. There is nothing to indicate that they are to act jointly. A if senior, may adopt and if she dies or refuses, B may do so.

A has two wives B and C of whom C has a son by him who survives A. A authorizes B to adopt in case his son by C should die. The son dies and his estate vests in his mother C. B cannot divest C by adopting to A without C's consent.

33. An adoption brought about by coercion, undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation, mistake or otherwise than by the free consent of the parties thereto, is voidable at the instance of the party wronged, but subject to the rights of other parties, it may be confirmed.

Illustrations.

(a) A a widow in the Dravid country falsely represented to her husband's Sapindas that she had authority from her husband to adopt. They thereupon accorded their consent. The adoption is invalid as their consent was obtained by a misrepresentation.

(b) A threatened B with a criminal prosecution falsely accusing her of forgery. B thereupon adopted A's son C. She treated C as her son for years. B could not afterwards avoid it, for she had ratified it.

34. The widow's power to adopt becomes incapable of execution on the legal limitation vesting of her husband's estate in another by inheritance on widow's power.

Provided that when the estate of the husband has vested in his co-widows by inheritance to him, an adoption made by one of them will not be invalid by reason of the fact that it has the effect of divesting them.

Illustrations.

(a) A the father of B then aged 2 years, empowers his wife C to adopt should B die. B lived to be of age, married D and on A's death inherited his estate. He then died and was succeeded by his widow D. C then adopted E. The adoption is invalid as E could not divest D in whom A's estate had vested as the heir of his son B.

(b) But if in the last case B had died unmarried and on his death the estate had vested in his mother C, C could have adopted to A as by so doing she would have merely divested her own estate.

(c) A and B are joint brothers. B predeceases A who succeeds to his share by survivorship. B's widow adopts to her husband. The adoption is valid as A has not inherited B's share.

(d) But if in the last case A had also died and his estate had vested in his widow then B's widow could not adopt.

(e) A dies leaving two co-widows B and C in whom his estate vests by inheritance to him. B adopts divesting C. The adoption is valid.

35. (1) A boy may be given in adoption by his natural father, or by the mother with his consent, except where such consent cannot be obtained owing to his death or disability, provided that he had not at any time expressly or impliedly prohibited her from so doing.

Explanation.—Where the gift and acceptance of the boy to be adopted is completed by the parents in a manner required by law, the fact that they had in their unavoidable absence, delegated the performance of any of its ceremonies to a near relation on their behalf, will not render the adoption invalid.

36. A boy must possess the following qualifications to be eligible for

Qualification for adoption, namely :—
adoption.

(1) He must belong to the same caste as the parties giving and taking him in adoption.

(2) He must not be an orphan.

(3) He must not have been adopted by any other person.

(4) Except in Bombay, he must not be married.

(5) Under the Bengal and Benares Schools, he must not have been invested with the sacred thread.

(6) In Dravid, he may be adopted after his investiture with the sacred thread provided he is not married.

(7) Except in Dravid, if the parties are, Dwijas he should not be the sister's son, daughter's son, and mother's sister's son of the adopter :

Provided that in the Bombay Presidency, and the Punjab, and amongst Jains, he may be adopted at any age, even though older than his adopter, is married and has children.

Exception.—Nothing in clauses (5) to (7) applies to Shudras.

37. (1) No adoption is complete without the corporeal delivery of the adoptee to his adopter with a declaration by the person,
Ceremony of adoption. delivering him, that he delivers him in adoption ; and of the adopter, that he so accepts him.

(2) Provided, that they have also performed such other act or ceremonies as may be required by law, or are customary to that end.

(3) Provided further, that if the parties thereto belong to any of the regenerate castes, and do not belong to the same Gotra, they must also perform the ceremony of Datt Homa.

(4) But non-performance of the Datt Homa or of the further ceremonies mentioned in clause (2) will not invalidate an adoption made as provided in clause (1) unless their performance is regarded by the caste as of the essence of the ceremony of adoption.

Explanation.—No delivery and its acceptance is valid unless the parties thereto were capable of understanding the nature of the act and its effect upon their rights.

Illustrations.

(a) Amongst Nambudris an adoption is performed by burning a pan of sacred grass. A is a Nambudri. He adopts B without burning such grass. It is a question of fact whether without such burning, the adoption is complete.

(b) An adoption by a widow subject to the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) must be in writing attested as in the case of a will and registered. A is such widow. She performs the ceremony of giving and taking but omits to execute a registered deed of adoption. The adoption is invalid.

Factum valet. 38. (1) No adoption may be set aside for a mere irregularity or for non-observance of a form not essential to its validity.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing rule, it may not be set aside on any of the following grounds, namely :—

- (a) That the adopted son was the eldest, the youngest or the only son of his father ;
- (b) that he was given in adoption after his investiture with the sacred thread ;
- (c) that the adoptee was older than the adopter ;
- (d) that the adoption was made during pollution ; or
- (e) by an untunsured widow.

Conditional adop- 39. An adoption is irrevocable but the rights there-tion. by acquired may be limited or postponed to any reasonable extent.

Illustrations.

(a) A adopts B on condition that it shall be void on the birth of a son to A. The condition is invalid as an adoption when once completed cannot be revoked.

(b) A Hindu widow in possession of her limited estate adopts B on condition that A shall have full power of its disposal during her life-time. The condition is invalid for it creates in A an unqualified power of disposal.

(c) A adopts B on condition that A shall continue to manage her estate during her life-time. The condition being reasonable is valid.

(d) A directed in his will that his wife B should adopt a son who should take one-third of his estate giving two-thirds to his wife and daughter. A adopted C C is bound by A's direction.

(e) A adopts B on condition that B shall not call for partition during A's life time. B is bound by the condition as it is reasonable.

40. A son may be given in adoption on condition that he shall be the Dvamushyayan son of both the natural and the adoptive fathers. Such adoption. a son is called the Dvamushyayan.

Rights of Dvamu- 41. A Dvamushyayan is entitled to inherit in both shyayan. the families of his natural and adoptive fathers.

42. (1) Customary adoptions.—A husband or wife may adopt a
Kritrim adoption. Kritrim son to himself or herself either jointly or separately in accordance with the following rules :—

- (a) The adopter must have no son, grandson or great grandson living at the time of adoption.
- (b) The adoptee may be an adult and married.
- (c) Both he and his parents must consent to his adoption.
- (d) A husband or wife may adopt jointly, or they may each adopt a separate son.
- (e) The son so adopted is the son of the adopter, even if she be a wife or widow.
- (f) A wife or widow may adopt a son in her own right, and without the assent of her husband or his kinsmen.
- (g) Any relation, or a stranger may be so adopted.

(2) Such an adoption can only be made in the Mithila Province and the districts adjoining it; in the Punjab, and elsewhere if permitted by custom.

Illustration.

A is the father of B. B. adopts A as his Kritrim son. The adoption is valid.

Incidents of a Kritrim adoption.

43. A Kritrim adoption is subject to the following incidents :—

- (1) The adoption is concluded by contract, no ceremony being necessary.
- (2) There is no restriction as to the qualifications of the adoptee except that he should be of the same caste as the adopter.
- (3) For the purpose of marriage his Sapinda relationship in the family of his adopter extends only to three degrees.
- (4) He does not assume the surname of his adoptive father.

Rights of a Kritrim son.

44. A Kritrim son becomes entitled to the following rights in consequence of his adoption :—

- (1) He succeeds both to his father and the adopter.
- (2) He acquires no relationship with his adopter's father.
- (3) He does not succeed to his adopter's collaterals.
- (4) If adopted by a wife or widow, he succeeds to her exclusive property having no right in her husband's estate.

Proof of adoption.

45. (1) He who relies upon an adoption must prove it.

(2) Where an adoption has the effect of disinheriting the natural heirs, it must be proved by such cogent evidence as is sufficient to prove its factum and validity and not merely its probability, due regard being had to all the circumstances including

- (a) its antecedent and attendant probability.
- (b) the existence of a writing,
- (c) the conduct of the parties before and since the alleged adoption, and
- (d) its publicity; and where the adopter is an illiterate widow,
- (e) the assent, intention and inclination of her husband,
- (f) the receipt by her of independent advice, and
- (g) the effect of the adoption upon her rights.

(3) Provided that where an adoption has been acted upon for a considerable time without dispute, the court may, upon proof of its factum presume its validity.

Illustration.

A a young illiterate pardanashin widow has for her adviser her husband's cousin B. She adopts his son C. C. sues her for possession. The burden is on C to prove that A had not been unduly influenced by B to adopt him.

Effect of void adoption.

46. (1) A person whose adoption is for any reason void, acquires no right as an adopted son.

(2) And where a gift is made to such person, described as an adopted son, the adoption failing, the gift also fails unless it was intended as a gift to a persona designata and was not a condition of the gift.

Illustrations.

(a) A bequeathes a legacy "to B whom I have adopted." A directs his wife C to perform the ceremonies and bring up B. C fails to perform the ceremonies and the adoption is invalid. A's bequest takes effect for he had intended to benefit B as a persona designata.

(b) But if in the last case, A bequeathes a legacy to B by virtue of B being his adopted son, then on the failure of B's adoption, A's bequest would also fail as A intended to benefit B qua his adopted son.

47. (1) The adoption of a person has, from the date of his adoption, the Effect on natural family. effect of determining all his rights and liabilities in the natural family, but not so as to divest him of any property which may have already vested in him prior to that date.

(2) But no adoption severs the natural relationship of the adopted son with his natural family so as to exempt him from the prohibition which would otherwise bind him as regards marriage and adoption.

48. In the absence of a natural son, an adopted son possesses all the rights and is subject to all the liabilities of a natural son in the family of his adoptive father, including the right of lineal and collateral inheritance.

Adopted son's rights in the adopted family. 49. (1) Save as otherwise provided in clause (3), the rights of an adopted son arise at adoption.

(2) An adopted son cannot dispute an alienation made by the adopted father before his adoption; and on his adoption he would be bound by an alienation made by his adoptive father or any other manager of the family to the same extent as a natural son.

(3) The rights of a son adopted by a widow do not relate back to the death of her husband except in the following cases and to the following extent, namely:—

(a) His adoption relates back to the death of her husband for the purpose of continuing a partnership of which he was a member.

(b) He divests the co-parcenary interest of the husband which has become vested in another by survivorship.

(c) He may set aside an antecedent gift of her husband's property made by his widow, and in the case of other alienations, he may dispute their propriety if unsupported by legal necessity.

Adoptee's rights limited by auras son. 50. (1) Except in the case of a Shudra the rights of an adopted son are, on the birth of an auras son, limited as follows:—

(2) He loses all rights to the performance of religious ceremonies.

(3) He is not entitled to succeed to an impartible estate in preference to the auras son.

(4) His right of inheritance in other cases is reduced to one fifth share of the natural son.

51. No suit lies for the specific performance of an agreement to adopt, No specific relief in adoption. the breach of which may, however, be redressed by damages.

52. (1) An invalid adoption cannot be validated by a subsequent consent, Effect of acquiescence in an invalid adoption. though the person so consenting may be estopped from denying it; but there can be no estoppel unless there is such a course of acquiescence in treating the adopted boy as a member of the adopted family that it will be impossible to restore him to his original position in the natural family.

(2) Mere acquiescence or even presence at the adoption does not necessarily amount to an estoppel.

CHAPTER VI.

MINORITY AND GUARDIANSHIP.

OF MINORITY.

53. (1) In matters relating to marriage, dower, and adoption, a person attains the age of majority on completion of the sixteenth year : otherwise, except in the cases hereinafter provided, he attains it on completion of the eighteenth year.

Age of majority.

(2) Every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been appointed or declared under the Guardians and Wards Act, and every minor whose property is under the superintendence of a Court of Wards, attains his majority on completion of his twenty-first year.

"Guardian" defined.

54. Guardian means a person having the care of the person of another or of his property or of both.

Three classes of guardians.

55. (1) A guardian may be natural, testamentary, or one appointed by the court.

(2) A natural guardian is one who is entitled under the personal law to which he is subject to act as the guardian by virtue of his relationship to the minor. Such guardian is also called a de facto guardian.

(3) A testamentary guardian is one so appointed by the father in his will for his children.

(4) The Court may appoint or declare a guardian in accordance with the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, or the High Court might do so in the exercise of its inherent power. The guardian so appointed may be called the certificated guardian. He is also called a de jure guardian.

OF NATURAL GUARDIANS.

56. The following relations are the natural guardians of the person and property of a minor in the order mentioned below, namely :—

Natural guardians

(a) The father.

(c) The paternal relations.

(b) The mother.

(d) The maternal relations.

Marriage and loss of caste no disqualification.

57. (1) Neither re-marriage, conversion nor loss of caste is any disqualification to act as a guardian.

(2) Where a Hindu child becomes converted to an alien faith it is for the Court to consider whether it would be for the welfare of the child that it should be restored to its parents.

58. Where the minor is a member of a joint family governed by the Karta or guardian Mitakshara law, the father, or in his absence, the elder of co-parcenary. brother or other senior male member of the family is entitled to the management of the whole co-parcenary property including the minor's interest.

59. (1) A Hindu father may by his will, made orally or in writing, appoint one or more persons to act as a guardian or guardians of his children after his death; and in doing so he may exclude even the mother from her natural guardianship. The mother, however, has not a similar power to appoint a guardian by will though the Court may pay regard to her wishes so expressed.

(2) Where more than one person are appointed guardians, unless the contrary is expressed or necessarily implied, it is competent to any one to accept the office though the others may disclaim or die.

(3) Any guardian accepting office cannot resign at will.

60. (1) The husband is the lawful guardian of his minor wife and is entitled to require her to live with him irrespective of her infancy.

(2) After the husband's death, the guardianship of her person devolves on the husband's relations in preference to her paternal relations.

61. (1) Any relations or friend of a minor, or the Collector of the District in which the minor resides or has any property, may apply to the court for the appointment or declaration of a guardian and the court may, on being satisfied that it would be for the welfare of the minor, subject to the rules herein stated, appoint or declare a guardian.

(2) Where a guardian has been validly appointed by the father by his will, the court may not appoint or declare any other person as a guardian until he has been removed for any of the reasons stated in section 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

(3) Where any parent and in the case of a married female, her husband, is available, the court may not appoint any other guardian unless it finds that the parent or the husband is unfit to discharge the obligations of that office.

(4) Provided that in the case of other relations the Court will pay due regard to their natural claims to guardianship and may appoint any of them or some other person found best fitted to promote the minor's welfare.

(5) Provided further that where the minor has attained sufficient maturity of intelligence and discretion, it will consult him and pay due regard to his choice of a guardian but will not be bound to appoint his nominee if it finds any other person better fitted to promote his welfare.

(6) Any order passed by the Court acting under the Guardians and Wards Act may be set aside in a suit for the custody of the minor.

62. (1) One person may be appointed guardian of the person and another of the property: and two or more persons may be so appointed joint guardians of the person or of the property or of both.

Court's jurisdiction when limited.

63. It is not competent to the court to appoint a guardian in respect of the property of a minor of which he has no present separate possession.

64. (1) The natural guardian of a minor's property possesses the power to transfer any portion of the minor's property in case of necessity or for the benefit of the estate.

Natural guardian

(2) Provided that where the property comprises a family trade, the guardian has the power to transfer or pledge the property and credit of the firm for the ordinary purposes of that trade.

65. The natural guardian of a minor may enter into a contract or compromise on behalf of his ward and do all other acts which are reasonable and proper for the protection of his property and for his benefit.

Natural guardian may contract or compromise.

What acts bind minor.

66. The guardian may bind the minor in the following cases :--

- (1) By entering into a contract charging the minor's estate.
- (2) By acknowledging his debt before it is barred by time.

Personal contract by guardian.

67. A guardian cannot contract in the name of a ward, so as to impose on him a personal liability.

68. (1) A transfer made by the guardian may be avoided by the minor, if it is wholly or partially unsupported by necessity or not for the benefit of the estate.

Transfer by guardian when voidable

(2) Provided that in the latter case, the alienee is entitled to restitution of the money paid for such necessity or benefit.

(3) Provided further, that where the bulk of the consideration is supported by legal necessity, the court may, instead of setting aside the transfer, order payment to the transferor such consideration as is not supported by necessity or benefit.

Guardian must act as such.

69. A guardian cannot bind his ward by an act not purported to be done on his behalf.

Minor's privilege is personal.

70. A transaction entered into with a minor is only voidable at the option of the minor.

Minor's liability under decree.

71 (1) A minor is bound by the result of a suit to which he was a party, if he was properly represented therein.

(2) Provided that if any decree be passed on a compromise, such compromise must be sanctioned by the court.

(3) Provided further that no decree obtained by consent has any effect against the minor unless it was consented to by his natural or certificated guardians.

(4) But no decree so obtained has any effect against him if it was secured by the fraud or misconduct of such guardian.

Right to custody.
dianship.

72. A guardian of the minor's person has the right to the custody of his ward during the period of his guar-

CHAPTER VII.

LAW OF MAINTENANCE.

Personal obligation to maintain certain relations.

73. A person is personally bound to maintain the following persons :--

- (a) his minor sons, whether legitimate or illegitimate ;
- (b) his unmarried daughters ;
- (c) his wife so long as she is chaste and remains under his roof and protection ;
- (d) his aged father and mother.

Husband's conversion immaterial.

74. A wife who is entitled to maintenance does not forfeit her right by her husband's conversion to another faith.

75. No mistress of a Hindu has any right of maintenance unless she had been kept by him until his death, in which case she becomes entitled to maintenance out of the estate in the hands of his heirs, so long as she remains chaste.

76. (1) The manager of a joint Mitakshara family is bound to maintain all male members of the family, their wives and their children, and on the death of any of the male members, he is bound to maintain his widow and his children.

(2) The obligation is commensurate only with the possession of family property.

(3) The same principles apply to cases governed by the Dayabhag law

(4) The holder of an impartible estate is bound to maintain all those who are customarily entitled to maintenance.

77. Where a son or other heir is excluded from inheritance by reason of disability he is entitled to maintain himself and his family out of the property which he would have inherited but for his disability.

78. (1) The widow who does not succeed to the estate of her husband as his heir is entitled to maintenance out of her husband's separate property, or out of the property in which he was a co-parcener at the time of his death.

(2) Save and except as above, she has no absolute right of maintenance.

(3) Her right of maintenance is not forfeited by reason of her having lived apart from her husband in his life-time without any justifying cause.

(4) The widow does not forfeit her right of maintenance by reason of her living apart from her husband's relations unless she does so for immoral or improper purposes.

(5) Continued chastity is a condition precedent to the widow's right to maintenance. But she is allowed a locus penitentie so that if she reforms and leads a continent life, she becomes entitled at least to a starving maintenance.

(6) Maintenance is not a charge upon the estate, but may be so made by contract or a Court's decree.

79. The widow is as of right entitled to reside in the family dwelling house. This right cannot be defeated by a sale of the house to a purchaser with notice. Even in the case of a purchaser without notice she cannot be evicted unless she is provided with another residence. But she has no such right where the sale is contracted by the husband or is for a debt binding upon her.

No forfeiture on loss of caste.

80. Mere loss of caste does not deprive a person of his right to maintenance.

Amount of maintenance.

81. (1) In fixing the amount of maintenance payable to a widow, regard must be had to the following facts :—

- (a) the income of the entire estate,
- (b) the position and status of the deceased husband,
- (c) the value of his estate,
- (d) the stridhan in her possession, and,
- (e) her reasonable wants.

(2) Provided that the amount of maintenance shall in no case exceed the annual profits of the share to which the husband would have been entitled to on partition, if living.

When widow disentitled to maintenance.

82. The widow has no right of maintenance in the following cases :—

(1) If she has sufficient stridhan or other means of support from the income of which she can maintain herself.

(2) If she had once received sufficient allotment for her maintenance which she has since dissipated.

(3) If she is re-married.

(4) If she is leading an unchaste life.

(5) If she is living apart from her husband's family for immoral or improper reasons.

83. The amount of maintenance is liable to variation with the change of circumstances of the family and the value of the estate.

Priority of debts

84. Debts due from the family take precedence over the widow's claim for maintenance.

Maintenance a personal right.

85. (1) The right to maintenance is a personal right and cannot be transferred.

(2) A right to maintenance cannot be attached in execution of a decree though arrears of maintenance may be so attached or transferred.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu transfers Sultanpur to his sister-in-law B, in lieu of her claim against him for maintenance in virtue of his having become entitled to her deceased husband's property and agree with her that, if she is dispossessed of Sultanpur, A will transfer to her an equal area out of such of several other specified villages in his possession as she may elect. A sells the specified villages to C, who buys in good faith, without notice of the agreement. B is dispossessed of Sultanpur. She has no claim on the village transferred to C.

86. A person cannot defeat the right of his wife or widow to maintenance by disposing of his entire property by gift or devise and if he does so, she has the right to enforce her claim against the donee or devisee as the case may be.

Maintenance cannot be defeated by gift or devise

87. The right to maintenance or residence may be enforced, against all transferees and devisees of the property liable to the claim, except a bona fide transferee for valuable consideration paid for a purpose binding upon the claimant, or one without notice of the right.

88. Maintenance is payable out of and may be charged on any property of the person personally liable for it; otherwise it may be charged on and is payable out of the joint family or inherited property according to the nature of the right.

89. A person entitled to maintenance may sue for a declaration of his right and combine therewith a claim for a past and future maintenance with or without a charge to be created on any property liable to the claim.

90. (1) A suit by the widow for maintenance must be brought against all or any of the heirs in possession of the estate liable to the claim.

(2) But if the suit be to declare or enforce a charge, then all persons interested in the estate must be joined.

91. (1) A decree for maintenance must fix dates for the periodical payments of the amounts decreed, giving directions for its execution and where it is charged on any estate, it must contain directions for a sale of the property charged, so far as may be in accordance with O. 34 Rr. 4 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(2) A decree charging any property for maintenance may be executed in accordance with the law regulating the enforcement of a charge.

92. A suit for a declaration of a right of maintenance must be brought within 12 years from the time when the right is denied, and a suit for arrears within the same period from the time when the arrears are payable.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE JOINT FAMILY.

93. "Issue" of a person means and includes his son, son's son and son's son's son by legitimate descent, or valid adoption.

94. (1) Ancestral property means property which a person inherits from his father or father's father or father's father's father; and

(2) all property acquired out of the income of such property.

95. (1) The joint property of a joint family, comprises the following property namely:—

(a) Ancestral property inherited by a member of the family from a direct male ancestor not exceeding three degrees higher than himself.

(b) Acquisitions to the property made with the help of joint ancestral property.

(c) Property acquired by members of the joint family.

(d) Property acquired with the help of nucleus of ancestral property.

(e) Property separately acquired but thrown into the common stock.

(2) Such property may be called co-parcenary property.

(3) And members of the family possessing a share therein may be called co-parceners.

Self-acquired property defined.

96. (1) The following property constitutes the self-acquisition of a member of a joint family :—

(a) property acquired by inheritance from a lineal ancestor more than three degrees remote or from a collateral or from or through a female relation.

(b) property acquired by gift or devise.

(c) property acquired without detriment to the joint estate.

(d) property which is the gains of learning or science acquired without substantial help from the joint funds.

(e) property which by its nature or extent or the mode of its acquisition is incapable of joint ownership.

(2) Where ancestral property is blended with self-acquired property in such a manner that it is impossible to separate the two, the whole may be presumed to be self-acquired.

Illustrations.

(a) A a member of a co-parcenary receives the gift of a village from his father-in-law as his marriage dowry. The village is his self-acquisition.

(b) The father of a co-parcenary gives half of his self-acquired estate to his son A, and the other half to his daughter B, using appropriate words to convey an absolute estate. The estate is the self acquisition of A and the stridhan of B.

(c) A, a member of a co-parcenary, insured his life and purchased the insurance premium out of his salary. The insurance money is his self-acquisition.

(d) A who had received a general education out of the joint funds, acquires property out of his savings made in the practice of his business as vakil, contractor, or astrologer. The property is his self-acquisition.

(e) A purchased land at a court auction in execution of a decree for money of a co-parcenership. It is his self-acquisition, for under S. 66 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code, no evidence is admissible to show that the purchase was on account of the joint family.

(f) A member of a co-parcenary receives a grant of an impartible estate. The estate is his self-acquisition as by its nature it is incapable of joint ownership.

97. (1) The term “legal necessity” implies such pressing requirement of “Legal necessity” the family or of the estate which the law regards as sufficient justification for contracting a debt, or for the transfer of the joint estate.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, the following objects constitute such necessity :—

(1) Debt of the father.

(2) Payment of Government Revenue.

(3) Maintenance of co-parceners and of their wives and issue.

(4) Marriage expenses of co-parceners and of their daughters.

- (5) Performance of the customary family and funeral ceremonies.
- (6) Costs of litigation in recovering or preserving the estate.
- (7) Cost of defending a member of the joint family prosecuted for an offence.

98. The term "benefit" includes such protection or preservation or improvement of the family estate, or the maintenance, education, or advancement of its members, as may, due regard being had to all the circumstances, be considered reasonable and proper.

99. A Hindu family is constituted of the following members, namely :—

- (1) Persons descended from a common ancestor and related to one another as sapindas.
- (2) Collateral relations descended from a common ancestor in the male lines.
- (3) Persons who are adopted into the family.
- (4) The mother, the wives and widows, of the male members, and unmarried daughters.

100. (1) A co-parcenary is a joint family comprising a common male ancestor with his lineal descendants in the male line not more than three degrees remote from him, or of the last holder of a share of his property.

(2) A co-parcener is a male related not more than three degrees remote from a direct ancestor who owned an estate or was entitled to a share therein.

101. The relation of co-parcenership arises by law. It cannot be created by contract.

102. (1) The normal state of a Hindu family is one of jointness in mess and estate.

(2) As such, it may be presumed that

- (a) Such family continues to remain joint until the contrary is shown.
- (b) Where property is shown to have been once joint family property it is presumed to remain joint until the contrary is shown.
- (c) All property acquired by or in the possession of a joint member is joint property.
- (d) Where there is a nucleus from which property may be acquired, any property acquired with its aid by a member is joint property.

(3) Provided that no presumption in the last case will arise where it is admitted or proved that there has been separation from the joint family.

103. (1) All acquisitions made by the manager of a joint family in the name of any of its co-parceners will be presumed to be made out of its fund and for its benefit.

(2) But no such presumption arises where the property stands in the name of a non-co-parcener.

104. Except in the case of a trading family, the father and in his absence, the next senior male relation, is the rightful manager of a co-parcenary.

Manager's powers.

105. The manager possesses the following powers :—

(1) He is entitled to be in physical possession of the joint property and perform in respect of it, all acts of management.

(2) As such, he may realize and expend its income at his discretion.

(3) He is not accountable to his co-parceners for his management, nor liable to them for his negligence or mis-management.

(4) He is, however, liable if he has fraudulently mis-appropriated any of its income, or spent it on purposes not binding on the family.

(5) He is entitled to contract debts and alienate or charge the joint estate for family necessity, or for its benefit.

(6) He is entitled to represent the co-parcenary in all suits and proceedings affecting its interests, to make contracts, give discharge, pass receipts, acknowledge debts, refer to arbitration, compromise any claim or dispute affecting it, and generally to do all such acts as he may consider necessary or to its benefit.

(7) He is the de facto guardian of the co-parcenary interest of minor members of the family.

Powers of other managers

106. The provisions relating to the power of the manager of a joint family generally apply to—

(1) The manager whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayablag law.

(2) The widow managing property inherited by her minor son.

(3) Guardian of a minor's estate.

(4) Manager of a religious endowment.

(5) Manager of the estate of a lunatic.

107. (1) The manager is entitled to make such gifts or presents either Gift by the manager. to the members of the family or strangers as are usual or customary.

(2) And the father and in his absence, the mother, has in this respect even a larger discretion, being entitled to make it at any time to a reasonable extent.

108. (1) The father is entitled to alienate the co-parcenary property Father's additional powers. to satisfy his antecedent debt contracted by him for a purpose which is neither illegal nor immoral.

(2) In other respects, he possesses the same power as any other manager.

Explanation.—A debt may be imprudent or improper without being illegal or immoral.

109. Subject to any law for the time being in force and the nature of the estate, every co-parcener other than the father and the Co-parcener's rights inter se. manager possesses the following rights in respect of the co-parcenary property :—

(1) He is, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, entitled to call for the partition of his share.

(2) Until partition he is entitled to joint possession.

(3) He may restrain any illegal or improper acts of the other co-parceners in respect of the co-parcenary.

(4) He and his wife and children are entitled to be maintained out of the co-parcenary funds.

(5) He may alien his share with the consent of his co-parceners or for family necessity but in Bengal he may do so as of right, and he may do the same in Bombay and Madras for a valuable consideration.

(6) His interest is liable to variation with the members of the co-parcenary, but in Bengal it is fixed.

(7) Except in a suit for partition a co-parcener cannot recover the profits of his share or separate possession of any portion of the joint property.

(8) His power over his separate and self-acquired property is in no way affected by his interest in the co-parcenary.

Manager's fraud                      110. No manager can exercise his power in fraud of the co-parceners.

Trading family                      111. (1) An ancestral family trade devolves upon members of a joint undivided family and the partnership is not dissolved by the death of any of the members, nor can any one of the partners when severing his connection with the business, ask for an account of past profits and losses.

(2) Where a joint Hindu family carries on an ancestral trade, it becomes a trading family and is then governed—not by the rules of co-parcenership—but by the co-parcenary rules as modified by the incidents and exigencies of trade.

(3) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, the rules applicable to them are as follows :—

(1) Any member may be appointed the accredited manager and agent of the firm.

(2) Such manager or agent may carry on the trading business of the firm.

(3) And for that purpose, he may pledge the credit of the joint family.

(4) He is not accountable to them for past profits and losses.

(5) Whether major or minor, all members are equally liable to the extent of their shares for payment of such debts irrespective of whether they were incurred for necessity of the firm or whether the creditor had not inquired into the purpose and necessity of the loan.

(6) And even if the manager had incurred loans with intent to defraud the family.

(7) The manager may sue or be sued on behalf of the firm without being under the necessity of impleading its other members.

Explanation.—The rules hereinbefore stated are equally applicable whether the trading business be an ancient family business or one started by the joint family; or whether it be carried on by the family alone or in partnership with an outsider, provided that where the business is not ancestral the share of the minor co-parcener is not liable without reference to legal necessity or benefit of the family.

Exception.—But nothing hereinbefore contained applies to a trading partnership composed only of certain members of a joint family with or without outsiders.

CHAPTER IX.

DAYABHAG JOINT FAMILY.

Dayabhag family with father as head.

112. In a family comprising the father and his sons and grandsons, the father is absolutely entitled to all property whether ancestral, or his self-acquired property.

113. Except where the father is alive, the Dayabhag joint family is as regards its management and the rights of members, subject to the same rules as the Mitakshara family, except that :—

- (a) A co-parcener may alien his share by sale, mortgage, gift or devise ;
- (b) Women are not disqualified from becoming co-parceners.

CHAPTER X.

DEBTS.

114. A debt is a pecuniary obligation arising out of a contract express or implied, or from a breach of civil duty.

115. The husband and wife are not liable for the debts contracted by each other except in the following cases :—

- (a) Where they were contracted by one as the agent of the other.
- (b) Where they were contracted for household necessities.

116. (1) A co-parcener is liable to pay his own debts personally and out of his separate property or co-parcenary interest so long as he is alive but on his death it cannot be recovered out of his co-parcenary interest unless it was attached during his life-time.

(2) Provided that where the debt was due from the father and is not illegal or immoral, both his son and grandson are, on his death, liable to pay it to the extent of the assets inherited by them from the father or the grandfather.

Son's liability limited to inherited assets. 117. (1) The son's liability to pay his father's debt is limited to the assets inherited by him from his father.

- (2) His separate property is exempt from payment of such debt.
- (3) The son in this section includes a grandson.

Not liable after separation. 118. The son is not liable to pay his father's debts incurred after his separation.

When the son is personally liable. 119. (1) The father's debt is not a charge upon the inheritance.

(2) But as heir, the son becomes personally liable to pay the father's debt if he has alienated the inherited property, otherwise than in due course of administration, with the intention of avoiding his liability.

Heir's liability to pay predecessor's debts. 120. (1) The debts of a person must be paid by the heir who inherits his estate to the extent of his inheritance.

(2) The heir to an impartible estate is liable to pay all the lawful debts of his predecessor out of the estate.

(3) The widow is liable to pay her husband's debts which she may pay even though barred by time.

(4) The rule stated in clause (1) applies equally to donees to the extent provided in Ss. 127 and 128 of the Transfer of Property Act

121. Where the manager or the heir contracts a debt or transfers property for consideration, alleging the existence of justifying necessity or benefit, it will as between the creditor or the transferee on the one part, and the manager or the heir and other persons (if any) affected by the debt or the transfer, on the other part, be deemed to have existed, if the creditor or transferee as the case may be, after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence of such circumstances, has acted in good faith.

The same rule extends to the father contracting a debt or transferring property in consideration of an antecedent debt.

Illustrations.

(a) A, the manager, represents to B that the joint family property was proclaimed for sale for non-payment of revenue. B enquires and learns that it is so. He advances money to A. B sues A and the other members for his debt when it appeared that A had deceived B. B, however, shows that he had made independent enquiries which corroborated A's statement. B may recover on the basis of A's statement which binds the family.

(b) A, Hindu widow, whose husband has left collateral heirs alleging that the property held by her as such is insufficient for her maintenance, agrees for purposes neither religious nor charitable, to sell a field, part of such property, to B. B satisfies himself by reasonable enquiry that the income of the property is insufficient for A's maintenance and that the sale of the field is necessary, and, acting in good faith, buys the field from A. As between B on the one part, and A and the collateral heirs on the other part, a necessity for the sale shall be deemed to have existed.

122. Where a transfer by the manager is found to be void its effect upon the interest of the transferor is subject to the following rules.—

(1) Where the transfer was voluntarily made by the manager subject to the Mitakshara law as applied in Behar, United Provinces, Oudh and the Punjab, it is wholly void, subject, however to such restitution and compensation to the transferee as the requirements of equity may demand.

(2) Where, however, in the provinces last mentioned, the transfer is involuntary, and in all other provinces whether it is voluntary or otherwise, on the transfer being found void against the joint family, the transferee is entitled to obtain his transferor's interest therein.

(3) Without prejudice to the generality of the rule stated in clause 1, due regard will be had to the following facts:—

(1) The representation made by the transferor as to the necessity of the sale.

(2) The enquiries, if any, made by the purchaser into the same.

(3) Improvements made by him.

(4) The fact that unconditional rescission of the sale will benefit the transferor.

(5) Collusion between the transferor and his co-parceners.

(6) Acquiescence and delay in challenging the sale.

Creditor's suit against the son.

123. (1) The unsecured creditor suing the son for the recovery of his father's debt must prove the debt.

(2) It is then upon the son to prove that the debt was non-existent, or that it was illegal or immoral, of which fact the creditor had notice.

(3) The creditor may then show that he had made the loan after reasonable inquiry being satisfied that it was required for a purpose neither illegal nor immoral.

124. In a suit on a mortgage executed by the father or manager against the other co-parceners it lies on the mortgagee to prove that the debt was contracted for a purpose binding upon them.

125. In a suit instituted to enforce a mortgage executed by the manager, the other members are proper parties, but their non-joinder of parties, joinder does not exempt them from liability, if it appears that they were sufficiently represented by the manager.

126. (1) It lies on the co-parcener suing for recovery of joint property sold by the manager to prove that the sale was one which by its nature and purpose, did not bind his interest, and that the purchaser had notice of it.

(2) In a sale made in execution of a decree obtained against the manager the court will presume that the purchaser, if a stranger to the suit, had no notice of anything that does not appear in the decree

127. (1) A decree passed against the manager in respect of a liability incurred within the scope of his authority is enforceable against the manager. against the other members of the joint family though they may not have been parties to the suit.

(2) But in such case the other members are not precluded from contesting the authority of the manager or the binding nature of the debt.

(3) Where a decree directs sale of the right, title and interest of the defendant in any property, the question whether the sale so made suffices to pass the entire estate of which the defendant was the manager or only his own interest, is one of construction and intention to be gathered from the proceedings and other circumstances of the case.

(4) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, in determining this question the following facts are material :—

(a) The nature of the contract, if any.

(b) The character of the debt.

(c) The capacity in which the defendant is sued.

(d) The intention of the court.

(e) The price paid by the purchaser.

(f) And any fact which shows what interest he intended to purchase.

Illustrations.

A decree is passed against the father A, for sale of his interest in mouza B, which is his family property. C objects to the sale of anything beyond A's interest therein on the ground that the decree was obtained for A's immoral debt. He fails to prove it. The sale conveys the entirety of B.

Rule of Damdupat. 128. (1) No debtor is liable to pay at the same time interest which exceeds the principal.

(2) This rule extends only to the areas within the original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court, the Presidency of Bombay, Sindh and Berar.

(3) It does not apply to the following cases:—

(a) Where the debtor is not a Hindu.

(b) Where the creditor is liable to account.

(c) Where the debtor agrees to the capitalization of interest.

(d) Where the debt merges in a decree.

CHAPTER XI.

PARTITION.

Partition defined.

129. (1) Partition is the intentional severance of co-parcenary interests by members of a joint family.

(2) An unequivocal expression of an intention to separate such interest may amount to partition.

(3) Partition may be effected by the definition of rights or by the division of property by metes and bounds.

Family arrangement.

arrange-

130. (1) A family arrangement is a settlement by members of the joint family as to the mode of enjoyment of their property.

(2) It differs from partition in that it is an agreement for separate enjoyment by members without determination of their rights.

When a family arrangement may be set aside.

131. (1) A family arrangement cannot be set aside except for coercion, fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing rule it may not be set aside upon any of the following grounds:—

(a) That there was no consideration to support it.

(b) That it has transferred property to a person without any right.

(c) That it was unfair and such as no court would support upon its merits.

(d) That it was made by mistake of either party.

(3) It may, however, be set aside on the ground that it was not bona fide or that there was no dispute.

(4) But before giving weight to these considerations due regard must be had to the time during which the arrangement has been acted upon or has remained unchallenged.

Illustrations.

(a) A disputes B's legitimacy. He afterwards compromises his claim with B on the basis of legitimacy. A cannot afterwards repudiate the compromise on proof of B's illegitimacy.

(b) A, B, and C are three brothers. On a distribution of the family estate C receives an allotment of land in lieu of maintenance. He did not claim nor was allowed any share. C is bound by the arrangement.

(c) A transfers to B property by mistake. B accepts innocently. The transfer is valid.

(d) A and B partitioned their property in mutual ignorance of their respective legal rights. The partition is binding.

132. A family arrangement binds both the parties
Whom it binds. and their legal representatives.

133. No writing is required to effect partition, but if it is reduced to writing, which purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title, or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, to or in immoveable property, it must be stamped and registered.

Illustrations.

(a) A and B divide their property in 1918. Next year A desiring to mortgage his share to C, C demands evidence of his separation. A and B reduce it to writing. The writing though it relates to immoveable property over Rs. 100 in value, is not compulsorily registrable because it is a written memorandum of a past partition.

(b) A and B having a valuable estate agree to divide it by exchanging lists of the property which falls to the share of each party. The lists require registration if they were intended to evidence partition.

(c) A and B appoint an arbitrator who delivers an award detailing the division of property. A and B both sign it in token of their acceptance. The award is converted into a partition deed and must be registered if it affects land over Rs. 100 in value.

134. The following persons are entitled to claim
Persons entitled to partition. partition of joint property :—

(1) Adult co-parceners not disqualified for inheritance.

(2) Minor co-parcener, if the partition of his share would advance or protect his interest.

(3) A co-parcener's transferee acquiring a partible interest in the joint property.

135. (1) A co-widow is entitled to the partition of Co-widow's right to partition. her life-interest in her husband's estate.

(2) But such partition is not absolute and does not in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, determine her co-parcenary right of survivorship.

Female shares on partition. 136. Subject to any local law or usage to the contrary, the following female relations are each entitled to a share on partition :—

(1) On a partition between the father and his sons, or between the sons, their mother and their grandmother are entitled to a share which with the stridhan received from their husband or the father-in-law must equal a son's share.

(2) And unmarried daughters are entitled to a quarter of a son's share.

(3) On a partition between her sons or grandsons a widow is entitled to a share equal to that of a son's son.

Exception.—The wife or the widow in Southern India is allotted no share.

When partition refused. 137. A person otherwise entitled to partition may be disqualified from enforcing it for any of the following reasons :—

- (a) If he has entered into a valid agreement against it.
- (b) If the property is subject to a family arrangement.
- (c) If the parties have already become otherwise separate.
- (d) If he has relinquished his share in the joint property.

Partial Partition. 138. (1) Partition may be general or partial.

(2) Partition is general where all members join in partitioning their joint property.

(3) It is partial when some of them separate, leaving the rest joint ; or where all divide only some of their joint property.

(4) Partial partition cannot be made otherwise than by the agreement of parties, except where it is otherwise indispensable or would be equitable or convenient to the parties without prejudice to the rights of the co-parcenary.

(5) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing general rule such partition may be permitted in the following cases :—

- (i) Where partial partition is permitted by any other law.
- (ii) Where different portions of the family property are situate in different districts.
- (iii) Where the portion excluded is impartible.
- (iv) Where the portion excluded has already been partitioned or is the subject of a family arrangement.
- (v) Where the portion excluded is not in the possession of co-parceners
- (vi) Where the portion excluded is held jointly with a stranger who has no interest in the family partition.
- (vii) Where the defendant has no interest in the portion excluded.
- (viii) Where the property was omitted or excluded from a previous partition.

Illustrations.

(a) A, B, and C, are three joint brothers. A decides to separate. He cannot compel both B and C to separate from each other.

(b) A, B, and C, jointly own properties D and E. A claims partition of D. He cannot do so unless B and C agree.

Distribution of shares.

139 In the absence of any contract to the contrary, co-parceners are entitled to shares at partition according to the following rules:—

(1) Each member is presumed to represent himself and his sons whose share is included in the share allotted to him.

(2) Brothers take equal shares; and the share of a brother who has died is represented by his sons, grandsons and great grandsons.

(3) As between different branches of a family shares are given per stirpes and as between the sons of the same father per capita.

But this rule does not apply to a partial partition.

140. (1) Separation may be proved by any declaration, act or conduct of a party entitled to partition showing an intention inconsistent with jointness.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing rule separation may be presumed from the following facts:—

(a) Cesser of commensality and joint worship.

(b) Separate enjoyment of portions of the property, or of their income.

(c) Division of income.

(d) Agreement to divide the income in definite shares.

(e) Separate definement of shares.

(f) Separate transactions of the co-parceners between themselves with others.

(3) An act of a stranger such as attachment and sale of a co-parcenary interest does not suffice to effect separation.

(4) Conversion of any co-parcener to an alien faith such as Christianity or Mahomedanism has the effect of separating ipso facto the convert from the co-parcenary.

141. (1) Any person entitled to claim partition may sue for it.

(2) All persons entitled to a share therein are necessary parties.

(3) But a person in possession of any property under the joint family is not a necessary party.

Illustrations.

(a) A, B and C are co-parceners. D is their mother who is also entitled to a share. A wishes to separate from B and C. He must sue both B and C impleading his mother D.

(b) A, B and C are co-parceners. D the wife of a predeceased brother is in possession of a village given to her out of the family estate in lieu of her maintenance. A sues for a general partition. D is not a necessary party as she has no right to a share.

142. (1) Except as otherwise provided in this behalf, a suit for partition must relate to all property partible at the time and subject to the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit is instituted.

(2) Where however, such property is situate within the jurisdiction of more than one court suits may be brought in the several courts possessing the requisite jurisdiction.

143. (1) Every person entitled to a share may demand the partition of his share in specie and such partition may be made except in the circumstances next following :—

- Mode of partition.
- (2) Where the thing is by its nature indivisible.
  - (3) Or where its partition in specie will destroy its intrinsic value or be otherwise inconvenient.
  - (4) Where its sale is demanded and justified by the Partition Act.

Mutual non liability to account 143a. (1) Partition must be made only of such property as is available at the date of demand.

(2) In the absence of fraud or misappropriation the manager is not liable to account to the co-parceners for past transactions or to pay them mesne profits in respect of property in his possession.

(3) Provided that if partition is demanded and refused or a co-parcener is excluded from joint or separate possession to which he was entitled under an arrangement, he may be allowed mesne profits from the date of such refusal or exclusion.

(4) Nor are the other members entitled to the cost of improvement or are accountable for the profits made from property in their separate possession.

Provision for debts, maintenance and ceremonies.

144. In every partition provision should first be made for the payments of—

- (a) All family debts.
- (b) Maintenance of members entitled to it.
- (c) Upnayan and the marriage expenses of members payable by the joint family.
- (d) Such religious and other ceremonies for which the joint property is liable.

145. In a partition by metes and bounds the allotment of shares should be made as far as possible in conformity with the following rules :—

- Equities on distribution of shares.
- (1) The separate possession of co-parceners of any property or which they have improved at their own expense should not be disturbed.
  - (2) The predilection of co-parceners to any property should be respected.
  - (3) Shares should be made as compact and convenient as the nature of the property would allow.
  - (4) The bona fide transferee of a defined portion of co-parcenary property should be protected in his right as far as possible.
  - (5) Inequalities of shares may be removed by payment of owelty.

Whom a partition binds.

146. A partition once made cannot be re-opened by the parties thereto except on the ground of error or fraud.

All property placed into hotchpot.

147. In a suit for a general partition every member of the co-parcenary is liable to bring into hotchpot all partible joint property.

Presumption of complete partition

148. Every partition is presumed to be complete both as to the person and the property.

Right of absent and disqualified co-parceners to re-partition.

149. The following persons are entitled to claim their share of the property even after its partition :—

(1) A co-parcener who being conceived at the date of partition is subsequently born.

(2) Any other son born after the partition if the father had reserved no share for himself.

(3) Absent co-parcener.

(4) Disqualified co-parcener on the removal of his disqualification for which he was excluded from partition.

(5) A son of such qualified co-parcener, born after the partition.

150. (1) A decree for partition may be preliminary or final.

(2) A preliminary decree must determine and declare the shares of the several parties and order the same to be partitioned by a Commissioner, or in the case of a revenue paying estate, by the Collector or his gazetted subordinate.

(3) The final decree must be confirmatory of the distribution made by the Commissioner or the Collector with such variations as the Court may be competent and think fit to make.

151. (1) A person may re-unite after partition with his father, brother or uncle.

(2) Provided that under the Mithila school any late co-parceners may re-unite.

152. (1) Subject to the following modifications, a re-united family is, for the purpose of succession, treated as a joint family.

(2) In a re-union between brothers of the whole blood and those of half-blood the former succeed to each other in preference to the latter.

(3) Where brothers of the whole blood remained separate and only those of the half-blood re-unite, brothers of the whole blood and those of the half-blood and their descendants inherit together.

(4) Where only some brothers of the half-blood re-unite, those not re-united do not inherit.

Burden of proving re-union.

153. He who relies upon re-union must prove it.

CHAPTER XII.

IMPARTIBLE ESTATES.

Incidents of impartible estate.

154. An impartible estate is subject to the following incidents :—

(1) The estate is held by one person at a time

(2) The holder for the time being is the sole owner of the estate which he may relinquish, transfer or devise in favour of any one at his discretion.

(3) Succession to the estate is ordinarily by primogeniture determined by the personal law adapted to the tenure.

(4) The successor takes the estate subject to the burdens created and the debts payable by his predecessor.

(5) The heir-apparent has merely a spes successionis which he cannot partition, transfer or devise, nor is it liable to be sold in execution of a decree against him.

(6) The sons and brothers of the holder are entitled to maintenance, the right of other relations to maintenance being determined by custom.

(7) The estate does not lose its incidents of impartibility by the mere discontinuance of service attaching thereto, or by the fact that it is regranted after confiscation.

Illustrations

(a) A, B and C are three members of a joint family. An impartible estate is granted to A. It is A's separate property, though he remains joint with B and C as regards the other estate.

(b) In the last case A has sons D and E. On A's death his eldest son D will succeed to A's impartible estate and will be a co-parcener with B, C and E in the joint estate.

(c) A, B and C are members of a co-parcenary. A is the holder of an impartible estate. On his death the estate will devolve on his widow to the exclusion of B and C.

(d) A is the holder of an impartible estate. He becomes a rebel whereupon his estate is confiscated by Government who regrants it to his brother C. It remains an impartible estate in the hands of C.

(e) But if in the last case, the regrant is to "C and his heirs" then the estate loses its impartibility, for the "heir" of C cannot come in if the estate remain impartible.

(f) A obtains a service grant which is impartible. A discontinues the service. It does not affect the impartibility of his estate.

155. (1) An impartible estate is not necessarily inalienable, though it may be so created by the terms of the grant, law, or custom.

(2) He who alleges its inalienability must prove it.

(3) Where an estate is alienable, the extent of its alienability must be determined by the law or custom which creates it.

156. (1) Property acquired by the holder of an impartible estate out of its income does not partake of its character but is his self-acquisition unless it is intentionally incorporated with it.

Acquisitions and accretions.

(2) An accretion so made to an impartible estate also becomes impartible.

Illustration.

A the holder of an impartible Raj acquires mouzas B, C, and D out of its income. B, C and D, are managed by the same staff and their collection papers kept with those of the Raj. This is insufficient to show A's intention to treat B, C and D as a part of his Raj.

Property is presumably partible.

157. (1) All property is presumably partible and alienable.

(2) Impartibility and inalienability are the incidents of an estate which must be pleaded and proved in each case,

CHAPTER XIII. SUCCESSION TO IMPARTIBLE ESTATE.

158. In the absence of any law or custom to the contrary, succession to an impartible estate is subject to the personal law of the holder adapted to the nature of the tenure to the following extent :—

- (1) Succession is subject to the rule of primogeniture.
- (2) Where the holder is subject to the Mitakshara law, the heir is the eldest male issue of the deceased or failing him the eldest co-parcener.
- (3) Where it passes by survivorship from one line of descent to another, it devolves not on the co-parcener nearest in blood but on the nearest co-parcener of the senior line.
- (4) Females are presumably excluded from succession in favour of co-parceners if the estate is ancestral, but if it is a separate acquisition of the holder they are entitled to succeed.
- (5) In a case subject to the Dayabhag school the heir is the eldest member of the class of persons who are the next heirs of the deceased.

Explanation.—In the absence of custom determining seniority according to the seniority of the mother, seniority in age amongst brothers alone determines the seniority, irrespective of the seniority of the mother.

Illustrations.

(NOTE.—In the following illustrations A must be understood to be the owner of an impartible estate).

- (a) A dies leaving his son B aged 10 and a brother C aged 30. B succeeds in preference to C.
- (b) A dies leaving his widow and a brother. The widow would succeed if the zamindari is in Bengal, otherwise it will go to the brother.
- (c) A dies leaving him surviving B an elder brother of the half blood, and C a younger brother of the whole blood. B succeeds in preference to C in the Mitakshara country, while C will succeed in Bengal.
- (d) A dies leaving two sons B aged 19 by his junior wife and C aged 10 by his senior wife. B succeeds.
- (e) A died leaving a grandson B aged 10 and a brother's son C aged 20. B succeeds.

CHAPTER XIV. TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

Definition of property.

159. (1) Property is anything which may be the subject of ownership.

- (2) It may be moveable or immoveable.

Inalienable property.

160. Property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force and by the following clauses.—

- (a) The chance of obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman, or any other mere possibility of a like nature,

- (b) Res extra commercium.
- (c) Coparcenary interest except to the extent hereinbefore allowed.
- (d) Maintenance grant.
- (e) Personal grant.

Repugnant condition. 161. Where an absolute estate is given by a transfer or devise with a condition superadded which restricts the grantee's legal power of transfer or mode of enjoyment, the condition is void.

(2) Such are the conditions against alienation and partition of the property or that the alienee should accumulate its income or submit to the control of certain trustees.

(3) But there is nothing illegal in the grantor stipulating that the grantee shall live in his house.

Illustrations.

(a) A devises his estate to B on condition that he does not alienate it. The devise is good but the condition against alienation is invalid and void.

(b) A devises his estate to B and C on condition that it shall not be partitioned between them. The devise will take effect without the condition which is void.

(c) A devises his estate to an idol on condition that after defraying the cost of its worship the surplus should maintain the family but that it shall not be liable for any debts. The devise operates as an onerous bequest in favour of the family but the condition as to its non-liability for debts is void.

(d) A bequeaths his estate to B but at the same time provides that C will manage it for B. B takes the estate without being obliged to have it managed by C.

Rule against perpetuity. 162. A perpetuity cannot be created by transfer or devise, except for religious and charitable purposes.

163. A direction to accumulate income is valid if limited to the period during which the testator is entitled to direct and control the course of devolution of property.

164. The principle of election enacted in Chapter XXVII of the Succession Act, and S. 35 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to the transfers and bequests of Hindus.

Transfer or devise of self-acquired property. 165. A person may transfer or devise his self-acquired property.

Power of the manager, trustee, guardian, shebait, female heir to transfer. 166. (1) The manager, trustee, guardian, and the shebait are all entitled to transfer the property entrusted to their management for the sake of necessity or benefit of the estate or of the family members or the ward or the trust as the case may be.

(2) The father of a joint family may transfer its property for the same purpose or for the satisfaction of his own antecedent debts.

(3) The widow, and other female heirs possess similar powers of alienation for legal necessity or benefit of the estate.

---

CHAPTER XV.

TRUSTS AND BENAMI TRANSACTIONS.

---

Form of Trust.                      167. (1) No form is necessary to create a trust for religious or charitable purposes.

(2) But a secular trust cannot be created otherwise than as provided in Ss. 5 and 6 of the Trusts Act.

Trusts valid and void.                      168. A trust may be created for any lawful purpose, whether secular or religious.

Benami Transfer.                      169. (1) A person does not acquire any interest in property by merely lending his name to another.

(2) Where one person holds property for another, he will be deemed to hold it in trust for another.

170. (1) There is no presumption in favour of benami and he who alleges that the apparent title is not the real title must allege and prove it.

Proof of benami.

(2) There is no presumption that a purchase made in the name of the child, wife or mistress is benami or by way of advancement, the question being one of intention which must be proved by the party asserting it.

---

CHAPTER XVI.

GIFTS AND GRANTS.

---

Who may make a gift.                      171. Any adult may make a gift of his property or any interest therein over which he possesses the power of disposal.

Illustration

A agreed by deed to pay to his sister and on her death to her daughter Rs. 10 per annum from his self-acquired estate. The deed creates a corrody or charge on the profits of his estate which binds it in the hands of A's widow.

Gift how made.                      172. A gift may be made in the form prescribed by S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act.

173. Subject to the provisions of Ss. 13, 14 and 20 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, a settlement, gift, or devise may be made in favour of a person not in existence at the date of the gift.

Transfer in favour of unborn person.

174. (1) A settlement, gift or devise to an unborn person may be made as provided by the Hindu Disposition of Property Act; or in the Madras Presidency, as provided in the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act.

Gift or devise to unborn person.

2) Provided that no restriction contained in these Acts shall limit or affect a disposition of property for a religious or charitable endowment or for the benefit of the public, for the advancement of knowledge, commerce, health, safety or any other object beneficial to mankind.

Illustrations.

(a) A gifts his property to B, a living person, for his life, with remainder to C on his attaining his 18th year. The gift is valid.

(b) In the last case a son D is born to C before C's estate is reduced to possession. D takes a vested interest in C's estate on his birth.

(c) A creates a trust for the benefit of his daughters B, C and D with a direction that if any of them marry under age, her share shall be settled so as to devolve after her death upon such of her children as shall attain the age of 18. B, C, and D must be in existence at A's decease and any portion of the estate which may eventually be settled as directed must vest not later than 18 years from the death of the daughter whose share it was. All these provisions are valid.

(d) A gifts his property to B, a living person for his life, with remainder to C on his attaining his 19th year. The validity of the gift depends upon whether the gift will or will not vest in C within A's own life-time. If it does not, it is void being opposed to S. 14 of the Transfer of Property Act and S. 101 of the Succession Act.

Conditional gift or devise. 175. (1) A gift or devise may be absolute or conditional.

(2) A conditional gift or devise takes effect upon the fulfilment of the condition, except in the following cases:—

- (a) Where the condition is a condition subsequent,
- (b) where it is illegal or immoral,
- (c) or is repugnant to the nature of the grant.

(3) A substantial fulfilment of the condition may be sufficient if its literal fulfilment is impossible or impracticable.

(4) A gift once completed cannot be revoked except on the ground which would suffice to cancel a contract.

---

CHAPTER XVII.

WILLS.

---

176. (1) Will is the expression of a person's wish with reference to his property which he desires to be carried into effect after his death.

"Will" and "Codicil" defined.

(2) Where the will is in writing, it may be modified by an instrument, made in relation thereto and explaining, altering or adding to its dispositions. This instrument is called a codicil. It is considered as forming an additional part of the will.

Who may make a will. 177. (1) Any adult person may bequeath his estate by will.

(2) His power to bequeath an estate by will is co-extensive with his power over the estate in his life-time.

178. Except as otherwise provided by the Hindu Wills Act or any other law for the time being in force, a will may be oral or in writing and if in writing, it need not be registered.

Form of will.

179. (1) "Power" is a right which a person acquires over another, or over things not his own.

Power defined.

(2) The person who confers the power may be called the donor of the power, and the person upon whom it is conferred, the donee of the power.

(3) The exercise of power is discretionary with the donee.

180. (1) A will made in accordance with the Hindu Wills Act must be proved as therein required.

Proof of will.

(2) A will otherwise executed must be proved so as to show that it is a complete instrument and expresses the deliberate intentions of the testator.

(3) The words of an oral will must be proved with the utmost precision, with every circumstance of time and place.

181. (1) The maker of a will may revoke it at any time.

Revocation of will

(2) Subject to any law for the time being in force, such revocation may be oral though the will itself be in writing.

(3) The subsequent marriage of the testator, or the birth or adoption of a son, has not the effect of revocation; nor has the subsequent execution of another will necessarily that effect except so far as it is inconsistent with its terms.

Explanation.—A written will may be revoked by parol though the will itself is not destroyed.

Illustrations.

(a) A has made an unprivileged will. Afterwards A makes another unprivileged will which purports to revoke the first.

This is a revocation.

(b) A has made an unprivileged will. Afterwards A being minded to make a privileged will makes a privileged will which purports to revoke his unprivileged will.

This is a revocation.

182. (1) A will or any part thereof is void if it is brought about by coercion, fraud, undue influence, misrepresentation or by such importunity as deprives the maker of his free will.

Will when void.

(2) And if the maker of a will is induced by the same means to alter or revoke his will, or is prevented from altering it, it will have the same effect which the maker had intended.

Explanation.—The importunity, undue influence and misrepresentation under this section must be such as amounts to fraud or force destroying the free agency of the testator.

Illustrations.

(a) A threatens to shoot B, or to burn his house, or to cause him to be arrested on a false charge unless he makes a bequest in favour of C. B in consequence makes a bequest in favour of C. The bequest is void as induced by coercion.

(b) A falsely informs B that his son is dead and thereby induces B to bequeath his estate to A. The bequest is void.

(c) A being in so feeble a state of mind as to be unable to resist importunity is pressed by B to make a will of a certain property merely to purchase peace and in submission to B. The will is void.

(d) A wishes to revoke his will made in favour of B. B threatens to kill A if he revoked it. The will is void.

(e) A makes a will in favour of B on his death-bed. He is induced by importunities of C to alter it in favour of C. The alteration is void.

(f) A is induced by the adulation and flattery of B to make a bequest in his favour. The bequest is not rendered invalid by reason B's adulation and flattery.

Burden of proof. 183. (1) The burden of proving a will lies upon the person who propounds it and not upon the person who impeaches it.

(2) Such proof must comprise not only proof of due execution, but also that the executant was of a sound disposing mind, though if nothing appears to the contrary, this may be presumed.

Explanation.—A person is said to possess a disposing mind if he possesses sufficient understanding and reason to be able to form an intelligent judgment as to the disposal of his property.

CHAPTER XVIII.

CONSTRUCTION OF GIFTS AND WILLS.

Construction of Indian deeds. 184. Deeds must be literally construed giving effect to the grantor's intention ascertainable, as far as possible, without the aid of any artificial rules of construction.

Grant or bequest conveys grantor's entire interest. 185. A grant or bequest prima facie conveys the entire interest of the grantor unless it is limited expressly or by necessary implication.

Illustration.

A the proprietor of the estate B bequeaths it to C with the words "I give B to C." The quantum of interest bequeathed to C is that possessed by A at the moment of the grant.

Gift to female relation 186. In the absence of an express direction to the contrary a gift or devise to a female relation is presumed to convey only a life-estate.

187. A gift or devise creating an estate of inheritance inconsistent with the general law of inheritance is void to that extent.

Illustrations.

(a) A devises his estate to B and his eldest nephew and the eldest nephew of such eldest nephew and so forth for ever. B takes the life-estate but the rest of the devise is invalid for it creates a line of succession inconsistent with the general law.

(b) A bequeathes his partible estate to B on his death to his eldest son and thenceforward to the eldest son of each holder. The bequest is invalid for it alters the course of ordinary succession to one by primogeniture a new form of estate which cannot be created by will.

188. Where an interest is gifted or devised to a class some of which are incapable of taking by reason of any rule of law or otherwise, the gift or devise will take effect as to the rest.

Gift to a class.

Construction of will.

189. (1) A will must be construed according to its true intent and purpose giving effect to the actual intention of the testator unaided by any rules of technical construction.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle its construction is subject to the rules set out in Ss. 61-77, 82, 83, 85, 88—98 of the Succession Act, and principally those set out in the next following Ss. 190-200.

190. Extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to alter, detract from, or add to the terms of a will, though it may remove a latent ambiguity arising from words equally descriptive of two or more subjects or objects of gift.

Extrinsic evidence when admissible.

191. The surrounding circumstances under which the deviser made his will, as the state of his property, of his family and the like is admissible.

192. A will must be liberally and not too literally construed.

Construction of will.

193. Where a specific charitable bequest fails for uncertainty in the object and there is no direction, upon its failure that the bequest should go to the residue, the court will apply the gift cypres, that is to say, to other objects as nearly as may be of a similar character.

Cypres doctrine.

Construction of words

194. All words must be construed in their ordinary popular sense, unless there is a clear indication that they are used in another sense.

Construction of technical terms.

195. Technical terms must be presumed to bear their legal sense, unless the context clearly indicates the contrary.

196. The construction must be uniform, the same words being construed in the same sense, unless a contrary intention appear by the context, or unless the words be applied to a different subject.

Construction must be uniform.

All words must be considered.

197. Of two modes, preference must be given to the construction which gives effect to every expression.

Construction must be benignant.

198. That construction must be preferred which will prevent a total intestacy.

Subsequent events ignored.

199. The construction is not to be varied by events subsequent to the execution.

Effect of operative part.

200. Where a testator's intention cannot operate to its full extent, it shall take effect as far as possible.

201. A devise to a female presumably conveys a limited estate though an absolute estate may be conveyed by apt words conferring the power of alienation.

Devise to female.

Probate.

202. (1) Persons subject to the Hindu Wills Act shall, and others may, obtain probate of a will, whether oral or in writing.

(2) The grant of probate is subject to the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act.

CHAPTER XIX.

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.

Endowment defined. 203. (1) Endowment is the dedication of property by gift or devise to religious or charitable uses.

(2) An endowment must be certain both as to the subject and the object.

(3) A dedication of property to an endowment may be partial or complete.

(4) It is partial when there is merely a charge or trust created.

(5) It is complete when the property is dedicated absolutely and no person has any beneficial interest therein.

*Explanation :—*An endowment is distinguishable from a bequest in that its operation is perpetual and the object general.

Religious and charitable endowments defined. 204. (1) A religious endowment is one which has for its object the establishment, maintenance or worship, of an idol or deity, or any object or purpose subservient to religion.

(2) A charitable endowment is one which has for its object the benefit of the public or of mankind.

(3) No endowment is valid except when made in accordance with the following rules stated in this chapter.

Public and private religious endowment 205. (1) A religious endowment may be public or private.

(2) A public religious endowment is dedication of property for the use or benefit of the public.

(3) A private religious endowment is dedication of property for the worship of a family God in which the public are not interested.

Form of endowment. 206. (1) An endowment may be created by an oral dedication by a person divesting himself of specific property for religious or charitable uses.

(2) But where an endowment is created by a will subject to the Hindu Wills Act such will must be in writing and attested as therein provided.

*Explanation (1)—*No express words are necessary to create an endowment.

*Explanation (2)—*A trust is not necessary to create an endowment; all that is necessary is a complete dedication.

Subject of endowment. 207. Any property which a person can dispose of by gift or will may form the subject of an endowment.

Operation of endowment 208. An endowment takes effect from the moment of dedication.

209. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary the beneficial interest in dedicated property vests in the religious or charitable object, while the trustee or manager is entitled to its possession and management.

(2) Debutter property is property dedicated to a god or gods. The trustee or manager of such property is called a Sarbarakar, Shebait, Dharm Karta or Mahant.

Endowment in favour of non-existing object.

210. An endowment may be created in favour of an idol, muth or other object, not in existence at the death of the testator.

211. An endowment is illusory and void where it is a device to preserve the estate to the family of endower or defraud, defeat or delay his other claimants or creditors.

Illusory and void endowment.

Illustrations.

(a) A being indebted dedicates his property to his family god, retaining all control. The endowment is void.

(b) A endows a god to spite his son. The endowment is void.

212. No endowment can be made the purpose or object of which is illegal.

Invalid endowment.

Illustrations.

A Hindu endows a mosque. The endowment is invalid.

Endowment when irrevocable.

213. (1) An endowment once completed is both irrevocable and unalterable.

(2) Provided that an endowment in favour of a family idol may be revoked, altered or transferred by the consensus of the family.

Who may be appointed manager.

214. (1) No person is disqualified by reason of his caste or sex to be appointed a manager.

(2) A female is not disqualified by reason of her sex from holding a priestly office, though she might not be competent to perform its spiritual duties.

Appointment and succession of manager.

215. (1) The founder is entitled to provide for the management of any endowment created by him.

(2) He may nominate a shebait and provide for his successor and effect will be given to his wishes if not inconsistent with the general law.

(3) Where the founder makes an endowment without providing for its management, the right of management vests in the founder and his heirs.

(4) The right of the founder to provide for the management devolves upon his heirs on his death.

(5) The court may appoint a manager in the last resort.

216. (1) In the absence of any custom or usage to the contrary, the rights and liabilities of the manager of an endowment are those of the guardian of a minor's estate, that is to say, he may incur debts, charge or alienate the corpus of an endowment if justified by legal necessity or its benefit.

(2) Property belonging to an endowment may be attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained against the manager as such.

(3) Any person interested in the endowment may sue to set aside an improper alienation of its property by the manager.

(4) Any person suing to enforce an alienation made by the manager must prove both its factum and necessity.

Explanation 1.—The term “manager” in clause (1) includes any person actually filling that character whatever may be the defect in his appointment.

Explanation 2.—The term “manager” in clause (1) means and includes a shebait or the trustee or mahant of a muth, and any other person by whatever name called provided he discharges the duties of manager.

Manager's office                      217. The office of manager is inalienable except to how far transferable            the following extent :—

(1) The manager of a private endowment may transfer it with the consent of the founder or his whole family.

(2) In other cases, it may be relinquished if allowed by the terms of the foundation or usage, in favour of a member of the family or failing such member, a stranger eligible to discharge the duties of the office.

(3) Provided that notwithstanding any usage, no transfer can be made for the pecuniary benefit of the transferor or which is incompatible with the interest of the trust.

Illustration.

A bequeathes his shebaitship to A. The bequest is invalid for since A's office only enures for his life, there remains nothing on A's death which he could bequeath.

Manager's duties.                      218 The manager of an endowment is charged with the following duties :—

(1) He must carry out the founder's directions, if any, as to the management of the property.

(2) He must maintain the customary usages of the institution.

(3) He is entitled to the possession of all endowed property; and as shebait, he is entitled to the custody of the idol and all its paraphernalia.

(4) He must maintain accounts of the trust and is entitled to an indemnity for anything of his own spent thereon.

(5) He may retain or apply the surplus as may be usual or customary.

(6) He may improve the property out of its surplus.

(7) He is accountable to the founder and in his absence, his legal representatives.

(8) He is entitled to sue and is liable to be sued on behalf of the trust.

Removal of manager.                      219. A manager may be removed from his office for such misconduct as is incompatible with the interest of the endowment.

220. (1) Beneficiaries are persons for whose spiritual or temporal advancement an endowment is created. It includes an idol to whom property is dedicated.

(2) The beneficiaries are interested in seeing that the endowment is maintained and its legitimate functions preserved.

(3) Worshippers and devotees of an idol and other sacred object or institution are entitled to resort to it at all reasonable hours for the purpose of worship and devotion.

(4) The manager is bound to afford them reasonable facilities for that purpose.

(5) Beneficiaries are jointly and severally, as the case may be, entitled to participate in the benefit of the endowment created and maintained for their benefit.

Exception.—Nothing contained in this section applies to private endowments.

Statutory control.                    221. Public, religious and charitable endowments are subject to the following statutory control.

(1) Any two or more persons interested therein may maintain a suit in accordance with the procedure prescribed in S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

(2) And any person so interested may sue alone in a case arising under the Religious Endowments Act, 1863.

(3) Such suit does not affect a suit otherwise maintainable.

---

CHAPTER XX.

SUCCESSION BY SURVIVORSHIP.

---

222. (1) When a person dies possessed of co-parcenary property his interest therein passes to the other co-parceners then living by right of survivorship, who take it in their own right and not in trust for the heirs of the deceased.

Provided that where he has left sons or grandsons in the male line, his interest survives to them to the exclusion of his other co-parceners.

(3) Where such property passes to the surviving co-parceners, they take per stirpes and not per capita.

(4) Nothing herein applies to members of a Dayabhag family who take by inheritance and not by survivorship.

When co-parcenary property devolves on heirs.                    223. Where the deceased was at his death the sole co-parcener, his estate devolves upon his heirs in the same manner as if it were his separate property.

---

CHAPTER. XXI.

MITAKSHARA INHERITANCE.

---

224. (1) "Propositus" means the person from whom a descent is traced.

(2) "Last full owner" means one who held the property absolutely at the time of his death.

225. "Sapindas" means blood-relations of the propositus to the seventh degree on the father's side and fifth on the side of the mother reckoned from and inclusive of the deceased. Sapindas may be Gotraj or Bhinna gotras.

226. "Gotraj Sapindas" are all agnates, that is, persons connected "Gotraj Sapinda" with the propositus by an unbroken line of male descent, defined. up to the sixth degree. They are also called "Saman Gotra Sapindas."

227. "Bhinna Gotraj Sapindas" are those related to the propositus Bandhus defined. through a female. They are also known as bandhus.

(2) Bandhus may be

(a) "Atma Bandhus," that is, relations of one's own.

(b) "Pitri Bandhus" that is, the father's Bandhus.

(c) "Matri Bandhus" that is, the mother's Bandhus.

228. "Samanodakas" are relations from the seventh degree to the "Samanodak" defined. fourteenth degree and even beyond, if agnatic relationship be clearly established.

229. (1) "Stridhan," unless otherwise stated, means the woman's "Stridhan" defined. property acquired by her otherwise than by inheritance or partition over which she possesses full power of disposal.

(2) But in Bombay property inherited by a woman otherwise than from her husband becomes her stridhan.

(3) For the purpose of succession, the Mayukh sub-divides stridhan into (a) technical or proper and (b) non-technical or improper.

(4) Technical or proper stridhan. means and includes (a) a woman's marriage presents and (b) gifts and bequests made to her by the blood relations.

(5) Non-technical or improper stridham means and includes (a) properties inherited by her from a male, (b) or received from a stranger, (c) her own earnings and (d) her maintenance grant.

The Mayukh lays down special rules of succession to stridhan technical and non-technical.

230. No person can alter the course of inheritance prescribed by law except to the extent permitted by it.
Course of inheritance cannot be altered.

Illustrations

(a) The course of inheritance may be altered by will, since laws allows it.

(b) Heirs may waive or vary their shares, since law allows it.

231. The heir succeeds in his own right and not in a right derived from another.
Heir's right personal.

(2) On a property descending to a male heir, he becomes a fresh stock of descent and the property passes to his own heir and not to the heir of any previous owner.

(3) But where property descends to a female heir, her heirs are those of the full owner except in Bombay where the female heir becomes a fresh stock of descent.

Illustrations.

(a) A and B are father and son, B predeceased A leaving him surviving his daughter C, On A's death C does not inherit though her father B, would have if he were then alive

(b) A has two sons B and C, B predeceased leaving his widow D. On A's death C inherits the whole estate. D takes nothing though her husband would have taken a moiety if he were alive at A's death.

232. On the death of the owner the estate vests immediately in the heir then living.

(1) The inheritance cannot be held in abeyance except when the heir is in the womb.

233. On the vesting of the inheritance, the heir becomes entitled to all property which was vested in the deceased in title or in possession, though its enjoyment by the deceased may have been postponed.

234. An estate once vested cannot be divested except in the following cases.

- (a) Where the estate has vested in the widow, upon whose adoption of a son her own estate is divested.
- (b) by the posthumous son of a father who, if born when the inheritance, opened, would have had a preferential claim to the estate.

235. The right of a person to succeed to another is a mere contingency which cannot be transferred or divided or be the subject of a valid contract.

236. Women are excluded from inheritance unless their claim is supported by special texts or local usage.

237. (1) The following defects disqualify an heir from inheritance.

- (a) Congenital blindness, deafness and dumbness.
- (b) Congenital want of any limb or organ.
- (c) Lunacy and idiocy though not congenital or incurable.
- (d) Sanious or ulcerous leprosy.
- (e) Impotency or other incurable disease.
- (f) Unchastity in a female heir.

(2) No one is entitled to succeed to the property of a person to whose murder he has been an accessory.

(3) A widow re-marrying under the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act 1856 forfeits her right to the estate of her husband and his lineal descendants.

238. When an heir is disqualified, the next heir of the deceased succeeds but the disqualified heir is entitled to maintenance for himself and his family.

---

CHAPTER XXII.

ORDER OF THE MITAKSHARA INHERITANCE TO MALES.

239. (1) Sapindas are of two classes : (a) Gotraj and (b) Bandhus.

Classification of Sapindas.

(2) Gotraj comprise Gotraj Sapinda and Samanodaks who are the preferential heirs, failing whom the succession devolves on the Bandhus.

(3) Among the Gotraj Sapindas the nearest Sapinda succeeds provided the deceased and his heir were related to each other as Sapindas and provided further that the Sapinda who was joint with the deceased is preferred to other Sapindas of the same class, except in the case of brothers and sons of brothers among whom no distinction is made between persons of the whole blood and those of the half blood.

Explanation.—Legitimate sons by different mothers succeed equally to the property of their father.

Exception.—The rule as to propinquity stated in clause 3 does not apply to the issue of the owner as defined in S. 50 who inherit by representation.

240. The heirs of a deceased person are the following, who, subject to the other provisions hereinafter contained in this behalf, succeed in the order given below:—

Order of succession of heirs.

- (1) Gotraj Sapindas.
- (2) Samanodaks.
- (3) Bandhus.
- (4) Spiritual Preceptor.
- (5) Pupil.
- (6) Fellow Student.
- (7) The Crown.

241. The issue of the deceased inherit in accordance with the following rules:—

Right of issue

(1) When there are more than one son, whether by the same or different mothers, they take equal shares.

(2) Sons who were joint with their father at the time of his decease inherit to the exclusion of those who were separate.

(3) Grandsons of a predeceased son inherit in the right of their father taking per stirpes and not per capita.

(4) An adopted son of the deceased inherits the whole estate. But where the deceased has left an auras son him surviving, the adopted son takes one-fifth of the share of an auras son as provided in S. 50 (4).

(5) The illegitimate son of a twice born does not inherit to his putative father. But the son of a Shudra inherits to the same extent as a legitimate son provided that he was born of a continuous concubine intercourse with whom was neither incestuous nor adulterous. Provided further, that where a Shudra father has sons both legitimate and illegitimate, the latter takes half the share of a legitimate son in default of whom he inherits the whole; but he has otherwise no right to collateral succession. He shares equally with the widow and the daughter's son.

Succession of illegitimate son.

242. The order of succession amongst Samanodaks is subject to the following rules:

Order of Succession
amongst Samanodaks.

- (1) The nearer line excludes the line more remote; and
- (2) a nearer kinsman excludes a remoter kinsman in the same line.

Order of succession amongst Bandhus. 243. The order of succession among Bandhus is subject to the following rules:—

(1) The deceased owner and the bandhu claiming the heritable right must be Sapindas of each other either through themselves or through their mother and father.

(2) Of Bandhus of the same class where both are expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara the order of preference is according to the order in which they are mentioned therein.

(3) Of Bandhus of different classes Atma Bandhus succeed first, secondly Pitri Bandhus and lastly Matri Bandhus.

(4) Bandhus in a nearer line exclude the line more remote and a nearer Bandhu excludes a remoter Bandhu in the same line.

Explanation to clauses (2) and (3).

Bandhus are said to belong to the same class when they are all Atma Bandhus, Pitri Bandhus or Matri Bandhus.

244. In Bombay, Berar and Sindh subject to the Mayukh, the wives of Gotraj Sapindas are themselves treated as such and take their husband's places in the line of heirs subject to the two following rules.—

(1) They come in only after all the Gotraj Sapindas in the line to which their husbands belonged are exhausted.

(2) A widow of a gotraj sapinda cannot inherit until after the sister.

(3) As such, the following other females are recognized as heirs.—

(4) Sister, whether of the whole or half blood.

(5) Widows of predeceased Sapindas and Samanodaks.

(6) Son's widow.

(7) Step-mother.

(8) Father's widow.

(9) Brother's widow.

(10) Brother's son's widow.

(11) Paternal uncle's widow and the widows of the paternal first cousins.

(12) Daughter's descendants and collaterals within 5 degrees such as

(a) The son's daughter,

(b) The daughter's daughter,

(c) Brother's daughter,

(d) Sister's daughter, who all inherit after the nine bandhus expressly enumerated in the Mitakshara.

(13) Father's sister who comes in after all the Gotraj Sapindas but before the Bandhus.

Madras Female heirs.

245. In the Madras Presidency the following females are recognized as heritable bandhus,

(1) Sister

(2) Half sister.

- (3) Son's daughter.
- (4) Daughter's daughter.
- (5) Brother's daughter.
- (6) Such female Bandhus rank after all male bandhus.

246. The heir of a hermit (Vanprasth) is a spiritual brother or associate Hermit's heir. in holiness, of an ascetic (Sanyasi or Yati) a virtuous pupil, and that of a professed student (Brahmachari) his religious preceptor. In default of these heirs any one associated in holiness may inherit.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE DAYABHAG SUCCESSION.

247. In this chapter unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or Sapinda. context Sapinda means a Sapinda as defined in S. 224 but not more than 3 degrees removed and includes cognate
 Sapindas within the limit.

248. "Sakulya" is a male agnate relation of the propositus in the "Sakulya" defined. Dayabhag law, four to six degrees remote from him.

249. All property owned by person whether joint or separate passes on Heritable property his death by succession.

250. The heirs of a deceased owner are in their Principle governing succession. order the following :—

- (1) Sapindas.
- (2) Sakulyas.
- (3) Samanodaks.
- (4) Bandhus other than those taking as Sapindas.
- (5) The preceptor.
- (6) A Pupil.
- (7) A Fellow student.
- (8) The king.

251. The order of succession among Sapindas, Sakulamong Sapindas, etc. yas and Samanodaks is governed by the following rules:—

(1) Except in the cases stated below, those who offer pindas to the deceased are preferred to those who offer them to any of his ancestors.

(2) And those who offer them to the deceased are preferred to those who accept them from the deceased.

(3) A person who offers pindas to a near ancestor is preferred to one offering pindas to an ancestor more remote irrespective of the number of pindas offered by each of them.

(4) Those who offer oblations to both the paternal and maternal ancestors are preferred to those who only offer to the paternal ancestors.

(5) Those who are competent to offer pindas to the paternal ancestors of the propositus are preferred to those who are competent to offer them only to their maternal ancestors irrespective of the number of pindas offered.

(6) Agnatic Sapindas in any line are always preferred to the cognate Sapindas of the same line.

(7) Between an agnate Sapinda and a cognate Sapinda of equal degree of propinquity, the former is preferred to the latter even though he offers more pindas in which the deceased would participate.

(8) Subject to the above, those who offer a larger number of pindas of a particular description are preferred to those who offer a less number of pindas.

(9) And where the number of such pindas is equal, those that offer to nearer ancestors are preferred to those offering to more distant ones.

Exception to Clause (1):—Nothing contained in clause (1) affects the priority of the sons, grandsons and daughter's sons of the propositus.

CHAPTER XXIV.

WOMAN'S ESTATE.

Restriction on woman's estate 252. Except as otherwise provided, the rights of a woman in her property acquired by partition or inheritance, are limited as follows:—

(1) The estate is liable to be divested upon the subsequent birth or adoption of a son or upon her re-marriage but not for unchastity.

(2) She is not entitled to alienate the corpus except for legal necessity or benefit, as hereinafter provided but she is entitled to appropriate all its income and accumulations which she may dispose of at her discretion.

(3) On her death her estate devolves on the next heir of the last male owner,

Exception 1.—Under the Miyukh law females who belong to the family of the propositus by birth take an absolute interest while those who come into it by marriage take only a limited estate.

Exception 2:—A Jain widow has absolute power of disposal over the self-acquired property of her husband inherited by her.

Exception 3:—Nothing in this section applies to an estate acquired by a woman by deed or devise which may confer on her an absolute estate.

Illustrations.

(a) A inherits an impartible estate from her husband. She takes a limited estate.

(b) A, the mother, succeeds as heir to her son. A takes only a limited estate.

(c) A, the daughter, inherits her father's estate. A's estate is limited.

(d) A, a sister, inherits her brother's estate in Bombay. A takes an absolute estate though elsewhere her estate would be limited.

Estate of Joint heirs. 253. (1) Under the Mitakshara two or more joint female heirs take as joint tenants with the right of survivorship inter se.

(2) But those subject to the Mayukh and Dayabagh laws take as tenants-in-common.

(3) Any alienation by the former must be made either jointly by all or with their express or implied consent.

(4) But an alienation by the latter may be made by any of the co-heiresses to the extent of her share.

Accretions.

254. (1) Any accretion made by an heiress partakes of the nature of the estate to which it is added.

(2) The question whether any property is an accretion to the parent estate is one of intention to augment it by treating it as a part thereof.

(3) But in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, any purchase made out of income of an estate may be presumed to be an accretion thereto.

Illustrations.

(a) A female heiress receives the income of her husband's estate from the executor of his will who holds the estate in trust for her and his other heirs. A purchases property out of the income so received and devises it to her own relation. A is entitled to do so since having no estate in possession there is no question of accretion.

(b) A receives an estate by way of maintenance out of the profits of which she purchases a village B. B is A's stridhan at her absolute disposal.

(c) A devises an estate to his widow B for life. Out of the profits of this estate, B purchases a property C. C is her stridhan at her absolute disposal.

Testamentary incapacity

255. A woman has no power (even with the consent of reversioners) to dispose of by will either of her limited estate or its accumulations.

Incidents of a woman's estate

256. Except as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, the incidents of a woman's inherited estate are as follows:—

(1) She is entitled to absolute possession of the estate which vests in her by right of inheritance.

(2) She is entitled to its beneficial enjoyment.

(3) She may grant leases and do other acts in the ordinary course of management.

(4) She may transfer all or any portion of the estate for her life or until her estate is determined earlier, as by her re-marriage.

(5) Her interest therein may be seized and sold in execution of a decree against her.

When heiress ward of Court.

257. Where the Court of Wards or any other guardian is in possession of a woman's estate its power of alienation is equally subject to the provisions of S. 258.

Valid alienation of the estate.

258. (1) A woman may alienate her estate so as to bind the reversioners for legal necessity or for its benefit.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle such alienation may be made for any of the purposes or objects stated in the next following clauses:

(3) For performance of Shradh of the last full owner and of his ancestors which he was bound to perform when living.

(4) For the performance of such other religious ceremonies as constitute a spiritual necessity of the last full owner, provided that the immoveable property alienated is in every case reasonable and of moderate extent.

(5) For the payment of the debts of the last full owner even though barred by time.

(6) The payment of Government Revenue and all other public charges accruing due in respect thereof and any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold.

(7) Cost of obtaining letters of administration or a succession certificate of the property of the last full owner.

(8) Costs of litigation necessary for preserving and defending the estate.

(9) Costs of its preservation and repairs.

(10) Maintenance of herself and those whom the last full owner was bound to maintain.

(11) Marriage of female relations of the last full owner whom he was bound to marry such as his sister, daughter, son's and grandson's daughter, and the like

(12) Customary ceremonial gifts to a reasonable extent on the occasion of marriage of such relations.

(13) Customary small gifts on other ceremonial occasions.

Legal necessity S. 96.

Benefit S. 97.

Surrender of woman's estate.

259. (1) The heiress may surrender her entire interest to the next reversioner, or to any one or more of such reversioners with the consent of the rest, provided that where the next reversioner is a female it may be surrendered to the male reversioner next in order with her consent.

(2) Such surrender does not affect the validity of her prior alienations.

260. (1) An alienation for value or otherwise supported by legal necessity of any property made by the heiress with the consent of the next male reversioner will be presumed to be valid and supported by legal necessity.

(2) But where the alienation relates to her entire interest in the estate and is consented to by all her next reversioners it will be conclusive against the actual reversioners when the succession opens.

Explanation :—(1) Such consent may be express or implied and may be given contemporaneously with or subsequently to the transaction.

(2) No consent is valid

(a) if it is given without full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction

(b) if it is given or obtained collusively or fraudulently with intent to defeat the claims of a future reversioner ;

(c) or if it is not given in good faith with intent to confirm the transaction.

CHAPTER XXV.

REVERSIONERS AND THEIR RIGHTS.

— — —

261. (1) So long as the estate is vested in the heiress the interest of her Reversioner's interest. reversioners to succeed to it is a mere spes successionis and is incapable of being the subject of any contract, surrender or disposal.

(2) One reversioner does not derive his title from another but all derive their title equally from the last full owner.

No declaration by reversioner of his rights. 262. A reversioner cannot bring a suit merely to obtain a declaration of his reversionary rights.

Prevention of waste, improper act and alienation. 263. (1) Subject to the provisions of the next section, the reversioner is entitled to restrain the heiress or her alienee from committing waste or otherwise endangering the reversion.

(2) And he may restrain her by an injunction from making an improper alienation and obtain a declaration that any alienation made by her would be voidable by him on her death.

(3) He may obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption prejudicing his reversion is invalid or never in fact took place.

(4) He may oppose the grant of probate to the limited owner if prejudicial to the reversion.

264. (1) Such suit must be brought in the first instance by the presumptive reversioner, but if owing to his minority, collusion or consent, ratification, waiver of his right as reversioner, estoppel or limitation, he is unable or unwilling without sufficient cause to sue, then it may be brought by the reversioner next to him in succession but in that case the court may join the presumptive reversioner as a party to the suit.

(2) A suit instituted by the presumptive reversioner may on his death, or otherwise on proof of laches or collusion with the heiress whose acts are impugned, be continued by the next presumable reversioner.

(3) Where the immediate reversioner is a female the nearest male reversioner may maintain such suit without having to show any of the causes mentioned in clause (1).

(4) Any adjudication made in such suit is res judicata as against the heir when the reversion opens.

265. Where an alienation made by the heiress is found to be only partially supported by legal necessity or benefit binding on the reversion, it may, except as otherwise provided, be set aside or upheld in accordance with the following rules:—

(1) Where it is mainly supported by legal necessity but only an inconsiderable part is not so supported, the alienation will not be set aside but the alienee will be bound to make good the amount not supported by legal necessity.

(2) Where the alienation is not mainly supported by legal necessity, the alienation will be set aside on the reversioner refunding to the alienee the consideration he had paid for legal necessity.

(3) Provided that no person not a bona fide alienee for valuable consideration and without notice can claim such equity to compensation.

266. (1) In a suit between the reversioner and the heiress's alienee for possession of property comprised in her estate, it lies on the latter to prove that the former is bound by the transfer to him as supported by legal necessity.

Burden of proof.

(2) In a suit between a pardanashin heiress and her transferees, it lies on the transferee to prove not only that the deed was executed by, but was explained to and really understood by the former who had executed it by the free and independent exercise of her will.

267. A suit to avoid an alienation may be brought by the presumptive reversioner within 12 years and by a presumable reversioner within six years from the date thereof.

Improper alienation voidable.

268. An alienation by the heiress in excess of her powers is not void but is voidable at the election of the reversioner.

Succession of reversioners.

269. (1) On the death of the heiress her limited estate devolves on her next reversioner then alive.

(2) Reversioners take per capita.

(3) Where the next reversioner disclaims the estate it devolves on the reversioner next to him in succession.

Explanation.—The term “death” in clause (1) includes civil death as by re-marriage or abandonment of worldly affairs which determines the estate.

Reversioner's rights on succession.

270. On the estate vesting in the reversioner he acquires the following rights:—

(1) He is entitled to possession of the estate together with all its accumulations, accretions and incidents as on the death of the heiress.

(2) He is entitled to dispute all unauthorised acts of the female heir.

(3) He is entitled to represent the estate and as such may continue the suit instituted by or against the heiress.

(4) He may execute all decrees obtained by her as representing the estate as he is liable to satisfy all such decrees obtained against her.

His liabilities.

271. (1) On succession, the reversioner becomes subject to the following liabilities:—

(1) He is bound by all alienations made by the heiress supported by legal necessity or benefit of the estate.

(2) He is liable to pay for the reasonable expenses of her Shradh in proportion to the estate which he has inherited.

(3) He must pay all her debts incurred for necessity or for the benefit of the estate although not charged on the inheritance.

272. Reversioners are not bound to pay the debts of the heiress other than her trade debts incurred in respect of a family business or those not supported by legal necessity or benefit.

273 The reversioner is bound to pay for the tortious acts of the heiress committed for the benefit of the estate.

274. The reversioners are bound by a decree passed against the heiress personally as representing the estate, unless it is shown that it was a decree obtained by collusion or fraud, or that there had not been a fair trial of the rights in the suit.

Explanation.—1. The decree in this section includes all proceedings consequent upon such decree including a sale in execution thereof.

Explanation.—2. A decree passed against the heiress on a matter personal to her is not a decree passed against her as representing the estate.

Explanation.—3. A decree otherwise valid is not rendered invalid merely by reason of the fact that it had been obtained by consent or compromise.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a widow sues B for a declaration of the invalidity of his adoption. Her suit is dismissed on the ground that B's adoption was valid. On A's death her daughter sues B for possession of the estate on the ground that B's adoption is invalid. The question is res judicata.

(b) A widow sues B for a declaration of the invalidity of B's adoption. Afterwards A compromises her claim with B and suffers a decree declaring B's adoption valid. On A's death her daughter C sues B for possession of the estate alleging the invalidity of B's adoption. The question whether the matter as to B's adoption is res judicata depends upon whether the decree in the previous suit had been obtained after a fair contest.

(c) A the mother of the last owner obtains a decree for maintenance against his widow B. In execution she attaches and brings to sale the right, title and interest of B. The seller takes only the widow's estate as the decree was a personal decree against B.

(d) A the creditor of the last owner sues and obtains a decree against the latter's widow B in execution of which he sells the right, title and interest of B. The sale passes the entire estate and not merely B's life estate.

275 The reversioner is entitled to sue for possession of immoveable property to which he becomes entitled on the death of a female owner at any time within 12 years from her death as provided in Art. 141 of the Limitation Act; or in case of its forfeiture, within the same period calculated from when the forfeiture is incurred as provided in Art 143 of the Limitation Act.

(2) Where however the property to be recovered is moveable he must sue within six years from the same event under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act.

(3) Provided that where the heiress had at any time set up an adverse title against the reversioner his claim will be barred by her adverse possession for 12 years.

CHAPTER XXVI.

STRIDHAN.

276. (1) Stridhan means woman's property over which she possesses the power of full disposal and which on her death devolves upon her own heirs.

(2) It includes property into which it is converted by sale exchange or otherwise.

Illustrations.

(a) A possesses two properties B and C as her stridhan. She makes a gift of B to D and devises C to E. Both the gift and the devise are valid as the properties being A's stridhan, she possessed the absolute power of disposal over them.

(b) A inherits the property B from her husband. She accumulates its income which she bequeathes to C by will. The bequest is void as though A possessed the absolute power of disposal over B's income it was not her stridhan. She could not therefore bequeath it.

What property is 277. The following property constitutes a woman's stridhan. stridhan :—

(1) Property inherited by female heirs born in the family and subject to Mayukh.

(2) Property acquired by grant, gift, or devise from a relation or a stranger which confers an absolute power of disposal.

(3) Property given for the purpose, or in lieu of maintenance, not being property allotted on partition to a wife or widow.

(4) Accretions to and purchases made out of such property.

(5) Property acquired by adverse possession.

(6) Property acquired by self exertion.

(7) Wedding gift and more particularly the following :—

(i) Yautak including

(a) Adhyagnik Stridhan—gifts made before the nuptial fire, i.e., at the actual marriage ceremony, and

(b) Adhyavahnik Stridhan—gifts received at the time of the marriage procession.

(ii) Sulk—or gratuity.

(8) Adhivednik—or the compensation given by the husband to his wife on his marrying another wife.

(9) Anwadeyik—or gifts made after marriage by her relations or by her husband's relations.

278. A woman cannot alien or devise her stridhan other than Saudayak during coverture without her husband's consent.

279. On the death of a maiden, her Stridhan is inherited by her heirs in the following order :—

Succession to maiden's Stridhan.

(1) Uterine brothers.

(2) Mother.

(3) Father.

(4) The father's sapindas.

(5) The mother's sapindas.

(6) Her own sapindas.

Succession to Stridhan of woman with children.

280. Except as otherwise hereinafter provided, the Stridhan of a woman with children devolves on her following relations :—

- (1) Unmarried daughters.
- (2) Married daughter who is poor or childless.
- (3) Married daughter who is well to do whether she has children or not.
- (4) Daughter's daughter.
- (5) Daughter's son.
- (6) Son.
- (7) Son's son.
- (8) Husband.
- (9) Her nearest sapindas.

281. (1) The stridhan of an issueless woman devolves on her husband if she was married to him in the Brahm form which will be presumed, and failing him to his nearest sapindas in the order of their succession to him.

(2) But if she was married to him in the Asur form (or some other unapproved form) it devolves on her mother, then on her father, and then on the father's or mother's nearest sapinda in the order of their succession to them.

282. (1) Both under the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag Sulk goes first to the uterine brothers, then to the mother and in default of both, it goes to the heirs of the other Stridhan.

(2) Provided that in the Mithila Country it is first taken by the uterine brothers, then by the mother, and then by the father.

(3) And in Southern India the uterine brothers take in preference to the mother.

283. In the Mayukh and the Dravid country the following classes of Stridhan follow a special line of devolution:—

(1) Yautak Stridhan goes to the maiden daughters in the first instance.

(2) Anwadheyak, Adhivednik and Pritti Dutt stridhans are shared equally by (i) the sons and unmarried daughters (ii) by the sons and married daughters and failing them, it is inherited by the daughter's children and son's son.

Provided that in the case of Stridhan mentioned in the last clause, widowed daughters are excluded and the widows of Gotraj sapindas do not inherit any stridhan.

SPECIAL RULES OF DAYABHAG SUCCESSION.

Succession to Sulk and Anwadheya.

284. The heirs to the Sulk, Anwadheyak and gifts received during maidenhood of a woman subject to the Dayabhag law are in the first instance her—

- (1) brothers of the whole blood,
- (2) mother,
- (3) father,

(4) husband,

and it then follows the line of succession applicable to other stridhan.

Devolution of Stridhan under the Dayabhag law.

285. Under the Dayabhag law stridhan other than Sulk, Ayautak and Pritti Dutt and other special classes of stridhan hereinafter provided for, devolves on the following heirs :—

- (1) The son and unbetrothed daughter.
- (2) Married daughter having or who is likely to have a son.
- (3) Son's son.
- (4) Daughter's son.
- (5) Son's son's son.
- (6) The son of a rival wife.
- (7) Her son's son.
- (8) A barren daughter or sonless widowed daughter.
- (9) The parents.
- (10) Brother.
- (11) The husband.

Succession to child.

286. Except the Sulk and Anwadheya Stridhans, the heirs to the stridhan of a childless woman are :—

(a) If married in Brahm form.—

- (1) Husband.
- (2) Brother.
- (3) Mother.
- (4) Father.

(b) If married in Asur form.—

- (1) Mother.
- (2) Father.
- (3) Brother.
- (4) Husband.

(c) After whom in whatever form married, her heirs are—

- (1) Husband's younger brother.
- (2) Son of husband's elder or younger brother.
- (3) Sister's son, including step sister's son.
- (4) Husband's sister's son.
- (5) Brother's son.
- (6) Daughter's husband.
- (7) Father-in-law.
- (8) Husband's elder brother.
- (9) Her father-in-law's great grandson in the male line.
- (10) The paternal grandfather of her husband or his issue.

(11). The paternal great grandfather of her husband or his issue of the husband in order of propinquity.

(12) The Sakulyas.

(13) The Samanodaks.

(14) Samanpravars.

(15) The Crown.

Heirs to property given by the father.      287. The heirs to Stridhan given by the father are in the first instance.

(1) The full brother.

(2) The mother.

(3) The father.

(4) The husband.

Heirs to yautak.      288. The Yautak is in the first instance taken by—

(1) Unbetrothed daughters

(2) Betrothed daughters

(3) Married daughters who have or are likely to have a son

(4) Barren and sonless widowed daughters

(5) The son

(6) Daughter's son.

(7) The son's son.

(8) The son's son's son.

(9) The son of a rival wife.

(10) Grandson of a rival wife

(11) Great grandson of a rival wife.

289. Persons disqualified from ordinary inheritance by reason of physical defects mentioned in S. 236 are equally incompetent to inherit to stridhan.
Disqualified heirs.

290. (1) In the absence of legitimate issue, illegitimate issue inherit, daughters taking before sons
Illegitimacy no bar.

(2) Nothing in this section applies to a married woman.

THE HINDU CODE.

CHAPTER I.

OPERATION AND EXTENT OF THE HINDU CODE.

---

Short title. 1. (1) This code may be cited as the Hindu Code.

Local extent. (2) It extends to the whole of British India :

And except as provided by this code or by any other law or custom for the time being in force, the rules herein contained are applicable to all Hindus and such other persons as may have adopted them.

(3) The term "Hindu" in this connection includes not only those who are Hindu by religion but also those who are commonly known as such.

Meaning of 'Hindu'

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) History of the early codes (222).              | (15) Essence of Hinduism (266-271).         |
| (2) History of Hinduism (224-229).                 | (16) Present day Hindus (272-278).          |
| (3) History of the Hindu Code (230).               | (17) Outcaste Hindus (279).                 |
| (4) Its Extent and operation (231-236).            | (18) Caste Disabilities Removal Act (280).  |
| (5) Sources of Hindu Law (237-246).                | (19) Its scope (281).                       |
| (6) Custom (247).                                  | (20) Illegitimate children of Hindus (282). |
| (7) Judicial decisions (248-250).                  | (21) Children of mixed alliances (283-285). |
| (8) Statutes (251).                                | (22) General rules deduced (286).           |
| (9) Hindu conception of Immoveable Property (252). | (23) The four castes (287, 288).            |
| (10) Procedure under Hindu Law (253).              | (24) Caste Tests (289).                     |
| (11) Caste Autonomy (254).                         | (25) Kayasths (290, 291).                   |
| (12) Schools of Hindu Law (255).                   | (26) Lingayats (292).                       |
| (13) Rules of Interpretation (259).                | (27) Sikhs (293-295).                       |
| (14) Who are the Hindus (260-265).                 | (28) Jains (296, 297-331).                  |
|   | (29) Brahmos (295, 298-299).                |

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (30) Arya Samaj (300).                     | (38) Non-Hindu followers of Hindu Law (316). |
| (31) Kabir Panthis (302).                  | (39) Khojas (317, 318).                      |
| (32) Shivites-Vaishnavites (303-307).      | (40) Kutchi Memons (319).                    |
| (33) Minor sects (308, 309).               | (41) Sunni Borahs (319).                     |
| (34) Ascetics (310).                       | (42) Molasalam Girasias (319).               |
| (35) Gossavis (311-313).                   | (43) Christian converts (320-322).           |
| (36) Brahmacharis, Sadhus. Sanyasis (314). | (44) Conversion to Hinduism (323-328).       |
| (37) Aboriginal Hindus (315).              | (45) Buddhists (329, 330).                   |

222. Analogous Law.—The Hindu Law as stated by the Smritikars has always been formulated in the form of codes. In later times similar attempts have been made under European direction of which a history will be found given in the General Introduction (§ 170). All these codes were, however, no more than select extracts from the sacred writings and shared their incompleteness. Jagannath's Digest of Hindu Law is an example. It merely set out selected Sutras from Manu, Yajnavalkya, Gautam and other ancient and medieval law givers to which were appended short explanatory notes. The growth of case law with its accumulated wealth of precedents has produced a vast body of detail which has not tended to the simplification of a subject which enters into the daily lives of the people. This work is the first attempt to reduce it to a system in the shape of a code which the legislature has left alone on account of its professed neutrality, only interfering on matters of detail whenever impelled to do so by public policy or public opinion, with the result that the Hindu Law of the present day has to be found, some of it enshrined in the sacred works written in a dead language, some of it in the statutes, much of it in cases, and not a little of it in the commentaries and customs of which a critical study involves time which every lawyer cannot afford, and even where time is of no consequence, the result attained does not give one an assurance of that measure of certainty which is the acknowledged justification of a code (§ 230).

223. This Code is an attempt in the direction of declaring the leading principles of Hindu Law. It is intended to be exhaustive of all principles which the legislature would have embodied in a code, if it were to make an authoritative declaration of the personal law of the Hindus, as the Courts are enjoined to administer on the subjects, upon which the statute has declared its neutrality.

224. Hinduism old and new.—The one question that often exercises the courts in this connection is whether a party belongs to a particular community, before it is entitled to be judged by its own personal law or customs. The question in the first place, depends upon whether he is a "Hindu." In the early days of British rule, the term was used in its largest sense, but it was soon discovered that the term "Hindu" was not an exact concept as defining any determinate body of people to whom that term was accurately applicable. For even within the class of people who were by religion Hindus, there were those who differed from each other in their tenets and conduct as far widely as polytheists and atheists,—those who revered cows and those who ate them, those who worshipped a god and those who reviled it, those who revered Brahmans and those who denounced them as unscrupulous charlatans. Various attempts have been made to define the term—some of these definitions were merely obscurum ab obscurius. Such, for instance, is the definition that Hinduism was "what the Hindus, or a major portion of them in a Hindu community do" (1) or that Hinduism is "the large residuum, that is not Sikh or Jain, or Buddhist, or professedly Animistic or included in one of the foreign religions, such as Islam, Judaism, Christianity or Hebraism." (2) As will be presently seen the highest court of appeal has held that both Sikhs and Jains are Hindus (§§ 295, 296).

226. Sir Alfred Lyall defined Hinduism as "the religion of all the people who accept the Brahmanic scriptures." (3) But this again is not a correct definition, for the Brahmos have been held to be Hindu though they do not answer the test. Sir H. Risley commends this definition and quotes with approval Lyall, who, described Hinduism as "a tangled jungle of disorderly superstitions" and as "the collection of rites, worships, beliefs, traditions, and mythologies, that are sanctioned by the sacred books and ordinances of the Brahmins and are propagated by Brahmanic teaching" to which he adds, "The general accuracy of this newest definition, is beyond dispute." (4) But the definition, if it can be called a definition, is neither accurate nor even precise. Taken as a religion, Hinduism may be defined as the religion which postulates the existence of one God who manifests himself to the world in His incarnations and of a people who believe in His various incarnations. Hinduism is both esoteric and exoteric in its doctrine. The former though pantheistic in form is purely monotheistic in principle. The latter which is the popular Hinduism, while still retaining the same attribute, appeals to the popular imagination by the adoption of images which are the visible symbols of the Divine Spirit whose power and attributes they are intended to typify. This was admitted by Sir Alfred Lyall himself in his Rede Lecture delivered to the Cambridge University in 1892 (5) from which Sir Herbert Risley has made only a partial quotation in his book. What he then said was this: "The dominant idea of intellectual Hinduism, the belief of which overhangs all this jungle of superstitions, is the unity of Spirit under a plurality of forms." (6)

226. But this is not religion. It is philosophy, and Hinduism is now more a system than a religion. But its members while holding diverse views and practising contradictory rites still all agree in the following essential articles of faith which bind together Hindu society and distinguish their religion from all others:—(a)—That God is Spirit and permeates the universe. "He is one without a second" (b)—That He from time to time reveals Himself to the world by becoming incarnate in man. As such he has manifested himself in innumerable incarnations or Avatars. But his principal avtars are in the form of Vishnu, Krishn and Ramchand. (c)—The world is a maya or an illusion. It is an emanation from, God; but as the snail comes out of the shell and can withdraw itself at will from sight so the universe has come out from God and He can withdraw all into Himself. As such, all things are merely imaginary and he who practices meditation becomes conscious of its futility. (d)—Life is an evil because it is hide-bound. Its severance from body effects its release from pain. It should not, therefore, be nourished but starved and suffered till it obtains the welcome release from body. The religious development of India is

(1) G. P. Sen Introduction to the study of Hinduism, 1898 p. 9.

(2) Sir A. Baines Census Report for India 1891, p. 168.

(3) Asiatic Studies, 1899, vol. 2, p. 283.

(4) People of India, 2nd Ed., p. 288.

(5) Published as Ch. V of his Asiatic Studies (2nd series), pp 287-323.

(6) Ib., p. 318.

attached through the course of three thousand years to the word Brahma. This conception might be taken as the standard for estimating the progress of thought directed to divine things, as at every step taken by the latter it has gained a new form ; while at the same time it has always embraced in itself the highest spiritual acquisition of the nation. The original signification of the word Brahma, as we easily discover it in the Vedic hymns, is that of prayer ; not praise or thanksgiving, but that invocation which, with the force of the will directed to God, seeks to draw Him to itself, and to receive satisfaction from Him. From this oldest sense and form of Brahma was formed the masculine noun Brahmin, which was the designation of those who pronounced the prayers, or performed the sacred ceremonies and in, nearly all the passages of the Rig Veda, in which it was thought that this word must refer to the Brahminical caste, the more extended sense must be substituted for the other more limited one. From this sense of the word brahma nothing was more natural than to convert this offer of prayer into a particular description of the sacrificial priest : so soon as the ritual began to be fixed, the functions which before were united in a single person, who both prayed to the gods and sacrificed to them became separated, and a priesthood interposed itself between man and God " (1).

227. "All over India" writes Sir Herbert Risley "at the present moment tribes are gradually and insensibly being transformed into castes. The stages of this operation are in themselves difficult to trace. The main agency at work is fiction, which in this instance takes the form of the pretence that whatever usage prevails to-day did not come into existence yesterday, but has been so from the beginning of time." (2)

228. He then enumerates the several distinct processes, which he adds, proceed in different places and at different times. These may be summarized as follows:—The leading men of an aboriginal tribe having succeeded in life and secured land, first bethink themselves of improving their social position. The first thing they do is to enlist the services of a Brahmin priest who invents for them a pedigree, and discovers for them an ancient connection with an imaginary clan of the Rajput community. They purchase wives from needy Rajputs and in course of time establish a tangible connection with that race. He instances the case of the Nagbansi Rajputs of Chota Nagpur who are now acknowledged as Rajputs. (3) Sometimes a whole tribe of aborigines, or a large section of a tribe form themselves into a new caste of Hinduism. Such are the Rajbansis or Bhanga Kshatriy to which caste belong the great majority of the Kochh inhabitants of Jalpaiguri, Rangpur and a part of Dinajpur, all of whom claim descent from Raja Dasrath. (4) Some of them establish a distinct Hindu sect, such as the Vaishnavas, Lingayats, Ramayats or the like. (5) Whole tribes become gradually converted to Hinduism without, like the Rajbansis, abandoning their tribal designation. Such are the Bunij of western Bengal, who were originally of a pure Dravidian race but are now fully Hinduised, and speak Bengali instead of their original language which they have lost—other castes belonging to this group are the Ahir, Dom and Dosadh of the United Provinces and Behar ; the Gujar, Jat, Meo and Rajput of Rajputana and the Punjab ; the Koli, Mahar, and Maratha of Bombay ; the Bagde, Barri, Chandal (Namsudra), Kaibarta Pod, and Rajbansi Kochh of Bengal ; and in Madras, the Mala, Nair, Vellala and Paraiyan or Pariah, of whom the last retain tradi-

(1) Old Sanskrit Texts, Vol. 1. p. 289.

(2) People of India, (2nd Ed.) p. 72.

(3) Ib p. 72, 73 citing Dalton's Descriptive Ethnology of Bengal. 1872, p. 165 et seq.

(4) Ib., p. 74.

(5) Ib., p. 75.

tions of a time when they possessed an independent organization of their own and had not been relegated to a low place in the Hindu social system. (1)

229. The following remarks occur in the Census Report for Bengal: "At the present time two great influences are at work. The first is the contempt shown by the general body of Hindus for their aboriginal neighbours, and their refusal to have any dealings with them. They are spurned as unclean, and gradually come to share the feeling themselves and to take the superior Hindu at his own valuation. The other influence, paradoxical as it may seem, is the cajolery of certain classes of Brahmins. Degraded members of the priestly caste wander amongst them in search of a livelihood. They commence by reading some religious book, and so gradually acquire an influence which often ends in their obtaining the position of spiritual adviser to the rude inhabitants of the village they have settled upon. In the Orissa States and the Chittagong Hill Tracts, Vaishnava Bairagis, more often than Brahmins, act as missionaries of a debased form of Hinduism." (2)

230. History of the Hindu Code. The Hindu Dharma Shastras which embody the rules of law here codified are all in the form of codes. The laws of Rome which are the parent of all European jurisprudence are essentially codes so intended and constructed. The modern Continental and American law is mostly codified. So is the law of Japan. Various attempts have been made to codify the laws of England, but the attempts have so far failed. There is a tendency in the direction of the codification of Indian Law. The advantages of codification are its certainty, simplicity and uniformity—its sole disadvantage is stated to be its artificial rigidity. (3) The state of Hindu Law before and since the advent of British rule has been already considered. (§§42-194) The declared policy of Government to administer the Hindu Law as it finds it, does not preclude the possibility of its codification. This is an attempt in that direction.

231. Its extent.—The code is stated to extend only to British India because many of its rules are based upon decided cases which have no more than persuasive value in the native states. But in practice, it is apprehended, that its rules will be found generally applicable throughout India.

232. Its operation.—In 1772 the East India Company assumed the "Diwani" of Bengal, and Warren Hastings its Governor-General prepared and submitted a scheme for the better administration of justice to the inhabitants of Calcutta, which provided that "their inheritance and succession to lands, rents, and goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party, shall be determined in the case of Mahomedans by the laws and usages of Mahomedans, and in the case of gentus by the laws and usages of gentus; and where only one of the parties shall be a Mahomedan or gentu, by the laws and usages of the defendant." (4) This provision was afterwards adapted or incorporated into various legislative enactments the first of which was passed in 1780 (5) and declared that the Supreme Court of Bengal (6) in the exercise of its original juris-

(1) Ib. p. 76 To the same effect, Census of India, 1901, Vol. 1, 668, p. 880

(2) Cited in the Census of India, 1901, Vol. 1, 668

(3) See on this point the author's view set out at length in his General Introduction to the Law of Transfer §§ 42—45.

(4) Ilbert's Government of India (2nd Ed) 325.

(5) 21 Geo. iii C 70 S. 17.

(6) Established in 1772 Geo. iii C 68; See Kahandas, In re 5 B. 154 (165).

dition was to apply to Mahomedans and Hindus their personal law in matters relating to "Inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party", and this provision was a few years later (in 1796) extended to the original side of the Supreme Court of Bombay <sup>(1)</sup> and Madras <sup>(2)</sup> and re-enacted in 1799. <sup>(3)</sup> The same provision was extended to the Mofussil Courts by local Regulations which were extended and modified according to local exigencies. <sup>(4)</sup>

233. The same course was adopted as regards the mofussil courts subject to the Supreme Court in Bombay <sup>(5)</sup> and in its own charter dated 8th August 1823 the same provision was inserted. <sup>(6)</sup>

234. These statutes were intended to provide against specific mischiefs which had arisen in the exercise of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction. Like the Bill of Rights and similar, statutes they are to be interpreted not as exhausting by enumeration the classes of rights which it specifically guards, but rather as thus recognizing the larger general principles on which these rights stand, by forbidding any such encroachments on them for the future, as actual experience, had in the past, shown to be possible. <sup>(7)</sup> So it was held that though the Bengal regulations provide in terms for the preservation of the Hindu and Mahomedan laws only as to some particular subjects, yet the courts have given to those laws a distinctly wider operation. The judges said, in fact, that the intention was to allow the population to retain their own laws and customs throughout the sphere of which particular portions only had been expressly indicated, so far, at least, as this retention was compatible with the public law involved in the sovereignty of the British Crown, and with the principles of natural justice brought as far as possible into harmonious working with the settled rules of personal law from which divergence was legally impossible. So, in the charter of the Supreme Court the specification of matters of succession and matters of contract as matters to be governed by native laws and usages, might be construed as an indication of a wider operation of those laws and usages intended to be secured by the statute. <sup>(8)</sup>

235. The Presidency High Courts were constituted by the Letters Patent issued in 1865, S. 19 of which conserves the pre-existing law and equity, as if the letters patent had not been issued. The same provision was inserted in the Letters Patent issued in the following year, establishing the N. W. P. High Court.

236. Several Acts and Regulations have extended the same provision to the mofussil courts <sup>(9)</sup> which are to the following effect :—

37. (1) Where in any suit or other proceeding it is necessary for a civil court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, or any religious usage or institution, the Mahomedan law, in cases where the parties are Mahomedans, and the Hindu Law in case where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has, by legislative enactment, been altered or abolished.

(1) Established in 1823 by 4 Geo. IV C. 71 Ss 7, 17. (5) Bom. Reg. IV of 1827 S 26.

(2) 37 Geo. iii C 142 S 13; now consolidated and re-enacted in 5 and 6 Geo V. C. 5 S 112 (The Government of India Act 1915)

(3) 39 and 40 Geo iii C 79 S b; See Kahandas In re 5 B 154 (165, 166).

(4) Beng. Reg XI of 1793 extended to Benares Beng Reg. XLIV of 1795; Hindu law modified in certain districts by Beng.

Reg. X of 1800, Beng. Reg. XI of 1805 S. 86. (6) Cl 29; See Mithura v. Esu 4 B. 545 (556)

(7) Kahandas In re 5 B. 154 (166).

(8) Ib pp 166, 167.

(9) Civil Courts Act Bengal (VI of 1871) S 24 repealed by the Bengal N.W. P and Assam Civil Courts Act XII of 1887.

(2) In cases not provided for by sub-section (1) or by any other law for the time being in force, the court shall act according to justice, equity, and good conscience. (1)

A similar provision made by the Madras Regulation of 1802, (2) is reproduced in the Madras Civil Courts Act, (3) and in the Civil Courts Acts of the Punjab, (4) Oudh, (5) the Central Provinces, (6) and Burmah, (7) and in the Regulations applicable to Bombay, (8) Ajmere and Merwara, (9) and British Baluchistan. (10)

In Bombay the rules of Hindu Law have been modified by the Bombay Act VII of 1866 which relieves the second husband of a Hindu widow from the debts of her former husband (11) and limits the liability of the personal representatives of a deceased debtor only to the extent of his assets, (12) and otherwise limits the liability of a member of an undivided Hindu family for debts contracted before he was 21 years of age. (13)

237. Sources of Hindu Law.—The ultimate sources of Hindu Law go far beyond the sacred writings which are ordinarily held to embody it (§ 1-9). Its immediate sources are however the following :—

- (1) The Sruti (§ 44—51).
- (2) The Smritis (§§ 76—77).
- (3) Digest and commentaries (§ 77).
- (4) Custom (§ 192).
- (5) Legislative Enactments § 177—188).
- (6) Judicial decisions (§ 189).

238. A general view of the sources of Hindu Law has already been presented in the General Introduction (II, III). It will suffice here to state that the Shruti or Revelation is a term applied and confined to the Vedas which possess no legal value (§ 53). The Smritis or tradition, however, nominally constitute the chief source of Hindu Law. But as they constitute a record of about 2000 years, it is obvious that they must of necessity contain many contradictions due to the change of social conditions which cannot all be reconciled on the complaisant doctrine that all contradictions are equally good law (§ 146). The only rational rule to apply in such cases is that the later Smriti supersedes the earlier one.

239. The art of writing had not been discovered when the Aryan immigration to India first commenced. Consequently, the only possible record of the customs and usages of their forefathers was in their memory which again had limits. They therefore only memorized the ipsissima verba of their older traditions which, being sanctified by time, were necessarily regarded as more sacred. They constituted the Srutis or matter directly heard from the deity; while later traditions not so important and which even grew in bulk and number, were only memorized in substance and these became known as the Smritis. A list and description of these has already been given (§§ 76-77). Of them it may be generally stated that though they are in number numerous and are divided by long

(1) Bengal N. W. P. & Assam Civil Courts Act S. 87 (XII of 1887).

(2) Mad. Reg. II of 1802, S. 17.

(3) III of 1878 S. 16.

(4) Act IV of 1872 S. 5 as amended by Act XII of 1878.

(5) Act XVIII of 1876 S. 3 except the Shan States (XIII of 1868, S. 18).

(6) Act XX of 1875, S. 5.

(7) Act XIII of 1898 S. 13.

(8) Reg. IV of 1927 S. 26; Bombay Presidency Small Cause Courts Act 16 (XV of 1882).

(9) Reg. III of 1877 S. 4.

(10) Reg. III of 1890 S. 89.

(11) Bom. Act VII of 1866, S. 4.

(12) Ib. Ss 1, 2.

(13) Ib. Ss. 5, 6.

stretches of time they are all based on the same model, contain many common verses, acknowledge the same authority and only differ on certain points of detail which reflect a change established in the social usages of the people.

240. Assuming the earliest Smṛiti to be that of Manu compiled somewhere about 600 to 800 B. C. and the latest, the Institutes of Yajñavalkya and that of Narad, (400 to 300 A. D.) the intervening period of over a thousand years was marked by no great legal activity. The several Smṛitis during this period all clearly evince the growing strength of the sacerdotal influence, and the strengthening of the social barriers between different castes, with its attendant intercaste jealousies and hatred. Throughout all this period the position of women remains unaltered.<sup>(1)</sup> And as regards man, the ideal portrayed is one of severe asceticism,—endurance of life while it lasts, riddance of it as soon as the purpose of manhood is achieved (§ 195). Such are the Smṛitis. Of themselves they have little legal value. Most of the forms they acknowledge and employ have long since become obsolete (§ 197). Even their conceptions of social relations have become out of date. The Sanskrit legal works of greater value are therefore the Digests and Commentaries, which mark the last and comparatively modern period of Brahminical activity. As was to be expected, a few have outlived the time and place for which they were written and are now acknowledged to possess predominating authority in certain Provinces. Such is the work of the ascetic Vijnaneshwar called “The Mitakshara” or “The Compendium,” which though originally composed to guide a petty local chief, is now regarded as possessing paramount authority in the whole of India outside Bengal, where the Dayabhag of Jimutavahan holds the sway. But the paramount authority of the Mitakshara is now only so in name, since many of its doctrines have been refuted or modified by other works of local authority, and since the establishment of British Courts and the Legislature, the paramount authority has naturally become transferred to them, so that the authorities set out before now possess finality and importance only in their inverse order.

241. But nevertheless there still remain points unsettled by the Courts, on which the authority of the Commentaries remains unshaken. Wherever it is so, reference must still be made to the Sanskrit works for authority and guidance. These works may be divided into two main groups: Those which follow the old track and those which follow a line of their own. As such, Hindu Law has become divided into two schools, known as the Benares and the Bengal Schools. The former is the orthodox or conservative school, while the latter is the reformed school. The text-book of the one is the Mitakshara, that of the other, the Dayabhaga; but both the schools and their acknowledged text-books are held to apply only to the inhabitants of certain territories, and in each case they are subject to local modifications, sanctioned by text-books possessing only special local authority. So Sir James Colvile, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed: “The remoter sources of the Hindu Law are common to all the different schools. The processes by which those schools have been developed seems to have been of this kind. Works universally or very generally received became subject of subsequent commentaries. The Commentator put his own gloss on the ancient text; and his authority having been received in one and rejected in another part of India, schools with conflicting doctrines arose. Thus the Mitakshara which is universally accepted by all the schools, except that of Bengal, as of the highest authority, and which in Bengal is received also as of high authority, yielding only to the Dayabag in those points where they differ, was a commentary on the Institutes of Yajnavalkya; and the Dayabag, which, wherever it differs from the Mitakshara prevails in Bengal and is the foundation of the principal divergences between that and the other schools, specially admits and relies on the authority of Yajnavalkya. In like manner there are glosses and commentaries upon the Mitakshara which are received by some of the schools that acknowledge the supreme authority of that treatise, but are not received by all. . . . The duty, therefore, of an European Judge, who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law, is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal and has there been sanctioned by usage. For under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law". (1)

(1) See §§ 40, 61, 62, 68, 81, 88, 93, 99, 104, 111, 115, 116, 120, 124, 184, 187.

242. Thus it will be seen that though modern Hindu Law nominally recognizes the authority of the Mitakshara as its sole accredited text-book, local departures from its rules have become sanctioned by usage giving rise to schools and sub-schools according to the line of divergence between its written text and the accepted usage. As such, the divergence between the Mitakshara and the Dayabag on many vital points has given rise to a distinct school known as the Bengal School of Hindu Law which prevails throughout Bengal and Assam. (2) The leading points of difference between the two schools have already been set out (141-153) and will have to be more fully considered in the sequel. The Dayabag view of law is generally spoken of as the reformed or the advanced view and it is even explained as influenced by the Mahomedan rule that had then become established in Bengal. But the fact that it makes succession depend upon religious efficacy whereas the Mitakshara bases it on affinity does not justify that assumption, though the fact that it does not recognize co-parcenership and thus vests the father with unfettered power of alienation marks a distinct advance upon the older doctrine of corporate property and enjoyment.

243. These works, though they profess to be merely Digests and Commentaries on the older Smritis, are not to be treated as such in any sense of the term since, if they were in fact merely what they profess to be, their views could be corrected or contradicted by reference to the Smritis. But this is not allowable for they possess an independent authority and are to be treated as works which, without reference to their form, portray the custom and usage of their contemporaries. They mark a distinct epoch in advance of the Smritis upon which they nominally rest their doctrines. But this is merely a fiction intended to reconcile the old with the new. While recognizing the dogmatic immobility of the Smritis, the commentaries attempt to circumvent their rigid doctrines by explanations, interpretations and deductions which are, on the points upon which they differ, so vitally at variance with the Smriti texts that if a reference were permissible to the latter, the futility of the former would at once become manifest. In another respect the commentaries differ from the Smritis. Unlike the Smritis they do not profess to represent the divine will. They profess to be mere expositions of the older texts. (3) As such, Sir George

(1). The Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga 12 M.I.A. 397 (435, 436).

(2) Per Mookerjee, J., in Deepo v Gobindo, 16 W. R. 42.

(3) See Sec. 1-2 Mitakshara Ch -1 which says that the writer had striven merely to simplify the difficult text of Yajnavalkya for the benefit of the young pupils. So also Nilkantha in Mayukh, § 1.

Knox, J., grouped all Hindu writers into three grades. He was of opinion that the authority of the oldest of them such as Manu, Vashishth and Yajnavalkya could not be questioned, being so regarded by the Hindus. But he distinguished from these old gossellers, the medieval writers such as Narad who were entitled to very great weight; but referring to Vijyaneshwar, he said he was only a commentator, and as regards the latest of the writers such as Nanda Pandit he held that he was "as much open to review as the text of any commentator of the present school." (1) When this case went up on appeal to the Privy Council their Lordships animadverted on this view of the classical texts, adding: "Their Lordships cannot concur with Mr. Justice Knox in saying that their authority is open to examination, explanation, criticism, adoption or rejection like any scientific treatise on European jurisprudence. Such treatment would not allow for the effect, which long acceptance of written opinions has upon social customs and it would probably disturb recognized law and settled arrangements. But so far as saying that caution is required in accepting their glosses where they deviate from or add to the Smritis, their Lordships are prepared to concur with the learned Judge". (2)

244. In another case, referring to Sir W. Jones' translation of a verse of Manu in which certain words were said to have been interpolated by a later and inferior commentator named Prakash and not by the ancient and eminent commentator named Kulluka Bhatt, as Sir William Jones believed, their Lordships said: "Their Lordships assume for the purposes of their judgment that Sir William Jones was mistaken in attributing the words interpolated in verse 122 to Kalluka Bhatt. But they observe that Sir William Jones' version was probably founded on the tradition of the time at which he wrote and has been accepted in the Indian Courts without question. Communis error facit jus is a sound maxim". (3) To the same effect their Lordships had delivered themselves as far back as 1868, when they observed: "The duty, therefore, of an European Judge who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law is not so much to enquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal, and has been sanctioned by usage". (4) Again, twelve years later they said: "The Hindu Law contains in itself the principles of its own exposition. The digest subordinates in more than one place the language of texts to custom and approved usage. Nothing from any foreign source should be introduced into it, nor should the courts interpret the text by the application to the language, of strained analogies". (5) But while the digests and commentaries have now with

(1) Beni Prasad v. Harday Bibi, 14 A. 67 on appeal (118, 114) F. B., O. A. Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu 22 M. 898 P. C.; Muthu Karuppa v. Shellahammal 16 M. L. T. 597; 26 I. C. 785 (786, 787) in which it is observed "The fact is that commentators felt that any attempt to prescribe rules of inheritance on their own initiative will not find acceptance amongst the people. They had to justify their position by a reference to the sayings of the Rishis. This led them not—in frequently to depart from the literal meaning of the texts commented upon. They found a body of usage which was not in strict accordance with the Smritis,

They had to recognize the force of such usage; but they preferred to say that the usage was within the meaning of the text. The commentaries indicate an attempt to reconcile the text law with the actual usage of the people"

(2) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu 22 M. 898 (411, 412) P. C.

(3) Jagdish v. Shoo Partab. 28 A. 869 (881) P. C.

(4) Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramlinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (486).

(5) Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh, 18 M. I. A. 878 (890).

the passing of time attained a status of their own, they do not necessarily exclude a reference to the Smritis which they profess to annotate. This was conceded by the Privy Council in a case in which they said, "many of the precepts of Manu have been undoubtedly altered and modified by the modern law and usage, but his authority may properly be referred to when it is necessary to resort to first principles in order to ascertain and declare the law".<sup>(1)</sup>

246. These cases then settle the following points:—(i)—That the statements in the digests and commentaries, though professing to be merely comments on the original shastric texts, cannot be examined with reference to the latter, but must be received as embodying the current accepted law; (ii)—that even if the statement be an interpolation, it is no blot upon its validity if it has remained unquestioned for a considerable period, for the interpolation may itself represent the accepted popular view; and (iii)—that whenever it is necessary to refer to the first principles in order to ascertain the law, reference to the Smritis is still justifiable.

246. As previously stated, the work now known as the "Dayabhag" is only a fragment of a larger and more complete digest on Hindu Law known as the "Nyayratn" (§151). The only portion of it that is now extant is that which deals with Partition and Inheritance. In Bengal this work takes precedence of the Mitakshara, though the latter work is to be referred to on points upon which the Dayabhag is silent.<sup>(2)</sup> For the same purpose, other works may be equally referred to and their authority would appear to be something in the following order (1) Dayabhag, (2) Mitakshara, (3) Dayatattv, (4) Viramitroday, (5) Dayakramasangrah.

As of Jimut Vahan's Digest only the Dayabhag or the chapter dealing with Partition and Inheritance is extant, the differences between the Bengal and the Benares schools only arise on these subjects which will be set out in their appropriate places in the sequel.

247. Custom.—As a source of law custom takes a conspicuous place in the legal systems of all the nations. As a matter of fact custom is the mother of all laws, and whether it be the Srutis or the Smritis they are both alike founded on custom. Indeed, "Custom is powerful and overrides the sacred law".<sup>(3)</sup> The general influence of custom upon the Aryan law has been already considered (§192) and its particular significance in moulding the current law will be considered in the sequel. Though custom is the parent of Hindu Law which is still subject to and modified by it, it does follow that in order to bring a case under any rule of law laid down by recognized authority for Hindus generally, it is not necessary that evidence should be given of actual events to show that in point of fact the people subject to that general law regulate their lives by it. Special customs may be pleaded by way of exception, which it is proper to prove. To put one who asserts a rule of law under the necessity of proving that in point of fact, the community living under the system of which it forms part, is acting upon it, or defeat him by assertions that it has not been universally accepted or acted on, would go far to deny the existence of any general Hindu Law, and to disregard the broad foundations which are common to all schools, though divergencies have grown out of them. (1)

(1) Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I. A. 570 (591).

(2) Moniram v. Kori, 5 C. 776 P. C.

(3) Narad 1.40; Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramlinga, 12 M. I. A. 897.

248. Judicial decisions.—The sacred books enshrine the written law. The courts interpret and administer it. In doing so they place before themselves certain principles which have come to be regarded as rules for the interpretation of Hindu Law (§§ 202-204). Where the court finds a text suitable to the matter it has to adjudicate upon, it has naturally to interpret it. Now the difficulty of understanding them is by no means small. In the first place they are often cryptic and contradictory, and in the second place they are all written in a dead language a knowledge of which is by no means the sole qualification for understanding their meaning. As Golap Sircar Shastri truly remarks: "The Sanskrit works on law cannot be fully understood even by a Sanskrit scholar except with the aid of learned pundits familiar with the traditional interpretation of them". (2) The courts have ceased to requisition the aid of such pundits and for the best of reasons (§ 189). They now interpret the texts for themselves with the aid of such published translations as they can find; and in doing so they naturally accommodate them to their own view of what is just and proper. In other words, the judges while professing to administer law sometimes make it. This they have necessarily to do in cases not covered by any direct authority. But in either case they test their decision by reference to reason and convenience. (3) So when the Privy Council had to decide on the question of succession to an impartible Zemindari and the contest lay between the first born son of a junior wife and a second son of the senior wife, their Lordships in upholding the claim of the first born cited several sacred texts and observed: "It appears to their Lordships that the rules just cited approach very nearly to a distinct declaration of the general Hindu Law upon the question when regarded apart from any special custom prevailing in any particular district or family . . . It is right to observe that if the decision had to rest only upon reasons of policy and convenience, these reasons would seem greatly to preponderate in favour of the right of the first born son. The inheritances of Hindus which descend on a single heir, are almost entirely confined to Zemindaris in the nature of a Raj and to offices, and it is obviously in accordance with reason and convenience, that such succession should devolve upon the son who would, in the natural course, first reach manhood, and be capable of discharging the duties attaching to inheritances of this kind". (4)

249. Then again, even where the Sanskrit text covers a point it does not necessarily follow that the courts are to give it the force of a statute. As was observed by Mahmud, J.: "In all systems where juristic notions have at all been carefully classified, a distinction exists between rules which regulate matters of form and as such are directory in their nature, and those rules which go to the very essence of the matter, and violations of which, if allowed, would be destructive of the rule itself". (5) In other words, before giving effect to a text the court has to consider whether it is precatory or mandatory, merely directory or absolutely compulsory. This

(1) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P. C.; Gita Bai v. Shivabakas 5 Bom. L. R. 318; Vayidinada v. Appu 9 M. 44 F. B.

(2) H. L. (8rd Ed.) 35.

(3) Ramalaaxmi v. Sivanath, 14 M. I. A.

570 (594).

(4) Ramalaaxmi v. Sivanath 14 M. I. A. 570 (598, 594)

(5) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhranj, 9 A. 258 (296).

view of the law had to be considered by the Privy Council which had to decide as to the validity of the adoption of an only son. The Smritis condemn it <sup>(1)</sup> and the question which their Lordships had to consider was whether the scriptural prohibition was mandatory or merely monitory and in adopting the latter view their Lordships quoting from an earlier case decided by their own Board <sup>(2)</sup> remarked: "All these old text books and commentaries, are apt to mingle religious and moral considerations not being positive laws, with rules intended for positive laws. In the preface to his valuable work on Hindu Law, Sir William Macnaghten <sup>(3)</sup> says: It by no means follows that because an act has been prohibited, it should therefore be considered as illegal. The distinction between the Vinculum juris and the Vinculum pudoris is not always discernible. They now add that the further study of the subject necessary for the decision of these appeals has still more impressed them with the necessity of great caution in interpreting books of mixed religion, morality and law, lest foreign lawyers accustomed to treat as law what they find in authoritative books, and to administer a fixed legal system, should too hastily take for strict law precepts which are meant to appeal to the moral sense, and should thus fetter individual judgments in private affairs, should introduce restrictions into Hindu Society, and impart to it an inflexible rigidity, never contemplated by the original law-givers <sup>(4)</sup>. . . No system of law makes the province of legal obligation co-extensive with that of religious or moral obligation. A man may in his conduct or in the disposition of his property disregard the plainest dictates of duty. He may prefer an unworthy stranger to those who have the strongest natural claims upon him. He may be ungrateful, selfish, cruel, treacherous to those who have confided in him and whose affections for him have ruined them. And yet he may be within his legal rights. The Hindu sages doubtless saw this distinction as clearly as we do, and the precepts they have given for the guidance of life must be construed with reference to it. If a transaction is declared to be null and void in law, whether on a religious ground or another, it is so; and if its nullity is a necessary implication from a condemnation of it the law must be so declared. And the mere fact that a transaction is condemned in books like the Smritis does not necessarily prove it to be void. It raises the question what kind of condemnation is meant. <sup>(5)</sup>"

250. Then referring to the conflicting decisions on the subject, their

Stare Decisis

Lordships observed: "In estimating the weight of reasoning in the various litigated cases their Lordships have not forgotten the weight of actual decisions; that they represent the opinions of eminent and responsible men, arrived at after public and anxious discussion, carrying with them an authority not legally disputable in the provinces under their jurisdiction, and it may be, affecting many lands and many titles to property or to personal status. Such decisions are not to be lightly set aside. A court of justice which only declares the law and does not make it, cannot, as the Legislature can, declare it with a reservation of titles acquired under a different view of it. But their Lordships are placed in the position of being forced to differ with one set of courts or the other. And so far as the fear of disturbance can affect the question, if it can rightly affect it at

(1) Mitakshara Ch-1, S XIV. 11 "Do an only son must not be given nor accepted. For Vasishtha ordains 'Let no man give accept an only son.'"

(2) Rao Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori, 20 A. 267 (285, 286) P. C.

(3) Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law, Vol. I p. VI

(4) Sri Balusu. v. Sri Balusu 22 M 898 (415, 416) P. C.

(5) Ib., p. 419.

all, it inclines in favour of the law which gives freedom of choice. People may be disturbed at finding themselves deprived of a power which they believed themselves to possess and may want to use. But they can hardly be disturbed at being told that they possess a power which they did not suspect and need not exercise unless they choose. And so with titles". (1)

251. Legislative Enactments.—The effect of legislation on Hindu Law is unlike the influence of custom and judicial decisions, immediate and direct. Law is paramount and it can make or unmake laws. It assured to the Hindus their personal law (§ 169); but finding it intolerable on many points it had to modify it. In other respects for the sake of uniformity or public convenience, it had to legislate irrespective of racial law. A list of such enactments has already been given (§§ 177-188). Their particular effect will be found set out in the sequel. The age of majority is 18 (2) under the Indian Majority Act which overrules the Hindu Law where sixteen years was the age of majority.

Neither writing nor registration was obligatory under Hindu Law to complete a contract or transfer. (3) In this respect the Transfer of Property and the Registration Acts have superseded the Hindu Law by prescribing forms which it did not contain.

252. Immoveable Property.—Although the various Indian Acts (4) describe immoveable property and the General Clauses Act defines it (5) more generally (6) that term may still connote property for the purpose of Hindu Law which is outside the terms of any enactment. Such would be the case where the nature and quality of property can only be determined by Hindu law. (7) Such is a hereditary office such as that of a Joshi, (8) Yajmanvritti, or the office of a hereditary priest, (9) or an annuity granted to a Hindu temple even though not charged upon land. (10) Such fixed and permanent payments are called "Nibhandhs" (11) in Hindu law and they are all treated as immoveable property.

253. Procedure not excepted.—The personal law assured to the Hindus only safeguards their substantive rights upon certain subjects. It does not affect processual matters, which are now entirely regulated by the statute. Originally, however before the Indian Legislature had addressed itself to the codification of Indian Law, the Hindus were judged by their own procedure

(1) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (430) P. O.

(2) Moothoormohun Roy v. Soorendro, 1 C. 108 (F. B.)

(3) Alwar Chetty v. Vaidilinga, 1 M. H. C. R. 9.

(4) Transfer of Property Act S. 8, Registration Act S. 2 (6).

(5) S. 8 (25) Act X of 1897.

(6) Id., S. 8.

(7) Fatesangji v. Desai, 10 B. H. C. R. 136 P. O.

(8) Balvantrav v. Purshotam, 9 B.H.C.R. (A C) 99.

(9) Krishna Bhat v. Kapa Bhat, 6 B. H. C. R. (A C) 187; Balvantrav v. Purshotam, 9 B.H.C.R. 99 F. B. contra Raiji v. Desai, 6 B.H.C.R. (A) 56 dissented from in Ghela Bhai v. Hargovan, 12 Bom L R., 1171.

(10). Collector v. Krishna Nath, 5 B. 322.

(11). Nibandh-Skt-Lit "Fix'd," "made fast" "bound," from bandh to bind—Thence A.Sax bindan to bind. D.—bindan. Ice.—binda Dan binda G.—bindan Goth. bindan So described in Wilson's Glossary, "Nibandh" in law, fixed or immoveable property; also a corrody, or fixed allowance granted by a Raja or person in authority, to be received from the proceeds of a manufactory mine or estate. Hence corrody.

which bulks largely in Jagannath's Digest <sup>(1)</sup> and in Macnaghten's work on Hindu law. <sup>(2)</sup>

254. Caste Autonomy.—Caste is an essential institution of Hinduism and the reservation of their personal laws to the Hindus implies the reservation of the jurisdiction of caste. This is ensured by the enactment which limits the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts only to matters of a "civil nature". This term which occurs in all the Civil Procedure Codes <sup>(3)</sup> enacted since 1859, has as regards caste, acquired a somewhat settled sense which limits and defines the respective authority of the caste and of the court in matters affecting personal status, the leading principles of which may be thus stated :—

(1) In all matters affecting any property, office or dignity carrying with it the right to any perquisite or emoluments the courts possess jurisdiction to adjudicate but in doing so the court is limited to giving effect to what are considered as customary rights subject only to the just limitations within which they are operative. For instance, where a marriage takes place between persons, one or both parties to which are illegitimate children, or persons of any caste, its legality depends not upon what the court considers right but rather upon how the caste people regard it. If the latter treat it as a good marriage then the court must assume it as such <sup>(4)</sup> On the other hand, where the caste sanctions as marriage an alliance between a man and a married woman, who has neither been divorced or deserted by her husband, the court cannot give effect to the custom, as that would be tolerating adultery which is both immoral and opposed to the established law. <sup>(5)</sup>

(2) It is within the jurisdiction of the caste to appoint a man to an office of dignity, e.g., that of a priest, and so long as it is connected with no right to property, the court cannot control his appointment, retention or removal. But where there are annexed to it certain incidents in the nature of civil rights as against members of a community, then, in adjudicating upon the one question the court has necessarily to assume jurisdiction over the whole question. <sup>(6)</sup>

(3) Thirdly, for the protection and better management of public, religious and charitable endowments, the Legislature has armed the court with certain powers of supervision and control in which it inherits the powers, which the Hindu Shastras acknowledge, belong to the Sovereign as the protector of Dharm.

(4) For the rest the powers of the court are confined to the interpretation and administration of the caste rules to persons acknowledging its supremacy.

(1) See Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. 1, Bk. I. Ch. VI; Bk. II, Ch. II.

(2) Pp. 107-275; out of 278 pp only 99 deal with substantial rights, and the rest deal with the following heads :—

Administration of Justice; Constitution of a Judicial Assembly, Subject of a Judicial Proceeding; Process of Citation; Declaration, Answer, Onus Probandi and judgment; Recapitulation; Retort or re-crimination; Mesne Process; Judgment in Actions for Debt; Special rule regarding the Answer; Indications of Falsehood; Conflicting Claims; Action attended by Wager; Special Rules of Proceeding; Nature of Evidence; Relative Priority; Effect of Possession; Digression concerning Fines and other Penalties; Possession without

Title; Title without Possession; Appeals and other Matters; Digression concerning Trove and Plundered Property; Witnesses; Written proof; Evidence by Divine Test; Ordeal by Balance; Ordeal by Fire; Ordeal by Water; Ordeal by Poison; Ordeal by sacred Libation; Ordeal by Grains of Rice; Ordeal by hot Metal; Ordeal by Dharma and Adharma; Other Tests

(3) Bisheshur v. Matagolam, 2 A. W. N. 300.

(4) Muthusami v. Masilamani 33 M. 342; Ram Kumari, 1n re. 18 C. 264.

(5) Uji Narain Das v. Tirlok Tewari, v. Hathi, 7 Bom. H. C. R. (A. C.) 183, Narain Das v. Tirlok 29 A. 4; Emperor v. Lazar, 80 M. 550

(6) Ghelabhai v. Hargovan, 18 Bom. I. R. 1171

Apostacy or loss of caste by the husband is of itself no ground for restitution of conjugal rights (1) though the Court would be slow to decree it since by reason of the conversion to an alien faith co-habitation has become impossible. (2)

255. No reference to commentaries will be complete without reference to what has become known as the schools of Hindu Law, which owe their origin to the difference in interpretation or practice. (3) It has already been stated that the Hindu scriptures commingle theology, morality, metaphysics and law with one another, and the tendencies of the method of reasoning which are held to be applicable to the one are allowed to influence the interpretation of the other branches of knowledge. The first disruption of the orthodox school was doubtless due to religious differences on the interpretation of the Vedas. The orthodox school, of which Jaimini was the founder, differed from the school of Vyas in that the one supported the literal sense while the other drew from it the conclusion denying the existence of a material world; while both differed from the rationalist reasoning of the Nyaya of Gautam which threw all theories into the crucible of reason. This triangular contest naturally found many adherents. The philosophy of Gautam took hold of Bengal, while the orthodox creed still flourished elsewhere. Having once differed in religion the followers of the Nyaya applied the same test to law. And hence arose the two principal sects or schools, which, construing the same text, variously deduce upon some important point of law different inferences from the same maxims of law. But while the Bengal school stood out, in open revolt there still remained those who though still fighting under the orthodox banner, ventured to differ in details in conformity with the prevailing local opinion and practice. In this process of legal development, schools and sub-schools have been formed which may be stated in the following table.

HINDU LAW.

(1) Act XXI of 1850; Emarlee v. Nirinul, (1864) N. W. P. H. C. R. 858; Sahadur v. Rajwanta, 27 A. 96; Contra 2 Dig. P. 418 overruled by the Legislature

(2) See XXI of 1866, Ss. 16 18; Muchoo v.

Arzoon, 5 W. R. 235 Cf Moola v. Nundy, 4 N. W. P. H. C. R. 109.

(3) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhranj, 9 A. 258 (290).

256. The main diversions are however only two viz., that represented by the Mitakshara and by the Bengal schools. The sub-divisions of the Mitakshara are not only not based upon any pronounced departure from the orthodox tenets but nominally and essentially follow them. They are in the nature of local variations due to local usage embodied in the works that have obtained local celebrity, which while afraid to break away from the parent stem, justify their departure therefrom on the license of interpretation.

257. It has been already pointed out (§ 199) how Hindu law remained unsecularized by the divorce of legal from moral obligations. The tendency of judicial decisions by European Judges has in a measure effected that severance. For when these precepts passed through the secular judicial mind the pure legal rules became necessarily separated from their religious fignment and as much as was legal became in course of time crystalized into separate rules and principles which so far as they go are now accepted as a final enunciation of the living personal law of the Hindus. With the ever increasing accumulation of legal precedents of the supreme tribunal, the utility of the digests and commentaries must necessarily correspondingly diminish till they must eventually recede into the same background into which they have jostled the ancient Sruti and the Smritis. Even at the present day, most of the Hindu Law is case-law, and many points of controversy which exercised the minds of Colebrooke, Macnaghten and Strange have been finally set at rest by judicial decisions. As such, these latter occupy a prominent place in an inquiry into the sources of Hindu Law. Even where any matter is not the subject of a direct decision the reasoning and the rules by which the judges now consider themselves bound, have established canons for the construction of the sacred and secular Sanskrit texts which should afford solution to the novel problems which must continue to arise in practice.

258. The reduction of a few elementary rules from the great bodies of detail is no easy task, but the few following rules underlie the numerous decisions by which they were guided and controlled.

259. Rules of Interpretation.—

- (1) Stare decisis. In dealing with property and status, the courts are essentially conservative, following their own precedents and never departing therefrom unless very cogent reasons impel the departure (1).
- (2) All legal texts must be separated from moral injunctions, the former alone followed, the latter ignored, if their union is casual and not essential (2).
- (3) In interpreting old texts regard must be had to usage; for no text is binding unless it is accepted as binding on the community to which it relates (3).
- (4) When the two texts are equally authoritative but contradictory, the court is entitled to select the one which is in conformity with reason and convenience (4).

(1) Rampiyari v. Mulchand, 7 A. 114 : Bai Kesser Bai v. Hansraj 30 B 431 (452) P.C.

(2) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu 22 M. 898 P. C.

(3) Collector v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M

I. A. 397 (436); Kumar Gungadheer v. Kumar Hira Lal, 20 C. W. N 489 (499).

(4) Vedanayaga v. Vedammal, 27 M. 591; Vedammal v. Vedanayaga, 31 M 100.

- (5) Where a rule is ambiguous or uncertain the court construes it reasonably.
- (6) Where there is no rule, the court decides according to the rule of justice, equity and good conscience.
- (7) The Court always gives effect to the policy of the Legislature paying due regard to its behests.
- (8) No rule, however sacred, is enforced if it is opposed to public morality.
- (9) In construing the standard texts the court considers what is mandatory and therefore legally enforceable, and what is merely monitory and therefore not legally enforceable.
- (10) In administering law the court pays due regard to consistency assuming the body of law, so far as possible, to be consistent with itself.
- (11) A well established usage overrides the written law.
- (12) In giving effect to legal presumptions it pays due regard to the altered conditions of the present day.
- (13) In construing deeds and bequests, the court assumes what was tacitly and necessarily implied.
- (14) Transactions prejudicing natural heirs must be supported by cogent reason and evidence.
- (15) In all acts the court presumes in favour of legality and morality.
- (16) Where a legal precept is not wholly applicable, subject to the other rules, it applies it by analogy.

The concrete exemplification of these rules will be found in the ensuing commentary.

260. Who are the Hindus—In the first place Hindu Law applies to Hindus. But who are the Hindus? This is by no means an idle question, for beyond a certain number who observe the correct rituals of Hinduism—an ever diminishing class—there remain the vast body of those who, though owing no allegiance to any other revealed religion, do not conform to the tenets of Hinduism and would, if the question were submitted to the judgment of the orthodox, be voted as non-descript out-castes. But in the eye of the law these might be as good Hindus as any. The term 'Hindu' is of comparatively recent origin (§ 216) and the tenets of Hinduism are uncertain and ill-defined. Like Judaism, Hinduism is not a proselytizing creed. A Hindu, like a poet, is nascitur non fit. If he is sprung out of any of the twice-born people then he is unquestionably a Hindu, otherwise, he may be a Hindu nevertheless. The true test of Hinduism now implies the observance of caste, the worship of a Hindu deity and the paying of homage to Brahmins who are the hierophants of that religion. The ceremonial observance of the Hindu fasts and feasts is another index. With the decline of Brahminical influence these symbols have been shorn of their support and the Hindu has ceased to believe in them, not because his belief has undergone a change, but because the narcotic that produced the symptom has lost its potency.

261. It has already been stated that the term Hindu was originally a mere geographical expression (§ 216). Its present meaning is still vague since it comprises not only those who are Hindus by religion but also those who are Hindu dissenters, while Hindu Law may apply to yet another class who do not follow Hindu religion at all and may, indeed, be converts to an antagonistic creed, such as Christianity or Mahomedanism. Considered as a religion Hinduism is rather a system than a creed. It has no dogma or articles of faith. A man may be a Deist or Atheist, he may believe in Krishna or Comte; he will continue to be a Hindu if he was born one. "Hinduism includes a fluctuating mass of beliefs, opinions, usages and observances, social and religious ideas, the exact details of which it is impossible to reduce to anything like order, and in the most divers aspects of which it is impossible to recognize anything that is common. A belief in the superiority of Brahmins, veneration for the cow, and respect for the distribution of castes are the elements of Hinduism, which are generally recognized as fundamental. But each one of these has been rejected, or is rejected by tribes, castes or sects whose title to be included amongst Hindus is not denied." (1)

262. So long as the lamps of orthodoxy were kept well trimmed by its creatures, the Hindu kings, the wildest and most purile ceremonials found complaisant observers—for to cease to observe them was to cease to be accredited a Hindu, and meant the forfeiture of all civic rights and the fate of a social outlaw. But with the Hinduism left to justify its existence upon its own merits, its dissolving forces set to work and now Hinduism is in reality a mere name—Vex propterea nihil. People may be diametrically opposed to each other in their ceremonial observances and bitterly scornful of each other's caste and social status and still be good Hindus.

263. So it was said in a case the decision in which was confirmed by the Privy Council. "The Hindu religion is marvellously catholic and elastic. Its theology is marked by eclecticism and tolerance and almost unlimited freedom of private worship. Its social code is much more stringent, but amongst its different castes and sections, exhibits wide diversity of practice. No trait is more marked of Hindu society in general than its horror of using the meat of the cow. Yet the chamars who profess Hinduism, but who eat beef and the meat of dead animals, are, however low in the scale, included within its pale. It is easier to say who are not Hindus, and practically the separation of Hindus from non-Hindus is not a matter of much difficulty. The people know the difference well and can easily tell who are Hindus and who are not." (2)

264. Hinduism unlike the newer faiths, such as Buddhism, Christianity and the Islam is not a brotherhood but a purely individualistic creed. All Hindus were primarily divided into four castes the genesis of which has already been given (§ 207). Of these the Brahmins who were the priests, the Kshatriyas who were the warriors, the Vaishyas who were the traders and the Shudras who were relegated to the servile class were its main primary divisions, since multiplied into innumerable secondary castes, which the Shastras, however, do not recognize.

265. Out of the four primary castes, the first three were classed as Dwijas or the twice-born and the last, who though Hindus, were not entitled to that privilege. All were enjoined certain duties which in the original conception

(1) N. W. P. Census Report 1891 Pt. I
§ 178 p. 152.

(2) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 81 C. 11
(15) P. C.

of Hindu society were unchangeable. The elaborate rules which bound the twice-born have long since ceased to be operative with the liberalizing forces created by the advent of the Mahomedan rule and strengthened by its suppression by the British rule which has almost completely destroyed the artificial barrier which held together the Hindu society. Even those who nominally remain within the vinculum of Hinduism have long since ceased to practise its observances. The tests by which Manu judged of Hinduism have ceased to apply. The sovereign who was the defender of the Hindu faith has long since vanished from the land. His ordinances to preserve the ideal of Hinduism have become mute with the political subjugation of the country by professors of an alien creed. What remains of Hinduism is but a name. And that name has now found a fresh attribute.

As such, a Hindu may follow the conventional creed or he may not. Law still treats and regards him a Hindu if he is acknowledged to be a Hindu because he has sprung from a Hindu stock and has by his conduct or course of life not become allied to another essential non-Hindu faith.

266. Essence of Hinduism.—Though Hinduism possesses no formula which distinguishes its creed from the other revealed religions, and though its catholicity has ushered into its fold the most divergent and heterodox faith, still there are some elements more or less essential in which Hinduism with all its family members ordinarily agree. These are belief in (1) the unity of Godhead, (2) Maya, (3) Pantheism, (4) the doctrine of Karm, and (5) its consequent pessimism. All Hindu speculation centred round these subjects which afford a key to the many dogmas and beliefs which, to the mind of an outsider, present a maze of bewildering confusion of ideas, theories and rituals between whom there seems to be nothing in common. But a close examination of them all reveals their essential unity on these five points of which a succinct account only will be here attempted.

267. The first article of Hindu faith is that "God is one without a second." Hinduism at heart is purely monotheistic, though it is difficult to discover it through the thick incrustation of superstition and the corrupting influence of caste with its distinct divinities.

(1) Unity of the Godhead

But though God is one, He brings himself nearer to man in His incarnations or Avatars which present to man the many and varied phases of the divine energy. This accounts for the seeming incongruity between the pure spirit and its incarnate actions.

268. Belief in Maya (1) which is the illusion by virtue of which one considers the unreal universe as really existent and as distinct from the Supreme spirit is the second feature of Hinduism. This doctrine was adopted into the Sankhya philosophy of Kapil and has become the corner-stone of all oriental thought. The Hindus believe that this universe is an emanation of the self-emanant God; that as the snail comes out of the shell and can withdraw itself at will from sight, so the universe has come out from God and He can withdraw it all into Himself. And as God is spirit, intangible and imperceptible, so is the Universe. The things we see are not what they seem. It is a mere illusion that we consider them as material and something different from Him. It is all Māya or illusion. True wisdom consists in realizing the oneness of all things with God and when this is done one realizes the identity of one's own self with the Universe which is the play or sport of God. He was tired of being alone and so created the world for His own amusement. All the pains and miseries of life are mere illusions which deceive one into imagining oneself to be something different from God. The best way to overcome this illusion is to realize by meditation the identity of one's soul with God. When that state is reached the mind loses all other consciousness. The best preparation for this state of mental beatitude is to cultivate indifference to pleasure and pain, heat and cold, hunger and thirst, day and night, self and the world. A life of inaction is the noblest man can live; and a life without thought, is the only life free from the worldly illusions. Life has no meaning. It has no goal. Therefore, it is an evil and the sooner it is got rid of the better, since by its illusory attractions it keeps the soul away from God.

(1) Lit. Deceit, fraud, trickery; a device, an artifice—thence a phantom, illusion, or an illusory image.

269. Maya leads to Pantheism, and it is another doctrine of Hinduism.

(3) Pantheism. In fact the two doctrines are really parts and parcel of the same dogma of Hindu Philosophy, of which another fine flower is the doctrine of Karm, <sup>(1)</sup> pre-destination or fate.

270. This doctrine of fate which is an integral part of Hindu Philosophy has equally found favour with all oriental speculation. It

(4) "Karm" is the Kismet of the Sufis. The essence of this dogma lies in the statement that man's future is pre-arranged by the Deity and that he cannot alter his recorded destiny. Exertion is therefore useless if not a profane interference with divine dispensation. This bowing to Fate paralyzes effort, and accounts for the many otherwise inexplicable turns in the political history of this country. Of late the people have commenced to put forth exertion in spite of their beliefs; but the inexorable doctrine still remains to neutralize effort and put a pause upon their exertion.

These four-fold beliefs may be said to underlie all forms and sects and offshoots of Hinduism and they are the binding dogmas of that creed or system.

271. Another distinguishing feature of Hinduism is its prevailing pessimism. All Hindu Philosophy is pessimistic (§ 270) and it

(5) Pessimism. tinctures their religious belief. Time is divided into four ages. The first age called "Sattya Yug" was the golden age of truth and virtue, the second (Dvapara) and the third ages (Treta) were those in which those qualities gradually diminished but nothing comparable to the extent they have in the present age (Kul Yug) which is the age of lying and deceit, vice and infidelity. As these four ages of the world were pre-ordained, there is no help for it but to endure the present life with all its unhappiness and coarse brutality. All this is typified by the fable that in the Sattya Yug Dharm stood upon four legs. In each successive age its one prop was removed till it has now to support itself upon only a single leg.

272. Present Day Hindus: The subject of practical Hinduism may be presented in the following order. (1) Those who follow the Orthodox creed (2) Those who without following it are still classed as Hindus (3) Those who have been admitted into another creed and (4) Those who follow the Hindu Law without following the Hindu religion.

(1) Lat. Action, work, deed—thence the result of such action &c.

273. The first class presents comparatively little difficulty. Persons born of the first three castes still remain Hindus whatever may be their caste, or status. The fact that an issue of an irregular alliance has forfeited his caste is no blot on his Hinduism, since the forfeiture of one's caste does no longer entail its pristine penalties. (§ 178) But the following ceremonies are still in vogue both amongst orthodox and reformed Hindus (1) On birth of a child a Brahmin is called in to note the time of the birth, prepare its horoscope and forecast its future. Manu says that the name-giving ceremony should be performed on the 10th or 12th day after birth "or on some fortunate day of the moon, at a lucky hour, and under the influence of a star with good qualities." (2) The name should be a compound name consisting of two parts each bearing a meaning according to the caste. That of a Brahmin—first part—holiness—the second part—prosperity. That of a Kshatriya—first part—power—the second part—preservation. That of a Vaishya—first part—wealth—the second part—nourishment. That of a Shudra—first part—contempt—the second part—humble attendance. (3) "The names of women should be agreeable, soft, clear, captivating the fancy, auspicious, ending in long vowels, resembling words of "benediction". (4) But these are the counsels of perfection. The names of Hindus now follow no fixed rule. They are usually coupled with the name of a god or goddess and it has no reference to caste, since a Shiv Prasad (5) or Ram Antar, (6) may as much be a Brahmin as a Shudra and so while the suffix "Sinha" (7) is usually found added to the name of a Kshatriya it is not his sole monopoly. The modern trend of Hindu society is in the direction of unification. The levelling influence of western education has destroyed the acute feeling about caste and the education of the masses is tending to uplift the lower classes in the social scale. The conferral of a Hindu name has consequently no meaning beyond the fact that its bearer is or was a Hindu, since, even Hindu converts to Christianity at times prefer to retain their old names.

274. Taking first the Dwijas or twiceborn for whom the sacred books were written, the orthodox Hindu is enjoined to perform the following sixteen ceremonies:—

Table of the Sixteenth Shastric Ceremonies.

No.	Ceremony	Nature	Remarks
1	Garbhādan गर्भाधान	... Ceremony before conception, performed on the bride attaining puberty.
2	Punsāwan पुंसवन	... Ceremony for the birth of the male issue.
3	Simant सीमन्त	.....

(1) The ceremonies mentioned in M. nu ii-27 are now obsolete, except the severance of the umbilical cord, which is of course necessary and the tonsure of its head (if male) with a lock of hair left on it, is still customary.

(2) Manu ii-30.

(3) Ib. ii-81-82.

(4) Manu ii-83.

(5) Lit. "Gift of the God Shiva".

(6) Lit. "Incarnation of the God Ram."

(7) Lit. "Lion".

No.	Ceremony.	Nature-	Remark.
4	Jat Karm जातकर्म	... "Birth-ceremony," to be performed immediately on delivery and before severance of the umbilical cord
5	Namkarn नामकरण	... Naming-ceremony, performed on the 10th 11th or the 12th day	Ordinarily performed on the 12th day.
6	Nishkram निष्क्रमण	... The ceremony of presenting the boy to the Sun, to be performed in the 4th month.
7	Annaprasnan अन्नप्राशन	... Ceremony of taking food, performed in the sixth month.
8	Chuda चूडा	... Tonsure, by shaving off the head, except a tuft of hair in the centre of which is the choti or pigtail of the Hindu, performed according to family custom.
9	Upnayan उपनयन	.. Lit. "carrying near the Guru"; the thread-ceremony performed by 1. Brahmins 8-16 years. 2. Kshatriya 11-22 " 3. Vaisya 12-24 "	Popularly called "Muni." May be performed as early as the 5th year.
10	Mahanamni Vrat महानाम्नी	....	Obsolete
11	Mahavrat महाव्रत	.....
12	Upanishad Vrat उपनिषद् व्रत	.. ...
13	Godanvrata also called Keshant. गोदानव्रत	.. ...
14	Samavartan समावर्तन	... Home-coming ceremony performed on return from the Guru	Now performed at the same time as the thread ceremony.
15	Vivah विवाह	... Marriage.
16	Shradh श्राद्ध	... The obsequies.

275. Of these the only ceremonies now important are those of (1) tonsure, (2) thread, (3) marriage. The outward marks of Hinduism are a sandal, saffron or any coloured mark on the forehead, the pigtail and the sacred thread. Hindus also used to wear a turban and a loose coat which distinguished them from the non-Hindus. But none of these ceremonies or symbols apply to the Shudras whose Hinduism is to be judged from an altogether different test.

276. The difference between the different castes of the Hindus is great but for the purpose of law it is immaterial, inasmuch as all the three regenerate castes are equally subject to the same rules. But the case of Sudras is different both because the Sanskrit texts are not primarily addressed to them as also because, being free from the rigid supervision of the priest, their custom had a freer scope for development. Consequently, ceremonies which might suffice to validate a Shudra adoption or marriage do not necessarily have that effect in the case of a Dwija and so while the illegitimate son of a Shudra is an heir, that of a Dwija is no heir at all. Considerable latitude still exists as regards inter-caste marriages amongst Shudras amongst whom divorce and re-marriage of women is customary and common.

It is therefore, often a question of some importance as it is one of some nicety, whether a person is a Dwija or a Sudra.

277. The following are some of the recognized tests by which a Shudra may be known :—

- (1) The Shudras bury their dead. They do not ordinarily burn them.
- (2) They do not don the sacred thread.
- (3) Inter-caste marriages amongst them are customary.
- (4) Divorces are common amongst them and even a woman may divorce her husband and marry another. But this is not encouraged though it is tolerated, and the second husband is mulcted in costs of marriage of the bereaved husband who is thereupon compelled to give a "Marti Jiti" feast which means that the woman is dead to her previous husband and become alive to her new one.
- (5) Brahmins as a rule do not officiate at their marriages.
- (6) Their caste occupations are menial and manual.
- (7) Their gods belong to a lower order and stand outside the Hindu pantheon.
- (8) They eat the forbidden flesh—such as the flesh of fowls, and domestic pigs, while the lowest of them eat even beef.
- (9) Their men do not stamp marks of sandal or saffron upon their temples.
- (10) They are so regarded by the general Hindu community.

As already observed these criteria have now lost much of their value by reason of the general social upheaval now proceeding in Hindu society and the removal of all social barriers created by the old religion. All the same they cannot be altogether ignored in judging of the status of a Hindu. Some well-known castes have already been the subject of judicial decisions. For instance, the Kayasths of Bengal have been held to be Shudras, (1) though some of their leaders lay claim to be Kshatriya.

(1) Raj Coomar v. Bissessar, 10 C, 688.

278. Outside this class stand an ever growing class of Hindus who have broken themselves off from the orthodox practices of their
(3) Masked Hindus. forbears and adopted a new mode of living in conformity with the pressure of western education and ideas. They are the reformed Hindus of varying degrees—those who have been educated in Europe and who upon return affect a life in conformity with that which they have become accustomed to, those who have been brought up in Missionary schools and have, consequently, imbibed the spirit of free Christianity, and those who have cast off irksome and irrational conventions. They are the product of India in transition. They wear no sacred thread nor maintain a pigtail. They eat at all hands and despise the ordinances which have created the caste—believing as they do in equality and universal brotherhood. These people consequently respond to no usual test of Hinduism and the only test applicable to them is whether they call themselves Hindus, and by the retention of their Hindu names, manners, and customs and by the general or substantial conformity to its usages, they pass as such. It may be that all these elements are wanting but the true criterion in such cases is whether being born in a family which was or passed as a Hindu family there has been conversion to any antagonistic non-Hindu revealed religion.

279. Outcaste Hindus.—Caste is an integral part of the Hindu religion and the Shastras enjoin the forfeiture of all civil rights with the deprivation of caste. But the Caste Disabilities Removal Act passed in 1850 has repealed all such texts and usages as have that effect—the result being that the forfeiture of one's caste now no longer entails any of its prescribed civil disabilities and an out-caste Hindu is in the eye of the law as good a Hindu as one who has never lost his caste.

280. The text of this Act runs as follows:—

CASTE DISABILITIES REMOVAL ACT, 1850.

(ACT XXI OF 1850.)

[Passed on the 11th April 1850.]

An Act for extending the principle of section 9, Regulation VII, 1832, of the Bengal Code throughout the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company.

WHEREAS it is enacted by section 9, Regulation VII, 1832, of the Bengal Code, that “whenever in any civil suit the parties to such suit may be of different persuasions, when one party shall be of the Hindu and the other of the Muhammadan persuasion, or where one or more of the parties to the suit shall not be either of the Muhammadan or Hindu persuasions, the laws of those religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, they would have been entitled; and whereas it will be beneficial to extend the principle of that enactment throughout the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company; It is enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

“So much of any law or usage now in force within the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property, or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance, by reason of his or her renouncing, or having been excluded from the communion of, any religion, or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as law in the Courts of the East India Company, and in the Courts established by Royal Charter within the said territories.

Law or usage which inflicts forfeiture of or affects rights on change of religion or loss of caste to cease to be enforced.

281. This Act means that a person deprived of his caste by conversion to another faith or otherwise does not forfeit on that account (a) his rights, (b) his property, or (c) inheritance, the last two being merely illustrative of the first as both the “forfeiture of property” or a “right of inheritance” are included in the word “rights.” The section might have been worded thus “No rights which a person possesses shall be forfeited, impaired or in any way affected by reason merely of his renouncing, etc.”

The effect of this enactment is to remove all disabilities imposed by the Hindu Law on an out-caste Hindu, it being immaterial whether the deprivation of caste is due to conversion to another religion in which case the convert ceases to be a Hindu, or whether it is due to non-compliance with its rules. Consequently, an out-caste does not forfeit his right of guardianship of his children if he is otherwise qualified. (1)

282. Illegitimate children of Hindus.—Hindu Law makes no distinction between the legitimate and illegitimate children of Hindu parents (2) or even where one of them is a Hindu and the other non-Hindu provided they are brought up and received as Hindus. (3)

283. The same rule applies equally to children of mixed parentage. In a case finally decided by the Privy Council in 1861 the question arose to the status of the two sons named Ram Prasad and Thakur Ram, of an Englishman by name Hughes by his native mistress, a Brahmin married woman, who lived apart from her husband in adultery with Hughes, who had in keeping another Hindu woman by whom he had three sons named Maya Ram, Chandu Lal and Uttar Ram. To all these five sons Hughes bequeathed his estate in equal shares. The five brothers lived as an united family. One of them Thakur Ram having died intestate his step-brother Chandu Lal took possession of all his property including the one-fifth which he had inherited under his father's will, whereupon his full brother Ram Prasad sued him for that share which he could only get by survivorship, which raised the question whether the five brothers were Hindus and if so co-parceners in their father's estate which alone could give to Ram Prasad his full brother's share by survivorship. The courts in India considered them to be Hindus and this view was approved by the Privy Council (4) who observed: “They were not an united Hindu family in the ordinary sense in which that term is used in the text-writers on the Hindu

Children of mixed alliances.

(1) Khunnilal v. Gobind, 13 A. 856 (865, 866) P. C. Kaulesra v. Jorai Kasandhan, 28 A. 283; Muchoo v. Arzoom, 5 W. R. 235; Ram Nath v. Durga, 4 C. 550 (552), 555; Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871 (873, 874). Gul Muhammad v. Wasir Begam, (1901); P. R. No.

60; Taij Singh v. Koneilla (1902) P. R. 104.

(2) Ramkumari (In re) 18 C. 264.

(3) Myna Bai v. Ootaram, 8 M. I. A. 400; Lingappa v. Esudasan, 27 M. 18.

(4) Myna Bai v. Ootaram, 8 M. I. A. 400 (420).

Law ; a family of which the father was, in his life-time, the head, and the sons in a sense parceners by birth, by an inchonte though alterable title : but they were sons of a Christian father by different Hindu mothers, constituting themselves parceners in the enjoyment of their property after the manner of a Hindu joint family. On the death of each, his lineal heirs representing their parent, would, by the effect of the agreement, enter into that partnership ; collaterals, however, could not so enter by succession, unless the Hindu Law gave, in the case under consideration, a right of inheritance also to collaterals. The parties could not by their agreement give new rights of succession to themselves or their heirs unknown to the law. The law of survivorship, which is the consequence of such a partnership amongst Hindus, would come in only on failure of the heirs."

284. In this case there is nothing to show that the brothers had embraced Christianity which was the religion of their father, but even if they had, it would not have necessarily made any difference in the decision. As their Lordships observed in another case : "The profession of Christianity releases the convert from the trammels of Hindu Law, but it does not of necessity involve any change of the rights or relations of the convert in matters with which Christianity has no concern, such as his rights and interests in and his powers over, property. The convert, though not bound as to such matters, either by the Hindu Law, or by any other positive law, may by his course of conduct, after his conversion, have shown by what law he intended to be governed as to these matters. He may have done so either by attaching himself to a class which, as to these matters, has adopted and acted upon some particular law, or by having himself observed some family usage or custom ; and nothing can surely be more just than that the rights and interests in his property, and his powers over it, should be governed by the law which he has adopted, or the rules which he has observed." (1) Then referring to the native Christians, they went on to add : "Some adhere to the Hindu customs and usages as to property ; others again retain those customs and usages in a modified form ; and others again have wholly abandoned those customs and usages, and adopted different rules and laws as to their property." (2) To the last class belong the class known as the East Indians (3) who in all things follow the usages and customs of the European residents here. Then upon the evidence their Lordships held that the Abrahams, though Christians, had continued to retain their Hindu Law even upon their conversion. This case is instructive for it shows that the mere assumption of a European name is not conclusive of the matter. An extreme case of this sort is presented by the Khojas who are Hindus by origin, converted to Mahomedanism some centuries ago, but who still retain their Hindu Law of inheritance. (4) These cases show that a family ceasing to be Hindu in religion may still enjoy its property under Hindu Law. (5)

285. But as has been pointed out, these cases are only authorities for the proposition that a Hindu convert to Christianity may continue to follow his old laws, customs and usages which are not inconsistent with his new religion. As Wilson, J. observed, "We do not suppose the law could permit native converts (if one can imagine their desiring such a thing) to choose for themselves some marriage law wholly repugnant to Christian ideas—converts from Hinduism, for

(1) Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M. I. A. 195 (289, 240)

(2) Ib., p. 241.

(3) Ib.

(4) Raṇimat Bai v. Hirbai, 3 B. 81 ;

Abdul Cadur v. Turner, 9 B. 158 (162).

(5) Sri Gajapathi v. Sri Gajapathi, 14 W R 38 P C ; Lopez v. Lopez 12 C 706 (722) ; Ghosal v. Ghosal, 81 B 25 (81) dissenting from Tellis v. Saldanha, 10 M 69.

instance, to retain their former right to marry more wives than one, or converts from Mahomedanism their former freedom of divorce." (1)

286. The following rules may then be deduced from these cases:—(1)—That Hindu Law applies not only to those who are Hindus, strictly so called but, also to those who though not following the Shastric rituals still conform to some of its outward forms. (2)—That even those who have become converted to another religion, such as Mahomedanism or Christianity, from Hinduism may still continue to retain their old law, customs and usages provided they are not repugnant to their new religion. (3)—Lapses from orthodoxy do not imply abandonment of Hindu Law.

287. It has been stated before that the Hindus are divided into four castes, the first three being Dwijas or twice-born and the last the lowest, being the Shudras. It has also been observed that the question whether a person belongs to any of the three regenerate castes is, for all legal purposes, immaterial as the Shastras were written for and equally apply to all. Their serfs and slaves were originally classed as Shudras but in the evolution of Hindu society the aboriginal tribes became absorbed in Hinduism and these became also classed as Shudras. Some of them retained many of their old usages while others became so entirely assimilated to the new civilization that they gave up and in course of time lost all vestiges of their pristine customs. These became crystallized into distinct castes and in course of time they naturally commenced to assert their claim to a higher place in the Hindu theocracy. As many of their members had assisted their Aryan masters in the subjugation of the country, they naturally laid claim to and were freely admitted into the Kshatriya or warrior caste, while others, whose claims were not so admitted still considered themselves entitled to be classed as such. Similarly, those members of the Shudra caste who prospered in trade, commenced to lay claim to be Vaishyas and in this way there arose new castes whose claim to higher status has been made for centuries but which has not been admitted by the popular opinion of the community. But the confusion so caused has led some puritanical priests to even deny the existence of pure Kshatriyas and Vaishyas, but there is no justification for this assumption and the courts recognize the existence of the four-fold classification of Hindu society, (2) while the existence of the Kshatriyas has been vindicated by the highest court of appeal. (3) But while there can be no doubt about the existence of the four castes at the present day, the question which often exercises the courts is not so much their existence but the allocation of a family or person to any of them. This difficulty is further enhanced by the springing into existence of persons of mixed descent. Originally, these gave no trouble as the caste rules were then not so rigid. But as the caste rules became iron bound and the lapses from caste exclusiveness more frequent, there arose the problem how to reconcile these two cross and antagonistic currents. In their quandary the courts have cut the gordian knot by formulating for their own guidance a few working rules which though not inflexible, have become invariable guides in the determination of such cases. These are—(i) what they think of themselves and (ii) what others think of them. So the question arising as to the

(1) Lopez v. Lopez 12 C. 706 (722).

(2) Ambabai, v Govind, 23 B 257 (262) ;
Chudhury v. Sahub Purhulad, 7 M. I. A. 18 (46, 47) where the question is discussed at some length.

(3) Chudhury v. Sahub Purhulad Syn,
 7 M. I. A. 18 (46-48).

caste of an illegitimate son of a Kshatriya by a Shudra woman the Privy Council put the question to that test and held him to be above the Shudra. (1) In a similar case in Madras it was found that such people form a distinct intermediate caste called the Ugra, (2) higher than that of the mother and lower than that of the father. (3)

288. The question is essentially one of opinion. As Chandavarkar, J., pointed out, the membership of a caste is like the membership of a club, with the only difference that entry into one is by birth, while entry into the other is by election. But the members of the one as of the other, are free to continue its membership or leave it : "The caste is as much a voluntary association as a club—the one can frame rules for its guidance and revoke them and make fresh rules as well as the other. It is equally within the power of a club to admit into its fold men not born in it as it is within the power of a club to admit any one it likes as its member. To hold that the membership of a caste is determined by birth is to hold that the caste cannot, if it likes, mix with another caste and form both into one caste. That would be striking at the very root of caste autonomy." (4)

289. Tests for determining status.—Whenever it is necessary to ascertain the relative position of a caste in the social order the following tests would appear to afford some basis for decision :—

(1) Intermarriage between the two castes. If both are sub-castes of a single caste then men of the higher caste would take wives from the lower, but not vice versa.

(2) Interdining—Persons of the higher caste interdine amongst themselves. They will take food cooked by one a degree lower in caste, provided the meal is cooked in clarified butter.

(3) Taking water—Higher castes will drink water touched even by Shudras provided they belong to the well known servile castes, such as Ahirs, Raots, Nais (barbers) and Kunbis. If the caste is lower still, the twice-born will not drink water touched by them.

(4) Certain Shudras, though Hindus, are treated as untouchables. These belong to the well known depressed classes of Chamars, called Pariahs in the Madras Presidency, Mahars, Mehtars (sweepers), also called Lalbegis in Northern India.

(5) In judging of the relative position of castes it is useless to examine witnesses of a rival caste, as each caste considers itself superior to the other.

(6) The opinion of the Shastris is of the least value as the shastric rules have long since become obsolete and no Hindu of the present day can pass that test.

(1) Chhoturya v. Sahub Purhulad 7 M. I. A. 18 (48) Brindavana v. Radhamani, 12 M. 72 (78)

(2) So mentioned in Yajnavalkya (Mandlik p. 178).

(3) Brindavana v. Radhamani, 12 M. 72

(78, 79).

(4) Nathu v. Keshwaji, 26 B. 174 (186 187) following Advocate General v. Devakar, 11 B 185 and Vengamuthu v. Pandaveswara, 6 M 151 dissenting from Contra in Jagannath v. Akali Dassia, 21 C. 463.

290. The courts have adjudicated upon the position of several castes in the Hindu system. Thus for instance, the Bengali Kayasths though claiming to be Kshatriyas <sup>(1)</sup> have been held to be Shudras. <sup>(2)</sup> The same view has been taken of the Kayasths of Behar. <sup>(3)</sup> In so holding Field, J., pointed out that the question was not one of origin or pedigree but one which depended upon popular recognition and observance of the ceremonial prescribed for the twice born. Such was the view of Babu Shyama Charan Sarkar who in his Vyavastha Darpan, explained that while the Kayasths were, according to the preponderance of authorities, of Kashatriya origin, they had become degenerated since several centuries by giving up their surname of "Varna" and taking to "Das" appropriate to the servile class, and by not performing the thread ceremony characteristic of the Dwijas. <sup>(4)</sup> But Mahmud, J. was inclined to doubt this view so far as regards the twelve castes of Kayasths of the United Provinces <sup>(5)</sup> though he confessed that the authorities were against his view. He appears, however, to have been impressed by the fact that Kayasths constitute the literary caste amongst Hindus; but caste is scarcely based upon the modern notion of literacy and social status, though, as previously remarked, these facts are slowly and silently undermining the old barriers. But, as observed by a Census officer, the test of social pre-eminence as a guide to grading the castes is impracticable <sup>(6)</sup>.

291. The Lingayats have been held to be Shudras. <sup>(7)</sup> Similarly, the Prabhus who correspond to the Kayasths of the Mahratta country claim to belong to the Kshatriya caste <sup>(8)</sup> but their claim does not appear to have been ever judicially recognized.

292. The Lingayats stand upon the same footing, though they now lay claim to belong to the caste of Vaishyas and though, as observed by Westropp, C. J., "during the present century some of the more wealthy and educated members of the Lingayat caste have, as it advanced in prosperity, manifested a desire to elevate it, and by endeavouring to get rid of practices which are badges of the Shudra tribe, to raise the caste from that class into the next, viz., Vaishyas." <sup>(9)</sup> The learned Chief justice went on, however, to add: "But it is an impossible task for a Hindu to rise from the class whether it be Kshatriya, Vaishya or Shudra, in which he was born, to any class above it." This is, however, only true in an ideal state of society, for, in practice castes are continually rising in the social scale, and there are several castes among Shudras which are now classed as of the twice born (§§ 213 and 228). But so far as the Lingayats are concerned, their efforts to rise to the Vaishya caste have hitherto failed for they have been treated as Shudras in several cases decided at periodical intervals. <sup>(10)</sup>

(1) Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.) 419 c, 419 d.

(2) Asita Mohun v. Nirode Mchun 20 C. W. N. 901.

(3) Raj Coomarr v Bissessur, 10 C 683 (693-696) doubted per Mahmood, J. in Tuls Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (334).

(4) Vyavasthadarpan, (3rd Ed.) p 549 et. seq.

(5) Tulsh Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (334).

(6) Cited in Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8

M. 440 (444).

(7) Steele's Law of Caste (1st. Ed.) 95 100; Gopal v Hanmant, 3 B. 278 (282).

(8) Steele's Law of Caste 89.

(9) Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 278 (288)

(10) Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 278 (288) followed in Somaselcharaia v Subha drammai 6 B. 524 (526); Basavi v. Lingangauda, 19 B 428 (465); Fakirgouda v. Gangi, 22 B. 277; Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440 (450).

The Lingayats are a heretical sect and are not subject to the Brahminical laws. They are numerous in the Bombay Presidency and a few of them live in the Madras Presidency. The founder of their sect was one Basava (A.D. 1100-1160) in the twelfth century who abolished caste and other Brahminical observances. Any Hindu may become a Lingayat. (1)

293. The religion of the Sikhs (2) was founded by Nanak, a Kshatriya who was born in Lahore in the year 1469. His aim was to reconcile and unite the two great religions then prevalent in India, namely Hinduism and the Islam. In order to achieve this purpose he recognized the divinity of the Hindu deities as also the claim of Mahomed to be the sole accredited prophet of God. His disciple Gobind Singh gave a political turn to the faith and welded the Sikhs into a fighting race by making them take a vow to worship only the one Supreme being, to discard superstition, to practise continence and to live by the sword.

294. Sikhism like other creeds has become divided into many sub-sects—of which the principal sects are the Udasis (or the Sroies), the Nirinaks (or the Pure) and those who take their name from those of their teachers, such as the Gobind Singhas and the Ramrajis.

295. The Sikhs, like the Lingayats and the Jains, are Hindu non-conformists but nevertheless they have always been held to be Hindus (3). This question was put to a severe test in the probate case of the will of one Sardar Dyal Singh, a Punjabi Sikh, who died in Lahore in 1898. The three executors named in the will applied for probate under the Probate and Administration Act (4) which necessitated an inquiry into whether the testator had died a Hindu. His widow Ram Bhagwan Koer contested the will on the grounds found in her favour, viz., (i) that the deceased had become a convert to Brahmoism and (ii) as such had lapsed from even Sikhism, because contrary to the tenets of that faith he smoked and trimmed his hair which no Sikh could do, that he ate beef, that (iii) he lived in European style (iv) ate from the hands of Mahomedan and Christian cooks, and (v) had married or kept an Anglo-Indian lady by name Mrs. Catherine Gill. The Punjab Chief Court, however, held these circumstances immaterial to remove the testator out of the fold of Hinduism, and this view was concurred in by Sir Arthur Wilson who, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, held "Hindu" to be a generic term as embracing all those who were commonly so known. He laid emphasis on the fact that the opinion of witnesses on both sides agreed in designating Sikhs as Hindus and that the lapses complained of from orthodox practice would not have the effect of excluding from the pale of Hindus one who was born within it and who never became otherwise separated from the religious communion in which he was born. (5)

(1) Per Ranade, J. in Basava v. Linganganda, 19 B 428 (457, 458)

(2) Lit. Skt. Shishya—disciple—of which Sikh is a corruption.

(3) Doe & Kissenchunder v. Baidam (1816) 2 For. Dig. 22 followed in Bhagwan

Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P. C. affirming O A. Bose v. Bhagwan Koer (1900) P. L. R. 51.

(4) Act V of 1881 S. 2.

(5) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 (38). P. C.

296. The Jains <sup>(1)</sup> are another sect of Hindu dissenters, who still remain Hindus and to whom the Hindu Law applies. <sup>(2)</sup> The sect is now a well known sub-division of the Vaishya caste which is divided into Agarwalas, Mahestris and Jains, the two former being orthodox Hindus while the last being classed as Hindu heretics. They are again sub-divided into Digambaris and Sitambaris, the former worshipping their God stripped of all attire, while the latter worship him clothed in costly raiments. The hostility between the two sects is as great as theologicum odium can reach. Mount Stuart Elphinstone thus writes of this community: --

"There are two other religions, which, although distinct from that of the Hindus, appear to belong to the same stock, and which seem to have shared with it the veneration of the people of India before the introduction of an entirely foreign faith by the Mohamedans. These are the religions of the Baudhas (or worshippers of Budha) and the Jains. They both resemble the Brahmin doctrines in their character of quietism, in their tenderness of animal life, and in the belief of repeated transmigrations, of various hells, for the purification of the wicked, and heavens for the solace of the good. The great object of all three is the ultimate attainment of a state of perfect apathy, which, in our eyes, seems little different from annihilation; and the means, employed in all, are the practice of mortification and of abstraction from the cares and feelings of humanity. The differences from the Hindu belief are no less striking than the points of resemblance, and are most so in the religion of the Baudhas..... The Jains hold an intermediate place between the followers of Budha and Brahma. They agree with the Baudhas in denying the existence or, at least, the activity and providence of God; in believing the eternity of matter; in the worship of deified saints; in their scrupulous care of animal life and all the precaution, which it leads to; in their having no hereditary priesthood; in disclaiming the divine authority of the Vedas; and in having no sacrifices and no respect for fire. They disagree with the Baudhas in considering a state of passive abstraction as supreme felicity and in all the doctrines which they hold in common with the Hindus. They agree with the Hindus in other points, such as division of caste. This exists in full force in the south and west of India, and can only be said to be dormant in the north-east; for, though the Jains there do not acknowledge the four classes of the Hindus, yet a Jain converted to the Hindu religion takes his place in one of the castes; from which he must all along have retained the proofs of his descent; and the Jains themselves have numerous divisions of their own, the members of which are as strict in avoiding intermarriages and other intercourse as the four classes of the Hindus. Though they reject the scriptural character of the Vedas they allow them great authority in all points not at variance with their religion. The principal objections to them are drawn from the bloody sacrifices which they enjoin and the loss of animal life which burnt offerings are liable (though undesignedly) to occasion. They admit the whole of the Hindu gods and worship them though they consider them as entirely subordinate to their own saints, who are therefore the proper objects of adoration. Besides those points common to the Brahmins or Baudhas, they hold some opinions peculiar to themselves. The chief objects of their worship are a limited number of saints, who have raised themselves by austerities to a superiority over the gods, and who exactly resemble those of Budha in appearance and general character, but are entirely distinct from them in their names and individual histories. They are called Tirtankeras; there are twenty-four for the present age, but twenty-four also for the past, and twenty-four for the future. Those most worshipped are in some places Rishoba, the first of the present Tirtankeras, but everywhere Parasnath and Mahavira (sometimes called Vardhaman or Bramana) the twenty-third and twenty-fourth of the number. As all but the two last bear a fabulous character in their dimensions and length of life, it has been conjectured with great appearance of truth, that these two are the real founders of the religion. All remain alike in the usual state of apathetic beatitude, and take no share in the government of the world. Some changes are made by the Jains in the rank and circumstances of the Hindu gods. They give no preference to the greater gods of the Hindus; and

(1) Lit worshippers of Jinas, the twenty-four immortalized mortals of each of the past, present and future age Wilkins' Modern Hinduism pp 99-101.

(2) Sheo Singh, v. Dakho 1 A. 688 P. C.; Bachchi v Mahaulal, 8 A 55; Lakhmichand

v. Gallo Bai, 8 A. 319; Dalip v. Ganpat, id 887; Rukhab v. Chunilal 16 B. 347; Amava v. Mahad Gauda, 22 B 416 (418, 422); Ambabai v Govind 23 B 257 (263, 264); Mamickchand v. Jagat Settani, 17 C 518 (533 536); Mandit Koer v. Phool Chand, 2 C. W. N. 304.

they have increased the number of gods, and added to the absurdities of the system; thus they have sixty four Indras, and twenty-two Devis. They have no veneration for relics and no monastic establishments. Their priests are called Jatis (Yatis); they are of all castes, and their dress, though distinguishable from that of the Brahmins, bears some resemblance to it. .... The Jains appear to have originated in the sixth, or seventh century of our era; to have become conspicuous in the eighth or ninth century, got to the highest prosperity in the eleventh and declined after the twelfth. Their principal seats seem to have been in the southern parts of the Peninsula, and in Gujerat and the west of Hindustan. .... They seem never to have had much success in the provinces on the Ganges. They appear to have undergone severe persecution by the Brahmins, in the south of India at least. The Jains are still very numerous, especially in Gujerat, the Rajput country, and Canara; they are generally an opulent and mercantile class; many of them are bankers, and possess a large proportion of the commercial wealth of India." (1)

297. The Jains differ from the Hindus not only in their tenets but in their practices in consequence. They perform no obsequies after the corpse is buried. They regard the birth of a son as having no effect on the future state of his progenitor, and consequently, adoption is a merely temporal arrangement and has no spiritual object. The Jain widow has consequently an absolute right of adoption and requires no express or implied authority, of her husband or his kinsmen. Her adoption is not controlled by the sacred texts. She may adopt her daughter's son (2) and in fact any one and of any age in accordance with the usage of the sect.

298. Brahmos.—It is now settled that a Hindu does not forfeit his Hinduism by a mere conversion to Brahmoism, (3) though the Brahmos are not Hindus within the meaning of the Civil Marriage Act. (4)

299. The Brahma Samaj was founded by the Hindu reformer Raja Ram Mohan Rai born in 1774. The cardinal tenet of his creed, founded in 1828, was directed against caste and idolatry, by establishing a pure monotheistic religion. But the onslaught on caste split the party into two—the progressive seceding from the parent society in 1862 on the ground that the Brahmos should conduct the services of the Samaj and that nothing should be said in the Samaj expressive of hatred or contempt for other religions. Keshab Chandar Sen was the leader of this secession which became known as the Brahm Samaj while the old party commenced to call themselves the Adi (or original) Samaj. These latter have gradually relapsed into Hinduism and the seceders are the sole torch-bearers of the new faith. It owed its origin to the levelling influences of Christianity and Mahomedanism, and is, therefore, purely eclectic in its doctrine. Keshab Chandur Sen tried to convert it into a proselytizing creed by proclaiming the new dispensation on the New Year's day of 1883, (5) and borrowing some of the rituals of Christianity. But a few years previously Keshab's followers had become restive under his autocratic rule and the growing claim to Messiahship. An offshoot called the Sadharan (Universal) Samaj was the result, who issued a dissenting covenant, (6) and threw up their allegiance to Keshab on the pretext, that finding an attractive match, he had contrary to his precept, married off his daughter at an early age.

(1) History of India (4th ed.) Ch IV p. 108 cited with approval per Westropp, C. J., in Bhagandas v. Rajmal, 10 B. H. C. R. 241 (247) approved in Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 (701, 704) P. C.

(2) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P. C.

(3) Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, 31 C. 11 P. C. affirming O.A. Bose v. Bhagwan Koer, (1900)

P. L. R. 51. The contrary conceded by Sale, J. in Kusum Kumari v. Satya Ranjan, 80 C. 999 can no longer be maintained.

(4) Act III of 1872, Smalurni v. Vishnu prasad 28 B. 597.

(5) Which see set out in Wilkins' Modern Hinduism pp. 114-117.

(6) Ib, pp 118-119

The followers of Brahmoism are mainly confined to Bengal, two-thirds of whom are to be found in Calcutta.

300. If the Brahmos are Hindus the Arya Samajists are the more so, because though professing to be monotheists they believe in the supremacy of the Vedas. This faith was founded by Pandit Dayanand Saraswati, who like the Brahmos opposed idolatry and caste and advocated female education and the re-marriage of widows. The Arya Samajists are now mainly confined to the Punjab, though they have a few enthusiasts in the other provinces.

Prarthna Samaj. 301. The same cult is preached by the monotheists of the Bombay side under the name of "Prarthna Samaj." (1)

302. A similar campaign against caste and idolatry was led by the zealous reformer Kabir Das, a disciple of Ramanand, who about the beginning of the fifteenth century, invited both Hindus and Mahomedans to join his faith. Kabir was a disciple of Ramanand who was a Vaishnavite, (2) and his followers are equally treated as belonging to the same sect. (3) This is an extreme instance of the Hindu tolerance of an iconoclastic faith. Though the Kabir Panth is open alike to Hindus as well as Mahomedans, there are no Mahomedan converts to the new gospel, which is kept alive only by its Hindu followers drawn from the Vaishya and Shudra castes who have, moreover, found the tenacity of the caste system too strong for their cult, and so Kabir Panthis of the present day observe their castes, while surrendering their faith in other matters to Kabir. Kabir Das is said to have been a weaver by caste. At any rate, his faith has received much vogue amongst members of that and cognate castes such as those of Telis, Tamolis and Mahars which are only interlarded by a sprinkling of Banias. The most famous work of Kabir is his Bijak or Will the perusal of which is said to have inspired Nanak to found Sikhism. (§ 274)

303. Variations in the worship of Vishnu have been the prolific source of the many Vaishnavite sects, of which the Ramanuja (or Sri Sampradai) sect is the oldest. It was founded by Ramanuj Acharya in the twelfth century. He taught the tenets of his creed at Conjeeveram, the main feature of which was opposition to the Shaiva faith. The essence of the faith consists in upholding the supremacy of the God Vishnu. The Ramanandis are a branch of the Ramanuj sect and lay the same claim for Ramchandra. Yet another offshoot of the same sect is that of the Vallabhacharis or Rudra Sampradayis, who owe their religion to Vallabh Acharya, which is popularly known as the religion of Gokul Gossains. The founder Vishnu Swami, who flourished in the sixteenth century, was a Brahmin sanyasi or ascetic, and inculcated a life of asceticism upon his converts whom he made only from the Brahmin castes. He originally resided at Gokul near Mathura, and then at Brindaban, thence transforming his religion into an Epicureanism in which the worship of Gopal (i.e., the youthful Krishna) was conducted in the most voluptuous surroundings. Vallabh himself married and counselled his followers to do the same. The sect has now adherents drawn both from the Brahmin and the Vaishya castes.

(1) Lit. Prarthna Prayer and Samajan vism was Chaitanya who was born in association. 1485.

(2) The worshipper of Vishnu as the Supreme God. The Bengali leader of Vaishna-

(3) Wilkins' Modern, Hinduism, 66.

304. The Vaishnavites in Bengal belong to a special sect founded by Chaitanya, a Brahmin of Nadia (born 1485 A. D.), who is now worshipped as Lord Gourang as an incarnation of Krishna. The book of this sect is "Chaitanya Charit Amrit" composed in Bengali metre.

305. The two great sects into which higher Hinduism is divided, owe their origin to the rival claims of the two gods Shiv and Vishnu to the supreme place in the Hindu pantheon. Those who assign that place to Shiv are the Shivites whose implacable foes are the partizans of Vishnu. Both these sects have become subdivided into numerous sub-sects dependent upon rituals, the mode of worship and the varying degrees of severity enjoined on their followers, but their leading features remain unaltered. And to the student of law they possess little interest, for with all their differences, they are both Hindus and as such amenable to the Hindu Law.

306. As, however, religious differences are the parent of the several Hindu schools of law, a short notice of these sects should explain the local differences which account for some variation in the interpretation of law which at times puzzles those brought up in a calmer atmosphere of religious toleration.

307. The sects of Shivites is much older than the sect of Vaishnavism which was founded as a rival creed. The high priest of this sect is Shankar Acharya. (1) The religious mendicants and ascetics called the Jogis, Paramhans, Aghoris and the Dandis (2) all belong to this class, while the Lingayast (§ 292) or as they are called Jangamas in Northern India are also devotees of the same phallic symbol.

308. Numerous minor sects, many of mushroom growth, have sprung out of the Hindu religion. Such are the Satnamis (or believers in the "True Name") a sect founded by a Chamar named Ghasidas, a follower of Ramanand, now confined to the Chattisgarh division of the Central Provinces. They despise alike idolatry and the idolators, Brahmins in particular, but their hostility to Brahminism has now become mitigated and a new sect has emerged out of the Satnamis who tattoo their heads with the word "Ram" and to whom that word is as the breath of life.

309. Another sect little different from the rest, is that of the Sadhus founded by a Brahmin, named Birbhan who was born near Delhi in 1658. They also worship God as the Satnam. The Shiv Narayanas are followers of a Rajput teacher Sheo Narayan who lived in the eighteenth century. Like the Kabir Panthis they make no distinction between Hindus and Mahomedans both being equally admitted to their creed. They inculcate truth, temperance and mercy and repudiate all religious rituals and faiths.

310. Ascetics.—The ascetic castes amongst Hindus are the Gossains, Bairagis, Brahmacharis, Sadhus and Sanyasis who were all pledged to celibacy and religious mendicancy, but many of whom have settled down to the ordinary avocations of the householders. But inasmuch as their original history has engrafted upon their community certain relics of their famous order, it has aroused controversy in the courts as to how far they are amenable to the unadulterated rules of Hindu Law.

(1) Shankar is another name for Shiv and Acharya means priest.

(2) Lit. a staff or stick; so called because they carry a small red flag.

According to the Smritis the ascetic is qualified to hold no property ; and whatever little he does is subject to a special rule of devolution, but this is a counsel of perfection <sup>(1)</sup> and Hindu ascetics now not only own large estates but actively engage in commerce, marry and beget children, make wills and otherwise dispose of their property. This is one of those cases in which the Shastric rules fail, but as has been already observed, the courts are not to administer all the Shastric rules but only such rules as are still kept alive by usage.

311. Shankaracharya, the founder of the Shivite sect, is said to be also the founder of the sect of Gosavis who accordingly worship Lingum of the God Shiva, as the Bairagis, another sect of the same order, worship Vishnu in his incarnation of Ram.

312. The Gosavis constitute a religious order now divided into several groups such as the Dundis or those who carry a staff and still affect mendicancy, the Dunglee or the traders and the Grihast or Gharbari Gosavis who have forsaken the order and relapsed into ordinary life. As such, the Gosavis <sup>(2)</sup> have long since become subdivided into two classes (a) Nihang, or celibates, that is to say those who still conform to the original form and mode of life, and (b) Grihast or Gharbari, or householders, that is those who have given up their religious vow and entered the confederacy of householders. But nevertheless they also keep up the old form of adoption of a Chela or a spiritual disciple <sup>(3)</sup> who is treated as and passes for, a son.

313. The Gosavis observe no caste, and any Hindu may join the sect. It then follows that any Hindu boy might be taken in adoption but such adoption can only be made by the Gosavi. It cannot be made by the widow. <sup>(4)</sup> The Chela so adopted succeeds to the estate of his adoptive Guru if he was his mundit or tonsured Chela even in preference to the natural son, but one son cannot be so adopted to the prejudice of the other and in the absence of an adopted stranger, sons succeed equally. <sup>(5)</sup> Except then as to certain matters which have become established as usages of the sect, the Gosavis are Hindus and as such, governed by the general Hindu Law. <sup>(6)</sup> So are the Bairagis who only differ from the Gosavis in that they worship Vishnu instead of the god Shiv. And inasmuch as both the sects admit converts from the Shudra caste, and marry women irrespective of caste, they would be classed as Shudras.

314. Brahmacharis, Sadhus and Sanyasis <sup>(7)</sup> are other sects belonging to the monastic order who are equally subject to the Hindu Law applicable to householders modified by the rules and customs of their respective orders.

Brahmacharis. Sadhus, Sanyasis

(1) Chhajju Gir v Diwan, 29 A. 109 (112).
(2) Lit Skr Go passion and Swami master i. e., one who has mastered his passions

(3) Ramdhan v Dalmir 14 C. W. N. 191; 2 I. C. 385.

(4) Balgir v Dhondgir, 5 Bom L. R. 114. In some cases it is held that the chela must be nominated by the Mahants of the order Nirunjun v. Padaruth, (1864) S. D. A. N. W. P. vol. 1 p. 512; Madho Das v Kamla Das, 1 A. 589; Jugunnath v Bidianand 10 W. R. 172; Chhajju Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109; but this is not the invariable rule. Ramdhan

v Dalmir, 14 C. W. N. 191. A chela who deserts his Guru manifesting an intention to be permanently absent is not entitled to a share in the succession Soogunchand v. Gopalgir, 4 N. W. P. H. C. R. 01; see post "Adoption"

(5) Chhajju Gir v. Diwan, 29 A. 109 (115)

(6) Chhajju Gir v. Diwan Gir 29 A. 109 (112). For the customs of Gosavis see Steele's L. C. pp 432, 446; as to marriage see Citabai v. Shivbakas, 5 Bom L. R. 818.

(7) Nirunjun v. Padaruth, (1864) N.W.P. S. D. A., Vol. 1 p. 512; Madho Das v. Kamla Das 1 A 589.

The Smritis lay down a special rule for the devolution of property of an ascetic to the following effect : "The heirs of a hermit, of an ascetic, and of a professed student, are in their order the preceptor, the virtuous pupil and spiritual brother and associate in holiness." (1) But this rule postulates adherence of the ascetic to his religious vow. It does not extend to an ascetic who has forsaken the order, and contrary to its precepts and purpose amassed wealth. They cannot be held bound by rules framed for another purpose. (2)

315. Besides the Hindus, properly so-called, and those who are commonly

Aboriginal Hindus. so-called, there remain a number of people belonging to the aboriginal tribes, such as Gonds, Bhils, Kurds, Santals and the like who have become absorbed into the Hindu society and who, consequently consider themselves Hindus, and as such bound by Hindu Law. The test in their case is the same. How do they regard themselves and how are they regarded by the rest of the Hindu community? The test applicable is not the Shastric test which has ceased to be applicable to the most orthodox Hindu. The fact is that the Shastras never contemplated the absorption of non-Aryan plebian people into the Hindu hierarchy. But no Shastra could stem the tide of human progress, and the non-Aryan races were not slow to take advantage of the Hindu civilization to which they became attached, and in course of time assimilated. Such are the Gonds and Bhils, who though aborigines, are now universally classed as Hindus. They retain their old customs to a certain extent, but they equally acknowledge the supremacy, of the Brahmins, worship some of their gods and have commenced to observe some of their caste conventions. Some of them have intermarried with Hindus, thereby originating distinct castes. So the alliance of Rajputs with Gond women has produced the caste of Raj Gonds, that with Bhils "Bhilahas" of whom quite a number own Jagirs and Zemindaris in the Nimar and adjoining districts of the Central Provinces. All such and similar castes admit allegiance to the Shastras by which they profess to be bound. (3)

316. Non-Hindu followers of Hindu Law.—But outside the circle of those who follow the Hindu religion and those who pass as Hindus, there stands a class of people who though now converted to the religion of Islam were by origin and descent Hindus, and who have, consequently, despite their conversion, continued to follow the Hindu Law of succession.

Such are the Khoja Mahomedans, (4) Kachi Nassaparia, (5) and the Bantwa, (6) Memons, (7) the Sunni Borah Mahomedans of the Dhandhuka Taluq in Guzerat, (8) and the Molesalem Girasias, (9) the Mahomedans of the Satpura plateau in the Central Provinces, (10) who are, as regards succession and inheritance, governed by the rules of Hindu Law; but apart from this, they do not follow it. For instance, the law of joint property is inapplicable to them. (11) The judicial view of these and other similar converts from Hinduism

(1) Yajñavalkya, 87; Mitākshara 8: Dayabhag XI.6 ss 35, 36; Chhajju Gir v Diwan 29 A 109 (112.)

(2) Nirunjun v. Padaruth (1861) N. W. P. H. C. R. Vol. 1 512; Madho Das v. Kamla Das, 1 A. 539 (541).

(3) Steele L. C. 192, 128

(4) Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 13 B. 534; Rashid v. Sherbanoo, 29 B. 85.

(5) Abdul Rahim v. Halima Bai, 20 C. W. N. 862 P. C.

(6) Safuran Umar v. Emma, (1916) 26

Kath, L. R. 174.

(7) Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed, 10 B. 1; Sahoo Sidick v. Ally Mahomed 80 B. 270.

(8) Baiji Bai v. Santok, 20 B. 53.

(9) Fatesangji v. Horisangji, 20 B. 181; Moosa v. Abdul Rahim, 80 B. 197.

(10) Umda Bi v. Mahomed Sarwar, C. P. D.C.R. (Part VIII) 78.

(11) Mangaldas v. Abdul Rashid, 16 Bom. L. R. 224; Advocate General v. Jimbabai, 41 B. 181.

is settled in a series of cases which lay down the nature of Hindu Law and the extent to which it is applicable in the case of each community.

317. The Khojas, like many other Mahomedans in India, are converts from Hinduism. Their original home was in Sindh from which place they migrated to Cutch and Kathiawar and thence at the close of the nineteenth century to Bombay. In Cutch and Kathiawar their main pursuit is agriculture. But in Bombay they have taken to trade and many of them have amassed considerable fortunes. <sup>(1)</sup> The first case on the law applicable to the Khojas and Memons was decided by the supreme court in 1845 <sup>(2)</sup> and it has been followed since in a succession of cases, <sup>(3)</sup> from which Ranade, J. deduced the following rules:—(i) that though the Mahomedan Law generally governs converts to that faith from the Hindu religion yet (ii) a well established custom of such converts following the Hindu Law of inheritance would override the general presumption; (iii) that this custom should, however, be confined strictly to cases of succession and inheritance; (iv) and that if any particular usage at variance with the general Hindu Law applicable to those communities in matters of succession, be alleged to exist, the burden of proof lies on the party alleging such custom. <sup>(4)</sup> As to Khojas and Memons and the other Mahomedans, the presumption assumed in (i) is no longer made and the general principles applicable to these communities would have to be re-stated as follows:—(i) that presumably they follow the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance; (ii) that in regard to other matters they are presumably governed by the Mahomedan Law; (iii) but that it is open to them to show that they have adopted any usage of Hindu Law at variance with their own law. The question how far the Khojas were governed by Hindu Law was considered by the Bombay High Court in a case in which the evidence disclosed that the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance as administered in Bombay, that is, according to the Mayukh school of law, in the absence of custom to the contrary, applied to them; but that as regards the law of joint family and partition there was the greatest doubt and difference of opinion, and consequently there could be no presumption in favour of its applicability and he who asserted it had to prove it like any other fact.

318. The case shows that the same community may adopt different usages upon their migration to another place. So while the Khojas of Kathiawar and Cutch recognize in the son a right to obtain his share on partition of the family property both ancestral as well as self-acquired, no such right exists amongst the Khoja settlers of Bombay and for an obvious reason. For while the Khojas of the former place are mere agriculturists those of Bombay are enterprising traders who have acquired valuable estates by their individual capacity and exertion. <sup>(5)</sup>

319. The same rules apply equally to the other Mahomedan sects formed

(1) Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 18 B. 584 (544).

(2) Perry's Or. cases 110.

(3) Gangbai v. Thavar Mulla 1 B.H.C.R. 71; Hirbai v. Gorbai, 12 B.H.C.R. 294; Rahimabai v. Hirbai 3 B. 34, Haji Ismail; (In re) 6 B. 452; Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb 9 B. 115; Abdul Khair v. Turner, 9 B.158; Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed 10 B. 1; Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 18 B. 584; Baibaiji v. Bai Santok 20 B. 58 (57); Rashid v. Sherbanoo, 29 B. 85; Saboo Sidick v. Ally Mahomed, 30 B. 270.

(4) Baibaiji v. Bai Santok, 20 B. 58 (57).

(5) Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy, 18 B. 584.

Cutchi Memons, out of Hindu converts, such as the Cutchi Memons, Sunni
Sunni Borahs, Borahs, Molasalem Girasias It will be noted that all Molasalem Girasias. these retain and follow their own communal law. But the case of territorial extension of Mahomedan Law is afforded by the case of Mahomedans inhabiting the Satpura plateau of the Central Provinces who from their association with the Hindus have adopted their law of succession and inheritance. (1)

The cases afford no instance of the Mahomedans absorbing the Hindu Law, in other matters, for instance, adoption, though this would appear to be an attractive field for imitation since the Mahomedan Law itself recognizes sonship by acknowledgment from which adoption might have been another step. But here the intervention of religious beliefs has prevented a further assimilation of the two systems.

320. But while Hindu converts to Mahomedanism retain their freedom of following the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance,
Christian converts. the same cannot be said of Hindu converts to Christianity, who, since the passing of the Succession Act (2) are held to have left no option but to conform to its provisions on the subject of succession. The statutory authority for this view is section 331 which runs as follows:—

S. 2 Except as provided by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force, the rules herein contained shall constitute the law of British India applicable to all cases of intestate or testamentary succession.

Succession to property of Hindus, etc., and certain wills, intestacies and marriages not affected.	S 331 The provisions of this Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Mahomedan or Buddhist, nor shall they apply to any will made, or any intestacy occurring, before the first day of January 1866.
---	--

The 4th section shall not apply to any marriage contracted before the same day.

321. The next S. 332, however, empowers the Governor General in Council to exempt the members of any race, sect or tribe in British India, or any part of such race, sect or tribe, to whom he may consider it impossible or inexpedient to apply the provisions of this Act or of the part of the Act mentioned in the order. The combined effect of these sections is that the Succession Act is primarily intended to be the General Law of the land, but Hindus, Mahomedans and Buddhists are exempted therefrom and the Governor General in Council may exempt others.

322. Two questions then arise—are Hindu converts to Christianity "Hindus" within the meaning of S. 331 and do the provisions of the Succession Act necessarily preclude the application of Hindu Law upon matters not directly dealt with in that Act. The Succession Act does not define that term, but there can be no question that after their conversion they cannot be called Hindus even in common parlance. They are, therefore, bound by the Act, (3) and as it saves no usage or custom to the contrary they are inevitably so bound unless they are exempted by Government under S. 332. In this view there is no room for survival of the essentially Hindu doctrines of co-parcenership and survivorship (4) but this has not been acceded to by Sir Lawrence

(1) Umdabi v. Mahomed Sarwar, C.P.D. O. R., Part VIII—75.

(2) Act X of 1865

(3) Vathiar (In re) 7 M. H. C. R. 121; Ponnusami v. Dorasami, 2 M. 209; Ad*ministrator General v. Ananda*, 9 M. 466; Appavu v. Susasudayan, 15 M. L. J. 285; Dagree v. Pacotti, 19 B. 783; Nepembala v

Sithikanta, 15 C. W. N. 158; 8 I. C. 41
 (4) Tellu v. Saldhana, 10 M. 69.

Jenkins who in a considered judgment held that notwithstanding the conversion of a family to Christianity it may still continue or become an undivided joint family holding and enjoying property in co parcellership with the right of survivorship which is unaffected by the Succession Act which merely deals with the devolution of rights on intestacy and does not purport to enlarge the category of heritable property. <sup>(1)</sup> In other words, since the Act merely deals with succession and not survivorship it has not the effect of excluding the possibility of succession by survivorship. The Succession Act is not a consolidating statute, though it must be deemed to be exhaustive so far as it goes. Such however is the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872 <sup>(2)</sup>, the provisions of which exclude the possibility of any marriage being solemnized according to Hindu Law, <sup>(3)</sup> and similarly a marriage so solemnized being subject to dissolution as provided in the Indian Divorce Act <sup>(4)</sup> there is no room for the applicability of Hindu Law so far, and to that extent these Acts are applicable.

323. Conversion to Hinduism.—It has been stated before that Hinduism does not admit converts. This is true. But nevertheless the process by which non-Hindus are admitted into its fold is in its effect, little, if at all, distinguishable from conversion. This result is achieved by acknowledgment and recognition of non-Hindus as Hindus. It is thus that the creedless barbarians of a by-gone age have been brought into its fold. Whole provinces have been thus become Hinduised.

324. The decennial census reports show that the period of transition of the aborigines to Hinduism is at times only 9 or 10 years. So in the census report of 1881, it is said :—“Looking first at the figures for 1881, the most obvious point to the observer is the large proportion of the class of semi-Hinduised aborigines. Accepting the distribution of 1872, they now appear to number nearly one-fourth of the Hindu population. They are for the most part hewers of wood and drawers of water, and are beyond civil the remnants of the nations whom successive invaders, culminating with the Aryans, found in possession of the country, and absorbed more or less into their system of polity. Those of the aboriginal tribes which were most remote from the scene of the invasion, or were so situated as to be able to withstand it, have retained to this day their primeval language and customs, and their tribal faiths. Those, on the other hand, who were most exposed to the wave of conquest, who were least able to resist, or who were most ready to amalgamate with the new comers, were absorbed into their community, but relegated to its lowest grades, and employed in its most menial offices. Such was the treatment which the inhabitants of the country received at the hands of Hindu invaders. The question of absorption is only one of time and opportunity. Many of the castes shown as low-caste Hindus, and now universally accepted as such, have peculiarities which give rise to the suspicion that they are not pure Hindus of the Aryan type; but they are to all intents and purposes low-caste Hindus and are treated as such without question. The class of semi-Hinduised aborigines are only a stage behind them in their progress towards Hinduism. What many of the low-caste Hindus once were, the semi-Hinduised aboriginals are now: and in the lapse of time they, too, will recruit the ranks of the

(1) Ghosal v Ghosal, 31 B 25 (82) following Navroji v Perzabai, 28 B 80 dissenting from contra in Tellis v. Saldhana, 10 M. 69.

(2) Act XV of 1872.

(3) Ib., s. 4.

(4) Act IV of 1869.

Hindus, as inter-marriage and social intercourse gradually obliterate more and more their distinctive characteristics."

325. The Manipuris were so converted wholesale to Hinduism only about a hundred years ago by a wandering Sanyasi who converted one Garib Niwaz, the founder of the family of the present Raja, and all Manipuris to Hinduism by declaring that they were all Hindus but had forgotten their privileges and duties. After ordering the people to bathe and make expiatory offerings for their long neglect, he declared them all to be good Hindus of the Kshatriya caste. (1) The people of Cachar were similarly converted.

326. The Privy Council had recently to consider the status of one Jung Bahadur Singh, the illegitimate son of a Kshatriya Taluqdar of Balrampur by a Mahomedan mistress who had been brought up as a Hindu, professed that religion, and married a Kshatriya lady of whom the defendant was the issue. He had previously kept a Mahomedan mistress of whom was born the plaintiff Sher Bahadur Singh. The parties' grandfather, the Maharaja, had by his codicil bequeathed a certain estate to his illegitimate son, the parties' father Jung Bahadur and to his "issue" for maintenance. The plaintiff claimed to be such "issue" and sued for possession on the ground of primogeniture. The defendant denied the plaintiff's legitimacy on the ground that he was merely the son of a Mahomedan mistress. The plaintiff pleaded Nikah but it was not proved and thereupon both the courts in India threw out his suit. The Judicial Commissioner however, refrained from recording any finding on the defendant's legitimacy dependent upon the legality of his father's marriage with a Hindu lady. The defendant contended before the Privy Council that parties' father could not have married a Mahomedan as he was a Hindu. He wore tilak on his forehead, was invested with a sacred thread, ate from the hands of a Hindu cook and scrupulously performed all the Hindu ceremonies. The Maharaja ate with him and was anxious to see him pass for a Hindu. Their Lordships upheld the decision of the courts in India on the ground that the plaintiff's mother had never in fact been married to his father, which dispensed with the necessity of having to decide the further question raised, viz., whether such a marriage was ever possible. They equally refrained from going into the defendant's legitimacy, but they appear to have thought that there was nothing in Hindu Law to prevent Jung Bahadur from being treated as a Hindu. (2) Nor is this view unsupported by authority. (3) Such a case may be treated as one of conversion, a process which accounts for the development of Hindu Society by incorporating into it the mixed and aboriginal races. (4) Even direct conversion is being attempted by the Arya Samajis and other Hindu reforming societies, and it is only a question of time when the status of such converts will become undisputed and indisputable.

327. The Jains are no exception to the rule. (5) Like the rest of the Hindus they also carry on migration their own personal laws with them. But inasmuch as being traders and merchants they have for generations

(1) Wilkin's Modern Hinduism 178.

(2) Sher Bahadur v. Ganga Baksh, 86 A. 101 (116) P. C.

(3) Sir A. A. William's Religious thought and life in India Pt. 1, p. 57; Sir Alfred Lyall's "Asiatic Studies" pp. 101, 104; W. J. Wilkin's "Modern Hinduism", p. 177; Carnegie's "Notes on the races, tribes and castes of Oudh" (1868), pp. 37-40, 50.

(4) Muthusami v. Masslamani, 88 M. 842 (849).

(5) Bhagvandas v. Rajmal, 10 B H. C. R. 241; Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A 688 P. C.; Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo, 4 C. 741 (752, 758) P. C.

become settled in all parts of India it is not always possible to ascertain the law of their origin. In that case their personal law would be the law of their domicile, in others words, the lex loci.<sup>(1)</sup>

328. The process of conversion was incomplete when the Cooch Behar Raj case went up for decision to the Privy Council. In that case the dispute related to the succession of a Zemindari called the Baikantpur Raj and the question their Lordships had to determine was as to the validity of the defendant's adoption to the deceased Zemindar. It was found that the family of Cooch Behar to which the parties belonged originally belonged to the Cooch aboriginal tribe which had abandoned their old customs, altered the name of their country to "Behar," called themselves Rajbansi Kshatriyas, adopted Hinduism as their religion and a divine ancestry for the chief was even manufactured by the Brahmins who traced his pedigree to the God Shiv.<sup>(2)</sup> Upon this the High Court presumed that the parties were Hindus and cast upon the plaintiff, a rival claimant, the burden of proving the invalidity of the defendant's adoption. On a review of the family history their Lordships held that it showed "that, although they affected to be Hindus, they had retained and were governed by family customs, which as regards some matters, were at variance with Hindu Law." They therefore held the family subject only to customary law, and as no custom in favour of adoption was proved, the defendant lost his estate though he held an adoption deed from the deceased Zemindar, but which failed to convey the property to a personâ designata.<sup>(3)</sup> This decision has naturally had the effect of arresting the indirect conversion of this family to Hinduism but in another case of Rajbansis the court held the conversion complete and applied the ordinary Hindu Law.<sup>(4)</sup> The distinction between the two cases was however, only this, that while in the one case the origin and history of the family was known, in the other case it was not, and there being nothing to show that the conversion of this family was incomplete the court assumed the ostensible state to be the real state and held them to be Hindus bound by the lex loci, adding:—"It must be taken that they have adopted in its entirety one form or other of that law, and it being uncertain which form they adopted, it is not unreasonable to infer that they adopted the form which prevailed in the locality."<sup>(5)</sup>

329. Buddhists.—India was the birthplace and cradle of Buddhism, which though an exile from its native land, has vanquished almost the entire continent of Asia and whose followers number a third of the human race. In India itself the Buddhists as such do not number more than half a million all told, but it has left a permanent mark on the religious history of Hindustan. Its founder Sakya Muni, who afterwards became known as the Gautam Buddha was born in Behar in 563 B. C. where he fasted, taught and died. His religion fast spread throughout the land till in the third century B. C. it became the state religion under the great monarch Asoka whose kingdom extended from Kandahar to the mouth of the Ganges, and whose ambassadors converted Ceylon to Buddhism and dictated terms to four Greek Kings. It remained the dominant creed for about a thousand years. But in the fifth century A. D. Brahmanism, which had been continuously carrying on a

(1) Rukhab v. Chunnilal, 16 B 347; Amava v. Mahadgauda, 22 B 416; Ambabai v. Govind, 28 B. 257 (263); Lalla Mahabeer v. Mt. Kundun, 8 W R. 116; Chotay Lall v. Chuno Lal, 4 C. 744; Mavik Chand v. Jagat Settani, 17 C 518.

(2) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 468 (475) P.C.

(3) Ib., pp. 476, 485.

(4) Ram Das v. Chandra Dassia, 20 C. 409 (412).

(5) Ib., p. 418

struggle with it, gained ascendancy, and it was first driven out from Benares and Behar and in the ninth century of the Christian era it was deserted by the State, its votaries persecuted and the religion itself disfigured and disguised by a debased and ignorant priesthood, till it ceased to attract the people and the only vestige that remains of that sublime faith is in its offshoot the Jainism, the Vaishnavism as inculcated by Chaitanya <sup>(1)</sup> and in the small number of its other adherents. <sup>(2)</sup>

330. In the light of these facts the question whether Buddhists are Hindus can only admit of one answer. Whatever may be its association and affinity with Hinduism, it is a creed apart, and Buddhists cannot be classed as Hindus both because they do not regard themselves as such, nor are they so regarded by other Hindus.

331. Jainism claims to be the precursor of Buddhism, but it is only its child. It is in reality a compromise between Buddhism and Hinduism, an adaptation made by those who could not receive the new faith, but who nevertheless found refuge in a creed, which while retaining its traditional connection with Hinduism, has borrowed from Buddhism its doctrines and religious practice. In course of time as Buddhism lost its hold on India, its waning influence continued in Jainism till it relapsed into a form of Hinduism, into which its individuality became eventually merged and practically lost. <sup>(3)</sup>

Hindu Law personal.

2. (1) Hindu Law is personal and is not affected by a change of domicile.

Law of origin.

(2) All Hindus are primarily governed by the law of their origin.

Explanation.—The “law of origin” means and includes the law established in the original domicile of the ancestors of the family, and not merely of any members thereof, as determined by the caste, race and language of the family before its migration and the connection since maintained therewith.

Synopsis.

- (1) Personal law why saved (332-334). (4) Personal law when applicable (336).
 (2) What personal law is saved (333-334). (5) Law of Domicile when applicable (337).
 (3) General Rule (335).

332. Analogous Law.—The tenacious adherence of Hindus to their customs and usages and their territorial diversity justify the rule here enacted. <sup>(4)</sup> In this sense there is a lex loci as stated in clause (1). But the lex loci only applies to persons of which it is the domicile of origin. <sup>(5)</sup> This is presumed to be as stated in S. (3). It follows the linguistic test. For

(1) Census of India, 1901, Vol. 1, § 686, p. 861.

(2) Bengal Census Report, 1881, Vol 1 § 210. The history of survivals of Buddhism in Bengal is given in the Census of India, 1901, 649, pp 869-871.

(3) See Bengal Census Report, 1881, Vol. 1, 216, pp. 87, 88.

(4) Soorendranath v Heeramones, 12 M.I.A.

81(96); Parbati v Jagadis Chunder 29 C. 433 (452) P. C.; Govind v. Radha, 81 A 477 (479) P.C.; Nobin Chunder v. Janardhan (1862) W. R 67; Otun Chunder v. Obhoy Churn, W. R (Sp.) 67 (68); Koomud Chundur v Sestakanth (1863) W R (Sp.) 75; Sonatum v Ruttun, (1864) W. R (Sp) 95;.

(5) Ramdas v. Chandra Dassia, 20 C 409 (418).

instance, those who speak Bengali will presumably be governed by the Dayabhag Law wherever they may happen to reside, for Bengal was and remains their "domicile of origin." This term has been defined in the Succession Act as the country in which at the time of a person's birth his father was domiciled. <sup>(1)</sup> But this is not the sense in which a Hindu takes with him his personal law and therefore a different term had to be coined to describe it.

333. The preservation of personal law is the necessary corollary to the preservation of religious rites and worship with which the Hindu Law is inextricably blended. The question was considered by the Privy Council as far back as 1839 when affirming the finding of the Sadar Diwani Adalat, their Lordships said that in a case where a family migrates from one territory to another if they preserve their ancient religious ceremonies, they also preserve the law of succession. <sup>(2)</sup> It should be noted that this presumption only applies to persons as to whose nationality or race there is no dispute; and there may be cases where the same degree of presumption cannot be made as for instance in the case of persons of mixed descent or of those whose assimilation to the Hindu society is yet incomplete. Such was the case of a branch of the Cooch Behar family who belonged originally to the Koch aboriginal hill tribe but had for over a century become converted to Hinduism. A divine ancestry for the chief was manufactured by the Brahmins, but nevertheless the family had retained some of its aboriginal customs. In this state of the law Jogendra the Zemindar of Baikantpur Raj died in 1878. The plaintiff claimed the estate by right of descent, the defendant by adoption, and the question was whether the validity of an adoption allowed by Hindu Law could be presumed in favour of the defendant. Their Lordships held that if the family had been out and out Hindus such would have been indubitably the presumption. But it could not be applied to the parties whose conversion to Hinduism was yet incomplete and therefore it was on the defendant to prove his adoption as supported by custom, which he failed to do. <sup>(3)</sup>

334. It has been held that the personal law by which a party is bound is the personal law in vogue at the time of his migration and not any subsequent development of that law which may have come into prevalence after his migration. <sup>(4)</sup> But it is submitted that this is a limitation by no means in accord with the principle underlying the rule. The reason why a Hindu is permitted to carry his personal law with him is founded on the fact that that law is disseverably connected with his religion and that Hindus are notoriously conservative in the matter of their religious observances. Consequently, they are held free to take with them both their religion and their law wherever they go. Now it cannot be denied that if they had not migrated they would have been bound by any changes and development which that law might undergo from time to time. If so how can they be the less bound merely because

(1) Act X of 1865, S. 7.

(2) Rutchepully v. Rajender 2 M. I. A. 132; Soorendranath v. Heeramonee, 12 M. I. A. 81 (92); Perbati v. Jagdis Chunder, 29 C. 493 (451) P. C.; Otium Chunder v. Janardum, W. R. (F. B.) 67 (68); Kocmiā Chunder v. Setakanth, ib., 75 (76); Lukkea v. Gungabobind, 8 W. R. 56; Pirtheesingh v. Sheo Soonduree, 8 W. R. 261; Huro Pershad v. Shilo Shunkuree, 18 W. R. 47; Sonatum v. Ruttum, ib., 95; Govind v. Radha, 81 A 477 (479); Murli Das v. Manicka, 5 M. L. T

181; Ambabai v. Govind, 28 B 257; Jagannath v. Narayan, 31 B 558 (557, 558); Vasudeva v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (161, 162); Mallathi v. Subbaraya, 24 M. 650; Bhagbati Sohodra, 18 C. W. N. 884; 18 I. C. 691; Kulada Prasad v. Hari Prasad, 40 C 407 (416).

(3) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 468, 481 (182 P. C.)

(4) Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (162).

they have changed their domicile. Moreover, the rule assumes a continuous connection with the place of origin in spite of the change of domicile. Moreover, the change may be a mere correction of an erroneous view of law ; or it may be the revival of an old custom. So where in a case of migration proved to have taken place before the composition of Mayukh, their Lordships referring to that work, said : " Although the migration of the Ahban Thakurs took place before the Mayukh was written it may well be that the rule was in force in earlier times and that on this point the Mayukh only embodied and defined a pre-existing custom." (1) While a person is entitled to his personal law, he cannot simultaneously have two such distinct and inconsistent laws, for example, one governing his rights in respect of property taken by him from paternal ancestors, and the other in respect of properties received by him from maternal ancestors. (2) The lex loci as set out in S. (3) governs a person whose place of origin is unknown. (8)

335. Principle.—Ordinarily, all persons living in any locality are subject to the law there in force. (4) And as regards immovable property, the general rule is that it is subject to the lex rei situ. (5) But inasmuch as Hindus are now declared by law to be bound by their own personal laws, (6) it follows that they are equally entitled to be judged by those laws wherever they may be living. This is of some consequence as Hindus are to be found scattered all over India and if their laws were to be altered by each movement of their domicile or in accordance with the rule of rei situ, then they might be subjected to a variety of rules as divergent as the schools of Hindu Law. Moreover, that rule only applies to countries which possess a more or less uniform territorial law. Such laws now exist in this country, and so far as they are applicable, they apply to the exclusion of Hindu Law (§177) They, however, still leave Hindu Law intact on several subjects here dealt with ; and on those the rules here prescribed, hold good. But since the statutes reserving this law only extend to India, a Hindu migrating beyond the shores of India, e.g., to Africa, England or elsewhere cannot carry his personal law with him, but would be bound by the lex loci prevailing in the land of his domicile. But a Hindu migrating from foreign territory to India is entitled to carry his personal law with him. (7)

336. Personal law when applicable.—This section lays down a rule in consonance with the unanimously accepted view of the courts (§ 332). It declares that a Hindu is primarily governed by the law of his origin. Such law is set out in S. (3). Consequently, persons who have long lived rooted to the soil of any province and speak the language and follow the customs there prevalent, are governed by the lex loci. But in the case of migrating families who leave the place of their origin to settle down in another place where the prevalent law is different, the rule is that their own personal law follows them on migration. But this is merely a presumption and may be rebutted by proving that the family had by its adoption of the customs and usages of its domicile, declared its intention to abandon its law of origin and follow that of the domicile. (8) But the mere adoption of local customs, festivals and

(1) Chandika v Muna Kunwar, 24 A. 278, (1900) P.C.

(2) Bhagabati v. Sohodra, 16 C. W. N. 884 ; 18 I. C. 691.

(8) Ram Das v. Chandra, 20 C. 409 (412).

(4) Lalla Mahabir v. Mt. Kundun, 8 W. R. 116 (118, 119).

(5) Nobin Chander v Janardhan, W. R. (F. B.) 67.

(6) Government of India Act, 1915, S. 112 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 61) and the statutes previously cited.

(7) Mailathi v. Subbaraya, 24 M. 650.

(8) Byjnath v. Kopilmon, 24 W. R. 95 (96).

ceremonies of the people around is not sufficient to displace this presumption. (1) The real test is whether the family has continued to adhere to the essential ceremonies of its place of origin, such as those performed at the time of birth, marriage and death, (2) especially the last which Hindu Law regards as the most important. (3)

337. Law of Domicile when applicable.—It has been stated before that a Hindu is only presumably bound by the law of origin and that that presumption is rebuttable and may be rebutted by proof of adoption of the law of domicile in essential ceremonies, such as those attending birth, marriage and death. The question in each case is one of fact. Where a family originally subject to the Mithila Law, migrated to Bengal and had for several generations intermarried with Bengal women, though the rites and ceremonies connected with funerals and marriages had been sometimes performed according to the Bengal Shastras, the court held the fact of intermarriages sufficient to justify the application of the law of domicile. (4) But the converse proposition does not necessarily hold good, since a family may have for generations become merged in the local population and yet it may not be permitted to intermarry with the people of that locality; but if in such case the law of succession be in accordance with the lex loci then the court would presume that the family had abandoned its law of origin and adopted that of domicile. (5) But this statement requires to be qualified. The fact that a Hindu is entitled to carry with him his communal law depends upon the fact that in spite of the change of domicile he still remains a member of his community and attached to his original home. He visits it on the occasions of birth, marriages and funeral obsequies and it would be strange if he were bound by one law, his wife by another and his children by its latest development. Moreover, in such a case a preliminary enquiry into the period of migration and the state of the law then current would be almost a necessary prelude to every such litigation. Fortunately, as the old fiction of interpretation still obtains and as interpretation of law is not its alteration, it follows that Hindus are entitled to insist upon administration of their personal law with all its latest "interpretations".

3. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary

Lex Loci.

the natives of each of the following provinces are governed by the schools of law noted against them:—

- i. Bengal and Assam ... Dayabhag, supplemented by the Mitakshara.
- ii. United and Central Provinces ... Mitakshara.
- iii. Mithila ... Mitakshara, supplemented by Vivadchintamani and Vidvadratanakar.
- iv. Bombay Presidency, Berar and Guzerat Mitakshara, modified by the Mayukh.

(1) Huro Pershad v. Shibo Shunkuree, 13 W. R. 47.

(2) Koomud Chunder v. Seetakanth, W. R. (F. B.) 75 (76); Login v. Princes Gouramm, 11 J. (O. S.) 109; Pudmavati v. Doolar Singh, 4 M. I. A. 259

(3) Ram Bromo v. Kaminee, 6 W. R. 295

(296).

(4) Raj Chunder v. Gocul Chand, 6 I.D (O.S) 42; (1801) 1 Sel. R. S. D. A (Macnaghten) 48; Koomud Chunder v. Seetakanth, W. R. (F. B.) 75 (76)

(5) Chundro Sekhur v. Nobin Soondur, 2 W. R. 197.

- v. Madras Presidency ... Mitakshara modified by (1) Smriti Chandrika, (2) Parasar Madhav, (3) Virmitroday.
- vi. The Punjab ... Customary law supplemented by the Mitakshara.

Synopsis.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| (1) Lex Loci (338).                       | (5) Law in the U. P. and the C. P. (342). |
| (2) Law on migration (339).               |  |
| (3) Law in Bengal, Behar and Assam (340). | (6) Law in Mithila (343).                 |
| (4) Law in Bombay and Guzerat (341).      | (7) Law in Madras (344).                  |
|  | (8) Law in Punjab (345).                  |

338. Analogous Law.—The general history of the Hindu schools has already been given (§§ 255 257). Strictly speaking, there is no lex loci in Hindu Law, since the existence of a lex loci is inconsistent with the existence of personal communal law.

Lex Loci.

Take for instance, the case of Calcutta. The Bengali Hindus resident there are governed by the Dayabhaga not because they are residents of Calcutta but because they are Bengali Hindus and as such they would be so governed whether they were resident in Calcutta or Cawnpur. <sup>(1)</sup> Similarly, the Marwadi Hindus from Rajputana would be governed by their personal law whether it is the Mitakshara or custom, and the Sikh from the Punjab would similarly follow his ancestral customs. But while with the heterogenous population of an Indian town it is not safe to premise that any people resident therein are subject to any particular school of law, still there is the lex loci in the sense that the indigenous natives of a particular place are presumably subject to the school of law which has by common consent been held to bind that locality.

339. Though strictly speaking, there is no such thing as lex loci, as regards the personal law applicable to any community, the courts administer the personal law obtaining in any locality to a Hindu living there unless there is evidence to show that he has adopted any other law or custom. <sup>(2)</sup>

A family, migrating from Guzerat where the Mayukh prevails, to Madras where the Mitakshara is supreme, will be presumed to continue to be bound by the Mayukh.

340. Books of Local Authority.—The Bengal school, also known as the Gauriya school, dominates the Bengali speaking provinces of Bengal and Assam in both of which provinces the primary the authority is that of Dayabhaga. <sup>(3)</sup> The Mitakshara is treated there with respect but it holds only a secondary place merely supplementing the Dayabhag together with its commentaries <sup>(4)</sup> upon

(1) Kulada v Hari, 40 C 407; contra a general statement in Bhadia v Bhaji, 10 N. L. R. 84 is unsound.

(2) Ramdas v Chundra, 20 C. 409; But see Murle Das v. Manick 5 M. L. T. 181.

(3) Uma Sunker v. Kali, 8 C. 256 (268); Abhai Churn v. Mangal 19 C. 631 (638); Basanta v. Jogendra 33 C. 371 (375).

(4) The leading commentaries are by

Srinath Acharya Chudamani; Achyuta Chakravarti; Raghunandan, Maheshwar and Shri Krishna (1700 A. D.) of which Raghunandan's ranks highest Ramnath v. Durga, 4 C. 550 (554); Ramanand v. Raj Kishore 22 347 (351); Shri Krishna also ranks high—Raj Kishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 (39); Hari Dayal v. Gresh Chunder, 17 C. 911 (914); Ramananda v. Rai Kishore, 22 C. 347 (353).

points upon which they are silent. (1) Of these the two following are considered as commentaries of great authority :—

- (1) Dayatatwa by Raghunandan (2);
- (2) Daya-krama-sangrah by Sri Krishna. (8)

The two works on adoption—

- (3) The Dattak-mimansa, and
- (4) The Dattak-chandrika are equally considered as works of highest authority in Bengal, (4) but in case of conflict the Chandrika is preferred to the Mimamsa. (5)

341. The preferential position accorded to the Dayabhag in Bengal is accorded to the Mayukh in Bombay, Berar and Guzerat, though with this qualification that the two works should be sought to be reconciled as far as possible, and the Mayukh view only accepted where such reconciliation is impossible or the Mitakshara is silent. This appears to be the prevailing view (6) though in the earlier cases the Mayukh was assigned only a second place, the Mitakshara being regarded as paramount. (7)

342. The authority of the Mitakshara (§§ 141-150) is paramount in the United (8) and the Central Provinces. (9) Other works governing the same school are :—

(1) Vir-mitrodai—a work of special authority. (10) It is a collection of notes concisely elucidating the obscure passages of the Mitakshara. (11)

(2) Subodhini—by Visheshwar Bhatt, author of Madan-parijat, an authority in Mithila. Subodhini is only a collection of notes explanatory of obscure passages in the Mitakshara.

(3) Madan-parijat.

(4) Keshav-vaijyanti.

(1) Bhugwandeon v. Myna Bai, 11 M. I. A. 488 (507, 508); Collector of Ramnad v. Mooltoo Ramalinga 12 M. I. A. 397 (435)

(2) Ramananda v. Rai Kishore 22 C. 347 (351)

(3) Raj Kishore v. Gobind 1 C. 27 (39).

(4) Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards 8 C. 302 (311) P. C.; Puddo Kumari v. Jugut Kishore 5 C. 616; Uma Sunkar v. Kali, 6 C. 256.

(5) Collector of Madura v. Mooltoo Ramalinga 12 M. I. A. 397 (437).

(6) Collector of Madura v. Mottco Ramalinga 12 M. I. A. 397 (438); Vinayak v. Lakshmi-bai 1 B. H. C. R. 117 (123) approved O. A. Vinayak v. Lakshmi-bai 9 M. I. A. 516 (536, 537); Bhagwanden v. Myna Bai 11 M. I. A. 487 (508); Krishnaji v. Pandurang 12 B. H. C. R. 65; Rahi v. Govind 1 B. 97 (106); Bhagirath v. Kanujirav 11 B. 285 (295) F. B. in which West J. explains the reasons for the ascendancy of the Mayukh; Gojabai v. Shahajirao, 17 B. 114 (118); Bai Kesser Bai v. Hunsraj, 80 B. 431 (442); Tukaram v. Narayan, 86 B. 889 (897); Basanta v. Jagendra, 88 C. 371 (375); Narayana-swamy v. Kuppasami, 11 M. 48 (48)

(7) Vallabh Ram v. Bai Hariganga, 4 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 135 (138); Narayan v. Nana 7 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 158 (166, 167); Rakmabai v. Radhabai v. 5 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 181 (185); Bachha Jha v. Jugmon Jha 12 C. 348 (355); Balkrishna v. Lakshman 14 B. 605 (612).

(8) Bhyah Ram v. Bhyahugur 13 M. I. A. 373 (390); Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu 22 M. 398 (410) P. C.; Bachira Ju v. Venkatappadu. 2 M. H. C. R. 402 (406); Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal 12 A. 328 (335); Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 17 A. 294 (347); Debi Sahai v. Sheo Shankar Jai 22 A. 858 (856).

(9) Jagannath v. Ranjit Singh, 25 C. 254 (266).

(10) Collector of Madura v. Mooltoo Ramalinga 12 M. I. A. 397 (438); Girdhari Lal v. Bengal Government Ib. 448 (466); Mineram v. Kerry Kolitany 5 C. 776 (786) P. C.; Bachha v. Jugmon 12 C. 348 (353, 35). Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath Ib. 375 (381); Joglambda v. Secretary of State 16 C. 367 (374); Abhal Churan v. Mangal Jana 19 C. 684 (698); Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal 12 A. 328 (340, 341)

(11) Cole. Preface to Mitak. p. VIII.

(5) Balam Bhatt Tika—work by a Brahmin Lady named Laxmi Devi, (§ 144) overstrains the text to favour the rights of women. (1) In other respects neither this commentary nor the Vaijyanti can equal the Virmitrodai. (2)

(6) Vaijyanti—See Balam Bhatt.

(7) Vyvhar-madhav.

(8) Kalpataru.

(9) Vivad-tandav—author Kamlakar—contemporary of Nilkanth and said to be his cousin—deals only with inheritance and followed, if “his work is not in conflict with any higher authority.”

(10) Visheshwar—author of the Tika on Mitakshara.

343. As previously observed, except the Bengal, Eastern or Gauriya School whose text book is the Dayabhog, and the Mitakshara Mithila. school which favours the Mayukh, the rest of India is subject to the Mitakshara and its sub-schools of which the Mithila school its nearest neighbour, is least dissentient. The country comprised in the ancient Mithila is variously described, some holding it to correspond to the whole of modern Behar (8) while others hold it to comprise only North Behar including Tirhoot (4) and Purneah. (5) According to Messrs. Golap Shastri and D. Chatterjee translators of the Vivad Ratnakar the province of Mithila is that territory which lies between the rivers Gandak and the Coosee. (6) Whatever may be the exact boundaries of Mithila, it was at one time the seat of great literary activity. Yajnavalkya the author of the Institutes annotated in the Mitakshara lived and taught here; and it still boasts of a distinct sub-school which has been prolific in the production of treatises which, though professedly commentaries on the Mitakshara, do not fail to introduce small local variations under the license of interpretation. But the Mitakshara remains there as the paramount authority, the following works being regarded as merely supplementing it and as such entitled only to local preference:—

(1) Vivad-ratnakar—composed by or under the superintendence of Chandeshwar. Leading text-book of the school.

(2) Vivad-chintamani—by Vachaspati Misra is also a leading text-book. (7) It follows the Ratnakar.

(3) Vivad-chandra—By Misaru Misra—holds a high place. (8)

(4) Krito-kalpadruma.

(1) Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328 (368); Ananda v. Nounit Lal, 9 C. 315 (324); Jogdamba v. Secretary of State, 16 C. 367 (373); Dwarka v. Sarat Chandra 39 C. 319 (336).

(2) Ananda v. Nounit Lal, 9 C. 315 (324).

(3) Tagore's Preface to Vivad Chintamani, p. XXVII.

(4) Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M. I. A. 139 (175); Bhagwandeem v. Myna Bai, 11 M. I. A. 487 (507).

(5) Rutheputty v. Rajunder, 2 M. I. A. 132 (155).

(6) Babu Golap Shastri in his Law of Adoption treats Mithila as co-extensive with Tirhoot (2nd Ed.), 92

(7) Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M. I. A. 139 (174, 175); Dhendru v. Jagannath 1 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 47 (49); Behwan Singh v. Rani Ksnori 20 A. 267 (290) P. C.; Damodar v. Senabutty 8 C. 537 (541); Birajun v. Luchmi Narain, 10 C. 392 (399); Bachha v. Jugmon 12 C. 348 (351); Sunimani v. Mullanmal 8 M. 265 (268); Mari v. Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (113).

(8) Rutheputty v. Rajunder, 2 M. I. A. 132 (156).

(5) Madan-parijat—written by Visheswar Madan Upadhaya—better known as the author of Subodhini.

(6) Dwaita-parishishtah—By Keshav Misra.

(7) Smriti-sar.

(8) Smriti-samuchai.

} —By Hari Nath Upadhaya.

But though these are all text-books of this school, in case of conflict between any of them, the Mitakshara alone is regarded as the final guide. <sup>(1)</sup>

344. In the Madras Presidency <sup>(2)</sup> the supreme authority of the Mitakshara, though unshaken, <sup>(3)</sup> is supplemented by the following works:—

(1) The Smriti-chandrika—ranks highest after the Mitakshara <sup>(4)</sup> though it cannot override its explicit provisions. <sup>(5)</sup>

(2) Vir-mitrodai.

(3) Subodhini.

(4) Saraswati-vilas.—of some authority in Madras. <sup>(6)</sup>

(5) Parasar-madhaviyam—written by Narainswamy—especially esteemed in the Canara District. <sup>(7)</sup>

(6) Vyavhar-nirnai.

(7) Vaithinath Dikshatiyam.

345. In the Punjab, in all questions relating to adoption, guardianship, succession, women's property and female relations such as betrothal, dower, marriage, divorce and bastardy, family relations, partitions, gifts, wills and legacies, religious usages and the rights of alluvion and diluvion, the first rule of decision is custom <sup>(8)</sup> which is recorded in the Riwayat-i-Am prepared by the settlement officers charged with this duty. <sup>(9)</sup> But in the absence of ascertained custom, the Punjabi Hindus are governed by the Mitakshara, though the scope for its applicability is much limited by the considerable body of customary law which has become crystallized into well ascertained rules.

(1) Bachha v Jugmon 12 C. 348 (366).

(2) Various called the Peninsula, the Dravida District or the southern school.

(3) Collector of Masulipatam v Cavalry, 8 M. I. A. 500 (522); Katama Nachiar v Srimut Raja Mootoo, 9 M. I. A. 539 (606, 607); Nagalinga v. Subhiramaniya, 1 M. H. C. R. 77 (80); Srinivasa v. Kuppan, 1 M. H. C. R. 180 (192); Bachiraju v. Venkatappadu, 2 M. H. C. R. 402 (403).

(4) Bhagwandeon v Myna Bae, 11 M. I. A. 487 (508); Collector of Madura v. Muthu Ramalinga, 2 M. H. C. R. 206 (219); O. A. 12 M. I. A. 897, 487; Kissen v Javallah, 8 M. H. C. R. 346 (351); Gajapathi v. Gajapathi, 1 M. 290 (299) P. C.; Muttu v. Dora Singha, 8 M. 290 (302) P. C.; Mari v Chinnammal, 8 M. 107 (128); Subramania v. Muthuswamy 21 M. L. J. 556 (561); Appandai v Bagubali, 33 M. 489 (441).

(5) Summani v. Mullammal, 8 M. 265 (269); Muthappanarayan v Ammani, 21 M. 58 (62); Rau Gramony v. Amari 29 M. 859 (360); Chinnasami v. Kunju, 25 M. 152 (159).

(6) Kattama v. Deraswamy, 6 M. H. C. R. 310, 333; Jijyamb v. K. Makshi, 8 M. H. C. R. 424 (452); Appandai v Bagubali, 33 M. 489 (441); Chinnasami v. Kunju, 25 M. 152 (159).

(7) Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga 2 M. H. C. R. 206 (220); O. A. 12 M. I. A. 897; Bhagwandeon v. Myna Bae 11 M. I. A. 488 (508).

(8) S. 2, Reg. XI of 1825; S. 5, Punjab Laws Act (Act IV of 1872); Krishna Singh v. Nur Din (1917) P. W. R. 156; 42 I. C. 198; Rattigan's Dig. Civil Law Punjab, pp. 1-4.

(9) Beg v. Alla Ditta, 44 C. 749 P. C.

CHAPTER II.

CUSTOMARY LAW.

Custom defined.

4. Custom is an established practice at variance with the general law.

Synopsis.

- (1) Custom in Hindu Law (348). (2) Its place in other systems (349).

346. Analogous Law.—The definition in this section is taken from the undernoted case. (1) The following text from Manu (2) shows the place of custom in Hindu Law :—

108. Immemorial custom is transcendent law, approved in the sacred scripture, and in the codes of divine legislators; let every man, therefore, of the three principal classes, who has a due reverence for the supreme spirit which dwells in him, diligently and constantly observe immemorial custom.

109. A man of the priestly, military, or commercial class, who deviates from immemorial usage, tastes not the fruit of the Veda; but, by an exact observance of it, he gathers the fruit in perfection.

110. Thus have holy sages, well knowing that law is grounded on immemorial custom, embraced, as the root of all pious good usages long established.

347. Colebrooke in his Digest (3) extracts the following quotations :—

78. A decision must not be made solely by having recourse to the letter of written codes; since, if no decision were made according to the reason of the law, or according to immemorial usage (for the word Yukti (4) admits both the senses), there might be a failure of justice. (5)

98. A man should not neglect the approved customs of districts, the equitable rules of his family, or the particular laws of his race. (6)

99. In whatever country, whatever usage has passed through successive generations, let not a man there disregard it; such usage is law in that country.

Other sages have similarly emphasized the sanctity of custom. (7)

348. It is thus clear that Hindu Law which is itself founded on immemorial customs, naturally assigns a high place to communal customs and usages. This is recognized by the Courts. So the Privy Council in one case said, " Their Lordships are fully sensible of the importance and justice of giving effect to long-established usages existing in particular districts and families in India but it is of the essence of special usages, modifying the ordinary law of succession, that they should be ancient and invariable, and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence ". (8)

(1) Harpershad v. Sheo Dayal, 26 W. R. 55 (70) P. C.

(2) Manu, Ch. 1 Ss. 108-110 See also Ib., Ch. VII. S. 208, Ch. VIII, Ss. 41, 46.

(3) 1 Dig., pp. 187, 162.

(4) " Ratiocination "

(5) Vrihaspati cited in the Vyvhar Tatwa.

(6) Waman Puran, cited by Vachaspati and Raghunandan.

(7) Yajurvedika ii S. 4, 6; (Mandlik's trans) p. 198; Brihaspati 38 S. B. E. pp. 262, 287; Mitakshara Ch. 1 S. 1-25 1-ii 1, S. 2; Narad Intr. S. 40; Gautam Ch. XI S. 20 (S. B. E. II, p. 237); Vashishth Ch. S. 1-10 (S. B. E., XIV, p. 2) Baudhayan (S. B. E. XXIX, pp. 147, 167); Saraswati Vilas (Foulkes Tr.) pp. 16, 99, 100 (Vir Mitroday Ch. ii, p. ii S. 19) Sarkar's Tr., p. 127.

(8) Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I. A. 570 (585).

(In this and other cases) the courts have used the two terms "custom" and "usage" as interchangeable; but they are clearly distinguishable on the grounds stated in the sections, and apparent from the following descriptions given of them by the same high tribunal.

349. The rule that custom overrides the law is not merely a rule of Hindu Law, but is equally the rule in England and America and Custom in other even in countries possessing the advantage of codified laws. laws. In England several attempts have been made to define custom but most of these definitions describe it rather by its effect than by its essential attributes.

The following are some of the best examples :—

"A custom...is, in effect, the common law within that place to which it extends, although contrary to the general law of the realm" Per Tindal, C. J. (1)

"A custom is a particular rule which has existed either actually or presumptively from time immemorial, and has obtained the force of law in a particular locality". (2)

"It is a just non scripta and made by the people in respect of the place where the custom obtains "

Custom may be defined to be a law or right not written, which being established by long use and consent of our ancestors has been and daily is in practice". (3)

A custom which extends to the whole country or embraces every member of the public ceases to be a custom, but passes into the common law of the land. (4)

There is as much confusion in the indiscriminate use of the two terms "custom" and "usage" in England as there is in this country. (5) Ordinarily, the term "usage" lacks three of the distinguishing features of custom properly so called: (i) it need not have existed from time immemorial; (ii) it need not be local; (iii) it cannot override the positive law. But on close examination none of these tests would stand scrutiny; since the first two are not exclusive and the last is equally applicable to custom.

The real distinction is stated in the definition and when the two terms are not interchangeably used, as they very often are, those appear to be the leading attributes of usage. This term is however frequently used to denote a local custom. (6) It is used in this sense in the Evidence Act. (7) It will however, be used in this code in the definite sense assigned to it in the section.

In the ethnological development of law usage usually precedes custom. Many customs have so developed; and sometimes the custom of a particular community remains no more than a usage of another.

Nature of Custom 5. (1) A custom varying the general law may be a general, local, tribal or family custom.

Explanation 1.—A general custom includes a custom common to any considerable class of persons. (8)

(1) Lockwood v. Wood (1844) 6 Q. B. 50 (64) adopted per Jessel M. R. in Hamonorton v. Honey (1876) 24 W. R. 608.

(2) Tenistry case (1698) Dav. Ir. 29 (81, 82).

(3) Termes De la Ley. sub voce

(4) Co.-Litt. 110b; Coventry (Earl) v. Willes (1868) W. R. 127; Gifford v. Yar- borough (Lord) 5 Bing. 168 (164).

(5) 10 Halsbury's L. E. 7th Custom, S. 422, p. 221.

(6) The term "usage" is so used in S. 28. Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885); Sati Prasad (Raja) v. Manmatha, 6 I. C. 291.

(7) Cf. Ss. 48, 49, Act I of 1872.

(8) Ib., S. 48 Exp.

Explanation 2.—A custom which is applicable to a locality, tribe, sect or a family is called a special custom.

Synopsis.

- (1) Varieties of custom (350, 351). (3) Family customs (354).
 (2) Local customs (352). (4) Primogeniture (355, 356).

350. Analogous Law.—Custom has been defined as some established practice at variance with the general law. <sup>(1)</sup> Now such practice may be universal <sup>(2)</sup> or confined to a particular people <sup>(3)</sup> or locality, <sup>(4)</sup> or again, it may even be confined to a particular family. <sup>(5)</sup>

351. A universal custom is the common law of the people, <sup>(6)</sup> and is soon transformed into the statute law, for its universality is itself a guarantee of its popularity and what is popularly done is the common law of the people. Such may be said to be the custom of polygamy prevalent amongst the Hindus.

The existence of a general custom as distinct from law is, however, possible and is assumed in the Evidence Act <sup>(7)</sup> where it is thus described :—

“ The expression general custom or right includes customs or rights common to any considerable class of persons.” <sup>(8)</sup>

352. A local custom is a custom confined to a particular locality. Such is, for instance, the custom of observing no caste in the matter of eating and drinking, in Jagannath, the custom of pre-emption and such is the custom of polyandry which is confined to Malabar. The custom of intercaste marriages was pleaded in a case from Gorakhpur in which one Bhikh Raja Brahmin had married a Kshatriya lady by whom he had an issue. The legitimacy of the latter was disputed, but he pleaded the validity of his parent's marriage with reference to custom which permitted such marriages in their native country of Nepal. The court however found that the family was not indigenous Nepalese though they had been long resident in Nepal and there was nothing to show that they had adopted that custom or carried it with them to their new domicile. <sup>(9)</sup> This is then an example of a custom which, though once general, latterly became confined only to one locality. The Punjab is full of such local customs.

353. A tribal custom is a custom confined to a particular tribe, caste or community. Such was the custom proved in the case of an Agarwal Bania of Zira in the Ferozpur District amongst whom an unequivocal declaration of adoption followed by subsequent treatment of the adoptee as a son was held to constitute a valid adoption. <sup>(10)</sup> So while adoption is not recognized by the Mahomedan law it is customary amongst the village community of Ramsar. <sup>(11)</sup> So amongst the Bajwa Jats of the Sialkot District a person adopted into another family does not thereby forfeit his right to succeed in his natural family as against collaterals. <sup>(12)</sup>

(1) S. 4.

(2) General Intr. § 4-6.

(3) Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 Mad 157; Padam v. Suraj, 28 A. 458.

(4) A local custom is called a Deshachar.

(5) Which is then called Kulachar; Urjun Singh v. Ghunsiam, 5 M I A 169; Gunesh v. Moheshur, 6 M I A. 164; Soorendro Nath v. Heeramonee, 12 M.I.A. 81 (92); Chintamun v. Nowlukho, 1 C 168 P.C.; Nanaji v. Sundrabai, 11 B. H. C. R. 249 (269, 270).

(6) Co. Litt. 110 b.

(7) S. 48.

(8) Ib. Expl.

(9) Padam Kumari v. Suraj Kumari, 28 A. 458 (461)

(10) Chiman Lal v. Hori Chand, 40 C. 879 P. C.

(11) Abdulla v. Sunda, 11 I. C. 70; Niama v. Nura (1911) P. W. R. 95; 10 I. C. 388.

(12) Jiwan v. Dil (1912) P. R. 49.

So as regards marriage, intercaste marriages are customary in the Punjab.

354. Family Custom.—A Kulachar or family custom is a custom the existence of which is confined to a single family. Such a custom may relate to impartibility <sup>(1)</sup> or inalienability <sup>(2)</sup> of its property or succession to it by a special mode of devolution, e.g., by primogeniture <sup>(3)</sup> or other special mode of descent. <sup>(4)</sup> At one time the validity of such a custom was doubted on the ground that the Privy Council had in a case incidently remarked that, in their opinion, there does not exist in any persons the power of making laws of inheritance for themselves. <sup>(5)</sup> But whatever doubt there may have been on the subject, there can be no longer any doubt about their validity, and the Privy Council have themselves upheld such customs in several cases, though like all customs and even more than all customs, they must be strictly and sufficiently proved. <sup>(6)</sup> The fact that they are recorded in the Wajibularz is not sufficient, since it often connotes merely the personal views of those who would like to see the practice prevailing rather than the ascertained fact of a well established custom <sup>(7)</sup> as distinct from a mere arrangement for peace or convenience made or acquiesced in by the family. <sup>(8)</sup> Custom proved to exist in a family may be presumed to exist in every branch of it. <sup>(9)</sup>

355. To understand the custom of primogeniture in India we have to understand the doctrine of Feudal law of which it is a child. On the fall of the Roman Empire in the 4th, 5th and 6th century A.D. a number of barbarous tribes then inhabiting Germany overran that decipit empire which the conquering hordes parcelled out amongst their adherents on condition that they were to rally to the support of the community against hostile aggression. The terms upon which these lands were let out were at first in the nature of service grants which in later years became known as feuds—a German word—which signified a stipendiary estate the proprietas or sovereignty of which was retained by the sovereign. The interest of the feudatory or holder of the feud was at first limited to his own life. But in course of time it gradually improved in stability and acquired an hereditary character, and the feudatory imitating the example of his sovereign carved out similar subordinate estates which established the practice of sub-infeudation and these in turn created other subordinate estates leading to a continuous chain of vassals who were tied by similar

(1) Chintaman v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 P. C.; Ramrao v. Yeshwant, 10 B. 327.

(2) Sivasubramania v. Krishnammal, 18 M. 287.

(3) Shidhojirao v. Nikojirao, 10 B. H. C. R. 228; Adrishappa v. Gurushappa 4 B. 49 P. C.; Gopalrao v. Trimbakrav, 13 B. 598; Nirajpal Singh v. Jaipal Singh, 19 A. 1 P. C.; Rup Singh v. Pirbhu, 20 A. 587.

(4) Beerchunder v. Neelkissen, 1 W. R. 177; Mahendr v. Jokha Singh, 19 W. R. 211; Burjore v. Bha Gama, 10 C. 567 P. C.; Antamma v. Kaveri 7 M. 575; Narayan v. Nana, 7 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 163; Bhau v. Sundarbat 11 B. H. C. R. 249; Atmaram v. Bholagir, 1 C. P. L. R. 54.

(5) Per Frere and Holloway JJ. in, Tara-chand v. Reeb Ram 3 M. H. C. B. 54 (56 58) quoting Abraham v. Abraham, 9 M. I. A. 195; Ganesh Dul v. Mohashur Singh, 6 M. I. A.

164 followed in Madhav Rav. v. Balkrishna, 4 B. H. C. P. (A.C.) 118; Contra Per West, J. Bhaw Nanaji v. Sundarabai, 11 B. H. C. R. 249 (271).

(6) Suriya Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 5 M. 499; Basava v. Lingangauda 19 B. 428 (458); Garurudhwaj v. Suparandhwaj, 28 A. 27 P. C.; Chandika Baksh v. Mona Kunwar 24 A. 278 (281) P. C.; Anant Singh v. Durga Singh 32 A. 868 P. C.

(7) Anant Singh v. Durga Singh 32 A. 868 (873) P. C.; following Muhammad Imam Ali v. Hussain Khan 26 C. 81 (92) P. C.; Parbati v. Chandrapal, 31 A. 457 P. C.

(8) Bhaw Nanji v. Sundarabai 11 B. H. C. R. 249 where the law is discussed in detail per West. J.

(9) Lal Gajandra v. Lal Matharnath 20 C. W. N. 876; 1 Pat L. J. 109; 85 I. C. 888.

ties to their Lords. The first extension of the rights of the feudatory was permitted in the succession to the feudatory of his sons and in course of time feuds began to be so granted, and latterly the feuds began to be granted to a man and his heirs whereupon the estate became descendible to all male descendants, who alone were considered as of the feudatory's blood. (1) But this led to the weakening of the feudal union and a reaction therefore set in by limiting the succession only to one person. The necessity for this limitation was also accelerated by the creation of honorary feuds, or titles of nobility, which being indivisible could only be inherited by the eldest son; and this led in the rule of primogeniture applicable to all feuds whether territorial or titular.

The feudal system was introduced into England by William the conqueror and feuds were fully established in the eleventh and twelfth century. This same rule of convenience established a similar system in India. The military conquerors of the country, anxious to quell local disturbances promised largesses to their tenants to whom on the general conclusion of peace lands were allotted on feudal tenure. These in their turn created undertenures and so in India as in Europe, the system of feudalism grew up with its necessary modification in the law of Hindu succession. The Mogul conquerors moreover used to collect land revenue by taking a share of the actual grain heap on the threshing floor which was in later times commuted for a money payment levied on each estate or each parcel of land as the case may be. Revenue Collectors were appointed and stationed all over the country for this purpose and these were paid by grants of land which in course of time developed into hereditary tenures. Later on with the decline of the Mogul Empire and the dwindling Imperial revenues these latter were farmed out and revenue farmers came into existence. (2) Then again local officials commenced to set up a rule of their own and so in time when the British took possession of the country they found a hierarchy of officials already in possession of the soil whose rights were ascertained and mostly recognized.

356. The fact that these royal grantees, officials, farmers, squatters and hangers on had become rooted to the soil was a fact which could not be ignored by any conqueror. The fact that they were all bound by ties of fealty to the paramount power was in itself a guarantee of peace and the policy of the British Government, consequently, was and has been to recognize the status quo. After the lapse of a century or more, these principalities remain though the terms and conditions of their grant are obsolete. One relic, however, of their pristine tenure still lingers in many estates and petty principalities and it is the custom of primogeniture and the exclusion of women is similarly accounted for. Of such exceptional custom the courts require not only strict proof but precise pleading (3) and the more remote from the ordinary law the custom pleaded is, the more cogent must be the proof in support of it. As Markby, J. put it: "In order to establish a Kulachar or family custom of descent, you must at least show one of two things - either a clear, distinct, and positive tradition in the family that the Kulachar exists, or a long series of instances of anomalous inheritance from which the Kulachar may be inferred". (4) It must be proved by the best available evidence (5) which must not merely

(1) Wright Tenures 183.

(2) Maine, Early History of Institutions, p. 150.

(3) Heeranath v. Burm Narain Singh, 15 W. R. 375 (388); Serumah v. Palathan, 15

W. R. 47 P. C.

(4) Heeranath v. Burm Narain Singh, 15 W. R. 375 (388).

(5) Ib., p. 391.

consist of what the persons opine, not of what ought to be, but of what is and which they have seen in practice. It must not be merely evidence of a past tradition but of a living custom; proved not by irresponsible outsiders who have nothing to lose by their evidence but by the evidence, if possible, of relations who depose to their prejudice. (1)

The Courts look askance at customs varying the natural law, e.g., the exclusion of females from succession which is a mere relic of an ancient prejudice against the weaker sex.

Custom cannot override express law. 6. (1) Custom has the effect of modifying the general personal law, but it does not override the statute law unless it is expressly saved by it.

(2) Such custom must be ancient, uniform, certain, peaceable, continuous and compulsory.

Synopsis.

- |  |                                  |
|--|----------------------------------|
| (1) Custom and Statute law (357).       | (4) Uniform (361-364).    |
| (2) Elements of valid custom (358-359). | (5) Certain (367-369)     |
| (3) Must be ancient (360).              | (6) Peaceable (370).      |
|  | (7) Compulsory (371-372). |

357. Analogous Law.—The reason which entitles the Hindu to preserve his personal law is the reason for allowing him to retain his customs which, by their very nature, are a part of his personal law. As such, both of them are subject to the commands of the Legislature. (2) So it has been held that custom cannot override the provisions of the Limitation Act (3) and generally, no evidence of custom can be admitted in regard to matters upon which the Legislative enactments have superseded the personal law.

Again as has been already pointed out while custom has the effect of modifying the general personal law, it can do so only to the extent it is proved; over and beyond it the general law remains. (4)

358. The various attributes of a custom are thus described. It must, it is said, be ancient, immemorial, uniform, unaltered, uninterrupted, invariable, constant and continuous, certain, definite and notorious, peaceable consistent, and compulsory. In a sense a custom must possess all these elements—nay many more, it must not be unreasonable, illegal, immoral or opposed to public policy.

Of these a custom must certainly be ancient or immemorial. It must also be uniform, which implies that it must be unaltered, uninterrupted, invariable, constant and continuous all of which are merely attributes of its uniformity. So again, if it is certain it must necessarily be definite and consistent. No custom can fail to be notorious and peaceable if it is ancient, uniform and certain, from which it follows that it must be necessarily compulsory, for if one is free to follow or disregard a custom according to his whim or convenience it must necessarily cease to be uniform and certain. All these

(1) Serumah v. Palathan, 15 W. R. 47 (48) P. C.

(2) Mohanlal v. Amratlal, 8 B. 114 (177)

(3) Ib.; Tunji Orain v. Leda Orain, 1 Pat

L. J. 225; 20 C. W. N 1082; 96 I. C. 206.

(4) Neel Kisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I. A 528 (542); Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 (285) P. C.

elements of custom are, therefore, reducible to the three main heads, viz., it must be ancient, uniform and certain, but it is well to know what these terms imply. For though they are verbal variations to convey the same idea, they enlarge its meaning and tend to emphasize the nature and extent of the uniformity and certainty which is of the essence of custom.

As for the provision that custom must not be unreasonable, illegal and immoral or opposed to public policy—it rather affects its validity but is not of the essence of its constituent elements. They have, therefore, been made the subject of a separate section.

359. Elements of a valid custom.—Clause (2) sets out the necessary elements of a valid custom. A custom possessing these elements is prima facie valid, though it may be unenforceable owing to reasons set out in the next section.

Assuming however that the custom is not open to that objection, it must still possess all that this section requires. These requirements may be now considered seriatim.

360. The first essential of a valid custom is that it shall be ancient. This is necessary otherwise any person could defy the general law by setting up a special custom of his own. <sup>(1)</sup> The custom must, in theory, at least, be of an origin as ancient as the law itself to which it constitutes an exception. The courts will, from uniform modern usage, presume an indefinitely ancient usage of the like kind, in the absence of circumstances leading to a contrary inference. <sup>(2)</sup>

The rule that a custom must be ancient is equally the rule of English Law, but with this difference, that while under English Law that word has an artificial meaning as dating back from 1189 A. D., i.e., the commencement of the reign of Richard I which is regarded as the legal memory <sup>(3)</sup> there is no such fixed date to determine its antiquity in this country. <sup>(4)</sup> Even in England though the rule remains, it is in effect circumvented by a legal presumption created in its favour by a mere proof of the existence of custom as far back as living memory can go <sup>(5)</sup> which is all that is equally necessary in this country to establish its antiquity. <sup>(6)</sup> All that the law requires is that the custom must have been in existence for a time immemorial, that is to say, for a time as far back as one can remember, which again, in England has been held to be as short as 20 years <sup>(7)</sup>—a period which the Privy Council regard as sufficient even for this country upon which the Jury would, and indeed, should presume its immemorial existence <sup>(8)</sup> provided there is no evidence to the contrary. Such would be the

(1) Basantrav v. Mantappa, 1 B. H. C. R. Appx. 42 (47).

(2) Per West, J. in Bhau Nanaji v. Sundar Bai, 11 B. H. C. R. 249 (271).

(3) Chapman v. Smith (1754) 2 Ves. S. 505; as to how this date became fixed see Dalton v. Angus 6 A. C. 740 (810, 811).

(4) Kuar Sen v. Mamman 17 A. 87; Mohidin v. Shiv Lingappa 23 B. 666 (669, 670); Gopal v. Maheshri 2 A. L. J. 790.

(5) Per Cockburn C. J. in Angus v. Dalton, 8 Q. B. D. 85 (104); Trura Corporation v. Rowe [1901] 2 K. B. 870 (877); Bastard v. Smith, 2 Moo. & R. 129.

(6) Ramasami v. Sundarlingasami, 17 M. 422 (448); Doe d. Juggomohun v. Nemoo Dossee (1881) Clarke's R. 101 (118, 114); 1 I.

D. (O. S.) 358 (364).

(7) Maharaja Mahtab v. Government, 4 M. I. A. 466 (499) R. V. Jolliffe 2 B. & C. 54; Brocklebank v. Thomson [1908] 2 Ch. 344 (350) The period of 20 years is in England fixed by the Statute known as Lord Tenterden's Act as a rule of prescription which inspired a similar period in S. 15 of the Easements Act. Per Garth, C. J. in Parmeshri v. Mhd. Syed, 6 C. 608 (615).

(8) Dheeraj v. Government of Bengal, 4 M. I. A. 466 (499); Bhau Nanaji v. Sundarbai, 11 B. H. C. R. 249 (271); contra in Doe d. Juggomohun v. Nemoo Dossee (1881) Clarke's R. 101 (118, 114); 1 I. D. (O. S.) 358 (364) is no longer law.

case where the family is one of comparatively modern origin or where the practice can be traced to a recent agreement. <sup>(1)</sup> In other words, the existence of a custom for twenty years or more creates only a presumption in favour of its antiquity <sup>(2)</sup> which may be rebutted by tracing it to its recent origin. <sup>(3)</sup>

361. Uniform.—From the fact that the custom is ancient it follows that it must be uniform and not variable, definite and continuous,

(2) Uniform.

for these are the elements to establish its immemorial user. <sup>(4)</sup> If there is a discontinuance, such discontinuance destroys its stability, it being immaterial whether the discontinuance was accidental or intentional. <sup>(5)</sup> In its effect it amounts to an abandonment of the custom. <sup>(6)</sup> When it is said that the custom must be uniform what is implied is that within its circle of authority it must have been given effect to as often as there was occasion to have recourse to it. If it was followed only on occasions of convenience and ignored on other occasions then it ceases to be both a continuous and uniform custom such as the courts will give effect to.

A custom is not either uniform or continuous if its authority was challenged each time that the occasion arose for its enforcement; and it does not become uniform if as the result of compromise a right was conceded. <sup>(7)</sup>

362. This essential element of a valid custom is variously expressed. It is said that the custom should have continued as an invariable, unaltered, uninterrupted and a continuous custom. <sup>(8)</sup> All these adjectives are sometimes used to emphasise the same fact that the identity of the custom should not suffer in its passage through time. Take an example. The history of the law of primogeniture already given shows how the right owes its origin to the establishment of feudalism. Now in the development of that custom the stages were (i) the grant was a personal grant which lapsed with the grantee, (ii) it was extended to and shared by the grantee's sons, (iii) and then it descended only to his eldest son. If in this process the order were ever reversed and the grant were at times heritable by all the sons and then say in times of rebellion by only the eldest son, the custom which impresses upon the tenure its incident of peculiar succession though ancient, would not be uniform or invariable. So it is usual both in England and in this country to close all private thorough-fares once a year to prevent the public from acquiring a customary right of way. But a single discontinuance is not necessarily fatal to the establishment of custom. <sup>(9)</sup> The right of procession is a common law right, but the right to carry it along a certain route or past a certain mosque or temple is a customary right, and its existence depends upon its uninterrupted continuance and its validity is frequently put to the test by interrupting its enjoyment.

(1) Umrithnath v. Goureenath, 18 M. I. A. 542 (549, 550); Bhanu Nanaji v. Sundar Bai, 11 B. H. C. R. 249; Lurga Charan v. Raghunath, 18 C. L. J. 559 (561); Rajalakshmi v. Suryanarayana, 8 M. L. J. 100 (106).

(2) Gopal v. Hanmant, 6 B. 107 (109); Vythilinga v. Vijayathommall, 6 M. 48 (48); Mills v. Colchester Corporation, L. R. 2 C. P. 476; Mercer v. Denne [1904] 2 Ch. 584. (555)

(3) Mahamaya v. Haridas, 12 C. 455; Mills v. Colchester Corporation, L. R. 2 C. P. 476; Lockwood v. Wood, 6 Q. B. 50 (68); 10

Hals. L. E. § 425, p. 298.

(4) Saperundhwaj v. Garuradhwaj, 16 A. 147 (167); Basava v. Lingangaouda, 19 B. 438 (488)

(5) Rajkishen (Raja) v. Ramjog, 1 C. 186 (195, 196) P. O.

(6) Id. p. 12.

(7) Ramakanta v. Shamananji, 86 C. 590 (608) P. C.

(8) Jamelah v. Pagul Raim 1 W. R. 261; Ramalakshmi v. Sivanatha 14 M. I. A. 570.

(9) Sarabjit v. Indarjit, 27 A. 208.

363. A caste custom was pleaded for the Kadwa Kunbis of Ahmedabad denying the right of widows to adopt. It appeared that on two occasions widows had adopted without any protest from the caste people, and generally the custom was in a state of flux there being no evidence that the caste people forbade such adoptions or treated them as invalid, whereupon the Court refused to uphold the custom holding that a uniform and persistent usage had not moulded the life of the caste. (1)

364. A custom is not uniform if it is intermittent and not continuous. But law distinguishes the interruption of a right (2) from the interruption of its enjoyment. (3) If there is an interruption of the right, no matter for how short a period the right is extinguished, and if the right is revived it may become the starting point of a new custom, but it ceases to be the continuance of the old custom, and if the new right arose within the time of legal memory so that its commencement is known, it ceases to be an ancient custom.

365. From the fact that custom must be uniform it follows that it must be consistent. Two contradictory customs cannot exist in the same place with reference to the same people. But customs of the various tribes, castes and sects may otherwise be, in fact they sometimes are, divergent and often contradictory.

366. The third ingredient of a custom is that it shall be certain, a term which is varied in its expression by the statement that it shall be definite and constant. When it is said that a custom must be certain, what is meant is that it should be certain (i) in respect of its nature ; (ii) in respect of its locality ; and (iii) in respect of the persons whom it is alleged to affect. (4) In one sense a custom proved to be ancient must be necessarily certain, for, as Willes, C. J., observed in a case, "how can anything be said to have been time out of mind when it is not certain what it is." (5)

367. In the first place the right asserted as a customary right must be clearly defined and definitely certain. For if the right is uncertain the custom itself cannot be proved. So where a person claims the customary right to fell timber or quarry stones, earth or other minerals from the land of another the nature of the right claimed must be first defined. Every tenant has the right to graze his agricultural cattle on the village common. If, therefore, he establishes a cattle breeding farm, or maintains milch cows or buffaloes he has no right to turn them on to the common for the purpose of grazing. So again the right to carry stones means a right limited to personal use, and does not imply a right to remove them in unreasonable quantities for the purpose of sale. (6) So a right to stack coals near to certain pits was held to be too indefinite to support a customary right. (7) On the same ground the Court disallowed a custom to play "any rural sport" as too general and uncertain. (8) So in a case where the plaintiff claimed by the ordinary Hindu Law

(1) Patal Vandrayan v Patel Manilal 16 B 470

(2) Mercer v. Denne (1905) 2 Ch. 538.

(3) Seales v. Kay 11 Ad. & E. 819 (825).

(4) Per Tindal, C. J. in Tyson v. Smith 9 Ad. & El. 406 (421); Mercer v. Denne (1904) 2 Ch 584 (551) O.A. (1905) 2 Ch. 538.

(5) Broadbent v Wilks (1742) Willes 830.

(6) Blewett v. Tregonning (1885) 8 Ad & El. 554 (574)

(7) Broadbent v. Wilks (1742) Willes 860 (868) but see Carly v. Lovering (1857) 1 H & N. 784 (800).

(8) Millechamp v. Johnson (1746) Willes 205 N.

property against the defendant who claimed by the rule of primogeniture, the Privy Council found that whenever the holder of the estate died leaving more than one son, the right of the eldest son was challenged in the courts, and the litigation invariably ended in a compromise under which the younger sons obtained a share of the estate very much in excess of the maintenance to which, had the custom existed, they would have been entitled. In their Lordships' opinion, this rendered the custom uncertain and consequently invalid.<sup>(1)</sup> It is, however, submitted that the case was rather one where the custom was not peaceably enjoyed.

368. Secondly the custom must be certain as regards the locality where it is alleged to exist, for a custom which is universal in extent is no custom at all, for it then becomes the common law.<sup>(2)</sup> Its local extent must then be defined with reference to the geographical division of land, such as a province, district, town, tahsil or village, zemindari family or the like. The area affected by the custom may, however, consist of any defined space, and its boundaries may vary from time to time, provided the area is sufficiently and clearly defined at any particular moment.<sup>(3)</sup> Where a custom is proved to exist in a district it will be deemed to exist in a village comprised in the district, but not vice versa.

(b) Certain as to the locality.

369. Thirdly the custom must be certain in respect of the persons or classes

(c) Certain as to the people.

of persons to whom it is made applicable. A custom which binds an uncertain or undefined class of men or the public at large is neither certain nor enforceable and it therefore, ceases to count as a custom. So where a custom was alleged that the "poor house-holders" of a town had the right to free wood from a close, the court refused to enforce it on the ground that the term "poor house-holders" was too vague and uncertain.<sup>(4)</sup> But in another case the court upheld the right of the inhabitants of a parish to enter upon the land of another at any time in the year, to erect a maypole thereon and dance round and about it on the ground of preponderance of authorities.<sup>(5)</sup> A class is certain though its number may fluctuate; e.g., travellers, worshippers and the like. So again it is no blot on the validity of a custom if the class of persons to whom it applies is definite, though no such class exists for the time being.<sup>(6)</sup>

370. Another requirement of a valid custom is that its continuance must be uninterruptedly peaceable. In fact the binding force of

(4) Peaceable.

custom lies in the fact that for a time out of memory all affected by it have unquestionably accepted it as a binding custom. If therefore it was challenged as often as it was invoked its enjoyment was not peaceable.<sup>(7)</sup>

371. So again its enjoyment must be "as of right, and therefore neither by violence nor by stealth, nor by leave asked from time to time."<sup>(8)</sup> It is not necessary that the enjoyment should

(5) Compulsory.

be free, for a reasonable customary fee may be claimed

(1) Ramakanta v. Shamanand, 36 C. 590 (608) P. C. reversing, Shijamanand v. Ramakanta, 82 C. 6.

(2) Co-Litt. 110b.

(3) 10 Hals L.E. Tit. "Custom and usage."

§ 134, p. 280.

(4) Selby v. Robinson, 2 Term R. 758.

(5) Abbot v. Weekly (1665) 1 Lev. 176; 88 E. R. 357; Pitch v. Rawling, 2 H. B. L.

828; Hall v. Nottingham, 1 Ex. D. 1 (8); contra Bell v. Wardell Willes 202.

(6) 10 Hals. L.E. 486. 281; but the cases cited do not support the text.

(7) Ramakanta v. Shamanand 36 C. 590 (608) P. C.

(8) Per Willes, J. in Mills v. Mayor of Colchester, L. R. 2 C.P. 479 (486).

by grant, or by prescription ; but what is necessary is that the enjoyment should be because of the right and not because of the fee which is merely incidental to the custom and need not have been fixed before legal memory. (1) Where, however, the enjoyment of a right is dependent upon the payment of a fee, the court has to find whether the payment is the price of the enjoyment or is merely paid as a customary fee. If it is the former, then there can be no custom, since the enjoyment was precarious and not as of right, and the several acts of enjoyment were consequently not an uninterrupted exercise of the same right but were in the nature of independent acts lacking in continuity which is of the essence of custom. (2)

372. An act which a person may have done but which he is at liberty to stop does not support custom. So where a custom was alleged restraining widows of a certain caste from adopting but the evidence showed that there was no caste decision to that effect and that widows had adopted on two occasions without incurring any caste penalty, the Court threw out the suit refusing to uphold the custom holding that a uniform and persistent usage had not moulded the life of the caste. (3)

Invalid Custom. 7. No custom is valid if it is illegal, immoral, unreasonable or opposed to public policy.

Synopsis.

- |                                       |                                    |
|---------------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| (1) Invalid customs (373-376). | (4) Unreasonableness (381). |
| (2) Illegality (376-378).      | (5) Public policy (382).    |
| (3) Immorality (379-380).      |                                    |

373. Analogous Law.—The legislature has elsewhere recognized the general principle underlying this rule. (4) A custom is not illegal merely because it contravenes the express texts or the general principles of Hindu Law, since all Hindu Law is declaredly subject to custom (§ 247). For the same reason custom does not necessarily become illegal because of the existence of a statute on the subject unless the latter contains provisions which make the continuance of the custom necessarily illegal. Of course, the court cannot enforce an immoral custom any more than it will enforce an immoral contract inasmuch as both are destructive of society.

374. The provisions that the custom must not be unreasonable or opposed to public policy also control an English custom. (5) The reasonableness of a custom is a question of fact dependent upon its nature and the society to which it is made to apply. So Tindal, C.J. in one case observed : "Several customs which have been adjudged void in our books as unreasonable against common right, or purely against law, if their nature and liability be considered, will be found injurious to the multitude and prejudicial to the commonwealth, and to have their commencement (for the most part) by oppression and extortion of lords and great men. (6)"

(1) Ib., pp. 484, 485; Tyson v. Smith 9 Ad. and E. 406.

(2) Ellwood v. Bulluk (1844) 6 Q. B. 888.

(3) Patel Vandran v. Patel Manilal, 16

B. 470 (476).

(4) S. 28 Contract Act (IX of 1872).

(5) Co. Lit. 62 a.

(6) Tyson v. Smith, 9 Ad. & E. 406 (422).

It has been held that public policy has little force now in invalidating contracts, the question of public policy being regarded as one for the legislature rather than for the courts. But the question of custom stands on a different footing. It makes law and public policy controls all laws.

375. Principle.—The invalidating ingredients set out in this section are sometimes treated as part of the elements constituting custom. But they affect its operation rather than its formation and have, consequently, been relegated to a section of its own.

376. Invalid customs.—A custom may answer all the tests mentioned in the last section; and yet it may be invalid, because it is obnoxious to the provisions of this section, the operation of which may now be considered.

377. It is a well established principle that though a custom has the effect of

- (1) Illegal Custom. overriding law which is purely personal, it cannot prevail against a statutory law unless it is thereby saved expressly or by necessary implication. (1)

So law has swept away many customs, e.g., the practice of Sati (2) infanticide, (3) slavery, (4) beggar or forced labour, (5) human sacrifice, (6) while it has attempted to strengthen the law against the dedication of minors as dancing girls of a pagoda it being notorious that these girls are consigned to lifelong prostitution. (7) On a similar ground the court refused to recognize the adoption of a girl by a woman of the prostitute class as illegal. (8)

378. A customary cess levied on all purchases and export of cotton was held to have become illegal by reason of an Act which abolished "cesses on trades and professions of every kind" under whatever name levied. (9) So the custom that a tenancy lapsed on submersion of the land and on the tenants' failure to pay rent and that on its reappearance the landlord became entitled to possession was held to be of no avail against the express provisions of the N. W. P. Rent Act. (10) So no custom can override the provisions of the Limitation Act. (11)

379. A custom like a contract is void for immorality. The question what customs are "immoral" must be left to the conscience of the court. Morality is a necessary social convention as to which all agree up to a certain extent—but beyond it, it is a matter of opinion. This is specially so as regards the relation of the sexes. A European would regard both polygamy and polyandry as highly immoral, but both these institutions are deep rooted in the soil and though polyandry is now fast dying out polygamy is a popular oriental custom not solely confined to the Hindus. But in judging of the validity of such customs the court adapts itself as far as possible, to the standard of morality of the sect, tribe or caste to which the custom is sought to apply, remembering always that it has not only

(1) The Magistrates of Dunbar v. The Duchess of Roxburghe, 8 Cl. and Fin 335; 6 E. R. 1462; Noble v. Durell, 8 T. R. 271; 100 E. R. 569.

(2) S. 306 Indian Penal Code

(3) Ib., S. 304 A.

(4) Ib., Ss. 367, 370, 371.

(5) Ib., S. 374.

(6) Ib., S. 302.

(7) Ib., Ss. 372, 373; Sanjivi v. Jalajakshi, 21 M. 229; but see Tara Naikin v. Nana

Lakshman, 14 B. 90 (92, 93).

(8) Guddati v. Ganpati (1912) 28 M. L. J. 498 (494); Public Prosecutor v. Kannammal (1918) 18 M. L. T. 181 (184, 187, 139), contra Venku v. Mahalinga 11 M. 898.

(9) Kalyanraji v. Mofussil Co., Ltd., 15 B. 526 (531) P. C.

(10) Act XII of 1881, Ss. 18, 31, 34b, 95 (n); Kupil Rai v. Radha Prasad 5 A. 260; as to Punjab Puran v. Beja (1770) P. R. 78.

(11) Mohan Lal v. Anwar Lal, 8 B. 174.

to pay due regard to the sentiments of the community but also to the general welfare of society. Such is the custom of remarriage of a married woman without the permission of her husband on payment of a fine to the caste <sup>(1)</sup> or the custom of selling daughters <sup>(2)</sup> or of the succession of an illegitimate son by an adulterous <sup>(3)</sup> or incestuous intercourse <sup>(4)</sup> or of an association of women to enjoy a monopoly of the gains of prostitution. <sup>(5)</sup> The plaintiffs who were Dev Dasis attached to a temple sued the manager restraining him from admitting two other Dev Dasis into the temple without their consent. In short, they claimed a monopoly of the right which the court refused to grant them on the ground that it was immoral. <sup>(6)</sup>

A custom which attributes to mere co-habitation all the legal effects of a marriage is invalid as it tends to confound concubinage with marriage. <sup>(7)</sup>

380. A custom in favour of remarriage upon desertion <sup>(8)</sup> or divorce by mutual agreement is neither immoral nor opposed to public policy. <sup>(9)</sup> So the exchange of children in marriage is neither immoral nor opposed to public policy. <sup>(10)</sup>

Not immoral.

381. A custom may not be illegal or immoral; but it may nevertheless be invalid on the ground of its unreasonableness. A custom which any honest or right minded man would deem to be unrighteous is bad as unreasonable. <sup>(11)</sup> One ground for holding a custom unreasonable is that it is injurious to the multitude and prejudicial to the commonwealth. <sup>(12)</sup> A custom for the inhabitants of several adjoining or contiguous parishes to exercise the right of recreation over land situate in one of such parishes is bad as placing an unreasonable burden upon one parish. <sup>(13)</sup> On the same principle the court refused to give effect to a custom by virtue of which all the inhabitants of a Zemindari were alleged to have a prescriptive right to fish in certain jhils of the plaintiffs. <sup>(14)</sup> So the agent cannot be heard to justify his departure from the instructions received by him from his principal on the ground of custom. Such was held to be the case of the principal who ordered his agent in Mauritius to ship to him a cargo of 500 tons of sugar. Instead of shipping it in a single vessel he shipped 400 tons in different vessels when the principal cancelled the order due to a falling market. He however, justified it on the ground that his instructions had been contravened. The shipper appealed to custom but the court held that it could not override the express instructions of the principal. <sup>(15)</sup>

(1) R. v. Karson 2 B. H. C. R. 117; Uji v. Hathi 7 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 133, Narayan v. Laving 2 B. 140, Indar v. Jewa (1890) P. R. 49. But such marriage contracted after consent and divorce would be good—Sankaralingam v. Subhan 17 M. 479, Vencatachella v. Parvatham 9 M. H. C. R. 134; Dalip v. Ganpat 8 A. 887.

(2) Kalavagunta v. Kalavagunta 32 M. 185.

(3) Rahi v. Gobinda, 1 B. 97.

(4) Datti v. Datti, 4 M. H. C. R. 204; Soundararajan v. Arunachalam, 39 M. 186.

(5) Chinna v. Tegarai, 1 Mad. 168.

(6) Pirithi Singh v. Bhola (1888) P. R. 29; Hakim v. Jagat Singh (1898) P. R. 87; Dina v. Karamchand (1899) P. R. 52, Lalchand v. Mt. Thakur Devi (1908) P. R. 49; but see Chanda Singh v. Mela (1897) P. R. 78.

(7) Chinna v. Tegarai, 1 M. 163 (170, 171).

(8) Virasangappa v. Rudrappa 8 M. 440.

(9) Sankaralingam v. Subhan, 17 M. 479; Sinammal v. Administrator General 8 M. 169.

(10) Amirchand v. Ram (1908) P. R. 50.

(11) Paxton v. Courtenay, 2 F. and F. 181.

(12) Tamistry case (1808) Davis 29 (38); Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455 (475).

(13) Edwards v. Jenkins, (1896) 1 Ch. 808.

(14) Amichmesput Singh v. Sadaulla 9 C. 698 (704) following Lord Rivers v. Adams, L. R. 9 Ex. D. 361 distg. Parbutty v. Mudho, 3 C. 276 on the ground that the persons there were ascertained.

(15) Ireland v. Livingstone, L. R. 5 Q. B. 516; Arlapa v. Narsi, 8 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 19.

A custom upheld by the courts cannot be attacked on the ground of its unreasonableness. (1)

382. A custom otherwise good may be void on the ground of public policy.

(4) Opposed to public policy.

Such is the custom recognizing the right of a person who had murdered (2) or abetted the murder of his ancestor to succeed to his estate. (3) So it is against public policy to permit trafficking in public or religious offices (4) and a custom which permitted it would be obnoxious to this rule. (5) But this does not mean that a religious office may not be transferred to a qualified person standing in the line of succession. (6) A custom is arbitrary and, therefore, unreasonable which sanctions expulsion of a man from caste without hearing him. The maxim audi alteram partem is a rule of elementary justice and applies as much to custom as it does to judicial procedure. Since law favours marriages as necessary to perpetuate the human species, any custom tending to restrain it is invalid as one opposed to public policy. Such was held to be the custom which sanctioned the levy of a marriage cess on the remarriage of widows. (7) But there can be no objection to a customary offering to a temple on marriages performed in a particular locality of a customary fee to which the village Joshi is entitled on all marriages within his jurisdiction whether his services are requisitioned or not. (8) The distinction between the two being that the one is a tax while the other is a customary offering for the maintenance of the temple from which all worshippers derived benefit. (9)

Pleading and proof of Custom

8. (1) He who relies upon custom varying the general law, must plead and prove it.

(2) Custom must be established by clear and unambiguous evidence.

Synopsis.

(1) Plea of custom (384).

(3) Proof of family custom (390).

(2) Proof of custom (385-389).

383. Analogous Law.—The first clause of this section is abundantly supported by authority, (10) and so is the second clause, (11) while the section as

(1) 10 Hals. L. E. § 429, p. 228; S. 42 Ev. A; Shimbu v. Gayachand, 16 A. 379.

(2) Shah Khanam v. Kalandhar, (1900) P. R. 74; Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano, (1906) P. R. 41.

(3) Vedamayaga v. Vedammal, 27 M. 591 but the disqualification is personal—Gangu Chandrabhagabai, 32 B. 275.

(4) Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, 1 M. 285 P. C; Kuppa Gurukul v. Dorasami, 6 M. 76; Narayana v. Ranga 15 M. 183; Mahmaya v. Haridas 42 C. 4 5 and cases cited at 470, 471.

(5) Mahamaya v. Haridas 42 C. 455.

(6) Sitaram Bhai v. Sitaram, 6 B. H. C. R. 250; Mancharam v. Pranshunk 6 B. 298; Annasami v. Ramkrishna, 24 M. 219; Nirad v. Shiddas, 81 C. 975; Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 C. 455, 471.

(7) Lala v. Hirasingsh, 2 A. 49; Madan v. Erlandi, 5 M. H. C. R. 147; Ganeta v. Khwaja Mohommad (1880) P. R. 64.

(8) Vithal v. Amant, 11 B. H. C. R. 6; Dina Nath v. Sadashiv, 3 B. 9; Raja v. Krishnabhat 232; Waman v. Balaji, 14 B. 167 (169).

(9) Madan v. Erlandi, 5 M. H. C. R. 147.

(10) S. 103 Ev. Act; Girdharee Singh v. Koolahul, 6 W. L. 1; G. Mohendra (Raja) v. Jokha Singh, 19 W. R. 211; Thakur. Titmath v. Loknath, 19 W. R. 239; Natukher v. Chowdhry Chintamun, 20 W. R. 247; Hirbai v. Gorbai, 12 B. H. C. R. 294; Rahmat Bai v. Hir Bai, 3 B. 34; Gopal v. Hanuman 8 B. 273; Adrishappa v. Gurushidappa 4 B. 494; Gossain Rambharti v. Surajbharti, 5 B. 582; Ahmedbhoi v. Cassumbhoi, 18 B. 534; Bai Baijee v. Bai Santok, 20 B. 53; Abdul Hussain v. Habibullah, (1906) P. R. 18; Gauradwaja v. Superundwaja 28 A. 37 P. C.

(11) Shidhojirav v. Naikojir, 10 B. H. C. R. 229; Rama Lakshmi v. Sivanatha 14 M. L. A. 570 (585, 586); Desai Ranchhoddas v. Rawal Nathu Bhai, 21 B. 110 (116, 117).

a whole is supported by the authority of the Privy Council. (1) Custom being a departure from the ordinary law must be both pleaded and proved, and proved by evidence which must be both clear and unambiguous.

384. Plea of Custom.—It is incumbent upon a party relying upon a custom to plead it as a part of his case. This does not mean that he should set out the evidence upon which he rests his plea. But his plea must be sufficiently specific to give his adversary notice of the custom he was relying on. (2) A party is at liberty to plead custom and the general law in the alternative. (3) But the parties are not at liberty to depart from their pleadings, nor the court at liberty to rest its decision upon facts never pleaded, (4) or upon facts only partially pleaded. So where the plaintiff launched his case with the plea that custom excluded both widows and daughters from succession, he was not allowed to hold fast to the custom which proved that daughters only were excluded. (5)

385. Proof of Custom.—The standard of proof required to establish custom is higher than what is required to determine an ordinary issue. Custom should not be decided upon a mere balance of probabilities, for in the language of the Privy Council it must be supported by "clear and unambiguous" evidence, which means evidence approximating to a certainty that the custom exists and not merely pointing to a probability of its existence. As Farwell, J., observed: "Not only ought the Court to be slow to draw an inference of fact which would defeat a right that has been exercised during so long a period as the present, unless such inference is irresistible, but it ought to presume everything possible to presume in favour of such a right." (6)

The proof must extend to all the points which constitute its necessary ingredients. Of these the most important are—(a) that it is ancient, (b) uniform, (c) certain, (d) continuous and (e) compulsory.

386. A custom will be presumed to be ancient if it is proved to have existed for a time immemorial, that is to say for at least 20 years and that its origin is unknown (§ 360). This only raises a presumption in favour of its antiquity which may be rebutted. A custom shown to have had an origin within living memory, even though existing in fact is void at law; because it lacks its prime attribute. (7) The uniformity of custom should be proved by numerous instances in which it has been invariably followed: a few instances only will not suffice to establish the custom.

387. Custom must be established by numerous instances of its conscious application. (8) A few instances only will not suffice. (9) But this rule should not be construed too strictly; for the custom may be a local one; it may be

(1) Rai Manickchand v. Madho Ram, 18 M. I. A. 1; Rama Lakshmi v. Sivanatha, 14 M. I. A. 570 (585, 586).

(2) Serumah v. Palathan, 15 W. R. 47 P. C.; Basava v. Lingangaudo, 19 B. 428.

(3) Muhammad v. Shamsunniessa, 36 A. 456 (458) distg. Muhammad Salim v. Sadal-rudain, 7 A. L. J. 660; Daya Ram v. Sohail Singh, (1908) P. R. 110; Nihala v. Bhuti, 23 I. C. (P) 418.

(4) Eshenchunder v. Samachurn, 11 M. I. A. 7 (22-25).

(5) Leathes v. Newitt, 4 Price at p. 370 cited in Desai Ranchhodass v. Rawal Nathu- bhai, 21 B. 110 (115).

(6) Mercer v. Denno, (1904) 2 Ch. 584, 558.

(7) Bl. Comm. 76; London Corporation v. Cox, L. R. 2 H. L. 289 (259).

(8) Lachaman Rai v. Akhar Khan, 1 A. 440. Sarabjit v. Inderjit, 27 A. 203. Gopal v. Hanmani, 8 B. 278; Durgacharan v. Regunath 18 C. L. J. 559 (562).

(9) Puncha v. Bindeswari, 87 I. C. (O) 980. Three instances insufficient—Bhagvandas v. Rajmal, 10 B. H. C. R. 241 (261); Desai Ranchhodass v. Rawal Nathubhai, 21 B. 110 (116, 117).

confined to a family where numerous instances may from the very nature of the case be impossible, or may be difficult to get. Oral evidence as to the existence of custom should be tested by ascertaining the grounds of the witness's opinion (1) the extent or limits of his knowledge and how far he is deposing to facts, and how far he is merely voicing his opinion, which apart from facts, is of little value. (2) When a custom is proved as generally applicable to the parties it is open to proof that certain individual members were exempt from its operation on personal grounds. (3) If it has already been pointed out that a custom of origin follows a person upon migration to his new domicile. (4) But where one relies upon the local custom of his domicile he has to prove that he had adopted it. (§ 336)

The question of custom is a mixed question of fact and law, depending as it does, upon the relevancy of evidence and the inference legally deducible therefrom. (5)

388. Proof of uniformity implies proof of the invariable application of custom whenever there was occasion for it. Uniformity implies continuity which does not, however, mean that there should be no interruption at all, provided that the interruption be in possession and not in the right (6) or that it be only temporary (7) by consent or for the sake of temporary convenience (8) or from necessity as where the subject of the right is submerged for a time and is therefore incapable of enjoyment. (9) Then again, continued custom would be deemed uniform, if it is traced to a recent date. It is not necessary that it should be proved up to date. As Lord Denman, C. J., said; "The finding of the jury that the custom had existed till 1689, was the same in effect as if they had found that it had existed till last week, unless something appeared to show that it had been legally abolished. (10)"

389. The quantum of evidence acceptable to the court depends upon the custom pleaded. Very slender evidence will suffice to establish a custom which is only a slight departure from the normal law (11) but very cogent evidence supported by unquestionable and numerous instances would be required to convince the court to make a wide departure from it. (12)

390. In this respect the court has special rules for the determination of family customs. As these customs are necessarily personal the court not only applies the most stringent tests to the evidence offered, but it is reluctant to depart from the general law unless the custom has been proved in all its bearings. The

(1) Leahman Rai v. Akhar Khan, 1 A. 440 See for an example of analysis of such evidence Basava v. Langagauda, 19 B. 428.

(2) Rahimabhai v. Hirbai, 8 B. 84 followed in Parbati v. Chandarpal, 81 A. 457 P. C.

(3) Gitabai v. Shivabakas, 5 Bom. L.R. 818.

(4) § 334; Surendra Nath v. Hiranman, 12 M.I.A. 81; Priithee Singh v. Sheo Sundures, 8 W. R. 261; Parbati v. Jagadis, 4 Bom. L. R. 865.

(5) S. 584 (b) C. P. P. 1882; S. 100 (b) C. P. C. 1908; Palaniappa v. Daivasikhamony, 40 M. 709 P.C.; Kumarappa v. Maravala, 41 M. 874 F. B. overruling Kakarla v. Venkata, 29 M. 24; Hashim Ali v. Abdul Rahman, 28 A. 698; Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahaqur, 20 A.

811; F. B.; Giraj Singh v. Hargobind, 82 A. 125; Ram Harakh v. Ishar Dat, 8 I. C. (A) 558; contra held Hureshur v. Judoonath, 10 W. R. 153; Syud Ali v. Gopal Dass, 18 W. R. 420; Burjara v. Bha Gana, 10. C. 557 P. C. is no longer the law.

(6) 1. Bl. Comm. 77.

(7) Co. Lit. 114 b; 1 Bl. Comm. 77: "An interruption of the possession for ten or twenty years will not destroy the custom: it only becomes more difficult to prove."

(8) 10 Hals. L. E. § 444, p 225.

(9) Merces v. Denno, [1904] 2 Ch. 584 O. A. [1905] 2 Ch. 588.

(10) Seales v. Key, 11 Ad. & El. 819 (825).

(11) Johnson v. Clark, [1908] 1 Ch. 308 (809).

(12) Ib,

reported cases show how rare it is for the court now to admit as family custom a practice which has not already received its imprimatur. The same remarks apply to local customs.

Proof and disproof of Custom.

9. A custom may be proved or disproved in any of the following ways :—

(1) Judgments, orders and decrees relating thereto. <sup>(1)</sup>

(2) Entries in any public document made—

(a) by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or

(b) by any other person in performance of a duty especially enjoined on him by the law of the country in which the public document is kept, <sup>(2)</sup>

(3) a published work dealing therewith, <sup>(3)</sup>

(4) any transaction by which the custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognized, asserted or denied or which was inconsistent with its existence, <sup>(4)</sup>

(5) particular instances in which the custom was claimed recognized, exercised or in which its existence was asserted, disputed or departed from <sup>(5)</sup>

(6) opinions of—

(a) persons knowing of its existence or non-existence; <sup>(6)</sup>

(b) persons likely to have known of the custom, given before any controversy as to the custom had arisen, and who are either dead or cannot be called without unreasonable expense or delay; <sup>(7)</sup>

(c) a number of persons <sup>(8)</sup>

(d) experts, <sup>(9)</sup>

(7) previous deposition of witnesses examined inter partes who cannot be called for reasons stated in clause (6) (b) <sup>(10)</sup>

(8) admissions of persons adversely affected thereby, <sup>(11)</sup>

(9) acts and conduct which make the existence or non-existence of the custom highly probable or improbable. <sup>(12)</sup>

(1) S. 42 Ev. Act

(2) Ib., S. 85

(3) Ib., S. 87; Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (411);
Vallabha v. Madusudanam, 12 M. 495 (499, 500)

(4) Ib., S. 18 (a).

(5) Ib., S. 18 (b).

(6) Ib., S. 48.

(7) Ib., S. 32 (4).

(8) Ib., S. 32, (8).

(9) Ib., S. 49

(10) Ib., S. 38.

(11) Ib., S. 21.

(12) Ib., S. 11.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Evidence of custom (391).        | (6) Actual instances (396).               |
| (2) Judgments (392).                 | (7) Opinions (397).                       |
| (3) Entries in public records (393). | (8) Admission and conduct (398-399).      |
| (4) Published works (394).           | (9) Proof of General custom (400-401).    |
| (5) Transactions (395).              | (10) Local and communal custom (402-403). |

391. Analogous Law.—This section is consolidated and condensed from certain sections of the Evidence Act dealing with the proof of custom. In order to understand its scope reference must be made to a work on that subject. It is not proposed to annotate this section with any degree of exhaustiveness, and the following paragraphs are confined to the discussion of cases bearing only on the evidence relating to Hindu customs.

392. The section permits custom to be proved by a judgment, decree or order not inter partes, in which it was recognized. But the mere production of judgments however relevant is never sufficient to prove custom <sup>(1)</sup> upon which other evidence is necessary. Even as regards its weight, much must necessarily depend upon the nature of the question, the evidence adduced and the decision given thereupon. A judgment given ex parte cannot command the same value as one given after contest, or one suffered on compromise resulting after a contest. <sup>(2)</sup>

393. An entry in a public record may suffice to establish a custom. It all depends upon the record and the entry. For instance, the Riwaj-i-am in the Punjab is a record of local tribal customs prepared by an officer deputed for that purpose. It has been consequently held to be of itself sufficient to create a presumption of the custom therein recorded. <sup>(3)</sup> But the same cannot be predicated of a wajibu'arz in the United or Central Provinces. Their value depends upon the information available to and availed of by the Settlement Officer. As the Privy Council observed: "It has been pointed out more than once at this Board that there is no class of evidence that is more likely to vary in value according to circumstances, than that of the wajib-ul-arzs <sup>(4)</sup>—and where as here, from internal evidence, it seems probable that the entries recorded connote the views of the individuals as to the practice that they would wish to see prevailing rather than the ascertained fact of a well established custom, the learned Judicial Commissioners properly attached weight to the fact that no evidence at all was forthcoming of any instances in which the alleged custom had been observed." <sup>(5)</sup> Much must in each case depend upon the nature of the duty and the inquiry which preceded the record and the care taken to ascertain the facts and eliminate therefrom preconceived ideas and opinions. For instance, records of custom prepared by officers deputed to make an ethnological survey of a locality would be necessarily entitled to greater weight than a similar record prepared by a Settlement Officer or a

(1) S. 42. Ev. A. Labh Singh v. Gurcharan, 1918 P. R. 54; 19 I. C. 731; Bai Baiji v. Bai Saniok, 20 B. 58 (57, 58); Sri Ganesh v. Keshavarav, 15 B. 625 (635); Kali Krishna v. Secretary of State, 16 C. 173; Sheo Churn v. Goodur, (1868) N. W. P. H. C. R. (188); Lachman v. Akbar, 1 A. 440; Gurdayal v. Jhandu, 10 A. 585 (586); Shimbiu v. Gayanchand, 16 A. 379; Pharnath v. Mandal

Das, 27 C. 379.

(2) Durga Devi v. Ramyan, (1911) P. R. 91.

(3) Beg v. Alladitta, 44 C. 749 P. C.

(4) Muhamad Imam Ali v. Husain Khan, 26 C. 81 (92) P. C.; Parbati v. Chandarpal, 81 A. 457 P. C.

(5) Anant Singh y. Durga Singh, 82 A. 368 (373) P. C.

Collector of folk-lore for insertion in a popular gazetteer. The admissibility of the record prepared under this clause does not depend upon the personal knowledge of the public servant or other person concerned. <sup>(1)</sup>

394. The courts freely admit into evidence published works of repute on the subject of custom. But, of course, such works must be those compiled to instruct and not merely to entertain readers. Works such as Sherring's Law of Caste, Steele's Law of Caste, and Tupper's Punjab customary law fall into the latter category and command serious attention. But there are other works which, though professedly written to portray customs, are ill-disguised epitomes of these works and of the Census Reports and the Reports of the Ethnological Survey so that the courts would rather prefer go to the originals than to their abridgements.

395. This is a very wide clause <sup>(2)</sup> and would include judgments, decrees and orders in civil, criminal <sup>(3)</sup> and revenue cases in which a custom was claimed <sup>(4)</sup> decreed <sup>(5)</sup> or disallowed <sup>(6)</sup> and in fact any business <sup>(7)</sup> or dealing in which the question of the custom was gone into.

Not only judicial and quasi-judicial records but acts, conduct and proceedings of such bodies as the caste panchayat, arbitrators and the like would be admissible under this clause. So any document bearing on the custom may be proved in evidence. For instance, receipts for payment of the customary dues, diaries and private records, account books, and memoranda, and in fact any other fact or matter which has any bearing on the question of custom.

It should be noted that while under clause (1) judgments are relevant qua judgments and as embodying judicial opinion on the subject of custom, this clause lets in not only the judgment but the entire litigation or proceeding as such i.e., not merely the judicial opinion but also the claim made and its subsequent course from its very inception. <sup>(8)</sup>

396. This is a most important clause and one upon compliance with which the courts insist upon. "The most cogent evidence of custom is not that which is afforded by the expression of opinion as to its existence, but the examination of instances in which the alleged custom has been acted upon, and by the proof afforded by judicial or revenue records or private records or receipts that the custom has been enforced." <sup>(9)</sup> The acts required for the establishment of custom must be plural, uniform and continuous. Two or three instances will not suffice where numerous instances were possible. <sup>(10)</sup> In a general custom what the court has to find is whether the custom is accepted and used

(1) Lekraj v. Mahpal, 5 C. 751 (753, 754).

(2) Dinomoni v. Brojomohini, 29 C. 187 (198) P. C.; Bhitto Kunwar v. Kesho Prasad, 19 A. 277 P. C.; Rani Ranjam v. Ram Narain, 22 C. 588 P. C.

(3) Koondoo Nath v. Dheer Chunder, 20 W. R. 815.

(4) Diamoni v. Brojo Mohini, 29 C. 187 P. C.

(5) Hanutullah v. Romonikoni, 15 C. 238; Ramasami v. Appavu, 12 M. 9.

(6) Bhaya Dirgaj v. Pande, 8 C. L. J. 521; Parbatty v. Purno Chander, 9 C. 586.

(7) Sarappalli v. Fota, (1914) M. W. N. 779; 26 I. C. 747.

(8) Gujju Lal v. Fateh Lal, 6 C. 171 (175, 185) F. B.

(9) Lachman v. Akbar, 1 A. 440; Rahimat Bai v. Hirbai, 3 B. 31; Tarchand v. Resh Ram, 3 M. H. C. R. 57; Desai Ranchoddas v. Rawal Nathubhai, 21 B. 116 (117).

(10) Gopal v. Hanmani, 3 B. 273; Sarabjit v. Indarjit, 27 A. 208; Chandika Bakshi v. Muna Kunwar, 24 A. 273 P. C.; Durga Charan v. Raghunath, 18 C. L. J. 559 (567).

by the people as their private law in preference to their general law. This can best be proved by establishing their obedience to it.

In the case of local or tribal custom the best evidence is that of the elders of the village or of the sect or tribe. People as old as can be got should be examined to prove such customs, while in the case of family customs the evidence must not only tend to show that the custom existed but that it still exists. Since the difference between this and the other customs is that while the latter cannot be materially affected by individual lapses, a family custom disclosing such lapses would fail of its effect either because these lapses would destroy its continuity or prove its abandonment. (1) But where both are otherwise satisfactorily established, the mere fact that it was not enforced in an isolated instance would not affect its validity. (2)

To establish a Kulachar or family custom of descent one at least of two things must be shown, either a clear, distinct and positive tradition in the family that the Kulachar exists (3) or a long series of instances of anomalous inheritance from which the Kulachar may be inferred. (4)

397. Opinions as a rule are inadmissible in evidence, as a witness is required to depose to facts of which he knows, and not merely of what he thinks. But this clause is an exception and it must be understood with its necessary safeguards, namely that while a witness is free to depose to his opinions, it is for the court to appraise their evidentiary value which depends not so much upon what he thinks, but upon the logic of facts upon which he bases his opinion. Opinion then, is valueless, without the grounds upon which it is based. (5) And this is true alike of an expert as of a layman witness. Both must disclose the data which the court is free to examine. (6) The opinion must not be merely the repetition of a hearsay but a reasoned conclusion drawn from facts and conduct, tradition, observation inquiry, research and study upon which a reasonable man forms his judgment. An opinion after all is only a judgment of a private person formed on materials available to him. These he must disclose so that if his judgment be wrong the court may reject it; if right, the court may follow it.

As regards the admissibility of the previous statements of persons who are not called, its admissibility is contingent upon proof of the fact that the statement was made ante litem motam (7) and its value must depend upon his credibility and the means of knowledge available to him. It is in any case insufficient of itself to prove any custom.

The statements of a crowd of persons is admissible even though the latter be alive and available as witnesses, on the ground that it is a statement of their common sentiment. (8)

398. Law attaches considerable value to the admissions of a person made (7) Admission and estoppel. against himself and in cases where evidence is conflicting, it is decisive of the case. (9)

(1) Raja Nugandur v. Raghunath, (1864) W.R. 20; Nitr Pal Singh v. Jaipal Singh, 19 A. 1 P. C.

(2) Ekradeswar Singh v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 (606) P.C.

(3) Maharani Hiranath v. Baboo Ram Narayan, 9 B. L. R. 274 (291).

(4) Sumurun Singh v. Khedun Singh, 2 Sel. Rep. (N.E.) 147.

(5) S. 51 Ev. A. Ekradeswar Singh v. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 (604, 605) P. C.

(6) Ib.

(7) Ekradeswar v. Mt. Janeshwari, 42 C. 582 P. C.

(8) Q. v. Ram Dutt, 28 W. R. (Cr.) 85 (83); Chandra Nath v. Nil Madhab, 26 C. 286.

(9) Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpal Singh, 19 A. 184 (194, 195) P. C.

- 399. On the same ground stand acts and conduct of a person which are a mere outward manifestation of his inward conviction. But (8) Acts and Conduct. the acts and conduct must be unequivocal and ordinarily, ante litem motam.

400. This section deals with the admissibility of evidence. Closely connected with the question of admissibility is the question of its value, which largely depends upon a variety of considerations, the age and status of the witnesses, their impartiality and disinterestedness, their power of observation and means of knowledge and the nature and grounds of their opinions. These are mainly questions of fact but as in the evidence of custom, the question of relevancy is so intimately blended with the question of credibility that it is not often possible to state when the facts end and the law begins. Moreover, it is not always possible to prove a custom in all the several ways enumerated in the section and a short discussion on the quantum of evidence which the courts have considered sufficient may therefore be subjoined.

401. It has been held that general customs which affect a large number of persons and are therefore in the nature of public rights may be proved by evidence of common notoriety, (1) or by the production of a judgment (2) public document, (3) treatises or other record in which the said custom was proved, and the court may even take judicial notice of such a custom (4) if it is well known (5) to save needless cost to parties. (6) So the court will take judicial notice of a custom which has been held proved in the reported cases (7) provided they are not contradictory. (8)

At any rate, formal evidence will ordinarily suffice to prove such custom. (9)

402. Evidence of the existence of the custom in the neighbourhood of the place is admissible if there is reason to believe that like
Local Custom. customs prevailed in both. (10)

403. The fact that other communities have equally exercised the right claimed by a special custom is admissible to disprove the Communal Custom. custom. (11)

10. Usage is a practice at variance with the general law, and differs from custom in that it need not possess the antiquity, uniformity or notoriety of custom, provided it is well known and
Usage defined.

(1) Taylor's Ev. Ss. 609, 620; Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. and S. 679; Crease v. Barrett, 1 O. M. and R. 919; Lord Dunraven v. Lilwellyn, 15 Q. B. 811.

(2) Freeman v. Phillips, 4 M. and S. 486; Read v. Jackson, 1 East 385; Earl De Lawarr v. Miles, 17 Oh. D. 535.

(3) Sturla v. Freccia, (1880) 5 A. C. 628; (648) Mercer v. Denno, [1905] 2 Ch. 538.

(4) 10 Hals. L. E § 448 p. 287; Rechenoweth, [1902] 2 Ch. 488.

(5) Moult v. Halliday, [1898] Q. B. 12; (125) Goodwin v. Roberts, L. R. 10 Ex. 387; O. A. 1 App. Cas. 476; Nelson v. Dahl, 12 Oh. D. 568; (575); Postlethwaite v. Freeland, 5

App. Cas. 599 (616).

(6) Per Mellish L. J. Re Mathews, ex parte, Powell, 1 Ch. D. 501 (506); Edelstein v. Schuler & Co. [1902] 2 K. B. 144, (155, 156).

(7) Per Brett, M. R. In re Parkar, ex parte Turquand 14 Q. B. D. 636 (645); Rama Row v. Raja of Pittapur, 40 M. 778 (P. C.)

(8) Per Mellish, L. J. In re Mathews ex parte Powell, 1 Ch. D. 501 (507).

(9) Johnson v. Clark, [1908] 1 Ch. 803 (803).

(10) Anglesey v. Hatherton, 10 M. & W. 218.

(11) Earl De La Earr v. Miles, 17 Ch. D. 585; Lord Rivers v. Adams, 3 Ex. D. 861.

(12) Manu, Ch. I, S. 108.

acquiesced in by the community to whom it is made applicable.<sup>(1)</sup>

Synopsis.

- (1) Distinction between usage and custom (404-405). (2) Proof of usage (406).

404. Analogous Law.—"Immemorial custom is transcendent law, approved in the sacred scripture, and in the codes of divine legislators; let every man, therefore, of the three principal classes, who has a due reverence for the supreme spirit which dwells in him, diligently and constantly observe immemorial custom. (2)" Referring to custom, the Privy Council observed in a case, "A custom is a rule which, in a particular family, or in a particular district, has from long usage obtained the force of law." (3) In another case referring to a mercantile usage they said: "To support such a ground, there needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity, or the notoriety of custom, which in respect of all these becomes a local law. The usage may be still in course of growth; it may require evidence for its support in each case; but in the result it is enough if it appear to be so well known and acquiesced in that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contract". (4)

A usage is something more than practice, but something less than custom. It is merely the habit of doing a thing in a particular way without advertence to its propriety or legality. (5) Practice may amount to no more than an individual habit, or it may be the established habit of a particular class or community. Distinguishing these two it was observed in a case: "To constitute a usage it must apply to a place rather than to a particular bank; it must be the rule of all the banks of the place or it cannot consistently be called a usage. If every bank could establish its own usage, the confusion and uncertainty would greatly exceed any local convenience resulting from the arrangement." (6)

405. It will be noticed that the definition of custom framed by the courts in the foregoing cases was with special reference to the facts of the cases before them. The section defines custom generally. The fact that it has the force of law is no part of its essential attribute; for it may be unenforceable for any of the reasons set out in the section. But it does not on that ground cease to be a custom. In point of law all customs have not necessarily the force of law, still less usages. But a custom otherwise unexceptionable has the force of modifying the general law to the extent it is applicable. (7) So the Privy Council observed: "Under the Hindu system of law clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law". (8)

For the origin and growth of customs generally, reference is invited to the General Introduction (§§ 192-198).

(1) Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchand, 7 M. I. A. 263 (282); Dalglish v. Gusuffer Hassain, 28 C. 427 (429); Sariatullah v. Pran Nath, 26 C. 184 (187).

(2) Manu Ch. I S. 108.

(3) Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W. R. 55 (70) P. C.

(4) Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchand, 7 M. I. A. 263 (282).

(5) Mirabivi v. Vajrayanna, 8 M. 464

(466).

(6) Adams v. Otterback, 16 Howard (U. S. A.) 545 cited per Curiam Mana v. Rama, 20 M. 274 (277).

(7) Neelkisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I. A. 523 (542); Sariat Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10A 272 (285) P. C.; Chhatradhari v. Saranwati, 22 C. 156.

(8) Collector of Madura v. Mookoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (486).

406. Proof of Usage.—Usage is a generic term and has a wider application as implying practice supplementing a mercantile agreement or contract, usage of the trade and country, and usages forming part of the common course of affairs.

Leaving out of account all usages, not falling within the scope of Hindu Law, the term may be confined to connote a practice of a country, caste, community, sect or tribe which is notorious and acquiesced in by them. But the term is often used to mean no more than custom, from which it is clearly distinguishable, but of which it is an essential element, since user is a test of the continuity of a custom, and its non-user furnishes evidence of its discontinuity or abandonment. (1) Notoriety does not imply knowledge of the party against whom custom is proved. All it implies is that it is generally known.

CHAPTER III.

MARRIAGE.

407. Topical Introduction.—The history of Hindu marriage has already been set out (§§ 27-32). It is the history of promiscuity to marriage. In the Mahabharat the Pandus tell their wife that at one time women consorted with men like cattle until Svetaketu son of the sage Uddalak introduced the institution of marriage. (2) But it was not marriage as we now understand it. Polyandry and Polygamy was the next stage (3) and traces of it are to be found in the Rigveda (4) which, however, was compiled when the institution of marriage had become established, and monogamy had become the rule (5) though polygamy was still customary. (6) Marriage was then compulsory. Without re-marriage a widower could not perform any sacrifice. The Vedic marriage was with adults and the wife selected her husband. (7) The sole ceremony enjoined was the grasping of the hand (8) before the sacrificial fire (9) The position of the wife was that of the chosen friend. (10) The elaborate symbolism which constitutes the Shastric marriage is a later development born of the Sutra period. (11) But even then the Grihya Sutra took care to add that "the usages of the country should be followed in marriage." (12) This was a concession to the usage which had already overlaid the ritual texts and the traditional law. For instance, Manu regarded polygamy as an exception (13) but it has become the rule. Re-marriage of wives and widows was ruthlessly reprobated but the one has become customary and the other legalized by legislation. Similarly, the Vedic age was the age of courtship and marriage but the growth of caste with its inter-caste jealousies aided by the sacerdotal puritanism established the institution of early marriages which tendency became aggravated in later ages as the doctrine received support from the popular cry "give the girl no chance to go wrong."

(1) Jenkins v. Harrey, 2 C. M. & R. 393.

(2) Mahabharat Adiparv, Ch. 122, 1, 147, p. 2.

(3) Ib. v. v. 30 35.

(4) Muir's Sanskrits, Text Vol 5, pp. 234-243 where the subject is discussed in detail.

(5) Rigveda (Max Muller's Trans.) Vol. 2 p. 609.

(6) Ib. p. 546

(7) Ib. Vol 6, p. 509.

(8) Ib. Vol. 6, p. 202.

(9) Ib. Vol. 6, p. 206.

(10) Ib. Vol. 5 p. 546 ('Sakha' i.e. friend).

(11) There were 27 principal ceremonies—Mandlik's H. L., p. 401.

(12) Grihya Sutra, 1-7, I p. 25.

(13) Manu, IX-77-83.

408. It is a trite saying that India is a continent with its vast and varied population in different stages of social evolution. Probably no other country in the world presents such sharp contrasts or such a bewildering variety of customs as the inhabitants of the Indian Peninsula. For in what other country can one find millions of people practicing celibacy and rigorous ascetism, side by side with millions who practice polygamy, some of whom on a business principle, maintaining a register of their hundred or more wives, and paying to their consorts periodical visits, finding them flourishing with a numerous growing progeny of which the husband is proud, but which he had done nothing to deserve. Where again can one find polyandry flourishing on a wholesale basis as it flourishes amongst the Todas, Kurumbas and other races inhabiting the Malabar Coast. (1) Where again can one find the laws of hospitality stretched to the point they are in Beluchistan, where the host presents his unmarried daughters to his honored guest. (2) Where again is the custom of the levirate yet as green as it ever was amongst the Jews. (3) Where again can one find premarital communism practised by the young under the patronizing care of the old. (4) Where again can one find a custom which permits the marital duties of the son to be performed by the father till the son is old enough to take care of his wife. (5) These and innumerable other marriage customs are the special feature of Hindu society. The sage idealizes marriage as a sacrament, the savage practices it as a pastime. The ideal is high—sometimes too high for human attainment. It is the reality that counts and it is with reality that law holds commerce.

409. The decennial census reports and reports of the several ethnographic surveys published by the authority of Government record a mass of information and details about the numerous local customs regarding marriage. They establish the following facts. (1)—That no generalization is possible about the marriage laws and customs. (2)—That the Shastric conception of marriage is to all intents and purposes dead. (3)—That Hindu Law permits polygamy and custom sanctions polyandry as it was at one time common amongst the Nairs and is still a veiled custom amongst them (6) while it is openly practised by the low caste people in Southern India. (4)—That widow marriage is inconsistent with the Hindu theory of sacrament, but the prohibition is confined only to the twice-born castes, and even amongst them widow re-marriages are becoming more common. (7) Where widow marriage is allowed the general rule is to give the younger brother the first refusal. (5)—Widow marriages are as a rule celebrated at night in the dark half of the month. (8) (6)—As a rule, marriage is by purchase. The high castes ordinarily pay for the husband and the low castes for the bride. (9) (7)—That infant marriages are both customary and common, the average age for marriage being 8-12 but there is a tendency in reformed circles towards later marriage. (10) (8)—Inter-caste marriages once permitted within limits have long since fallen into desuetude, but they are nevertheless performed in the Punjab, where the bonds of custom were never tight. (9)—But inter-sub-caste marriages are everywhere legal though not equally popular in all castes. (11) (10)—But Shudras of all castes can freely intermarry.

(1) Census of India, 1911-Vol. 1 839.

(2) Ib. §§ 290 294.

(3) Ib. § 306.

(4) Ib. § 300.

(5) Ib. § 295.

(6) Census of India, 1911 Vol. I § 296.

(7) Ib. p. 241 f.n. 2.

(8) Ib. § 299.

(9) Ib. § 300.

(10) Ib. § 313

(11) Ib. § 314.

Marriage defined.

11. Marriage is an alliance between a man and a woman recognized by law.

Synopsis.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| (1) Marriage under the English and Hindu Law (410). | (4) early Hindu Law (414-415).  |
| (2) Marriage, a sacrament (412-413).                | (5) What is marriage (416-417). |
| (3) Eight forms of marriage in                      | (6) Betrothal (418).            |
|  | (7) Marriage Contract (420).    |
|  | (8) Marriage brokerage (421).   |

410. Analogous Law.—Under English law marriage is a contract between a man and a woman by which they naturally promise to marry one another, the promise of each being the consideration for the promise of the other.<sup>(1)</sup> In other words, the English notion of marriage implies a mutual contract, which naturally implies that the contracting parties are sui juris. Consequently, a minor cannot be sued on such a contract even if ratified after coming of age<sup>(2)</sup> though he or she may sue thereupon the other party, if major.<sup>(3)</sup>

In both these respects Hindu Law differs, since the marriage of Hindus needs and implies no mutual promise and no theory of consideration underlies it to make it a binding contract. Under Hindu Law marriage is a gift by the father of his daughter to the husband. The daughter has no choice, she need not consent and may not even be conscious of the nature of the act and its effect upon her life, and she cannot refuse to live with her husband howmuch-soever she might detest him.

411. Under the English Law both lunacy<sup>(4)</sup> and impotency<sup>(5)</sup> at the time of the marriage render a marriage void; but under Hindu Law neither would seem to be a bar to marriage unless the lunacy of the husband had prevented him from accepting the bride at the time of the marriage ceremony or understanding its nature.<sup>(6)</sup>

412. According to the text of Yajñavalkya cited and explained in the Mitakshara<sup>(7)</sup> and a text of Brihaspati quoted in the Mayukh<sup>(8)</sup> marriage is one of the Samskars<sup>(9)</sup> or consecrating rites which an Aryan owes to his ancestors to perform.<sup>(10)</sup> It has the same effect in the case of women as the Upnayan (or the thread-ceremony) has in the case of men.<sup>(11)</sup>

(1) Veneall v. Veness, 4 F. & F. 344.
(2) Ditcham v. Worrall 5 C.P.D. 410; Coxhead v. Mullis, 3 C.P.D. 434.

(3) Purshotam Das v. Purshotam Das, 21 B. 23; Surjyanmoni v. Kali Kani, 28 C. 37; Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751; Dhurandhar v. Ghose, 17 C. 298; Kateeram v. Gendhenee, 23 W. R. 178; Sitanath v. Harmabutty, 24 W. R. 377; Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78; Binda v. Kaunsilia, 13 A. 126.

(4) Marriage of Lunatics Act, 1811 (51 Geo. 3 C. 87); Turner v. Meyars, 1 Hag. Con. 414.

(5) Turner v. Thompson, 18 P. D. 37; Elliott v. Gurr, 2 Phillim 16; subsequent impotency however is no ground for relief; Brown v. Brown, 1 Hag. E. C. C. 523; malformation of the female organ rendering coition impossible entitles the husband to rescind marriage, G v. G, L. R. 2 P. & D. 287; E. v. E., 50 W. R. 607; S. v. S, 24 T.L. R. 258.

(6) Monjilal v. Chanadralli 38 C. 700 (706) P. C.; Muthusami v. Masilamani, 38 M. 342 (355); Per Ghose, J., in Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751 (758).

(7) S. VII, v. 3.

(8) Mandlik p. 48 ll. 22-26.

(9) Lit. Skt. "Purification" "purity" "making perfect" "refining" "purified by sacred rites."

(10) Sundrabai v. Shivanarayan, 32 B. 81 (93) contra Govindarazulu v. Devarabhotta, (Per White, C. J., and Moore, J.) 27 M. 206 dissented from; Khusalchand v. Bai Mani, 11 B. 247 (252, 253) Tekait v. Basanta 28 C. 751 (757, 758) per Shankar Nair, J., in Muthusami v. Masilamani, 38 M. 342 (355); Kameswara v. Veerachariu, 34 M. 422 (432, 439); Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 (204-209); Binda v. Kaunsilia, 13 A. 126 (149, 156).

(11) Manu, II-67

According to Vijnaneshwar all Hindus must adopt one or the other of the following four orders of life viz., (1) that of the celibate or student (Brahmacharya) (2) that of the householder (Grihast) (3) that of the hermit (Vanprasth); and (4) that of the ascetic (Yati or Sanyasi). One is not confined to a single order all his life, for he may pass from one to the other; but one cannot exist without an order (Anashrami). If he does so he becomes an outcaste (Vratya) and dies without a right to any funeral. If a person cannot be a celibate he must marry, which is, therefore, a religious necessity. And since a Shudra is debarred from entering the first, third and fourth orders to which the twice-born alone are privileged, it follows that marriage to him is a prime necessity. But though in the conception of the Smritikars marriage was regarded as a purely religious rite, its secular purpose and character is now well settled, (1) though it is now given a dual character, being regarded both as a rite as well as a civil contract. But this duality leads to certain necessary results. Inasmuch as it is a sacrament the nuptial tie is permanent and indissoluble. It can admit of no divorce. (2) If the husband dies, the wife must immolate herself upon his pyre. This was the ideal termination of conjugal happiness which even the Rig Veda enjoined in the following hymn: "Om! Let these women not to be widowed, good wives, adorned with collyrium, holding clarified butter, consign themselves to the fire, whose original element is water." (3) When the ideal of the Smritis enjoins self-immolation as the high way to heaven, it is not surprising that the Smritikars all extol the act as the only befitting termination of a married life. (4) With this ideal before them the later Smritikars necessarily deprecated re-marriage even after the husband's death, (5) and each later writer strengthened the law till re-marriage became viewed as an odious example of incontinence.

413. But in the case of men the process was reversed. Originally the husband could not take a second wife unless his first wife had failed to beget sons or perform sacrifices or was otherwise ineligible. (6) But polygamy soon became the rule and the sacred restrictions against it were ruled out as merely directory and not mandatory. (7) With polygamy another usage for which the Smritikars found support in the sacred writings was creeping into the midst of Hindu society. Ethnologists feel baffled at the causes which led to the practice of early marriages. But the cause is not far to seek. The device was suggested as a curb upon incontinence. In the vedic times early marriages were contracted after courtship and were, ordinarily, dictated by mutual love. But with the admixture of races the multiplication of castes, their iron exclusiveness

(1) Per Shankar Nair, J., in Muthusami v. Masilamani, 38 M. 342 (365); Per Ghose, J., in Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751 (758).

(2) Yajnavalkya, 1 S. 81, 79; Kudomee v. Joleeram, 3 C. 305 (306); Srinamal v. Administrator General 8 M. 169 (173); Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466 (470). Thapita v. Thapita, 17 M. 235 (242); Binda v. Kamsilia, 13 A. 126 (158). It is submitted that the inference of indissolubility drawn from the mere fact that marriage is a Samskar or purificatory rite is a non-sequitur.

There is no express authority in the entire range of early sacred writing declaring a marriage indissoluble. It is a mere creation of the glossators; an artificial restriction sanctioned by usage and sought to be sanctified by religion. See 1 M. L. J., p. 630.

(3) Translated in I. Colebrooke's Essays, 116.

(4) A large number of texts to this effect will be found collected by Colebrooke in his Miscellaneous Essays, Vol. I, Essay, on the duties of a faithful widow pp 114—122; 4 As. Res. 209—219.

(5) Manu, V. Ss. 161, 163; VIII—226; Apastamb, 2 S. B. E. p. 181; Narad, 38 S. B. E. 184, 185; Yajnyavalkya, 1 S. 75.

(6) Bhagirathi v. Jokhu, 32 A. 575 (579, 581).

(7) 1 Strange, H. L., p. 56; Virasami v. Apparwami 7 M. 187; Thapita v. Thapita 17 M. 235 (237, 239, 244); Kushalchand v. Bai Mani, 11 B. 247 (258).

and the decay of morals, the only check upon undesirable laisons was to give children no chance of having a will of their own. Hence the later inculcation that a girl must be married before she attains puberty. In this respect the usages have outrun the Smritis so far that while the latter enjoin a marriage before puberty <sup>(1)</sup> usage favours marriages even of infants aged two to eight and the Census Report records a custom of marriages performed of children even before they are born. <sup>(2)</sup> Even in Gautam's time this tendency was growing, for while enjoining the marriage of all girls before they attained puberty, he adds : "Some declare that a girl shall be given in marriage before she wears clothes" <sup>(3)</sup> and on this Vashishth sagely remarks : "Out of fear of the appearances of menses, let the father marry his daughter while she still runs about naked." <sup>(4)</sup>

414. Further to facilitate marriages, the Smritikars recognized eight forms of marriages already set out ( §§ 80, 81, 91, 100, 104, 116, 117, 124). Of these all except the Brahma and the Asur form are said to be obsolete. But it is submitted that the Brahma form, as such, is equally obsolete. Manu describes this marriage thus: "The gift of a daughter, after decking her with costly ornaments and honouring her by presents of jewels, to a man learned in the Vedas and of good conduct whom the father himself invites, is called the Brahma rite." <sup>(5)</sup> Now, since marriages are performed before the boy attains sufficient maturity of understanding he cannot be "learned in the Vedas." Secondly, the Vedas are not now read at all, and boys go to school to master quite a different curriculum which puts into his mind the reverse of vedic learning. The fact is that custom and the altered outlook of life have entirely outgrown these archaic forms, and it is idle to disguise the fact, for even the license of interpretation has limits, and all that can be safely predicated of modern marriages is that amongst the higher classes they approach the Brahma form, if at all. As regards the Shudras the usual form is the Asur--that is the form in which the bridegroom pays for the bride.

415. This section defines marriage to be an alliance or union between a man and a woman recognized by law. The necessity of legal recognition was perceived by Apastamb who says : "The union of the husband and the wife is effected through the law." <sup>(6)</sup> Law in this connection as elsewhere in the Code, necessarily of course, includes custom. Consequently, the legality of a marriage depends upon its legal recognition, and since in the case of Hindus, Law has declared its resolve to accept their personal law and custom as binding upon itself, it follows that for the purpose of validating a Hindu marriage recourse must be had to that law for the purpose of testing its validity.

(1) Manu, IX 88 "To an excellent and handsome youth of the same class, let every man give his daughter in marriage, according to law; even though she have not attained the age of eight years."

Vyas, Ch. II-7, "The sin incidental to an act of procuring abortion is committed, if through the negligence of her giver a girl menstruates before her marriage. He who does not give away a daughter in marriage before she attains her puberty, becomes degraded." (Dutt's Tr. p. 508).

Yama, S. 22, "The father who gives away in marriage his maiden daughter after she has attained the twelfth year drinks her menstrual blood month after month."

Vishnu, Ch. XXIV 41. "An unmarried girl who menstruates while living in her fathers mother's house should be regarded as a degraded man, a woman commits no sin by carrying her away from the custody of her guardian.

(2) Census of India, 1911 Vol. 1. S.

(3) Gautam, XVIII. S. 23: 2 S. B. E. 269.

(4) Vashishth, XVII-70: 14 S. B. E. p. 91.

(5) Manu, III Sc. 27-31.

(6) II 6-13; 2 S. B. E. p. 132.

416. What is marriage.—This section defines “marriage” as an alliance between a man and a woman recognized by law. The first essential of marriage is then an alliance, union or compact between persons of opposite sexes. Such alliance may be formed in a variety of ways, and for a time, limited or unlimited. The various ways in which the alliance is formed in a marriage constitute its ceremonies. They vary from the most complicated as prescribed in the Shastras to the free love which under the name of Sambandham is taken for a marriage in Malabar. The question of marriage is mainly of form and intention. If the intention was to treat the woman as wife and the form prescribed by the sect or caste as the outward expression of that intention is conformed with, then the union would amount to marriage and recognized as such by law.

417. The question of legal recognition is all in all. It has been thought best to leave the details of this subject to subsequent sections. Legal recognition depends upon the law and custom to which the parties were subject, the ceremonies, if any, performed and the observance of other rules as to consanguinity.

418. There are two stages in the Hindu, and for that matter, in all marriages, the betrothal and the actual ceremony of marriage.

(1) Betrothal

It has already been stated that infant marriages are now customary amongst Hindus, though amongst the educated and reformed classes there is a tendency in the direction of adult marriages even preceded by courtship. Leaving these out for the moment, the orthodox Hindu first bethinks himself of the marriage of his daughters as soon as they are four or five years old. Eleven or twelve years being the normal period for the attainment of puberty in this country, most Hindu girls must be married off within a margin of puberty, and the rule is to marry them between 6 to 8 years. A year or two before, negotiations commence with the father of the boy selected. Emissaries comprising a Brahmin and a barber accompanied by a friend or relation proceed to view the prospective husband. This is a distinct ceremony in some parts of the country. If the boy is approved and it depends upon the presence of other eligible rivals, then preliminary negotiations begin with the two fathers through the same intermediaries. Amongst the three higher castes it is usual for the boy's father to stipulate for a definite sum as the bridegroom's dowry. This is a comparative equation between the attractions of the boy and those of the girl, combined with the wealth, position and other circumstances of her parents. But on this point, as on all others relating to marriage, local customs widely differ. As is observed in the last Census Report (1) “As a rule marriage is by purchase. The high castes ordinarily pay for the bridegroom and the low castes for the bride. But there are many exceptions. Some times even high castes, such as the HaviK Brahmins of Bombay, pay a bride price while low castes such as the Bhangi (sweeper) of the United Provinces occasionally pay a bridegroom price. In some cases the payment is nominal, but in others very large sums are paid, especially where polygamy (2) prevails or if there is a great shortage of women. In recent times the bridegroom price has been affected very largely by the

1 Census of India, 1911, Vol. 1 § 330 p. 257.

(2) A word coined by Mr Coldstream when reporting on the caste customs of the Punjab in connection with the census of 1891, is used to designate the rule whereby, when a caste is divided into several sections of different status, parents are obliged to marry their daughters into an equal isogamy or higher section, and if they fail to do so they are themselves degraded to the level of the section in which their daughters marry—Census of India, 1911, Vol. 1. 309, p. 251.

educational qualifications of the bridegroom. A Kayasth graduate in Bengal usually fetches from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000, but there are said to be instances of as much as Rs. 10,000 having been paid. Even where the bride is usually bought, the parents of a girl are sometimes willing to pay for an educated bridegroom. With the aboriginal tribes it is almost invariably the bride who is paid for, and sometimes the rate is very high; the Lushais have been known to give as much as Rs. 200 for their wives. A virgin usually fetches a higher price than a widow, but an exception is found amongst certain artisan castes whose women help them in their work. The amount occasionally varies with the age of the bride. The Banias of the Punjab pay no bride-price for a girl up to the age of eight, but after that, payment is made at the rate of Rs. 100 for every year of her age up to thirteen, which is regarded as the age of puberty. Where marriage by purchase prevails brides are often exchanged. Thus in the Baroda State when a man of one of the lower castes gives his daughter in marriage, he often does so on condition that a girl is given to his family in return. (1)

419. But apart from custom, the Shastric rule, and one favoured by public opinion, is to take no bride-price and to pay a suitable dowry if possible to the husband. A marriage so contracted is now taken to be a Brahma marriage which is presumed of every marriage till the contrary is shown. (2)

But though the Asur form is not favoured or presumed, the Court is constrained to recognize its validity however indisposed it may be to countenance it. (3)

The question whether the marriage is in one form or the other would have been immaterial but for its effect upon the devolution of the woman's property which depends upon whether she was married in the approved Brahma form or the disapproved Asur form. (4)

420. The contract of marriage hitherto considered is the contract between parents on behalf of their minor children. But there may be cases, and such cases are more likely to be fostered by the reforming zeal of the present generation, when the contract of marriage is made directly by the parties immediately interested. In that case the contract culminating in an engagement could not be distinguished from any other contract, giving rise to similar rights and liabilities; though the age of discretion in such case is not that prescribed by the Indian Majority Act, which, as already stated, does not affect the capacity of any person to act in matters of marriage, dower, divorce and adoption. (5) The effect of this enactment is, that so far as regards these matters, the question of majority must be determined as if the Indian Majority Act had not been passed. Apart from that Act, there is however no clear provision in the Hindu texts prescribing the age of majority, and what little there is to be found on the subject is limited to males, there being no provision for females

(1) Census of India, 1911, Vol 1, S 313, p. 257.

(2) Jaikisondas v Harkisondas, 2 B. 9. (14); Moosee Haji v. Haji Abdul Rahim, 80 B. 197; Chumital v. Surajram, 83 B. 433; Jagan-nath v. Narain, 84 B. 558; Jagannath v. Run-jit Singh, 25 C. 354; Athikesavulu v. Rama-nujam, 32 M. 512; Munni v. Umrao Singh, (1909) P. R. 89; Ram Prasad v. Mt Sibu Bai, 4 N. L. R. 31 (83); Govind v. Dawalat, 6 N. L. R. 3 (5); Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath, 9 N. L. R. 102 (108).

(3) Dholidas v. Fulchand, 23 B. 659 (664); Vaithinathan v. Gangarazu, 17 M. 9 (10); Ven-kata Krishnayya v. Lakshminarayana, 32 M. 185 (190).

(4) Bhao v. Raghunath, 80 B. 229, (Brahma devolution) Dwarika v. Saratchandra, 39 C. 319. (Asur devolution) See post "Inheritance to Stridhan".

(5) S. 2 (a), Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875).

whose lifelong dependence upon men is repeatedly insisted on. However, as an age for majority was necessary, the courts have held that the completion of the sixteenth year fixed for boys should be held equally to apply to girls. On the attainment of this age Hindu boys and girls should be treated as sui juris and competent to contract for their own marriage. There is no prohibition in Hindu Law against such contracts. On the other hand, post-puberty marriages were the only marriages known in the vedic times and even in the degenerate days of the Smritis, such marriages are expressly contemplated and provided for: "Three years <sup>(1)</sup> let a damsel wait, though she be marriageable; but after that term, let her choose for herself a bridegroom of equal rank; if not being given in marriage, she chose her bridegroom neither she, nor the youth chosen, commits any offence." <sup>(2)</sup>

421. Cases in which match-makers stipulate for a reward for themselves are even more immoral than those in which a price is paid to the guardians of children to bring about their marriages. All agreements to pay them for their services have been consequently held to be immoral and opposed to public policy and as such void.

12. A contract to marry cannot be enforced by specific performance or an injunction, but a party suffering loss thereby may recover damages for a breach of contract.

Synopsis.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| (1) Remedy for breach of contract to marry (422-423). | (3) Jurisdiction of Courts in matters relating to marriage (425). |
| (2) Parent's duty to marry their children (423).      |  |

422. Analogous Law.—No person can be compelled by law to marry another<sup>(3)</sup> and it would be against public policy and in restraint of marriages which law favours, if the party resiling therefrom were restrained by an injunction from marrying another. <sup>(4)</sup> The only remedy open to the disappointed party suffering by the breach is compensation in money awarded as penalty for a breach of contract to one suffering therefrom. But on this head any presents of clothes, money and jewels made to the parents of the other party may, it seems, be not recovered, being, as they are, unconditional and in the nature of voluntary offerings. <sup>(5)</sup> As such presents made to and for the benefit of parents, not being in the nature of a settlement on the wife, undoubtedly tend to induce the exercise of parental influence from corrupt motives and encourage the buying and selling of children. <sup>(6)</sup> As such they should be held, and have been held to be irrevocable, though there are cases which lay down otherwise <sup>(7)</sup>

(1) Skt. "Ritu" lit. "seasons" which Sir W. Jones translates to mean years, but which in the Sacred Books of the East is translated as "seasons" "monthly periods". If the word "ritu" means the revolving year then 18 being the age of puberty, a girl would attain her years of discretion like the boy, on completion of her sixteenth year.

(2) Manu, IX-9091; Vishnu, XXIV-40; 7 S. B.F. 109; Gautam, XV11120; Narad, XII-24.

(3) S. 21 (b) last Illn. Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877); Umed v. Nagindas, 7 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 122 (192); Norbut Singh v. Lad

Koer, 5 N. W. P. H.C.R. 102 (105); Gunput (1n re) 1 C. 74.

(4) Gunput (1n re) 1 C. 74 (76, 77, 78).

(5) Per Markby, J. in Asgar v. Mahabhat, 18 B. I. R. App. 84 (86) followed in Gunput 1 C. 74 (76).

(6) Buldeo v. Mohamaya, 15 C.W.N. 417; 9 I. C. 652; Devarayan v. Muliyuraman, 87 M. 898; Venkata v. Lakshmi, 82 M. 185; F. B.; Girdhari v. Neeldher, 10-A. L. J. 159; Buldeo v. Jumna, 28 A. 495; Dulari v. Vallubhdas, 18 B. 126.

(7) Jogeswar v. Panch Kauri, 5 B. L. R. 895; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673 (675).

even where the recipients of such gifts were not the guardians of the children whom they had agreed to offer in marriage. (1) But these cases really follow precedents ; and none of them was a flagrant instance of parental power when alone the rule could have been tested. They, however, stand on firmer ground when they decree return of presents made for the bride in which case their return on the breaking off of the match is a matter of course. (2)

423. So again the father or other guardian of the bridegroom may legitimately recover any expense of the marriage of his son or ward which the father or guardian of the bride had agreed to pay (3) and marriage expenses being a legitimate charge on the family they are payable therefrom. So where the defendant improperly neglected to get his niece married, whereupon her mother married her and then sued him for expenses out of the joint estate of her deceased husband, the Court decreed the claim overruling the objection that the plaintiff was not legally entitled to marry her daughter. (8)

Where the bride elect dies it is but just that the husband elect should be able to get back the presents and this contingency is expressly provided for in the Mitakshara (4) which however allows deduction therefrom the expenses incurred by the girl's father. (5)

424. Parent's duty.—The Court does not recognize the Asur marriage as valid, and though if it is performed it has to be treated as valid on the ground of factum valet, but till it is performed no contract relating thereto can be enforced whether for the payment of the brideprice stipulated, or for damages for non-performance of the marriage, though if the money is actually paid and the marriage ceremony completed, the money cannot be recovered back. (6) There is nothing in the textual law regarding the selection of the bridegroom and the person by whom he is to be selected. This duty must, therefore, be presumed to arise out of the general rights of guardianship. As such, the father and in his absence, the mother must make the selection, (7) as it is their duty to see that their children are suitably matched. While the contract is in the course of negotiation neither party is of course legally bound by the terms exchanged but as soon as a definite contract is made that stage is marked by performance of the ceremony of engagement or betrothal, (8) between which and the actual marriage the couple are engaged and the parents held under contract to marry them. Even this period is nowhere covered by textual authority. Consequently, it is held subject to the ordinary civil law of contracts. As such the parents are at liberty to terminate the engagement for any reason which should justify it in law. Force, fraud, undue influence and misrepresentation are, amongst others, its chief dissolvents. (9) Even if the contract has been illegally broken

(1) Umed v. Nagindas, 7 B H C R. (OC) 122; Mulji v. Gombi 11 B. 742; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673 (675).

(2) Jaisindas v. Harkisondas, 2 B. 9 (15); Amrallal v. Bapubhai (1887) B. H. C. P. J. 207; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673 (675).

(3) Vaikuntam v. Kallapiran 23 M 512; Post nuptial expenses allowed in the same case in 28 M 497

(4) Alh. ii, Sec X1 S. 29, 30; Gulabchand v. Fulhar, 3 I.C. (B) 748; contra Hira v. Jowala (1915) P.L.R. 27; 27 I C. 1008

(5) Ib. S. 30.

(6) Chunilal v. Suraj Ram, 33 B. 488; Kalaragunta v. Kalaragunta, 32 M. 185 F.E. following Dholidas v. Fulchand, 22 B. 658; Itamachand v. Audaito, 10 C. 1054 overruling Visvanathan v. Saminathan 18 M. 83; Vaithinathan v. Gangarazu, 17 M. 9; Boldeo v. Sumna, 23 A 495 merely followed Visvanathan v. Saminathan, 13 M. 83, since overruled.

(7) Acha Ranganaki v. Acha Ramanuja, 35 M. 728.

(8) Called "Sagai"

(9) Asgar Ali v. Mahabhat Ali, 13 B.L.R. (App.) 84.

the only remedy is damages. (1) There cannot be specific enforcement of a contract to marry, and for obvious reasons. (2) Nor for the same reason, can another marriage be restrained by injunction. (3) Nor is there any case for damages consequential on the mere breach of a contract of marriage as a Hindu father has always the option to put an end to his daughter's engagement should a more suitable match be available. (4) This he is at liberty to do till the very last moment; and where the ceremony is required and marriage is completed only with the Saptapadi or the taking of seven steps round the marriage pole (5) then before this last irrevocable step is taken, he may break off the contract though if the seventh step is taken, the marriage is completed and becomes indissoluble.

425. Jurisdiction of the Court.—The jurisdiction of the court on the subject of Hindu marriages is limited mainly to giving effect to the ascertainment of facts and declaring them inter partes. But in contracts relating to a marriage the jurisdiction of the court is unrestricted by any consideration of personal law as all such contracts are subject to the provisions of the statutory enactments. So the court may award damages for a breach of contract to marry but since a party cannot compel another to marry him there can be no decree for specific performance. And where a marriage has in fact taken place the court will entertain a suit for jactitation of marriage, that is, a suit for the establishment of marriage relationship, such a suit for instance, as seeks a declaration that the defendant is or is not married to plaintiff (6) or being married, whether the marriage is or is not valid, because it was procured by fraud or force or celebrated without the consent of the necessary parties or without the formalities necessary to render it a binding marriage according to Hindu Law. (7) Should the court hold a marriage valid, it becomes necessarily entitled to restrain by an injunction the parents from marrying the bride to another person. (8) The question whether the plaintiff has the right to betroth and marry a minor belongs to the domain of personal guardianship on which the courts undoubtedly possess jurisdiction. (9)

A suit for damages for a breach of contract to marry is not cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. (10)

(1) Mulji v. Gonti, 11 B 412; Rambhat v. Timmayya, 16 B. 673; Colquhoun v. Smither 83 M. 417.

(2) Shridhar v. Hirala, 1 C. 74; Umed v. Nagindas, 7 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 122; Purshotam v. Purshotam, 21 B 23; Ma v. Ngme Yin v. Maung Po Taw, 7 Bur. L. R. 14; 23 I. C. 876; Newbut v. Lad Koer, 5 N. W. P. H. C. R. 102; Contra Narad XII 35; 33 S. B. E. p. 172 ordains forcible marriage of the recalcitrant bridegroom but not vice versa; but this drastic penalty is opposed alike to law and policy and is not saved by the Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877) S. 21 (b), the last illustration to which is exactly in point.

(3) Purshotam Das v. Purshotam Das, 21 B. 28 (84) dissenting from contra in Khoosha v. Bhugwan, 1 Borr. 155.

(4) Mit. II-II-27; Umed Kika v. Nagindas, 7 B. H. C. R. 122; Purshotam Das v. Purshotam Das, 21 B. 28 (80, 81); Kinji v. Narsi, 89 B. 682 (714); Per Westrop C. J. in Umed v. Nagindas, 7 B. H. C. R.

(O. C.) 122 (134); Narad XII 80-88; Yajna-alkya 1 65.6; Vashissth 2 Dig. 487; Katya-yan Jb 491; Mit II II, 27.

(5) On this point there are local variations. In some places these steps are taken successively into seven circles in other places, the pair perambulates seven times round the marriage pole, while in others the parties compile seven steps upon a stone.

(6) Mir Asmat Ali v. Mahmudul-Nissa, 20 A. 96

(7) Ramsurn v. Rakhal Dass, 1 W. R. 412; Aunjona-Dasi, v. Prahlad Chandra, 6 B. L. R. 243 F. B. overruling contra Ramsaran v. Rakhal ib p. 244 C; Aunjona v. Prohladh Chunder, 14 W. R. 182

(8) Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu, 14 M 816.

(9) Purshotam Das v. Purshotam Das, 21 B. 27 (87).

(10) Kalisunker v. Koylash Chunder, 15 O. 888.

Right to marry. 13. Every man has a right to marry, and such right is not affected by infancy or infirmity.

Synopsis.

- (1) Right to marry (426). (2) Competency to marry (427-429).

426. Analogous Law.—Hindu Law which treats marriage as a Samskar and as such a religious rite, naturally regards the male as marrying and the female as merely married to. From her standpoint the Dharmkars treat her as being the subject of a gift by her father to the bridegroom called "the Kanyadan". <sup>(1)</sup>

427. Who may marry.—A Hindu marriage being a sacramental ceremony, every twice-born Hindu desirous of entering the householder's estate is entitled to contract a marriage irrespective of his age, constitution and poverty.

No deformity or disease, <sup>(2)</sup> not even congenital impotency, <sup>(3)</sup> can stand in the way of marriage nor leprosy or other loathsome and contagious disease.

But since Hindu Law regards marriage in the nature of a gift by the father of his daughter to the husband, the latter may be an idiot and even a lunatic, so long as his lunacy did not, at the time of his marriage, prevent him from accepting his bride during the marriage ceremony and of understanding what was going on. <sup>(4)</sup>

There is no age limit. A boy of any age and a man up to any age are both equally competent to marry.

428. The right of Bairagis <sup>(5)</sup> and Gosains to marriages is now recognized <sup>(6)</sup> and there seems no reason why a Nihang Gosavi should not enter the order of Grihashth by contracting a marriage. In doing so he merely breaks the vow of perpetual celibacy made to himself, but Hindu Law does not tie any one down to lifelong celibacy, and any custom having this effect would be ruled out as obnoxious to the rule restraining marriage. <sup>(7)</sup> But though a Gosavi can marry, it does not thence follow that he can thereby alter the devolution of property which he held on condition of continued celibacy. The property so held would devolve in accordance with the rules of the order and the nature of the grant. <sup>(8)</sup>

429. The illegitimate children of a Hindu have equally the right of marriage and may marry in the caste if the caste people recognized them as still in caste. <sup>(9)</sup> So may the dancing girls or Dasis attached to temples. <sup>(10)</sup>

(1) Lit. "gift of the daughter."

(2) Monji Lal v. Chandrabati, 88 C. 700 (706) P. C. See per Woodroff, J. at p. 705 affirmed O. A. at p. 706 Under English Law the marriage of a lunatic is absolutely void even if it takes place during a lucid interval. Turner v. Meyers, 1 Hag. Con. 414; Marriage of Lunatics Act 1811 (51 Geo. 3 C. 37)

(3) Purushotam v. Das Mani 21 B. 617.

(4) Monji Lal v. Chandrabati 88 C. 700 P. C.

(5) Dial Das v. Dhanwan (1914) P. R. 36: 21 I. C. 982.

(6) Gosain Rambharti v. Mahant Suraj-bharti 5 B. 682 (684); Gitabai v. Shivbakas 5

Bom. L. R. 318; Sattiadama v. Saranabagi 18 M. 266 (270); Shree Mahant Kishora v. The Coimbatore etc Co. 26 M. 79 (82); Chhajju Gir v. Diwan 29 A. 109

(7) Balgir v. Dhondgir, 5 Bom. L. R. 114; Gitabai v. Shivbakas, Ib. 318.

(8) Ib Contra assumed per Piggott, J. in Sesperi v. Dwarka 10 A. L. J. 181 and per Rafiq, J. in Ramkishore v. Jagannath, 11 A. L. J. 783 (740) is, it is submitted, erroneous

(9) Inderun v. Ramasamy, 13 M. L. A. 141 (159); Ram Kumari (In re) 13 C. 264 (268, 269).

(10) Kamakshi v. Nagarathnam, 5 M. 161.

14. No prescribed ceremony is necessary to constitute marriage,<sup>(1)</sup> provided that if any ceremony is customary and regarded by the caste as essential, then it must be performed.<sup>(2)</sup>

Explanation I.—The ceremony of Saptapathi is necessary<sup>(3)</sup> to complete a marriage performed according to the orthodox rites, and that of Vivah Hom<sup>(4)</sup> is also usually performed, but their non-performance does not invalidate a marriage, if otherwise completed.

Explanation II.—A marriage celebrated with due ceremony is not invalid by reason of the fact that a party thereto was then an outcaste.<sup>(5)</sup>

Explanation III.—Co-habitation is not necessary to complete marriage.<sup>(6)</sup>

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Shastric ceremonies (430-431).      | (10) Punjab marriage customs (452-459).                |
| (2) Saptapadi (432-433).                | (11) The Central Provinces marriage customs (460-462). |
| (3) Present day ceremonies (434-435).   | (12) Second marriage when necessary (464).             |
| (4) Consummation not essential (436).   | (13) Intercaste marriages (465-467).                   |
| (5) Who can give in marriage (437-440). | (14) Marriage of Hindus and non-Hindus (469).          |
| (6) Customary marriages (441-444).      | (15) Factum Valet (470).                               |
| (7) Communal marriage rites (445).      | (16) Remarriage of wives (471-473).                    |
| (8) Common marriage customs (446-449).  | (17) Remarriage of widows (474-476).                   |
| (9) Relic of Niyog (450-451).           | (18) Conditional marriages (478).                      |

430. Analogous Law.—The marriage ceremony follows that of betrothal.

The shastric ceremonies which are now out of vogue<sup>(7)</sup> are elaborate and comprise the following:—(1) The selection of the bride. (2) The wooers' visit to the girl's house the wooers being the younger brother or some near relation and friends of the selected boy. (3) Sacrifice when the girl's father consents to the match. (4) The ceremony of bathing the girl. (5) Bridegroom elect visits the house of his intended wife. (6) Presentation of clothes and jewels to the girl. (7) Arghya at the marriage. (8) Homa sacrifice. (9) Panigrahan (or taking of the hand). (10) The treading on the stone. (11) Walking round the nuptial fire. (12) Sacrifice of fried grain. (13) The Saptapadi or the taking of seven steps which concludes the marriage compact. (14) Carrying away of the bride to a new house (not the bridegroom's). (15) Looking at the Pole star. Mandlik enumerates 27 such ceremonies<sup>(8)</sup> but he

(1) Authikesavalu v. Ramaswamy 32 M. 512
(519) Moosa Haji v. Paji Abdal 80 B. 197.

(2) Strange H. L. 42.

(3) Brindaban v. Chandra Kurmoker, 12 C. 140 (148) : Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu 14 M. 316 (318) : Manu VIII—227, 2 Dig. 487, 488

(4) Muthusawami v. Masilamani, 20 M.L.J. 94; 5 I. C. 42.

(5) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 18. M. I. A. 141; Kumari (In re) 18 O. 264; E. v. Madan Gopal, 31 A. 589 (591)

(6) Anandachari. In re 9 M. 466 (470) ; Dadaji v. Ruckhmabai 10 B. 801 (811)

(7) Mandlik Hindu Law p. 401; Muthusawami v. Masilamani 38 M. 349 (348)

(8) Mandlik Hindu Law, p. 401, F. N.

rightly observes that all these are greatly interlarded with custom, and that they are neither indispensably necessary nor invariably possible. "There are places where hardly a qualified Brahmin priest is obtainable, and parties have to improvise a ceremonial for themselves. This is done by distributing Pan Supari, worshipping the household deities and the ceremonial Pothi (book) containing the ritual".<sup>(1)</sup> The whole gamut of these ceremonies is never undergone even in places where the Brahmins abound.

431. The "nuptial fire" favoured of the Smritis is never lighted<sup>(2)</sup> nor the Homa sacrifice invariably performed. Of all the ceremonies the one which is most insisted on and which has outlived the rest is the Saptapadi or advancing seven steps consisting in the bridal pair facing and approaching each other step by step till they join hands on completion of the seventh step which is then regarded as the final and irrevocable step.<sup>(3)</sup> In some places the Bridhishradh is performed.<sup>(4)</sup>

432. Of all the religious ceremonies prescribed for a Hindu marriage the ceremony of Saptapadi or the "Seven Steps" is treated by the Smritikars as conclusive. Thus

Manu says:—The relation of wife is created by the texts pronounced when the girl is taken by the hand. Be it known that those texts end, according to the learned, with the texts prescribed for walking seven steps.<sup>(5)</sup>

Yashleth says:—In connection with the formation of the relation of husband and wife agreement is first prescribed. Then taking by the hand is prescribed. It is said that mere agreement is defective, and that of the two, taking by the hand is indispensable.<sup>(6)</sup>

Yama says:—Not by the pouring of water nor by the words of gift is the relation of husband and wife formed, but it is formed by the rite of taking the bride by the hand and when they walk together the seventh step.<sup>(7)</sup>

433. The ritual so far as it extends to Saptapadi, may be divided into three parts: (1) the Vagdan or the promise to give; (2) the actual gift of the bride or kanyadan; and (3) the marriage rite which commences with taking the wife by the hand (panigrahanam) and ends with the seventh step Saptapadi taken around the consecrated fire.<sup>(8)</sup> In the United Provinces this ceremony involves circumambulation of the bridal pair with their clothes knotted seven times round the marriage pole fixed in the centre of the shed or of the shed itself,<sup>(9)</sup> while in the Punjab it means circumambulation round the Granth Sahib.

But this is not the invariable form of taking the seven steps. In another place it is described thus: "The bride is conducted by the bridegroom, and directed by him to step successively into seven circles a text being recited at each step." This is called Saptapadi.<sup>(10)</sup>

But whatever may be the variation in the mode of taking the seven steps all agree that with the completion of the seventh step marriage becomes irrevocably complete. This does not, however, imply that it is a sine qua non to a Hindu marriage, and that it may not be otherwise complete. As a matter of fact Hindu marriage ceremonies have of late become so varied and various that it is impossible to generalize about them. All that the law therefore requires is

(1) Ib., p 403.

(2) Sir T. Strange H. L., pp 7-8.

(3) Manu Ch VIII § 27.

(4) Brindaban v. Chandra Kurmoker, 12 C. 140 (142).

(5) Lit "Seven steps" Skt & Lat-Saptam: Seven & pad: pedes-foot.

(6) VIII 229.

(7) Cited in Venkatacharyulu v. Ranga-charyulu, 14 M. 316 (319).

(8) Cited in 2 Dig. p 488.

(9) Ib., p. 319.

(10) U. P. Census Report 1912 § 288 p 222.

(11) Cole. Essays 7, Asiatic Researches, p. 308.

that whatever the ceremonies may be, they should be performed and not omitted, if their performance is essential to the completion of the marriage.

434. Present day ceremonies.—It is now universally acknowledged that the Shastric ceremonies have been almost entirely superseded by those which custom and convenience have substituted in their place. So Shankar Nair, J., observed in a case: "Hindu lawyers prescribed various ceremonies to constitute a valid marriage. But those ceremonies in their entirety are seldom, if ever, performed. According to them the Vivah Hom (1) and Saptapadi (2) are essential. But it is notorious that marriages are performed in many castes without them, and it is now settled that if by caste usage any other form is considered as constituting a marriage, then the adoption of that form under those conditions prescribed by the caste with the intention of thereby completing the marriage union is sufficient. No other conclusion is possible if due regard is had to conditions in India." (3)

435. It is consequently clear that the essential and binding part of the marriage ceremony must necessarily vary in different localities. (8)

"In the Punjab it consists of the phere, or circumambulation of the sacrificial fire, which is held to imply the consummation of the vows in the presence of Agni and the other sacrificial gods. In the United Provinces the young couple walk round, not a fire but the marriage shed or pole. In the east of these provinces, and also in Bengal Bihar and Orissa, the binding portion of the ceremony is generally the sindirdan, or painting of the bride's forehead with vermilion. That this is probably a survival of a blood covenant is shown by the fact that amongst certain castes, such as the Hari, the bride and the bridegroom smear each other with their blood, which they obtain by pricking their fingers with a thorn. In Bombay the higher castes follow the practice of circumambulation. The lower castes, sprinkle rice over the bride and bridegroom, while some of Dravidian origin pour milk or water over the joined hands of the young couple. In Orissa their right hands are tied together with kusa grass, or their left hands, when the bride is a widow. In Madras there are various ceremonies, such as making them eat from the same dish, or knotting their garments together, or pouring water over them so that it runs from the man to the woman. But the most common is the tying of the tali, or necklace, by the bridegroom round the bride's neck. The Brahmin bridegroom places the bride's foot seven times on a mill-stone, a symbol of constancy." (4)

These general observations admittedly do not exhaust the innumerable local, tribal and sectional variations to which marriage ceremonies are liable from all of which the only conclusion possible is that stated in the section.

436. Consummation not necessary.—Consummation is not necessary even under English Law to complete a marriage, which is complete as soon as the declaration and contracting words (5) are spoken; still less is it necessary under Hindu Law (6) where marriage are usually contracted before the parties thereto have attained puberty. But though consummation is not necessary under law it may become so by custom. In that case the custom must of course, be strictly proved.

According to Vashishth "if a damsel at the death of her husband had been merely wedded (by the recitation of texts) she may be married again." (7) But

(1) Lit. "Marriage Sacrifice"

(2) Lit. "Seven Steps."

(3) Muthusawmi v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342; 5 I C 42 (46).

(4) Census of India, 1911, Vol 1, 814, pp. 257, 258.

(5) Marriage Act 1898 S. 6 (61 and 62 vice o. 58).

(6) Administrator-General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466; Arur Singh v. Mangal (1877) P. R.

85 I issued that consummation was in ancient times essential to complete a marriage. Ghose, H.L. (8rd Ed) 789; This view is supported by the fact that a virgin widow could re marry (Vashishth XVII.74) and a wife only passed into the gotra of her husband on performance of the consummation Homa ceremony. Hiranya Keshin Grih. Sutra, 30 S. B. E. pp. 191, 198, 20.

(7) Vashishth XVII.74.

this precept has no value beyond the fact that it reduces the prejudice against the remarriage of such a widow.

437. Persons entitled to give in marriage.—It has already been stated that the Indian Majority Act (1) does not "affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of marriage, dower, divorce and adoption" (2) and as under Hindu Law the age of majority is attained on completion of the 16th year persons born below that age cannot be married except through their guardians whose right rests upon the following text of Yajnavalkya :—

"The father, paternal grandfather, brother, kinsmen, remote relations (Sakulyas) and mother are the persons to give away a damsel—the latter respectively on failure of the preceding."

438. It has been held that this order merely prescribed for the giving away of the child, and does not confer an individual right of betrothal in the order of succession declared. Though the father has the absolute right of arranging for the marriages of his children no other paternal kinsman can in his absence arrogate to himself the same unqualified authority without the concurrence of the mother. (3) But in a conflict between the father and mother the father has doubtless a superior right. This right was put to a somewhat severe test in a case in which the father was convicted of theft and imprisoned for two years after which he deserted his first wife and married another. Three years later the wife negotiated for the marriage of her daughter to her own cousin, whereupon the father sued her for an injunction which the Court granted being satisfied that the father had arranged for another more eligible match to the greater advantage of the minor and that his suit being in the interest of his child and his right to give his daughter in marriage being superior to that of the mother it could not be defeated by the latter. (4) But, of course, if in such a case the marriage had already been performed then it would not have been cancelled merely because the mother had married without the father's authority. (5) A father may expressly or impliedly delegate his authority to another. Such was held to be the intention of the father who having lost his wife made over his daughter two years old to another person to adopt, who brought her up and at the proper age married her to the plaintiff. The natural father then secured possession of her and married her to one Jadoo whom the plaintiff sued for the custody of his wife, and the court decreed the suit holding that the father having by his conduct delegated his parental authority to another, could not re-assert it to the detriment of the plaintiff to whom the girl had been previously married by her putative father. (6)

439. Apart however, from the father and mother, the paternal relations have the preferential right of arranging for the marriage of minors (7) in the following order :—

The father, paternal grandfather, brother, kinsmen, the Sakulyas—that is other paternal relations up to the tenth degree, and the mother. The right is then said to vest in the maternal grandfather, maternal uncle, and other maternal relations in the order of proximity.

(1) Act IX of 1875.

(2) Ib., S. 2 (a).

(3) Namasevayam v. Annamalai 4 M. H. O. E. 389; Ranganaisi v. Ramanuja 35 M. 798; Ramkore v. Jamnadas, 97 B. 18.

(4) Nanabhai v. Janardhan 12 B. 110 (190, 121); Ram Bunsee v. Soobh Koonwar 7

W. R. 321; Golamee v. Juggessur, 3 W. R. 193.

(5) Khushal Chand v. Baimani, 11 B. 247; Ghazi v. Sukru, 19 A. 515.

(6) Golamee v. Juggessur 3 W. R. 198.

(7) Kasturi v. Pannalal, 38 A. 520.

But the question of priority loses its importance as soon as the marriage is performed. In the absence of force or fraud, the marriage will then be upheld on ground of factum valet, if the consent thereto was given by a legal guardian such as the mother without consulting the father. (1)

440. A step-mother has no right to give in marriage, (2) and indeed, excepting the parents with whose authority the Courts are loath to interfere, the authority exercised by more distant relations is subject to the supervision of the Court, which as the supreme guardian of the state, is entitled to intervene whenever it will be in the interest of the minor to do so, and in doing so it may consider the minor's own wishes if she is sufficiently old to study her own welfare. (3)

441. Custom may influence the form of marriages or it may legalize the alliance not in consonance with the normal law. In the one case it reduces modifies or altogether dispenses with the performance of the prescribed or any ceremonies. In the other case it sanctions inter-marriages between different castes or sub-castes or permits the remarriage of women already married or of widows. In its solicitude for upholding marriage contracts law suffers every community to follow its own notion of a valid marriage, and if it is only sure of the factum of marriage it even presumes that it has been performed with the requisite sanction of custom. In this respect it views custom with unwonted indulgence. Such marriages may be grouped under the following heads :—

- (i) Those in which custom moulds the form (§§ 450-463).
- (ii) Inter-caste marriages (§ 464).
- (iii) Marriages between Hindus and non-Hindus (§ 467).
- (iv) Remarriage of wives (§§ 469-471).
- (v) Remarriage of widows (§ 472-474).
- (vi) Conditional marriages (§ 476).

442. It has already been seen that of the eight forms of marriages enumerated by the Smṛitikars, the Brahma is the most favoured. It is still current; so is the Asur form. But since these two forms only differ on a single point, viz., whether the bride is gifted or sold (4) it is clear that they take no note of the fact that widow remarriages have since been again legalized and the bonds of caste have again been loosened. Moreover, there remain the ceremonies.

Besides the Brahma and Asur forms, another old form—the Gandharva—is said (5) to still survive. “The voluntary union of a maiden and her lover, one must know to be the Gandharva rite which springs from desire and has sexual intercourse for its purpose.” (6) The essence of this form lies in the absence of all ceremonies.

443. But there are marriages which are held to be perfectly valid, though they require no religious ceremonies. Such is the Karewa marriage in the Punjab which is marriage with the brother or some other male relative of the deceased husband and is contracted without any ceremony at all, but is nevertheless held to be valid and to confer upon the parties all the rights of a valid

(1) Ghasi v. Sukru, 19 A. 515.

(2) Ram Bunses v. Soobh Koonwar, 7 W. R.

321.

(3) Shridhar v. Hiratal, 12 B. 480 (485, 486).

(4) Chunilal v. Surajram, 38 B 498 (487).

(5) Brindavana v. Radhamani, 12 M. 72
contra; Bhaoni v. Maharaj Singha, 8 A. 788.

(6) Manu, III-82, (3 Cole. Dig. p. 606).

marriage. (1) The Karao Dhureecha marriage prevalent amongst the Jats (2) and Lodhis (3) of the United Provinces appears to be quite similar. So a form of Gandharv in a Tipperah caste is completed "by the worship of the goddess Tripoora and taking santi-water (or the water of absolution)." (4) The wife so married admittedly possesses an inferior status. So does the "Dagger wife", that is to say the wife who is merely married to a dagger of her husband who being usually a person possessing a much higher social status does not stop to marry in person. (5) The Anand marriage customary amongst the Sikhs is completed by the Kharat or an offering to the deity coupled with the recitation of a text called Anand. (6) Still greater laxity marks the marriages of Jat Sikhs amongst whom not only inter-caste marriages but marriages without any ceremony at all are quite common and customary, and as such recognized as valid by the courts. (7) So a mere mutual consent is all that is required to constitute a Buddhist marriage, and such consent may be expressed or implied by conduct or reputation. (8) Even a permanent concubine acquires the status of a wife. (9) The fact that the Privy Council recognized such an alliance as valid marriage shows how elastic is the term "marriage" when applied to persons only subject to their customary law and such examples are not unfamiliar to the Indian Courts dealing with cases of even such high caste people as the Gour Rajputs of Cawnpur. (10)

444. The Punjab and Malabar marriage customs reduce marriage to a mere figure of speech. The Punjab customs not only permit of inter-caste marriages but they permit of marriages such as the Chadar Andazi and the Karewa which are mere sexual alliances which custom recognizes as lawful marriages. (11) So is the Samhandham of Malabar in which all that is necessary is the consent of the girl and her guardian followed by co-habitation. There are several varieties of Samhandhams, amongst which the Podamuri form is said to take the pride of place, being one in which the bridegroom makes the ceremonious present of a cloth to a bride. (12) It is said that these marriages have been reprobated by the courts. (13) But this seems to be a mistake, for the reports of cases prove otherwise. (14) Such mock marriages are equally in vogue amongst the Newars of Nepal. (15)

(1) Authikesavali v. Ramanujam, 32 M. 512 (514, 515, 518).

(2) Rattigan Punjab Customary Law (7th Ed.) 7b, p. 141 and cases there cited. Tup per's Customary Law, Vol. 2-95.

(3) Pooran Mul v. Toolsi, 3 Agra 350; Bahadur Singh, 4 N. W. P. H. C. R. 128.

(4) Kesree v. Samardhan, 5 N W P H C R 94.

(5) Chakrodhuj v. Beer Chunder, 1 W R 194; Rajkumar Nohodip v. Birchandra, 25 W R 404 (414)

(6) Ramasami v. Sundarlingasami, 17 M. 422 (430).

(7) Deo d. Joggomohun v. Sanmcoomar, 2 Mor.Dig 41 S C 8 I D (O S) 797 (799).

(8) Chandasingh v. Mela (1897) P. R. 73; Harta v. Kanhya, (1908) P. R. 72; Askaur Savansinh, (1910) P. R. 79; Hardial v. Kali Ram, (1911) P. R. 85.

(9) Mi Me v. Mi shwa Ma, 89 C 492 P. C.; Id., p. 805 P. C.

(10) Lachman Kuar v. Mardansingh, 8 A. 148.

(11) Askaur v. Sawansingh, (1910) P.R. 79; 7 I. C. 1009.

(12) Report of the Malabar Marriage Commission 1894, pp. 21-24, 98

(13) Census of India 1911 Vol I S 294, p. 242 foot note (1); see Moore Malabar Law and Custom, p. 75.

(14) Census of India, 1911, Vol. I, § 294, p. 248.

(15) For Bengal, Bihar, Orissa and Sikkim, See Census of India, 1911 Vol 5, Part 1, Ch. VII, Part 1, §§ 634-689, pp. 814-848. For Bombay Id Vol. IX Part 1, Ch. VII. deals with caste and tribes but no marriage customs. The Madras part Id Vol XII similarly deals with the religion and caste (ch. IV and XI) but not with their marriage customs.

The U. P. and Oudh part Id Vol. XV devotes a considerable space to the description of marriage customs. Ch. VII, §§ 212-239, pp. 207-239. The Punjab part Id Vol. XIV is a most illuminating record of castes, religion and marriages of the Hindus—As to the last see Id Vol. XIV, Pt. 1. Ch. VII Ss. 334-384, pp. 261-294.

For C. P. See Id Vol. X, Pt. 1, Ch. VII, §§ 160-196, pp. 131-151.

445. Communal Marriage Rites.—The Courts only decide such cases as come before them. But the ethnographic records of India contain a detailed account of the matrimonial customs of the various communities which constitute their present day law on the subject. It is impossible to pass them all in review here ; but a slight indication may be given to the buried treasure found in these works which are useful alike to the lawyer who has to determine the validity of a marriage as to the student of ethnography who has to compare the movements of the human mind.

The Report of the census of India devotes a considerable portion of its descriptive volumes to the marriage customs of the various communities and localities. A perusal of these shows that in spite of the Shastric prohibition of the sale of brides, amongst the lower classes, who mostly live by manual work and to whom a daughter is as useful as a son, the parents customarily exact a solatium for the loss of her labour from the husband. Amongst the higher castes where the males are the wage-earners and women relegated to the performance of household and even menial duties, their loss is more easily endured and where the law of supply and demand is not a disturbing factor the parents willingly part with their daughters for nothing and amongst the well-to-do they pay a handsome price for purchasing an eligible husband. And as to the marriage rites the bulk of the people follow the time-honoured, old usage regardless of the Shastric sanction or anathemas.

446. But a few leading incidents are common to all customs, whether European or Indian, Hindu, or non-Hindu. The husband
Common marriage customs. selected is invariably a few years older than the bride, and the marriage rites are performed in the parental home of the latter. Amongst the Hindus marriage is universal, and it is so amongst all other races who affect Hinduism. All Hindus strive to marry off their daughters before the age of puberty and strange devices are often resorted to in order to comply with the letter of the Shastric law. Failing to secure an eligible husband the girl is made to go through a mock marriage with an arrow a flower or a tree, <sup>(1)</sup> the real marriage being performed later with the husband. <sup>(2)</sup> Wherever widow re-marriage is sanctioned by the caste it is invariably treated with disfavour and accompanied by the ceremony of applying vermilion to the woman's forehead and putting bracelets on her wrists. <sup>(3)</sup> But the usual ceremony accompanying a virgin marriage is not much more elaborate: the Sindurdan or the smearing of vermilion on the bride's forehead or on the parting of the hair being generally regarded as the essential feature of the marriage ceremony. <sup>(4)</sup> It is probably a survival of the blood covenant between husband and wife and has a wide vogue even amongst people and races whose connection with the Indo-Aryan civilization is not readily apparent.

447. Polygamy is everywhere common and it was in its worst form rampant in Bengal where, however, Kulinism is now a decadent institution. Instances were at one time not uncommon of orthodox Brahmins living by their marriages. Lest they should forget their numerous wives who were often a hundred or more in number, they used to maintain a register of their marital engagements and paid

(1) Bengal Census Report, 1918, Pt. I, §§ 647, 648.

(2) Tribes and Castes of Bengal, Vol 1, p. 415.

(3) Bengal Census Report 1918, Pt. I § 641: widow marriage is very common in Orissa, Ib., § 648.

(4) Ib., § 640.

periodical visits to their fathers-in-law to receive their customary gifts upon which they maintained themselves in luxury. They noted down for their private information their numerous progeny which they saw rising around them, and to whom they likewise looked forward for filial recognition and support. Kulinism is now dying out but it is not yet extinct and the last census report records three cases in which the husbands owned 60, 8 and 4 wives, the husband of the last batch being an M. A. and B. L. (1)

448. The Brahmos are monogamists but their number is inconsiderable. The total number of marriages celebrated under the provisions of the Special Marriage Act (2) during the decade 1901-10 being only 335 out of which in 34 cases only were the brides widows. (8)

449. As regards the prohibited degrees, Hindu Law prohibits the inter-marriage of Sapindas. Now taking this term to include persons whose common ancestor is within six degrees of the male and four degrees on the female side, it excludes no less than 2, 121 possible relations, while the Christian table of kindred excludes 30 for any one person. The higher castes follow the Sapinda rule by limiting it in practice to 4 and 3 degrees in the male and female line respectively; while the lower castes everywhere follow the rule of thumb which they have made for themselves, viz., that there should be no inter-marriages between the "Chachera, Mamera, Phuphera, and Mausera" relations which prohibits a man marrying any one in the line of either his uncle or aunt on either the male or female side. This again is cut down in practice to mean that a man may not marry into any family into which any male relative has married so far as the connection is remembered. Ordinarily this carries the prohibited degree to three generations or say, a period of 60 years. (4)

450. In all parts of India where widow marriage is customary the first refusal is given to the husband's younger brother after whom other relations are given a choice. In this respect this custom follows a custom not only confined to the Hindus or to India (5) but to all primitive societies who regard the wife as property belonging to the family over whom one could assert the individual right of inheritance. (6) The Niyog custom is definitely based on the idea that the wife is property and that the husband using it authorizes another to perform on her an act, of which he could have authorized the performance in his life time and the sons are his, because they like the mother, are his property, being born of her.

451. Marriage by purchase and marriage by exchange are common throughout India, and in the United Provinces such marriages are even customary amongst Brahmins. (7) Marriage by capture was at one time common. It could not persist after the Penal Code and the only survival of the custom is now to be found in the fact that the husband goes mounted and armed

(1) Ib. § 654.

(2) Act III of 1872.

(8) Bengal Census Report, 1918, § 644.

(4) U. P. Census Report, 1912, Part 1, § 219, pp. 211, 212.

(5) The practice of Levirate was common amongst the Jews. See Deuteronomy XXV-5.

10, Lev. XXV 25: Bengal Report, 645; U. P. Report, § 222.

(6) See Art "Levirate" in Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible; also "Levirate" in Encyclopædia Britannica.

(7) U. P. Census Report, 1912, § 281.

and captures his bride in a mock battle. This custom is not confined to the Hindus, nor, indeed, to India.

452. The Punjab is a province of customs and amongst them the marriage customs both tribal and territorial greatly differ. But the essential features of Hindu customs equally persist there.

Marriage is universal and regarded as a sacrament. Infant marriages are customary, the majority of girls being married between the ages of 10-15. Girls are as a rule sold as there is a shortage of women <sup>(1)</sup> the price varying according to the maturity of the bride. A girl aged 8. can be had for nothing but afterwards the price payable is Rs. 100 for each year of the girl's age, i.e., Rs. 900 for a girl of 9 years old and Rs. 1,000 if 10 years and so on. Everywhere the girl is looked upon as a valuable asset.

453. The orthodox marriage ceremonies are thus described :—(1) "The ceremonies begin with the usual worship of Ganesh and other gods after which the sacrificial fire is lit. (2) The father of the bride is then requested by the priest to give his daughter to the bridegroom. He accepts the proposal and with his daughter seated on his left knee and his right hand full of water, a little rice and kusha grass makes a sacred offer of the girl, with all the jewelry and equipment which have been previously gifted to her, to the bridegroom, who accepts her with due formality; after which the girl's father demands a promise that the Kumari (virgin) given to him must be taken by him in constant companionship in the performance of his duties and the enjoyment of wealth and other pleasures. The promise is duly made. This is the kanyadan. (3) Then follows the panigrahan, which is known as hathleva and consists of the couple grasping each other's hand to mark the union, and certain Vedic hymns are recited. The gods who have been invited to the sacrifice are asked to bear testimony to the sacred tie. At this stage is performed the ashmarohan, the pair placing one foot each on a stone in token of the firmness of the ground on which they are going to tread in their married life. (4) The pair then, with clasped hands or with the ends of their garments knotted together, go seven times round the sacrificial fire. This ceremony is called phere and implies the consummation of the vows in presence of agni and the other sacrificial gods." <sup>(2)</sup>

454. These ceremonies were originally performed by the Sikhs as well, who used to employ the Brahmins to officiate at their marriages. Later on it became usual to supplement this with the Sikh ceremony which is now the sole marriage ceremony performed by them in their marriages. A Sikh marriage may now be performed in the old style, or it may be performed in the new style called the Anand marriage. The leading binding ceremony in each is however the same, viz., the circumlocution of the pair four times round the Granth Sahib accompanied by the reading of hymns by the Sikh priest. These hymns are called the Lawans. <sup>(3)</sup>

455. Widow marriages though deplored are none the less more frequent in the Punjab than anywhere else. The ceremony most prevalent amongst the Hindus and Sikhs is that called the Karao or Chadar andazi in the Eastern Punjab and Karewa or Chadar Pana in the rest of the province. This marriage

(1) Punjab Census Report, 1912, pt. 1, Ch VII §§ 348, 349, p. 272.

(2) Ib.

(3) Translated in Macauliffe's "Sikh

Religion" Vol. 2, Oxford 1909; also in the Punjab Census Report, 1912, § 355, pp. 277, 278.

is completed with little or no ceremony at all.<sup>(1)</sup> Where a brideprice has to be paid the husband merely takes the wife home after payment and it is considered sufficient to mark the commencement of their matrimonial relation. But where a ceremony at all is performed, it consists of the widow usually dressed in red taking her seat by the side of her husband over whom a Brahmin, a Sadhu or an elder of the brotherhood spreads a white chadar or a sheet after which the husband either places a rupee in his bride's hand or presents her with bracelets, and nose and ear-rings or some other emblems of wedded life.<sup>(2)</sup>

456. Mock-marriages are equally customary in the Punjab but they usually take place when the widower wishes to marry a third wife, that number being considered inauspicious or when the horoscope of the girl foredooms her to early widowhood. The object the girl is married to is either a Ber or Pipal tree or to an animal or some inanimate object such as a sword, dagger, arrow or the like.<sup>(3)</sup>

457. As to marriage within the prohibited degrees the orthodox rule is honoured here more in the breach than in its observance. The Punjabi Hindus avoid only two gotras, viz., one's own and that of the mother's father; small groups avoiding only the collaterals, i.e., only the father's gotra,<sup>(4)</sup> and marriages by exchange are common throughout the Province.

The Sikh marries in his own caste ordinarily avoiding only the collaterals of the father and the mother's father.<sup>(5)</sup>

458. The Saptapadi is performed in the Punjab by the pair walking seven times<sup>(6)</sup> round the sacrificial fire with clasped hands or with the ends of their garments knotted together. The Sikh perform only four circuits<sup>(7)</sup> round the granth Sahib.<sup>(8)</sup> It will thus be seen that the seven steps of Manu have in places developed into seven circuits round the fire or round the pole or round the marriage mandap. The original seven steps are however still taken in many localities whether face to face or with joined hands or clothes tied together with a knot. Certain castes still retain the initial ceremony of making the pair walk seven steps, the bridegroom's father in the Punjab placing gold and silver under each step of the bride.<sup>(9)</sup>

459. Polyandry exists in the Kulu division, the Simla Hill states and to a smaller extent in the Nahan, Mandi, and Suket states. It is confined to the lower castes though Rajputs and other castes do not abjure it. The polyandry generally practised is of the fraternal type, known as Tibetan, all the brothers in a family having usually one joint wife, but distant relations and even persons belonging to different families agree to share a wife in partnership.<sup>(10)</sup> The husband visiting the wife has to leave his shoes or cap at the door, which is notice to the other husbands that the wife is "engaged."

(1) Haker v. Mahalesing (1879) P. R. 38, Mula v. Chando (1880) P. R. 26; Lachu v. Dalsingh (1886) P. R. 33; Chandsingh v. Mela (1897) P. R. 78; Dalipkaur v. Talla (1918) P. R. 99; 18 I. C. 93.

(2) Punjab Census Report, 1912, § 369

(3) Ib. § § 871 878

(4) The Mohyal Brahmins marry into the family of one of the collaterals of the mother's father, Ib. § 374.

(5) Ib., § 374.

(6) But Khattris perform only 4 and Aroras 8 rounds

(7) Called "Pheras" (rounds) or "Parkar-mas" (circumambulations).

(8) Punjab Census, 1912, Pt. 1, § 355.

(9) Punjab Census, 1912, Pt. 1, p. 278

F.N.

(10) Ib., § 378.

Polygamy is, as usual, prevalent throughout the Punjab, and the number of wives is regulated by the wealth and status of the husband.

Divorce does not appear to be customary amongst the Hindus, Sikhs and Jains.

460. The leading features of the marriage customs in the Central Provinces resemble those of its neighbours, the Bihar and the United Provinces. The leading idea of the highest caste is to make a gift of their daughters to husbands of the lower to exploit them for money. The Kunbis will take Rs. 20 for a daughter before she reaches adolescence, after which she is given away for nothing. Exchanges are common <sup>(1)</sup> while service is taken in lieu of cash where the husband is too poor to afford it.

461. The binding portion of the marriage ceremony in the Hindi speaking districts is the Bhanwar ceremony which consists of the bridal pair walking round the marriage shed called the Mandwa. In the Maratha country this ceremony is not usually performed and the marriage rite is completed when the sheet suspended between the bride and the bridegroom is taken away and the rice is thrown over them. Amongst the tribes the Bhanwar is usually performed, but the binding ceremony is the affixing of the vermilion mark on the forehead of the bride which concludes the marriage.<sup>(2)</sup> Marriage by capture is symbolized by the Gond and the Mudia aborigenes.<sup>(3)</sup>

462. Widow re-marriage is customary not only amongst the Shudras but also amongst the Marathas who claim an equal status with the Rajputs.<sup>(4)</sup> The ceremony which is usually performed at night includes one symbolic of the supersession of the rights of the ex-husband and the changing of clothes and bangles. If a bachelor marries a widow he usually has to go through the ceremony of a mock-marriage with a tree, an arrow, or a ring. A widow may not marry any one of her own father's gotra or within the degree that would be prohibited to her as an unmarried girl. A member of her deceased husband's family has a prior claim.

Divorce is customary and may be obtained by the husband for adultery of the wife and by the wife if she is deserted by her husband. But in practice where women are greatly in demand, they are free to re-marry as often as they desire for a new husband. Such re-marriages are customary even amongst the Jadams of Hoshangabad who claim to be a branch of the Rajput race.<sup>(5)</sup>

463. It will thus be observed how different are the local customs regulating the relation of the sexes. Beyond a certain common ideal which underlies all Hindu society the divergencies in practice are as remarkable as if the various groups had owed no allegiance to a single system or religious ritual. And yet we find the Shastras quoted for what is marriage, and all marriages submitted to a single test, as if all Hindus were amenable to the prescribed rituals, and totally free from the influence of their communal usages which have at the present day almost entirely overlaid the orthodox conventions.

(1) C. P. Census Report, 1912, § 175.

(2) Ib., § 176.

(3) Ib., § 177.

(4) Ib., § 178.

(5) C.P. Census Report, 1912, § 179.

It cannot be too often repeated that the Hindu Law that the courts are enjoined to apply is not the Hindu Law of the epic age but the law as it stands modified by usage, and in the matter of marriage, usage is all in all.

Second marriage when necessary. 464. Amongst most people the ceremony of marriage begins and ends with the performance of a single ceremony.

This is the real marriage. But where it is performed before puberty, a Gowna or Pathoni miscalled a second marriage usually marks the advent of that event. But this is usually a quiet ceremony and one which is by no means essential to the completion of marriage. But it might be possible that by custom, before any conjugal rights could be asserted, a second ceremony of marriage was necessary, though the Hindu Law requires no such ceremony. In a case in which this custom was alleged the plaintiff's suit for possession of his wife was thrown out on the ground that the evidence disclosed that the wife was free to re-marry till the second marriage was performed, and the plaintiff's failure to perform it, disentitled him to the relief which he claimed. (1)

465. Inter-caste Marriages.—The history of the origin and growth of castes and their inter-relations has already been given in the General Introduction (§§ 206-217) from which it will be seen that in the Vedic times when the idea of caste was only taking root, inter-marriages between Aryan males and the Shudra females were not interdicted and were even connived at. But later on when the caste ascendancy grew and the four castes became more distinctly marked, inter-caste marriages still continued to be customary; though they began to be treated with growing disfavour (2) and so Manu ordains that the Dwij should preferably marry in his own caste, at least his first wife (3) though he may take other wives from the caste next to his own. But this rule does not appear to be inflexible and Manu anathematizes a Brahmin if he takes a Shudra woman as his first wife. (4) In a later age this practice was exalted into a moral law and inter-caste marriages increased in disfavour with the increase of caste independence. Sub-castes were formed the members of which followed the example of the greater castes. But this ferment was mainly confined to three separate castes. Though the Shudras were technically within the pale of Hindu society, in reality they continued to remain outside it. Consequently inter-caste marriages amongst them continued unchecked by the rising tide of popular opinion against them. And their legality is now well established. (5)

466. But even amongst the twice-born, both pure and mixed, such marriages have obtained a foothold in the Punjab where the inter-marriages of a Rajput man with a Khatri woman (6) and of a Ksha man with an Aishya woman (7) have been upheld and so the Calcutta High Court has upheld the marriage of a Vaidya husband with a Kayasth mother as supported by a local custom prevalent in Tipperah (8) and the Allahabad High Court had to concede both the legality and validity of inter-caste marriages between a Brahmin and a Kshatriya woman as supported by the local custom in

(1) Boorchand v. Janokee, 25 W.R. 386.
 (2) Manu III 4, 13.
 (3) Id., III-12.
 (4) Id., III-17.
 (5) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M.I.A. 141;
Chair Gauda v. Ganji, 22 B. 277; Mahan-
man v. Gangava, 11 Bonn. L. R. 822;

Contra Narain v. Rakhal, 1 C. 1.
 (6) Haria v. Kanhaya (1908) P. R. 72.
 (7) Khairu v. Fakirchand (1909) P. R. 57;
 2 I. C. 244
 (8) Ramlal v. Akhoycharan, 7 C. W. N. 619.

Nepal. (1) But both the courts of Bombay and Allahabad have held as invalid a marriage of a Brahmin woman with a Rajput man (2) much less with a Shudra man. (3)

Inter-marriages between mixed castes are permissible (4) and since illegitimate children are held to possess no caste, inter-marriages between them are equally unobjectionable. (5)

It has been held in Burma that there could be no valid marriage between a Hindu male and a Burman Buddhist female. (6)

467. At the present day all over India inter-marriages between sub-castes even when not customary are generally condoned on payment of a small fine. But nowhere are such marriages considered as void. (7) The present tendency is to eliminate all interdiction against sub-caste marriages (8) and to make the connubial limit extend as far as the commensal. In fact this tendency is generally observable in all castes. It will be thus seen that the ban on inter-marriages is caste the direct result of the growing caste exclusiveness. They are least common where caste-conservatism is most rigid. For instance in the Punjab where caste has never taken a strong hold on the people, inter-caste marriages are quite common. (9) But where, as in the United and the Central Provinces and Behar, caste is all in all, inter-caste marriages are highly reprobated. But nevertheless there is no Shastric authority against inter-sub-caste marriages, least of all for territorial interdiction which forbids a Brahmin of the North to marry into a Brahmin family of the South, and the Kayasths of Bengal to intermarry with the Kayasths of the adjacent Bihar.

468. The four rules deducible from the Shastras which still survive in the customs of the people are then these:—

- (1) All Shudras can intermarry. (10)
- (2) Persons belonging to the same primary caste may intermarry notwithstanding any practice against such marriages. (11)
- (3) Persons belonging to the mixed and new castes may intermarry if permitted, to do so by their own custom. (12)
- (4) Where inter-caste marriages are permitted by custom they only permit hypergamous marriages, i.e., they permit only men of the higher caste marrying women of the next lower caste but not vice versa. (13)

(1) Padam Kumari v. Suraj Kumari, 28 A. 458 (461)

(2) Lakshmi v. Kalian Singh, 2 Bom. L. R. 128; Sasipuri v. Dwarka, 10 A. L. J. 181.

(3) Bai Kashi v. Jamnadas, 14 Bom L R. 547.

(4) Daryai Singh v. Narpal Singh, 13 O. C. 375

(5) Sukkh v. Ramcharan, (1892) A. W. N. 27.

(6) Maung Man v. Dermo, 8 L. B. R. 244

(7) Census for India, 1911, Vol. I, S. 472, p. 868.

(8) Bengal Census Report, 1901, p. 956.

(9) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 18 M. I. A. 141; Fakirgauri v. Gangi, 22 B. 277; Mahantawa v. Gangawa, 88 B. 698 (697).

(10) Inderun v. Ramaswamy, 18 M. I. A.

141 (158, 159); Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M. I. A. 346; Ramaswamy v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422 (480, 481); Muthusami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342; Fakir Gauda v. Gangi, 22 B. 277; Mahantawa v. Gangawa, 83 B. 693; Upoma v. Bholaram, 15 C. 708; Contra Narain v. Rakhal, 1 C. 1.

(11) See § 437.

(12) Ramlal v. Akhry, 7 C. W. N. 619; Daraysingh v. Nepalsingh, (1910) 18 O. C. 375; 9 I. C. 71.

(13) Tukaram v. Babaji, 1 Bom. L. R. 144 (158); Ramasami v. Sundaralingasami, 17 M. 422 (480); Shepuri v. Dwarka, 10 A. L. J. 181; 16 I. C. 222; Lakshmi v. Kaliarsingh, 2 Bom. L. R. 128; Bai Kashi v. Jamnadas, 14 Bom. L. R. 547; 16 I. C. 133.

469. As regards the intermarriage of Hindus with non-Hindus the question is one, again, of custom. A Hindu may marry a Christian woman re-converted to Hinduism. <sup>(1)</sup> Even without such re-conversion there is a possibility of a legal marriage if the lex loci permits it. So a Hindu may validly marry a Christian lady in England as the law of England does not prohibit intermarriages between Christians and non-Christians <sup>(2)</sup> but not a Burman Buddhist in Burmah. <sup>(3)</sup> Sikhism is a proselytizing creed. A Mahomedan may be converted to Sikhism. Consequently where a Sikh of position was shown to have co-habited with a Mahomedan woman and there was evidence to show that he was anxious to make her his lawful wife the Court presumed lawful marriage presuming at the same time that the woman must have been converted to Sikhism inasmuch as there was neither a legal nor a customary bar to such conversion. <sup>(4)</sup> In case of conflict between persons belonging to different religions the Courts apply the rules of justice, equity and good conscience <sup>(5)</sup> presuming the legality of a marriage if in fact it was performed. <sup>(6)</sup>

470. Factum valet.—The legal maxim quod fieri non debuit factum valet <sup>(7)</sup> has a recognized place in the application of Hindu Law to cases of adoption <sup>(8)</sup> and marriage <sup>(9)</sup> to cure a mere irregularity in form or an immaterial defect, as where the adoption or marriage is irregularly performed or where the rule against the adoption or marriage of a particular person is simply directory and not obligatory. But the maxim is one of wider application and applies to condone formal defects and disobedience of rules which are merely directory and not imperative. <sup>(10)</sup>

471. Hindu law regards woman as designed by nature to create a son. She was, therefore, to submit herself to Niyog if her own husband was unable to beget one. Polyandry was then customary if it was not then the established rule. <sup>(11)</sup> The twice-born were the first to denounce polyandry <sup>(12)</sup> and Manu speaks of the practice as a tradition. <sup>(13)</sup> He, however, found it still extant in the lower strata of society. "On failure of issue by the husband, if he be of the servile class, the desired offspring may be procreated either by his brother or some other Sapinda, on the wife who has been duly authorized." <sup>(14)</sup> Human jealousy corrected this custom and Niyog fell into disfavour, but the function of woman was yet declared to be the same. Upon marriage her individuality was lost in that of her husband. "No sacrifice is allowed to women apart from their husbands, no religious rite, no fasting; as far only as a wife

(1) Muthusami v. Masilamani, 33 M. 342.

(2) Chetty v. Chetty, (1909) P. 67.

(3) Maung Man v. Daramo, 3 L. B. R. 244.

(4) Dualip Kuar v. Fatti, (1913) P.R. 99: 18 I. C. 930; Sodlie v. Sleersing (1895) P. R. 50; Shidditta v. Bela, (1900) P. R. 60.

(5) Badamea v. Fatima Bi, 26 M. L. J. 260 (264).

(6) Inderun v. Ramasami, 18 M. I. A. 141 (158); Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706 (782); Lucas v. Lucas, 32 C. 187 (191).

(7) "What should not be done, yet being done, shall be valid" is a qualification of the general maxim quod ab initio non valet in tractu temporis non convalescit. (That which is bad in its commencement, does not improve by lapse of time.)

(8) Raja Vyankatram v. Jayavantrao, 4 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 191; Gurlinga v. Rama, 1 Bom. L. R. 226 P. C.; Sukhbasi v. Guman Singh, 2 A. 366 F.B.; Ganga Sahai v. Lekhranj 9 A. 250; Beni Prasad v. Hardai, 14 A. 67 F. B.; Chinna v. Kumara, 1 M. H. C. R. 54; See under Adoption.

(9) Diwali (Bai) v. Moti 22 B. 509; Mulchand v. Bhudia, Ib. 812 (S15).

(10) Balusu v. Balusu, 22 M. 398 (415) P. C.

(11) Manu X. 66.

(12) Ib., X. 64-66.

(13) Ib., X. 66-68.

(14) Ib., V. 161.

honours her lord so far she is exalted in heaven." (1) Even should her lord predecease her, she should not remarry, though this was merely a moral precept. But a widow who from a wish to bear children, slights her deceased husband by marrying again, brings disgrace on herself here below and shall be excluded from the abode of her lord. (2) The growing puritanism of the age soon carried the position assigned to the wife to its logical end. As she was the better half of her husband she could not out live him. Widow marriage was inconsistent with this ideal of wifely duties. The higher castes to whom these precepts were addressed soon made them a part of their customary law, but there were yet those to whom the first impulse of nature was superior to social conventions.

472. They continued to remarry widows if they could not find virgins and so in time, widow remarriage became supported alike by ancient tradition and modern necessity. It will be observed that inter-caste marriages, divorce and remarriages of women are most customary amongst communities where caste is weak, and women scarce. Such is the case in the Punjab (3) where all such marriages have always existed side by side. Where, however, sacerdotal influences have been long at work amongst the ignorant proletariat, as in the United Provinces and Bihar, which have been the strongholds of orthodoxy such marriages are held in disfavour and are merely confined to the Shudras and a few mixed or other upper castes. It will be observed that in castes which permit of widow remarriages, the husband's brother, younger and sometimes elder, has the first refusal. This is a relic of fraternal polyandry, traces of which still remain both in the Aryan and the non-Aryan communities all over India. (4) Only a few such cases can come under notice of the Courts. But further information can be obtained from the Census Reports which record the result of a systematic inquiry made on the subject. The local customs on widow remarriages widely differ. In the Central Provinces and Berar they were regarded as a nuisance and the Zamindars had established a custom to distribute all widows amongst the aboriginal tribes. (5) But as the demand for them grew, they began to be sold and when the British Government succeeded to the Mahratha rule the Zamindars considered it a grievance that their one source of revenue was curtailed by the insertion of a clause in their patent that they shall no longer traffic in widows.

473. Amongst several custom ridden castes wives are permitted to remarry with or without the consent of their husbands. "Where women are greatly in demand, they are correspondingly free to decide with whom they will live, and in a caste of as high a status as the Jadams of Hoshangabad, an endogamous branch of Rajputs, it is said that a woman sometimes has as many as nine or ten husbands in the course of her life." (6) The Courts however decline to succour runaway wives, holding the consent of the first husband essential to the validity of a second marriage. In many cases the consent or acquiescence of the husband is considered essential to the dissolution of the first

(1) Ib. V. 155

(2) Ib. X. 59; according to some a second son may be so procreated. Ib. X. 61.

(3) "There is a great dearth of females in the Punjab" Census of India 1911, Vol. I § 262 p. 208 the average being 811 to per thousand males. In Bihar and Orissa females preponderate, their number being 1,014 to thousand males. The C. P. runs close with 1,019 per thousand; so does Madras with its

1,011 females. The U. P. has 902, Bengal 970, Bombay 942 per 1,000; Ib. 255, 260.

(4) In the Punjab and C. P. See Census of India 1911, Vol. I §§ 292, 298; in Southern India Ib. § 294.

(5) Census of India, 1911, Vol. I, § 299, p. 246.

(6) Census of India, 1911, Vol. I., 297, § 297, p. 245.

marriage, and till its dissolution the woman is not free to remarry. In short, in these castes remarriage recognizes the custom of divorce; the husband being awarded a solatium in the shape of his marriage expenses, while the new husband celebrates the occasion by a caste dinner, called the Marti Jiti <sup>(1)</sup> feast, that is a feast which symbolizes the death of the wife to her former husband and her becoming alive to the new one. Sometimes a writing called Chod Chittu <sup>(2)</sup> is given to the wife to enable her to get remarried, while in some cases the husband, though not a willing party to his wife's remarriage, acquiesces in it on terms. Certain castes permit remarriage of wives upon desertion by their husbands. The Courts uphold all such transactions in which remarriage follows upon a divorce <sup>(3)</sup> or desertion. <sup>(4)</sup> Sometimes the wife remarries with the permission of the elders of the caste but in this case if the husband remains recusant, the elders have neither the power to decree a divorce nor permit a remarriage, and any custom which transfers this power from the husband to his castemen is unreasonable and immoral, legalizing adultery <sup>(5)</sup> which, the Courts would not enforce. <sup>(6)</sup> The remarriage of wives is quite customary amongst the Shudras, <sup>(7)</sup> but it is not unusual amongst even the twice-born castes, e.g., the Sompura Brahmins of Ahmedabad, the Lodhis of the United Provinces, <sup>(8)</sup> the Lingayat Banias <sup>(9)</sup> of the Southern Provinces and many castes, high and low of the Punjab, which is the greatest latitudinarian as regards the custom regulating the relation of the sexes.

474. It has been already seen that the remarriage of widows was at one time not only customary but even obligatory (§ § 27-28).

Remarriage of widows.

It has also been seen how in course of time this practice fell into desuetude till the pendulum of custom having swung to the opposite extreme of enjoining and even ordaining the self-immolation of the newly made widow with the body of her husband (§ 55). These Vedic and Shastric tenets, it seems, remained confined to the twice-born, and amongst them to a few. The British Government abolished the practice of Sati and once more legalized the remarriage of widows <sup>(10)</sup> in quarters in which it had fallen into desuetude.

475. But apart from the Act, widow remarriage was always customary amongst the Shudras. It was customary even amongst some of the higher castes of which the pat marriages of the Mahrathas and the Natra marriages of Guzerat are familiar examples, while the same custom has been traced up to the Gour Rajputs of the United Provinces <sup>(11)</sup> and the Sompura Brahmins of Ahmedabad. <sup>(12)</sup> Of all widow marriages the marriage of the widow to the deceased husband's younger brother is that most favoured and one which needs least ceremony everywhere. It is the modern relic of an ancient custom which was at one time a feature of Hindu society (§ 28).

(1) Lit. "dead and alive."

(2) Lit. "Letter of Release"

(3) Steele's Law of castes, p. 168 et seq;
Reg v. Karson, 2 B. H. C. R. 117; Rahi v. Govind, 1 B 97 (114) Sri Ram v. Inchi 11 A. L. J. 711; 21 I.O. 318.

(4) E. v. Umi, 6 B 126; Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440

(5) Bai Ugri v. Patel Purshottam, 17 B 400 (405, 406).

(6) Reg v. Karson, 2 B. H. C. R. 117;
Narayan v. Laving, 2 B. 140; Uji v. Hathi Lalu, 7 B H. C. R. (A. C.) 438.

(7) Khemkar v. Umai Shankar, 10 B. H. C. R. 381.

(8) Kesaree v. Samardhan, 5 N. W. P. H. C. R. 92.

(9) Virasangappa v. Rudrappa, 8 M. 440 (451)

(10) Widow Remarriage Act (XV of 1856); Civil Marriages Act (III of 1872).

(11) Lachman v. Mardan Singh, 8 A. 134.

(12) Khemkar v. Umai Shanker, 10 B. H. C. R. 381.

476. Customary marriages of Hindu widows were wholly insufficient to check the growing evil resulting from the surplus of unmarried widows, which attracted the notice of the Legislature, which in 1856 passed an Act "to remove all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows." (1) This Act merely supplements the custom, by legalizing the remarriage of widows in cases when their remarriage would have been opposed to custom. The result of this Act coupled with custom is to establish the right of all Hindu widows to remarry; though the result of remarriage under the Act determines her interest in her late husband's property. In other words, while a widow remarrying by custom may retain her first husband's estate if so permitted by custom, one who marries under the Act must of necessity forfeit it because it is so provided therein. (2) The act was never intended to vary the existing custom in favour of remarriage or any of its legal incidents. It was merely intended to enable widows of those castes to remarry who by their custom were prevented from remarrying, and it is only to those and those alone that the Act extends and applies. If her estate is from its very nature limited and its enjoyment conditioned upon her remaining unremarried then her remarriage would necessarily determine her estate. (3)

477. Statutory right of divorce.—Though a marriage under Hindu Law is indissoluble and apostacy furnished no ground for its dissolution, still in the case of converts to Christianity divorce may be secured in accordance with the provisions of the Native Converts Marriage Dissolution Act of 1866, (4) if in consequence of a party's conversion to Christianity, the other party repudiates or deserts the other for the space of six continuous months. (5) In that case the former may sue the latter for conjugal society, (6) and on the respondent's refusal to co-habit for a period of one year allowed by the Court, the Court may dissolve the marriage (7) which may, moreover, be dissolved even without the locus penitentiae for a year, if the marriage was not consummated owing to the fact that either party was then impubes. (8) This Act has not the effect of widening the door for divorce, but merely prescribes and provides for a dissolution where (i) either party, is after marriage, converted to Christianity; and (ii) the desertion or repudiation is solely due to such conversion. If the repudiation or desertion was then due to cruelty or adultery and not to conversion, the Court cannot entertain a suit for dissolution under the Act. (9)

A dissolution under the Act does not affect the status of children. (10)

(1) Act XV of 1856. "In the whole of India no fewer than 11 per cent. of the females aged 15-40 are widowed. Amongst the Hindus the proportion is 12 and amongst Mahomedans 9 per cent." Census of India 1911, Vol. I, 846 p. 278. The widows of all ages number 17 per cent of the total female population as compared to 9 per cent in Western Europe. "When we consider this distribution by age, the difference becomes still more striking, for while in Western Europe only 7 per cent of the widows are less than 40 years old, in India 23 per cent are below that age, and 1.8 per cent (the actual number exceeds a third of a million) are under 15, an age at which in Europe no one is even married." Ib. 880 p. 265.

(2) Har Saran v. Nandi 11 A. 880; Dharam Das v. Nand Lal (1889) A. W. N.

78; Ranjit v. Radha Rani, 20 A 476; Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla 81 A 161; Mula v. Partab, 82 A 489; Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirina 35 A 466; Ashrafi v. Ishri, 11 A. L. J. 693.

(8) Matungini v. Ram Raiton Roy, 19 C. 289; Rasul v. Ram Suran, 22 C. 589 (595); Gourcharan v. Sita, 14 C. W. N. 846; Muhammad v. Mankuar, 21 C. W. N. 906; Murugayi v. Viramakali, 1 M 226; Vitta v. Chatakundu 41 M 1078 (F. B.) Vithu v. Govinda, 22 B. 821; Joharmal v. Nainsukh, 9 N. L. R. 88; See post under "Inheritance".

(4) Act XXI of 1866.

(5) Ib., S. 12.

(6) Ib., Ss. 4, 5.

(7) Ib., S. 16.

(8) Ib., S. 18.

(9) Ib., S. 25.

(10) Ib., S. 27.

478. A marriage is absolute, irrevocable and unconditional by law. <sup>(1)</sup> But it may be rendered conditional by custom. <sup>(2)</sup> Such Conditional marriages. a custom was proved in a case in which a husband had sued for restitution of conjugal rights which the wife resisted on the ground that she had not become his married wife for which a second ceremony on her attainment of puberty was required, and this contention was upheld. In another case, the marriage was in the nature of an exchange of children who were married when only a month old on condition that the son's father should provide a girl to be married to the wife's brother. The Court upheld this mutual bargain holding it justified by the possible paucity of women. <sup>(3)</sup>

But while a marriage may be contracted so as to take effect only upon the fulfilment of a condition precedent, it cannot be cancelled for any breach of condition made for its cancellation. <sup>(4)</sup> Nor can it be conditioned by an agreement to live apart. <sup>(5)</sup>

Marriage expenses. 15 The marriage expenses of all members of an undivided family are a legitimate charge on its property.

479. Analogous Law.—Marriage being a Samskar and an obligatory religious duty binding upon all Hindus, whether Dwijas or Shudras, male or female, it follows that the expenses of marriage constitute a family necessity for which its property may be validly aliened or charged. <sup>(6)</sup> This liability is common to every manager whether the father or any other co-parcener or whether the estate is in the hands of a qualified owner such as a Hindu female. But of course, this amount must not be out of all proportion to the requirements of the case. <sup>(7)</sup> Even the expenses of the second marriage of a male co-parcener are so chargeable. The right to such expenses does not rest on contract. The liability is created by Hindu Law and arises out of the moral relation of the members of the Hindu family.

No valid marriage within prohibited degree. 16. Every marriage is subject to the following conditions, namely :—

(a) That the parties thereto must not be within the prohibited degree of relationship ; and

(b) that if the parties thereto are Dwijas, they must be of the same caste.

(1) Katesram v. Gendhense, 28 W. R. 178
 (2) Boolechand v. Janckee, 25 W. R. 386;
Baiugri v. Patel Purshotam, 17 B 400 (106.)
 (3) Baiugri v. Patel Purshotam, 17 B 400
 (406).
 (4) Chastram v. Nathi, (1900) P. L. K. 198.
 (5) Krishna v. Balammall, 34 M 398
 (6) Sundarabhai v. Shiv Narayana, 32 B.
 81; Kameswara v. Veerachariu, 84 M. 422;
Arunachellam, v. Arunachellam, 10 I. C (M)
 285; Marina v. Doddiseti, (1911) 2 M. W. N.
 280; Seeni Ammal v. Angamuthu, 1912 M. W.
 N. 99; Gopalakrishna v. Venkatanarasa, 87

M. 273; Pohumal v. Naroomal, 6 S. L. R. 246;
 19 I. C. 885; Yelamanchili v. Yelamanchili, 19
 M. L. J. 666; 4 I. C. 1069; Nandan v. Ajudhia, 32 A. 325; F. B. Contra Namasivayam v.
Avramal, 4 M. H. C. R. 389; Seshammal v.
Munisami, Mad unrep. Cited in Sundari v.
Subramania, 26 M. 505; Vaikuntam v.
Kallapiram, 23 M. 512; Govindarasulu v.
Devarabhotla, 27 M. 206.

(7) Raghunatha v. Damodra, (1910) M.
 W. N. 195; 6 I. C. 720; Nandan v. Ajudhia,
 32 A. 325 (282) F. B.

Explanation I.—The prohibited degree of relationship for the purpose of marriage is regulated by custom.

Explanation II—A person shall be deemed to be within the prohibited degree of relationship whose marriage is opposed to common morality.

Illustrations.

(a) The Shastras prescribe that Dwijas' sons who are Sapindas, Gotrajs or who belong to the same Pravar should not intermarry. A. a Dwija wishes to marry B, who is related to A. The validity of their marriage depends upon the usage of the caste.

(b) A has married B, who is his own sister's daughter. The marriage is valid as it is sanctioned by custom.

(c) A Kshatriya marries B, who is the illegitimate daughter of a Kshatriya father. The caste people recognize it as a valid union. The marriage is valid.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Prohibited degrees of marriage(480-483). | (5) Samanapravaras (491).                        |
| (2) Meaning of Sapinda (484-485).                | (6) English rules of prohibited degrees(497) |
| (3) Who are Sapindas (486-489).                  | (7) Shastric rules, how far binding(498-501) |
| (4) Gotrajas (490).                              |   |

480. Analogous Law.—The following texts on the subject of prohibited degrees are to be found in the Smritis. They are all conflicting, many of them too wide, and none of general application.

Manu.—"She who is neither his father's nor mother's Sagotra or Sapinda is commended for the nuptial rite and holy union amongst the twice born classes." (1) "But Sapinda relationship ceases in the seventh degree from the mother and the father" (2)

Yishnu.—"No one should marry a woman belonging to the same Gotra or descended from the same Rishi ancestors or from the same Pravars.

Nor should he marry one descended from his maternal ancestors within the fifth, or from his paternal ancestors within the seventh degree" (3)

Yajnavalkya.—"Let a man who has finished his studentship, espouse an auspicious wife who is not defiled by connection with another man, is agreeable, non-Sapinda, younger in age and shorter in stature, free from disease, has a brother living, is born from a different Gotra and Pravar and is beyond the fifth and seventh degrees from the mother and the father respectively." (4)

Narad—"Persons of the same Gotra and Pravars are ineligible for marriage up to the fifth and seventh degree of relationship respectively on the mother's and father's side." (5)

Gautam.—"A marriage may be contracted between persons who have not the same Pravars and who are not related within seven degrees on the father's side or within five degrees on the mother's side." (6)

Yashisth—"A man may marry a damsel who is the fifth and seventh in degree on the mother's and the father's side respectively." (7)

(1) III-5

(2) Ib V-60

(3) XXIV-10, 11; 7 S. B. E., pp. 106, 107.

(4) I-52, 53

(5) XII 7.

(6) IV 2-5; To the same effect Harit.

(7) Cited in Mit. Note on Yad. 1-58 (Panini Ed.) p. 110.

Paithinas.—"He may marry a damsel related to him beyond three from the mother and five from the father." (1)

Yrihat-Manu.—"She who is not connected by pinda or water, is fit for marriage among the twice-born classes as also she who is distant by three Gotras." (2)

Mitakshara.—"Sapinda relationship arises between two people through their being connected by particles of one body."

"Asapinda":—She whose pinda or body is samana or common one, is called a sapinda; who is not a sapinda, is an Asapinda; such a one (he should marry). "Sapinda" relationship arises (between two people through their being) connected by particles of one body. Thus the son stands in sapinda relationship to his father, because the particles of his (father's body having entered his). In like manner stands the grandson (in sapinda relationship) to his paternal grandfather and the rest, because through his father, particles of his (grandfather's) body have entered into his own. Just so on (the son, a sapinda relation) of his mother, because particles of his mother's body have entered into his own. Likewise (the grandson stands in sapinda relationship) to his maternal grandfather and the rest, through his mother. So also is the nephew a sapinda relation of his maternal aunts and uncles and the rest, because particles of the same body (the maternal grandfather) have entered into (his and theirs); likewise (does he stand in a sapinda relationship) with paternal uncles and aunts and the rest.

So also the wife and the husband (are sapinda relations to each other) because they together beget one body (the son). In like manner, brother's wives are also sapinda relations to each other, because they produce one body (the son) with those severally who have sprung from one body. Therefore one ought to know that wherever the word sapinda is used, (there exists between the persons to whom it is applied) a connection with one body either immediate or by descent."

In the explanation of the word sapinda, it has been said that sapinda relationship arises from the circumstance that particles of one body have entered into the bodies of persons thus related, either immediately or through transmission by descent. But inasmuch as this definition would be too wide, since such a relationship exists in some way or other, amongst all men in this world that has no beginning, the author says—"Fifth and seventh removed from the mother and father respectively."

Kaustubh lays stress on the subject of the prohibited degree being essentially one of custom. He says:—

"Thus it is established that even in the Kali age, marriage within the prohibited degrees is not sinful, if it takes place in families or countries where the alternative of the narrowing of the Sapinda relationship has prevailed through several generations, and if it is in accordance with such usage." (3)

Kaustubh allows marriages of damsels within even three degrees declaring that "even a female of the fourth or third degree on either side may be married in accordance with the usages of the country or family." (4)

So Mandlik observes:—"The question of a proper or an improper marriage is, therefore, always one of usage, to be determined according to the people's achar (practice) and not by mere texts of greater or less antiquity." (5)

481. Within the prohibited degree the Shastras interdict all marriages between sapindas. (6) But this restriction is too widely disqualified as it does exclude no less than over 2,000 relations as compared to 30 relations amongst Europeans. Communal and territorial customs have consequently greatly narrowed

(1) Ib. p. 110. Full text given by Balam Shasth Ib., p. 118.

(2) Cited by Raghunandan

(3) Samskar Kaustubh cited in Mandlik's H. L. p. 418

(4) Samskar Kaustubh cited in Mandlik's H. L. p. 418.

(5) Mandlik's H. L. p. 414.

(6) Yajñavalkya Lit: Mit Ch. III

the circle of prohibited degree. The position of women remains as it ever has been before, one of dependence. Letounneaw <sup>(1)</sup> describes this subjection of woman as a mark of the earlier stages of civilization the development of which strengthens the woman's rights resulting in the recognition of the institution of divorce. It has already been seen how women were classed as chattels in the patriarchal age (§§ 28, 29). That notion accounts for the several matrimonial customs which are neither peculiarly Indian nor, indeed, are they solely confined to Hindus. The woman is still a chattel and her marriage, even in the most approved form of Brahma marriage, is but a gift of her by her father to her husband. Here marriage is not a contract but a sacrament with a special purpose, but there are sacraments in which the gift may comprise a cow, a horse or any article of utility or value. The wife passes into the gotra of her husband and is appropriated by his family as its own. Her primary purpose in life is to beget a son. <sup>(2)</sup> It is immaterial what means are employed so long as that object is achieved. Hence the practice of Niyog or the Levirate which was customary not only amongst the Jews but even among other primitive nations uninfluenced by the Aryan culture. There could be no divorce for divorce implies a freedom of contract in which the rights and obligations are reciprocal; but the rights in a Hindu marriage are all unilateral and the obligations such as they were, were at first merely moral. If the wife was vicious or bore female children the husband could discard her <sup>(3)</sup> though he is bound to maintain her. <sup>(4)</sup> The evil propensities of women must be curbed by keeping them well employed in the performance of household duties. <sup>(5)</sup> The system of polyandry which is a partnership in woman is another outcome of the same view. And to it is traceable the preferential right of marriage of the husband's brother and his other relations to strangers, upon the wife becoming a widow, in whom these relations were regarded as possessing the right of inheritance. <sup>(6)</sup> The absence of any reciprocal rights justified recourse to polygamy, which though originally qualified and limited, became in time absolute and in theory unlimited.

482. From these facts it will be seen that if the sapinda relationship be taken to determine the prohibited degree of relationship for the purpose of marriage then it would extend to eight degrees both on the father's and mother's side according to Manu, seven and five according to Yajnavalkya, six and four according to Vashisth and five and three according to Paithinasi, which is yet too wide if judged by the higher customary practice of the people. <sup>(7)</sup>

(1) Evolution of marriage and family, pp. 247-248.

(2) Manu, III 37, Yad. LVIII. Mit Ch. III.

(3) Manu IX 77-82 Yad. V. 52-53.

(4) Yaj. 74

(5) Manu, IX 10, 11.

(6) All the Smritikars recognize the re-marriage of wives and widows upon desertion by, or death of, the husband. Manu IX.76: Gautam XVIII.15, 17: Vashisth, XVII 78,79: Prasar, IV-80: Narad, XII 97: Ib. XVIII.15, 17: Yajnavalkya, Chap I 86 however impliedly condemns widow remarriages while the Mitakshara gloss thereon counsels self-immolation or Sati citing a text of a Vyas whose identity and text are both unascertainable. But numerous other authorities—Sankha, Angiras and Harit are cited in support of the same practice See Mit. Achar

Kand (Panini Press, Allahabad 1918), pp. 167-175 for quotations from them and others in support of the practice

(7) This is now generally admitted—See Sarkar's H. L (3rd Ed.) p. 67; Mandlik's H. L p. 426 "outsiders can hardly form a correct notion of how present usage has so changed the old structure that but little remains of the old texts; and this change must in each case be carefully ascertained from practice." So Sarkar says: "There is so much divergence between the sages as well as between the commentators on the subject, that it would not be safe to enforce their views as binding rules of conduct" Ib p. 95 He then states "the golden rule of prohibited degrees to be the practice of the people"—Ib. p. 68.

* 483. But the sapinda prohibition is not the only one that stands in the way of the orthodox marriage, for the parties must not belong to the same Gotra or Pravar. These three rules are independent and the fact that a party is not a sapinda does not make him marriageable, for he may be a Gotraj and failing both, he may still be of the same Pravar. It is said that the two latter prohibitions apply only to the Brahmins, since both the Kshatriyas and the Vaishyas have neither a Gotra nor a Pravar but the Mitakshara lays down that the Gotra and Pravar of their family priest are theirs, and so they too are subject to the these limitations. <sup>(1)</sup> But the Shudras are stated to be subject only to the sapinda prohibition, as they have neither Gotra nor Pravar. <sup>(2)</sup>

Meaning of Sapinda. 484. The three terms "Sapinda," "Gotraj" and "Pravar" used by the Smritikars require explanation.

The word "Sapinda" in its etymological sense means one who is of the same "pinda".

The word "Pinda" is a word of uncertain import and may, among other things, mean either a body or a ball. The Mitakshara understands it in the first sense, Raghunandan the accredited writer of the Bengal School understands it in the other. According to the one it means relations who are related to one another by reason of the fact that they possess particles of the same body. According to Raghunandan the word indicates relations of a person with whom when deceased, he partakes of the obsequial offering of the rice ball. This view is forced and far fetched, as will be seen in the sequel while dealing with inheritance. <sup>(3)</sup>

485. According to the Mitakshara meaning, all human beings would be sapindas of one another, as all possess some particles of the same body in common. This was realized by all the smritikars who had, consequently, to reduce that term to a term of art by ascribing to it a limited and restricted meaning. As such, "Sapinda" becomes a technical term, and must, wherever used, be understood not in its primary sense, but in its limited and restricted sense as meaning persons related through a common ancestor, 3, 5, or 7 degrees remote according to the different views of the Smritikars. Taking them up to seven degrees, as approved by the Mitakshara, the sapindas of a person would be his six male ascendants and descendants in the male line of each of the six male ascendants—altogether 48 primary relations. But these are not all. The lawfully wedded wives of these relations as well as of the person himself, are his sapindas, since the sacrament of marriage effects the physical unity of husband and wife.

486. The term "Sapinda" "Gotraj" and "Pravar" are explained in the Mitakshara. Referring to the prohibition against sapinda marriage the author of Mitakshara observes that that term must be understood as limited to the fifth and seventh degree removed from the mother and father respectively. Without any such limitation all people of the world would be sapindas of one another. "Thus the six ascendants beginning with the father, and six descendants beginning with the son, and one's self counted, in each as the seventh, in each case

(1) Mit. Note on Yaj. 1-52 (Panini Ed.) p. 106.

(2) Mit. (Panini Ed.) p. 106.

(3) See Daya Bhag. Ch. XI-S.VI 88: and discussion on the subject under "Inheritance."

are sapinda relations." (1) "So also beginning from the mother and counting her father and grand-father, etc., till the fifth ancestor, is reached is the meaning of the words fifth from the mother." (2) But in the case of children of hypergamous marriages (called Anuloma births), the sapinda relationship extends only up to the third degree. (3)

487. The following table gives the simplest example of this prohibitive relationship.

A.
2 S	2 S
3 D	3 D
4 D	4 S
5 S	5 D
6 D	6 S

Here 6 D cannot marry 6 S because 6 D is within seven degrees on her father's side related to 6 S. But in this case if 6 S were a female, then 6 D could have validly married 6 S because 6 D would then have been more than five degrees remote from her mother related to 6 S through their common ancestor 1 A. But even in the days of the Mitakshara this prohibition was held by some to go too far. Paithinasi is quoted by the Mitakshara as laying down that a damsel may be espoused who is beyond the third on the mother's and fifth on the father's side. (4) In this view 4 D could have validly marry 4 S. On the other hand, Manu prohibits marriages up to the seventh degree on either side (5) which he lays down as the last degree of the sapinda relationship. (6)

These relationships were at one time explained only to refer to the question of marriage. So they do, but they have been held equally to control inheritance. (7)

488. In laying down the limit of sapinda relationship the Smṛitikars follow the canonist rule of computation at variance with the civilian rule followed in Sections 21 and 22 of the Succession Act. The former start counting with the propositus who counts as one degree, while the latter exclude the propositus in their calculation. Consequently, when in the foregoing texts the sapinda relationship is declared to end with the 5th, 6th or 7th degree, it means that it ends with the 4th, 5th and 6th degree according to the modern method of computation.

489. The sapinda relationship described in the ritual section of the Mitakshara has been held to apply equally to inheritance. But when dealing with that subject it will be seen that the term Bandhu is often used in a sense different to sapindas. For the present it may be noted that the two terms are synonymous and were so intended by Narad who in defining the limit speaks of the Sapindas as Bandhus. (8)

(1) Mit. (Panini Ed.) p. 110.
 (2) Ib. p. 110: To the same effect Yashisth, VIII-2; Gautam, IV-2.5, Vishnu XXIV-10; Narad, XII-7.
 (3) Ib., pp. 110, 111.
 (4) Ib., p. 110.

(5) III § 5.
 (6) V § 60.
 (7) Ramchandra v. Vinayek 42 O. 884 (P. C.)
 (8) XII 7. This sense is lost in its translation in 88 S. B. E. 166. See text in original cited in Sarkar's H. L. (3rd Ed.) p. 74.

490. Secondly, some sacred texts (1) prohibit intermarriages of Gotrajs.

(2) Gotraj

What is then a Gotraj? In theory all the twice-born people, according to some, only the Brahmins, are descendants in the male line from certain Rishis or sages who are the accredited progenitors of the race. All descendants from this common Rishi bear a single family name, in the same way as all descendants in the male line from Smith and Brown bear those surnames. Gotrajs are thus persons entitled to the same surname. According to a text cited by Raghunandan there were originally 8 such progenitors, and their names are Agastya, Atri, Bharadwaj, Gautam, Jamdagni, Kashyap, Vashisth and Vishwamitra. (2) But many of their distinguished descendants have founded new families and new Gotras so that the number of such secondary Gotras runs into millions. Every twice-born owns one of these primeval procreators as the founder of his family, and as several thousands of families make the same claim, it follows that Gotraj relationship offers a formidable impediment to the establishment of connubial relations. This relationship is of course, a purely artificial one and its artificiality is acknowledged in the Mitakshara in which it is said that the Kshatriyas and Vaishyas have neither Gotra nor Pravar of their own (3) but that they should follow the Gotra and Pravar of their family priests. (4) Persons belonging to two different castes may possess the same Gotra. This is explained away on the ground that castes were a later development of Hindu society, and therefore the arrangement of the people into castes did not affect their Gotra. It is equally plausible that two families of different castes having the same family priests would naturally adopt the latter's Gotra as enjoined by the Mitakshara, and so Gotraj relationship would in course of time transcend the barriers of caste and the still narrower confines of the sapinda relationship.

(3) Pravar.

491. The question of Pravar still remains. Its meaning is explained by Baudhayana as follows:—

Yamdagni, Bharadwaj, Vishwamitra, Atri, Gautam, Vashisth, Kashyap, Agastya—these Rishis are the makers of the Gotras. Their descendants have founded Gotras. These are thousands and hundred millions. Among them forty nine are Pravars or excellent, from having attained to the wisdom of Rishis and they are founders of Pravars. As long as there is one rishi common to several Pravars, so long there is relationship of the same Gotra excepting the children of Bhrigu and Angiras. (5)

A Pravar then is an approved Gotra and as there are 49 such Pravars some of which have been founded by the same Rishi, those related through such common Rishi are themselves inter-related and so cannot inter-marry. (6)

492. The step-mother and at least some of her relations in the same degree

(4) Step-mother.

cannot be married for "The wives of the father are all mothers, their brothers are maternal uncles, their sisters are mother's sisters, their daughters are sisters, and the offspring of those daughters are children of a sister." Opinions differ as to

(1) Gautam and Vashisth do not mention Gotra at all. See texts cited ante.

(2) Balambhatt names 18 such Rishis—with several sub divisions of each. See Mit. (Acharkand) Panini Ed. pp. 107, 109.

(3) The implication being that they cannot claim the same descent from a saint as the Brahmins.

(4) Ch. III-V. 52: Mit. note thereon p. 108.

(5) प्रवर, Manu does not mention pravar nor does his commentator Kulluk. Like Manu, Brihat Prasara also omits it. See texts cited ante.

(6) Cited in the Parasara Madhava, and Parijat, p. 137: also by Hardutt in Ujvala Balam Bhatt gives a long disquisition on this subject of Gotra and Pravar for which see her gloss to the Mitakshara note to Yaj. v. 52 (Panini Ed.) pp. 107-109: see also Max Muller's Hist. S. L. pp. 195, 200.

whether the relations named are merely illustrative or exhaustive. The western lawyers favour the former, <sup>(1)</sup> the eastern the latter interpretation.

493. Another subject upon which there is a conflict, is the effect of adoption upon the prohibited degrees. Since a son by adoption has consanguinous relationship with one family and relationship by adoption with the other, the question arises whether such son is debarred from marrying all the Sapindas of his natural as well as the adopted family. It is said that if the adoption took place after the boy had the Upnayan ceremony then the prohibition as to marriage in his natural family extends to all Sapindas and his adopted family only to three degrees. If however all the Samskars except the Upnayan were performed in his natural family but only the Upnayan was performed in the adopter's family then the prohibition extends in both families to five degrees on the father's side and three degrees on the mother's side. But if all the Samskars commencing from jatkarm to the Upnayan were performed in the adopter's family then the order of the first case is reversed, the prohibition extending in the adopter's family to all Sapindas and in the natural family only to three degrees. The Nirnai Sindhu would, however, extend the prohibition in all the three cases to all Sapindas of both the families while Nagoji Bhatt would make no prohibition against marriage in the natural family on the ground that adoption severs relationship with the natural family altogether.

(5) Adoption.

If all these precepts had any value, the number of prohibited relations would exceed 6,000, and since there is the other mandatory prohibition against marriage out of caste, an adopted son with a step-mother must be thrice blessed if he can manage to secure a wife, let alone the ideal damsel of Manu's imagination.

As already observed, the courts regard this <sup>(2)</sup> and the other questions of prohibited degree as one, of custom, not of interpretation of the textual law.

494. It might have been thought these triple prohibitions had sufficiently narrowed down the field of selection. But they are not

Other prohibitions.

all. For there are other prohibitions against the marriage of the following non-consanguinous relations, viz. : (1) The step-mother's sister (2) her brother's daughter, and (3) his daughter's daughter (4) the paternal uncle's wife's sister, and (5) the wife's sister's daughter (8) and (6) the preceptor's daughter.

495. General result of the shastric rules.—The net result of the shastric rules as to the prohibited degree of relationship for marriage is to render ineligible no less than 2,100 relations as against the relations with whom marriage is prohibited amongst the Christian nations. It may be doubted whether these restrictions were ever tolerated in practice. From the context it would seem that they were rather in the nature of moral precepts addressed to the adept student, rather than to the people at large in the market place.

It has already been said that in no case does usage sanction such widespread exclusion, and the fourth degree appears to be the utmost verge of a valid prohibition given effect to in practice. And there are a good many marriages within that limit.

(1) Mandlik H. L. p. 352.

(2) Vythilinga v. Vijayathammal, 6 M

(8) Such marriage is valid, Ragavendra v. Jayaram 20 M. 288.

496. These being then the textual rules that are both obsolete and impossible and no other general rules to take their place, the courts leave the question of the prohibited degree to be decided by custom, and no other alternative is possible or suggested even by the stoutest supporters of textual authority. <sup>(1)</sup>

English rules of prohibited degree. 497. In this state of Hindu Law, it may be useful to advert to the English rules of prohibited degree which were set out in a statutory table in 1543 <sup>(2)</sup> as follows :—

(a) Relations a man may not marry :—

A man may not marry his grandmother, grandfather's wife, wife's grandmother, father's sister, mother's sister, father's brother's wife, mother's brother's wife, wife's father's sister, wife's mother's sister, mother, step-mother, wife's mother, daughter, wife's daughter, son's wife sister, wife's sister <sup>(3)</sup>, brother's wife, son's daughter, daughter's daughter, son's son's wife, daughter's son's wife, wife's son's daughter, wife's daughter's daughter, brother's daughter, sister's daughter, brother's son's wife, sister's son's wife, wife's brother's daughter, wife's sister's daughter.

(b) Relations a woman may not marry :—

A woman may not marry her grandfather, grandmother's husband, husband's grandfather, father's brother, mother's brother, father's sister's husband, mother's sister's husband, husband's father's brother, husband's mother's brother, father, step father husband's father, son, husband's son, daughter's husband, brother, husband's brother, sister's husband, son's son's daughter's son, son's daughter's husband, daughter's daughter's husband, husband's son's son, husband's daughter's son, brother's son, sister's son, brother's daughter's husband, sister's daughter's husband, husband's brother's son, husband's sister's son. This table is annexed to the Book of Common Prayer and the only change which has been made is that in reference to marriage with the daughter of a deceased wife has not been legalized, nor has marriage with a deceased husband's brother.

498. Marriageable Sapinda relations.—It has already been stated that the true test of the prohibited degree is custom, and not the textual law. As such, a person may validly marry his own maternal uncle's daughter <sup>(4)</sup> or his own sister's daughter <sup>(5)</sup> or his wife's sister's daughter, <sup>(6)</sup> or his step-mother's sisters, and sister's daughter, his paternal uncle's wife's sister his paternal uncle's wife's sister's daughter, her brother's daughter and his children's daughter <sup>(7)</sup>—any text to the contrary being explained away on the ground that they are merely hortatory and not imperative.

499. So again, marriages by exchange are not only customary but common and everywhere regarded as valid, though they are directly opposed to the scriptural text. <sup>(8)</sup> So Steele mentions cases in which inter-marriages with cousins and nieces, though prohibited, do occasionally take place. <sup>(9)</sup> In a Bombay case, the court however condemned the marriage of a man with

(1) See Sarkar's H. L., (8rd Ed.) 96 : Ghose H. L. (8rd Ed.) pp. 792, 793

(2) (1543) 82 Hen. VIII C. 38. This table is annexed to the Book of Common Prayer and the only change made since is by the Deceased wife's sister's Marriage Act 1907 S. 1 (7 Edw. 7 C. 47) which, after a prolonged struggle, legalized her marriage.

(3) Removed by the Deceased wife's sister's Marriage Act 1907 S. 1. (7 Edw. 7 C. 47.)

(4) Mandlik's H. L. pp. 418, 424 ; The Nirnay Sindhu recognizes the custom Ib ; so does the Achar Madhav Ib p. 418.

(5) Ib p. 425.

(6) Ib followed in Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283 (286, 287).

(7) Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283 (286); Ramchandra v. Gopal 32 B. 619 (680).

(8) Narad cited by Kaustubh 1 196 p. 1. verse and translation in Mandlik's H. L. p. 414 F. N. 8.

(9) Steele's Law of caste, p. 165.

his sister's daughter as incestuous <sup>(1)</sup> but in basing their decision on the Shastric texts <sup>(2)</sup> the learned judges took care to add that there was no allegation or proof of any custom tolerating such a marriage.

500. Precepts merely moral.—A large number of good qualities described as essential in a wife have always been held to be for the guidance of the match-makers. Their absence is not a blot on the marriage. Manu counsels avoidance of ten families "be they ever so great, or ever so rich in kine, goats, sheep, gold and grain."<sup>(3)</sup> These are the families "which have omitted prescribed acts of religion, those which have produced no male children, those in which the Vedas have not been read; those, which have thick hairs on the body, and those which have been subject to hemorrhoids, pthisis, dyspepsia, epilepsy, leprosy and elephantiastis."<sup>(4)</sup> He then gives a long description of the girl to be married: "Let him not marry a girl with reddish hair, nor with any deformed limb; nor one troubled with habitual sickness; nor one either with no hair or with too much; nor one immoderately talkative; nor one with inflamed eyes; <sup>(5)</sup> or one with the name of a constellation, or of a tree, or of a river or of a barbarous nation, or of a mountain, of a winged creature a snake or a slave; nor with any name raising an image of terror."<sup>(6)</sup> "Her who has no brother, or whose father is not well known, let no man espouse through fear, lest in the former case her father should take her first son as his own to perform his obsequies; or, in the second case, lest an illicit marriage should be contracted."<sup>(7)</sup> He then describes the physical qualities which a wife should possess: "Let him choose for his wife a girl whose form has no defect; who has an agreeable name; who walks gracefully like a phenicopter, or like a young elephant; whose hair and teeth are moderate respectively in quantity and in size; whose body has exquisite softness."<sup>(8)</sup>

501. According to the Mitakshara the bride selected should be younger and shorter in size. <sup>(9)</sup> Manu counsels a man aged 30 to marry a maiden of 12 and one aged 24, a girl aged 8. <sup>(10)</sup> Brihaspati thinks that if the age of man is 30 or 21 then the age of the girl should be 10 or 7 respectively <sup>(11)</sup> while the Vishnu Puran declares that the age of the maiden should be a third of that of the man. <sup>(12)</sup> Both Yajnavalkya and Gautam discard these marriages and only enjoin the universal rule that the wife should be younger than the husband. <sup>(13)</sup> In Vedic times women wore the sacred thread with men. Harit refers to the custom and suggests that women should be provided with it on the eve of their marriage. <sup>(14)</sup> In later times even this custom fell into desuetude and Manu sought to reconcile Harit's condemnation of such uninitiated women as Shudras by declaring that their nuptial ceremony had the effect of their initiation. <sup>(15)</sup> In other respects both Yajnavalkya and Vijnaneshwar follow Manu by recommending the selection of a healthy and beautiful virgin for marriage.

They, however, insist on the husband possessing virile power <sup>(16)</sup> to which Narad adds that the husband should be muscular and vigorous. <sup>(17)</sup>

(1) Ramangavda v. Shivaji (1876) B.P.J. 73.

(2) Mandlik shows that even the texts cited do not support the conclusion. See Mandlik's H. L. pp 488, 489.

(8) Manu III-6.

(4) Ib., III-7.

(5) Ib., III-8.

(6) Ib., III-9.

(7) Ib., III-11.

(8) Ib., III-10.

(9) Mit. Achar Kand (Panini Ed.) 101.

(10) Manu IX-94

(11) Cited by Balam Bhatt in Mit. p. 101.

(12) Bk. III Ch. X-16.

(13) Yaj. v 52; Gautam IV-1.

(14) Harit XXI-28; Harit was a Sutra writer and older than Manu.

(15) Manu II-66

(16) Yaj. v. 55-Mit. p. 118.

(17) XII-9.

Any one giving away the girl without disclosing her defects is liable to the same punishment as the husband who deserts his blameless wife <sup>(1)</sup> and is liable to deliver of her a third of his property. <sup>(2)</sup> The removal of the wife is punishable as a thief. <sup>(3)</sup> The wife must submit to the embraces of her husband's younger brother, sapinda or sagotra if she is sonless, till her conception. <sup>(4)</sup> Faithless wives may be deprived of authority but they cannot be deprived of starving maintenance. <sup>(5)</sup> Wives should be respected because they beget sons. <sup>(6)</sup>

Invalid marriages. 17. A marriage may be rendered invalid for any of the following reasons :—

- (1) because the parties were related within the prohibited degree,
- (2) because they were of different non-inter-marriageable castes,
- (3) because they did not observe the essential ceremonies,
- (4) because their marriage was brought about by force or fraud.

Synopsis.

- (1) Prohibited degrees (502).      (3) Non-observance of ceremonies (505).
- (2) Difference in caste (503, 504).

502. The question of prohibited degree is a question of fact to be decided upon the evidence in each case. In the absence of such evidence the court will be guided in its decision by the recorded or reputed law, and if it finds such a marriage, all it can do is to treat it as a nullity. The authorities declare such marriage as wholly null and void, though the woman married is entitled to be maintained as a sister. <sup>(7)</sup> This was the view taken in a case in which a Brahmin had married his niece. <sup>(8)</sup>

503. Inter-caste marriages stand on a somewhat different footing. Those contracted in the face of the Shastric prohibition, e.g., higher caste woman marrying a man belonging to the lower caste, have been declared to be void in places, such as Bombay and the United Provinces in cases in which the parties failed to plead or prove any legalizing custom (§§ 464-645). Such marriages create no legal obligation beyond the one to maintain the wife. Inter-sub-caste marriages are, however, not prohibited by the Shastras though they are not favoured by custom. They are well protected by the doctrine of factum valet and cannot be avoided.

504. The Shastras regard the Shudra caste as a single caste as comprising all who are not Dvijas. As such the numerous castes into which the Shudras have become divided have no scriptural sanction and inter-caste marriage among them are neither prohibited nor unusual. Even

(1) Yaj. v. 66.
 (2) Ib., v. 76.
 (3) Ib., v. 68.
 (4) Ib., v. 68.
 (5) Ib., vv. 70, 74.
 (6) Ib., vv. 76, 82.

(7) Manu III 5; Yajnavalkya 1-52; Mayukh IV-S-5 pt. 29; Macnaghten's H. L. (2nd Ed.) 61; Steele's L. C. (2nd Ed.) pp 26, 80, 168, 166.
 (8) Ramangavda v. Shivaji (1876) 8 B.P.J. 73; Reprint, p. 57.

where a determined stand is made against them, they are likely to be upheld on the ground of factum valet.

506. When a marriage is proved to have been performed in fact it is presumed to be valid in law, since, as observed by the Privy Council, "It would be a most unlikely thing for a person of his caste to go through the ceremony of marriage, if it was known that the marriage was a marriage which was invalid in law."<sup>(1)</sup> In view of the law, ceremony is but the evidence of marriage and where its factum is proved, its form is to be presumed and it lies heavily on one to prove the contrary.

Marriage by force or fraud

18. A marriage brought about by force or fraud may be avoided by the party affected thereby.

Synopsis.

- (1) Avoidance of marriage (506). (2) Force or fraud (507).

506. Analogous Law.—There is Shastric authority for this rule. Taking marriage as either the gift or sale of the bride to the bridegroom the section falls within the general principle enunciated by Manu that force<sup>(2)</sup> and fraud<sup>(3)</sup> vitiate all transactions with which Yajnavalkya<sup>(4)</sup> and Narad<sup>(5)</sup> agree. So referring to marriage, Manu says: "A person may abandon a maiden though taken or accepted in due form of ceremony if she be blemished, diseased, or deflowered and given fraudulently."<sup>(6)</sup> But this is explained as relating only to a stage before the Saptapadi, i.e., its completion.<sup>(7)</sup> This explanation explains away the text which itself did not go far. However, whatever may have been the view of the Smritikars the court regards the rule as well settled, and though slow to give effect to it, where the mischief cannot be retrieved, it will not hesitate to cancel a marriage if it is brought about by force or fraud of either party, or their guardians.

507. A marriage brought about by force or fraud is not void but voidable by the party wronged. But before it can be avoided the Court must be satisfied of the violation of some substantial right and material prejudice; otherwise, it will condone mere irregularities, omissions and errors of procedure which could not be permitted to affect such solemn obligations as those of a marriage: quod fieri non debuit factum valet.<sup>(8)</sup> So the courts have refused to set aside marriages performed without the consent of the lawful guardian<sup>(9)</sup> or where the certificated guardian marries without the consent of the District Judge.<sup>(10)</sup> But the case would be different where a marriage of a minor is performed with no consent at all. Such was the case of the defendant who forcibly married his minor

(1) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M. I. A. 141 (158).

(2) VIII-168.

(3) VIII-165.

(4) Yaj. II-81 Mandlik, p. 204.

(5) IV-9, 10.

(6) IX-72.

(7) Vashisth XVII-78-14 S. B. E. 92; Baudhayan I-14 A-115-14 S. B. E. 814.

(8) "What should not be done, yet being done, shall be valid."

(9) Rulyat (Bai) v. Jeychund (1840-48) Bellasis 43; Mulchand v. Bhudin. 22 B. 812 (815); Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu, 14 M. 816; Brindabun v. Chandra Kumar, 12 C. 140; Khushalchand v. Bai Mani, 11 B. 247; Diwali (Bai) v. Moti 22 B. 509; Gast v Sukru 19 A. 515; Misri Lalsa v. Harlalsa, 16 C. P. L. R. 46; Dayal v. Narain, (1884) P. R. 64.

(10) Diwali (Bai) v. Moti, 22 B. 509.

sister-in-law who had gone on a visit to see his wife. <sup>(1)</sup> So where a woman was entrapped into a marriage without the consent of her guardian and the match appeared to the court unnecessary and unsuitable, it set it aside holding that its invalidity could not be cured by recourse to the doctrine of factum valet. <sup>(2)</sup> So in another case where a minor widow was alleged to have been married by the chakar-andazi ceremony but it appeared that the marriage was performed without the consent of her parents or any other lawful guardian and that the minor though consenting to it was legally incapable of offering herself in marriage the court held the marriage void, as consent which was necessary to the nexus of the marriage was wholly wanting. <sup>(3)</sup> Of course in such cases the want of a previous consent might have been made good by a subsequent acquiescence. The one question which exercises the court in cases of cancellation is whether the party suing for that relief will not be the greater sufferer by reason of the relief granted thereby. Where for instance, the parties or either of them is impubes and the marriage has not been consummated, cancellation would cause no serious injury but where marriage has been followed up by consummation and the wife sues for cancellation, the court may have to consider whether the cancellation would be to her advantage.

19. Where remarriage is lawful, the wife may remarry, if her husband after leaving her, has not been heard of for seven years, by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive.

Presumption of the death of husband.

508 Analogous Law.—This section is based upon S. 108 of the Evidence Act <sup>(4)</sup> which supersedes the varying Hindu rules on the subject. Manu and Narad allow the wife to remarry after the continued absence of the husband for eight years, <sup>(5)</sup> Gautam after six years, <sup>(6)</sup> and Vashisth after five, <sup>(7)</sup> while Hindu Law generally prescribed twelve years as the period after which death might be presumed. <sup>(8)</sup> In all such cases S. 108 of the Evidence Act now introduces a fixed period of absence after which the court will presume death. <sup>(9)</sup> The rule is taken from Taylor's work on evidence. <sup>(10)</sup> It merely deals with a legal presumption as a matter of evidence and does not dispense with the proof of the exact time of death whenever such question is necessary, as it is, for instance, to start limitation. The rule cannot be controlled by the difference of age, sex and state of health which does not set up any counter legal presumption. <sup>(11)</sup>

(1) Lal Chand v. Thakur Devi, (1908) P. R. 49.

(2) Anjona v. Prahlad, 6 B. L. R. 248.

(3) Dayal v. Narain Das, (1884) P. R. 64.

(4) Lalchand v. Thakur Devi, (1908) P. R. 49.

(5) Lalchand v. Thakur Devi, (1908) P. R. 49.

(6) 1 of 1872.

(7) Manu IX-76 : Narad XII-98 : Maonaghten's H. L. p. 9 ; Vyavastha Darpan (Siroar) pp. 10, 11 : Ganganarayan v. Balram, 3 Mor. D. 152 : Ayabati v. Raj Krishna 3 S. D. R. 28 ; Janmajay v. Keshah Lal 2 B. L. R. (A. C.) 184 following Sarda Sundari v. Gobind, 2 B. L. R. (A. C.) 187 note.

(8) Gautam XVIII-15, 17 ; if a Brahmin 12 years, Id.

(7) Vashisth XVII-78, only four years if she has no issue.

(8) 1 Strange H. L. 117 ; Ganesh v. Ragho, (1879) B. P. J. 18 ; Dhondo v. Ganesh 11 B. 438 ; Guru Das v. Matilal, 6 B. L. R. (App.) 16.

(9) Parmeshar v. Bisheshar, 1 A. 58 F. B. ; Dharup Nath v. Gobind 8 A. 614 (619).

(10) Dharup Nath v. Gobind, 8 A. 614 (619, 620). Taylor's statement is based on the decision of Lord Ellenborough, C. J. in Doe d. George v. Jesson, 6 East 84 ; Doe d. Lloyd v. Deakin 4 B. & A. 438 ; and Stat. 19 Car. 2 C. 11 S. 1.

(11) Underwood v. Wing, 28 L. J. Ch. 982 O. A. 24 L. J. Ch. 298 affirmed in Wing v. Angrave 8 H. L. C. 188 ; Re Green's Settlement L. R. 1 Eq. 289.

509. Remarriage of deserted wife.—Narad sanctions the remarriage of a wife in the following cases of legal necessity :—

“ When her husband is lost or dead, when he has become a religious ascetic, when he is impotent, and when he has become expelled from caste : these are the five causes of legal necessity in which a woman may be justified in marrying another husband.”<sup>(1)</sup>

This section merely deals with one of these causes, viz., disappearance of the husband for seven years. As the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act only legalizes the marriage of all widows, and this section furnishes presumptive evidence of the husband's legal death, it follows that on expiration of this statutory period, the wife is entitled to consider herself a widow and get remarried under the Act. In other cases, the validity of her remarriage must depend upon the force of custom. Even in the cases provided for in the section, the husband must not only be absent for seven years, but he must not have been heard of for that period by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive. This does not mean that these people should have heard from him. All that the section requires is that the missing man should have become untraceable and no one should know where he is or be able to say that he had heard of his existence. This is a question of fact, to be proved in the first instance, to create a prima facie presumption upon which the wife is entitled to act. If the husband afterwards reappears he cannot maintain restitution against his wife or claim her as his own—for the law severs the link on expiration of seven years.

Mutual rights and obligations upon marriage.

20. The following rights and obligations arise upon marriage :—

(a) As to the husband—

1. He is his wife's natural guardian during her minority.
2. He is entitled to her conjugal society.
3. He is bound to maintain her.
4. He cannot divorce her unless he is allowed to do so by custom.
5. Should she predecease him, he is entitled to inherit her property.
6. He has no right over her Stridhan, which he may, however, use in a time of great distress.

(b) As to the wife—

1. She is bound to live with her husband unless he is guilty of cruelty or misconduct.
2. She is entitled to retain her Stridhan as her separate property.
3. She is entitled to sue, and is liable to be sued, in respect of her Stridhan, as if she were a feme sole.

---

(1) Narad XII-97 ; To the same effect Parasar IV-80 ; Manu IX-76.

4. She cannot divorce her husband unless she is allowed to do so by custom.
5. Should her husband predecease her, she may be entitled to inherit his separate property : otherwise she has the right of maintenance and residence in the family dwelling house.
6. She has no right over her husband's property during his life-time beyond the right of maintenance and residence.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Husband's status and rights upon marriage (510-512). | (5) Restitution of conjugal rights (517-518). |
| (2) Polygamy (513).                                      | (6) Procedure (519).                          |
| (3) Divorce (514).                                       | (7) Limitation (520).                         |
| (4) Wife's rights on marriage (515-516).                 |  |

510. Husband's status and rights upon marriage.—(On the conclusion of the essential ceremony of marriage, the wife absolutely passes into the potestas of her husband, and her marriage with him becomes absolute and for ever indissoluble. No deformity or disease (1) not even congenital impotency (2) is a disqualification to a lawful marriage. Still less is it a ground for its dissolution. Even if the husband be a lunatic that fact is no ground for its dissolution, (3) though the contrary was conceded in a case, but in which the reasons given did not warrant the conclusion. In deciding that case it was said that there was no sufficient or reliable evidence to justify the conclusion that the unsoundness of mind was of such a character as would render the marriage invalid by reason of the fact that the husband was incapable of accepting the bride during the marriage ceremony and of understanding what was going on. (4) This is seldom possible in the customary child marriages and it is never regarded as a condition of their validity. (5)

511. A Hindu marriage cannot be annulled because it was contracted without the consent of the lawful guardian. (6) It cannot be avoided by mutual consent of the contracting parties, (7) nor for the violation of the terms of any agreement upon which it was conditional, such as for instance, an agreement

(1) Rameomary (In re) 18 C. 264; Dyal v. Narain Das (1984) P. R. 64 (case of leprosy)

(2) Manu IX §§ 79, 89 208; Mit 11-X §§ 9-11; Mayukh Ch IV, S. XI § 11; Vivad Chint. (Tagore) 244; Smriti Chandrika Ch. V. § 32; Jimut Vahan Ch. v. § 18; Narad XI §§ 8-19.

(3) Dahya Churn v. Radha Churn 2 Mor. Dig. 99; W. & B. H. L. (3rd Ed.) 208.

(4) Mouji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 (708); O.A. Id. at pp. 706 707, (P.C.)

(5) But under English Law the marriage of a lunatic is absolutely void even if it takes place during a lucid interval—Turner v.

Meyers 1 Hag. Con 414; Marriage of Lunatics Act, 1811 (51 Geo. 3. C. 87).

(6) Bai Rulyat v. Jeychund, 1 Mor. N. S. 181; Golames v. Juggessur, 3 W. R. 193; Madhoo v. Jadub, 3 W. R. 194; Kushalchand v. Bai Mani, 11 B. 247; Bai Diwali v. Moti, 22 B. 509; Mulchand v. Bhudisa, 22 B. 812; Bai Ramakore v. Jannadas, 27 B. 18; Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu, 14 M. 316; Ghazi v. Salru, 19 A 515; Kasturi v. Chiranjilal, 35 A. 265; Maya Devi v. Ramchand, (1916) P. R. 20 : 31 I. C. 186.

(7) Chaitram v. Naiti, (1900) P L. R. 193.

against polygamy, <sup>(1)</sup> or that the husband should never remove the wife from her parents' house and that he would not leave it without his mother-in-law's permission. <sup>(2)</sup>

512. The husband is the lawful guardian of his wife, <sup>(3)</sup> and is entitled to the enjoyment of her person and society. If she refuses he can maintain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights. But against this suit she may defend herself on any of the following grounds, namely: that the husband was suffering from some loathsome disease such as syphilis or leprosy, <sup>(4)</sup> or that he was outraging her wifely feelings by keeping a mistress in the house, or was guilty of habitual cruelty towards her, or apart from cruelty, was guilty of a grave matrimonial offence <sup>(5)</sup> or had become converted to an alien faith, <sup>(6)</sup> and thereby or otherwise forfeited his caste, <sup>(7)</sup> though on the latter point the courts have struck a discordant note. <sup>(8)</sup> Even where the court decrees possession it may make its decree conditional imposing upon the husband conditions to secure his wife's safety, health and welfare <sup>(9)</sup> though such a condition cannot be that the husband must provide his wife with a separate house and separate maintenance. <sup>(10)</sup> He has no right over his wife's Stridhan, over which his wife has complete mastery, though the husband is allowed to draw upon it in a moment of pressing necessity. <sup>(11)</sup>

513. A Hindu is unrestricted as to the wives he may marry. The fact that he has already a wife or wives living is no disqualification to his polygamy. <sup>(12)</sup> Even if he has given an agreement to the father of one of his previous wives not to marry during his wife's life-time, such agreement is invalid, being opposed to the policy of Hindu Law <sup>(13)</sup> and polygamy being legal, it might be attacked even as a restraint on marriage under the general law. <sup>(14)</sup>

514. Divorce.—From its very idea of a sacrament a Hindu marriage is held to be indissoluble. The effect of the marriage upon the wife is to transfer her both bodily and spiritually from her parental family to that of her husband. She adopts the Gotra of her husband and becomes united to him in flesh and blood. <sup>(15)</sup> "During the husband's life-time, he is to be regarded by the wife as a god, and the wife is declared to be half the body of her husband, equally

(1) Sitaram v. Aheeree, 20 W. R. 49 (50); contra Gama v. Laharoo, 4 N. L. R. 83 following Allen v. Jackson, 1 Ch. D. 899 overlooks the fact that Hindu Law allows polygamy which English Law prohibits and consequently any agreement against polygamy may be attacked even as a restraint on marriage under the general law. S 26, Contract Act (IX of 1872.)

(2) Sitaram v. Aheeree, 20 W. R. 49; Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751; Contra Kawasji v. Sirindai, 22 B. 279.

(3) Bai Premkuvar v. Bhika, 5 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 209.

(4) Lalla Gobind v. Dowlat, 14 W. R. 451; Jogundro Nundini v. Hurry Dass, 5 C. 500; Dular Koeri v. Dwarka Nath, 82 C. 284; Dular Koer v. Dwarka Nath, 84 C. 971.

(5) Manu IX-79; Dular Koeri v. Dwarka Nath, 84 C. 971 (1980-1985) following Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, (1895) A. C. 884; Russell v.

Russell, (1897) A. C. 897; Yamna Bai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164

(6) Muchoo v. Arzoon, 5 W. R. 285.

(7) Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78; Bai Jina v. Kharwa, 81 B. 866; Surjomoni v. Kalkinta 28 C. 87.

(8) Binda v. Kaunsilia 18 A. 126; Sobadur v. Rajwant, 27 A. 96; Jamna v. Mulraj, (1907) P. R. 49.

(9) Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751; Jamna v. Mulraj, (1907) P. R. 49; Moonshee Busloor Raheem v. Shamsoo Missa, 11 M. I. A. 607.

(10) Chimanlal v. Normada, 4 Bom. L. R. 820.

(11) Mit. Ch. II XI-82, 88; Daya Bhag Ch. IV-1-19-25; Tukaram v. Gunaji, 8 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 129; Mohima Chander v. Durga Monee, 28 W. R. 184.

(12) E. v. Lazar, 80 M. 550.

(13) Sitaram v. Aheeree, 20 W. R. 49 (50).

(14) S. 26 Contract Act (IX of 1872).

(15) Apastamb, 2 S. B. E. 187; Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751 (758).

sharing the fruit of pure and impure acts and no sacrifice or religious rite is allowed to her apart from the husband's. Hence it is, that after the husband's death, the widow is regarded as the surviving half of his body; the union is a sacred tie and subsists even after the death of the husband."<sup>(1)</sup> This view leads to several results. Being the union of the two souls, the death of the husband does not set the wife free to remarry; and during his life-time there can be no divorce for whatever reason <sup>(2)</sup> unless it is permitted by custom. <sup>(3)</sup> Neither adultery <sup>(4)</sup> nor even prostitution <sup>(5)</sup> degradation by conversion to Mahomedanism <sup>(6)</sup> or other religion or forfeiture of caste <sup>(7)</sup> dissolves a Hindu marriage.

This is the normal law. Its inflexible rigour has however been to a certain extent modified by legislation <sup>(8)</sup> and custom, <sup>(9)</sup>

515. Wife's rights on marriage.—Upon her marriage the wife not only leaves her parental home but severs her connection with it as completely as if she had never been born therein. She abandons the Goitra of her parents and passes into and assumes that of her husband into whose family she is received as a daughter <sup>(10)</sup>, but in which she has no individuality apart from her husband. She is however entitled to separate ownership of her wedding gifts <sup>(11)</sup> Apart from custom she cannot divorce her husband or be divorced by him for any cause or misconduct. The tie is inseverable and cannot be broken owing to her adultery <sup>(12)</sup> prostitution and consequent degradation from the caste, <sup>(13)</sup> or ex-communication therefrom; <sup>(14)</sup> and even conversion to an alien faith has not that effect. <sup>(15)</sup> But the husband may desert such a faithless wife, <sup>(16)</sup> refusing to provide her with even a starvation allowance unless she is penitent, <sup>(17)</sup> though the Smritikars admit her right to a bare sustenance. <sup>(18)</sup> But this is merely a moral injunction and does not create any legal obligation.

(1) Per Ghose, J in Tekait v. Basanta, 28 C. 751 (758)

(2) Kudomee v. Joteeram, 8 C 305 (306); Ram Kumari (in re) 18 C 264 (269); Tekait v. Basanta, 751 (758); Binda v. Kaunsilic, 18 A 126 (158); Narain v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4 (6); Sinnammal v. Administrator General, 8 M. 169 (178); Administrator General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466 (470); Vasudeva v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (161); Thapita v. Thapita, 17 M. 285 (242); Subbaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (176); Surampalli v. Surampalli, 31 M. 888 (840).

(3) E. v. Umi, 6 B. 126, (128); Bai Vigli v. Nansa Nagar, 10 B. 152 (154); Kudomee v. Joteerama 8 C 304 (306); Jukni v. Q. E., 19 C. 627 (628, 629); Sankaralingam v. Subhan 17 M. 479

(4) Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (176, 178) followed in Narain Das v. Tirlok, 29 A. 48.

(5) Subharaya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (178); contra Komineymoney In re 21 C. 697.

(6) Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871.

(7) Government of Bombay v. Ganga, 4 B. 880

(8) Bisheshur v. Mata, 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 300.

(9) Act XXI of 1866.

(10) § 471.

(11) Lallubhai v. Cassiba, 5 B. 110 (118) (P. C.)

(12) See Stridhan post.

(13) Subbaraya v. Ramasami, 23 M. 171 (176, 178); Narain Das v. Tirlok, 29 A. 4; Sundari v. Nemje, 6 C. L. J. 872; Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 F. B.

(14) Hiralal v. Tripura, 40 C. 650 F. B., Narumayya v. Tiruvangadathan, 24 M. L. J. 223; Contra Bhutnath v. Secretary of State, 10 C. W. N. 1085.

(15) Q. v. Marimuthu, 4 M. 249.

(16) Manu IX. 46; Vashisth XXVIII 2-3; Bishashur v. Mata Gholam, 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 300; Government v. Ganga, 4 B. 880 (882); Gobardhan v. Jasadamoni, 18 C. 252; Ramakumari (In re) Ib 264; Sundari v. Pitambari, 32 C. 871; Administrator General v. Anandachari, 9 M. 466; Miltard (In re) 10 M. 218; Thapita v. Thapita, 17 M. 285; Budansha v. Falma Bi, 26 M. L. J. 260; (Contra in Sinnammal v. Administrator General 8 M. 169) dissented from.

(17) 2 Dig. S. 80.

(18) Mit. XI. 49; Valu v. Gangu, 7 B. 84; Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108; Subbaya v. Bhavani, 24 I. C. (M) 390; Contra if widow, Honamma v. Timannbhai, 7 B. 84.

516. The wife may claim separate maintenance for any just cause against her husband, if, for instance, he was guilty of cruelty to her <sup>(1)</sup> or lived in adultery, <sup>(2)</sup> with a low caste mistress and thereby affronted her modesty, <sup>(3)</sup> or was suffering from insanity, incurable or loathsome disease, <sup>(4)</sup> or became a convert to an alien faith, such as Mahomedanism or Christianity. <sup>(5)</sup> The wife may defend herself for any libel upon her by her husband. <sup>(6)</sup> If improperly deserted, she may maintain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights against her husband. <sup>(7)</sup>

517. Restitution of conjugal rights.—The husband being by his jus connubii entitled to the society and service of his wife, is entitled to the custody of her person. He is not bound by any agreement to the contrary <sup>(8)</sup> unless so bound by his tribal custom. <sup>(9)</sup> The Courts however, do not entertain suits for possession of the recalcitrant wife or of the husband and the only relief available to an aggrieved spouse is that implied in a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights. <sup>(10)</sup> Even this cannot be decreed to him unless the wife has attained puberty. <sup>(11)</sup> The wife may resist such a suit by the same defences which entitle her to live apart from her husband.

Shortly stated, these grounds are:—

1. Cruelty, physical or moral, rendering co-habitation unsafe to the wife's health or personal safety. <sup>(12)</sup> But an isolated act of unkindness or cruelty is insufficient. <sup>(13)</sup> So the fact that the husband slapped his wife <sup>(14)</sup> or made an unfounded imputation upon her chastity <sup>(15)</sup> or snatched her jewels or married another wife <sup>(16)</sup> is no defence. So, even if the cruelty be great, it might have been condoned, though this cannot be presumed from the wife's mere continuing to live with her husband after her ill-treatment. The question what amounts to legal cruelty depends upon no novel view of Hindu Law since the same principles which guide the English Court in decreeing judicial separation equally hold good here. <sup>(17)</sup> Apart from physical injury the Courts recognize the force of legal cruelty apprehended from the fact that the husband was

(1) Bhawani v. Subhag, 12 A. L. J. 995; Yamuna v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (178); Sidlingapa v. Sidava, 2 B. 684; Matangini v. Jogendra, 19 C. 84; Sitabai v. Ramachandra, 12 Bom. L. R. 378.

(2) Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 M. 470.

(3) Administrator General v. Ananthachari, 9 M. 466 (470); Dular v. Dwarkanath, 32 C. 284 (289); Dular v. Dwarkanath, 34 C. 971.

(4) Bai Premkuar v. Bhika, 5 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 209.

(5) Muchoo v. Arsoon, 5 W. R. 285; Administrator General v. Ananthachari, 6 M. 466 (470); Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78;

(6) S. 499 I. P. C.; Contra Deekoonwar v. Umba Ram, 1 B. 370 is no longer law.

(7) Bindu v. Kausilia, 13 A. 126; Yamuna Bai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (166, 167); Dadaji v. Rukma, 10 B. 301 (310, 311);

Kaseeram v. Gendhenee, 23 W. R. 178; Jogendra v. Harry Doss, 5 C. 500 (505); Surjyamon v. Kali Kanta, 28 C. 37. (42-44).

(8) Tekait v. Basunia, 28 C. 751; Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78 (79, 80).

(9) Lenga v. Penguri, 20 C. W. N. 406;

30 1 C. 796.

(10) Chotun v. Ameer Chund, 6 W. R. 105 (107); Koobur v. San Khansama, 8 W. R. 467; Metaram v. Thanooram, 9 W. R. 552; Gaiha Ram v. Moobta, 23 W. R. 179. See as to execution O. 21 R. 32 C. P. C.

(11) Santosh v. Gera, 23 W. R. 22; Dadaji v. Rukmabai, 10 B. 301 (311); Arumuga v. Viraragahava, 24 M. 255.

(12) Dular v. Dwarka Nath, 34 C. 971; Yamunabai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (178); Matangini v. Jogendra, 19 C. 84; Binda v. Kausilia, 13 A. 126 (184); Sitabai v. Ramchandra Rao, 12 Bom. L. R. 378.

(13) Sita Nath v. Haimabutti, 24 W. R. 377.

(14) Jogendra Sundari v. Hurry Doss, 5 C. 500 (507); but a blow followed by minor acts may be enough—Waddell v. Waddell, 2 S. W. & Tr. 584.

(15) Yamunabai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (178).

(16) Jeebo v. Sundboo, 17 W. R. 522.

(17) Buzloor v. Shumoonissa, 11 M. I. A. 551 (615); Yamunabai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (174).

suffering from insanity<sup>(1)</sup> or any loathsome disease such as, leprosy or syphilis<sup>(2)</sup> or abominable practices such as sodomy or bestiality<sup>(3)</sup> but not impotence.<sup>(4)</sup>

2. Immorality: such as that the husband was living in adultery with a low caste woman.<sup>(5)</sup> But the mere keeping of a mistress is insufficient as the practice of concubinage is common in this country<sup>(6)</sup> and concubines have a legal right to maintenance.<sup>(7)</sup>

518. The wife's claim to maintenance may be enforced by a suit under the common law, or it may be enforced by a petition under S. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The provisions of the two may to a certain extent overlap but S. 488 provides a summary remedy limited as to the amount awardable, but it does not bar the wife's right of suit, though in decreeing maintenance the Civil Court will no doubt take into account the amount already payable to the wife under that section<sup>(8)</sup>.

[For further information on the subject see the chapter relating to maintenance.]

519. Procedure.—On marriage, the husband becomes entitled to the custody and care of his wife and he may assert his right by either getting himself appointed as the certificated guardian of his wife<sup>(9)</sup> or by maintaining a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights. He cannot sue for possession, for though the husband is entitled to the possession of his wife, he cannot maintain a suit therefor as the courts do not regard the wife as a chattel, but as a human being upon whom no further coercion is justifiable than what the law considers it necessary to exert in execution of a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights, that is, by ordering the wife to return to her husband<sup>(10)</sup> and if she refuses then the court may detain her in the civil jail for six weeks,<sup>(11)</sup> attach her property, or both.<sup>(12)</sup> The Court is not bound to decree restitution merely because the husband claims it. It has power to refuse that relief on a proper case being made out,<sup>(13)</sup> and it may qualify its decree by imposing terms on the husband,<sup>(14)</sup> as that the husband should provide the wife with a suitable residence away from that in which the husband has kept his mistress,<sup>(15)</sup> or that the decree was subject to the husband being restored to caste.<sup>(16)</sup> In a case where the wife had gone wrong, and had in consequence been put out of caste, the plaintiff undertook to get her re-admitted into the caste but the court considered her re-admission necessary before any decree could be passed for restitution.<sup>(17)</sup>

(1) Binda v. Kaunsullia, 18 A. 126 155; Hall v. Hall, 3 S. W. and Tr. 347.

(2) Pemkuvar v. Bhika, 5 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 209; Yamuna Bai v. Narayan, 1 B. 264 (178).

(3) Bromley v. Bromley, 2 Add. 158 N.

(4) Purshotam Das v. Mani, 21 B. 610; Contra Devala cited 2 Dig. 470: but ancient authorities which recognized Niyog do not regard impotency as a disqualification to the exercise of marital rights.

(5) Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78 (81); Dular Koer v. Dwarkanath, 32 C. 284 (289); Dular Koer v. Dwarka Nath, 34 C. 971.

(6) Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 M. 470 (474 N).

(7) Ningareddi v. Lakshmanwa, 26 B. 163; Kamanarasu v. Buchamma, 28 M. 282 (291).

(8) Cf. Kuppa v. Singaravelu, 8 M. 825.

(9) Guardian and Wards Act, Act (VII) of 1890) S. 21.

(10) O. 21, R. 32, C. P. C.

(11) Ib 8 58 (b)

(12) O. 21, R. 32 (1), C. P. C.

(13) Surjyamonni v. Kali Kanta, 28 C. 37 (46, 47). But this must amount to a material offence upon which the English Courts would refuse relief. Ib. p. 43: in case of non-attainment of puberty Suntosh v. Geru, 23 W. R. 22.

(14) Bazloor v. Shumsoonissa, 11 M. I. A. 551 (615). Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78 Jogendranandani v. Harydas 5 C. 500.

(15) Jogendra Nundini v. Hurry Doss, 5 C. 500 (508).

(16) Paigi v. Sheonarain, 8 A. 78

(17) Surjyamonni v. Kalikanta, 28 C. 34 (47).

In such a suit if the validity of the marriage is disputed, it is not enough to find that the marriage took place leaving it to be presumed that the rites and ceremonies necessary to constitute a legal marriage in the particular case were performed. The Court must find specifically what those rites and ceremonies are, and whether they were performed. (1)

520. Limitation.—A suit for restitution must be instituted within six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. (2) Such right would arise when there was a demand for and a refusal of co-habitation, but this is not necessary for the plaintiff's cause of action, (8) which for the purpose of jurisdiction is deemed to arise at the husband's house. (4)

521. The minority of the husband is no ground for refusing restitution (5) since minority does not disqualify the husband from being the lawful guardian of his minor wife in preference to her parents (6) though the court will not decree restitution unless the wife has attained puberty. (7) If the wife is removed from his custody, the husband may apply to the Court under S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act for its resumption, and the court will order it if it will be for the welfare of the ward. The husband may obtain an order of the nature of habeas corpus if his wife resides anywhere within the original jurisdiction of the presidency towns of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras. (8) The husband can maintain a suit for damages against any one restraining his wife. Every person, who receives a married woman into his house, and suffers her to continue there after he has received notice from the husband not to harbour her, is liable to an action for damages unless the husband has, by his cruelty or misconduct, forfeited his marital rights, or has turned his wife out of doors, or has by some insult or ill-treatment compelled her to leave him. (9)

522. As a party wronged, the husband may recover damages against a person committing adultery with his wife. (10)

The measure of damages depends on the deprivation suffered by the husband of his wife's society and affection, the loss to him of his wife's services and assistance in domestic affairs, and the social injury which he is likely to incur from the insult and dishonour which the adulterer has inflicted upon him against which the court has to weigh the conduct of the husband towards his wife and the adulterer with a view to judging whether or not he has contributed to the mischief of which he complains. The ability of the adulterer to pay damages is not generally to be taken into account. (11)

21. (1) In a case relating to conjugal rights there must be, except as otherwise expressly provided, proof of the performance of marriage and its validity.

Proof and presumption of marriage

(1) Ib. p. 50.

(2) Art. 130. Sch. I to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908); Krishna v. Badammal, 24 M. 898; Chotun v. Amerschand, 6 W. R. 105.

(8) Binda v. Kaunsillia, 13 A. 126 (189); Pakirgauda v. Gangi 28 B. 897 (810); Surjyamoni v. Kali Karta, 28 C. 46.

(4) Lilitagar v. Suraj Bai, 18 B. 816.

(5) Guardian and Wards Act VIII of 1890, S. 21.

(6) Ib. Ss.19, 41 (d); Kaseeram v. Gendhene, 23 W. R. 178; Dhurnidhur (In re), 17 C. 298; Surjomoni v. Kalikania, 28 C. 87 (45).

(7) Arumuga v. Viraraghava, 24 M. 255.

(8) Cr. P. C. S. 491.

(9) Addison on Torts 802, cited per Melville, J. in Yamunabai v. Narayan, 1 B. 164 (174, 175).

(10) Soodasun v. Lokenath, Mont. 619

(11) Per Phear, J. in Kelly v. Kelly, 8 B.L. R. (O. C.) 67 (69)

(2) In other cases marriage may be presumed from continuous co-habitation, conduct and repute.

(3) Such presumption of marriage cannot be rebutted by mere proof of its improbability.

(4) When the fact of marriage is proved, it will be presumed that it was performed:—

(a) in the approved form

(b) with due ceremonies and was otherwise a valid marriage and that

(c) it continued during the life-time of either party.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Presumption in favour of marriage (524-525). | (4) Presumption of marriage in Brahma form (532).          |
| (2) Proof of marriage (526).                     | (5) Presumption as to due performance of ceremonies (533). |
| (3) Presumption of valid marriage (527-531).     | (6) Presumption of continuance of marriage (534).          |

523. Analogous Law.—This is an important section, and all its clauses are amply supported by authorities. (1)

524. Principle.—This section embodies an important principle. There is a presumption in favour of morality, and consequently, if it is found that a man and a woman have co-habited and passed as a married couple, law presumes marriage, if marriage between them was at all possible. For this purpose it will presume compliance with every detail necessary to legalize a marriage. The law is jealous for the honour and reputation of the home and the family,

(1) Clause (1)—S. 50 Ev. Act; Surjyamoni v. Kali Kanta, 28 C. 37; Smith, 4 W.R. (Cr.) 3; 4 W.R. Cr. 10; Arshad Ali, 13 C.L.R. 125; Pitambur, 5 C. 566 F.B.; Danesh v. Tafir, 7 C.W.N. 143; Basanta Kumar, 26 C. 49; Bhagu, 17 Bom. L.R. 75; Kaliu 5 A. 238; Dal Singh, 20A. 166; Nasir Khan, 36 A. 1; Santok Singh, (1898) A.W.N. 186; Syed Munir, 14 N. L. R. 28 and cases cited in Gour's Penal Law (2nd Ed.) § 5181, 5190.

Clause (2)—S. 50 Ev. Act-ill (a); Ma Wun Di v. Ma Kin, 35 C. 232 (240) P. C. (caution necessary); Monji Lal v. Chandratati, 38 C. 700 (706, 707) P.C.; Ghasanfer Ali v. Kaniz Fatima, 32 A. 345 (350) P. C.; Nath v. Bhag Singh, (1910) P.W.R. 54; 6 I C 661; Ratan v. Nathu Singh, 16 C. P. L. R. 85; Sastry v. Sembecutty, L. R. 6 A. C. 864; Sivarama v. Veerappa, 28 I. C. (M.) 828; Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706 (732); Lucas v. Lucas, 32 C. 187 (191); Begun Behari v. Atul Krishna, 17 O. W. N. 494.

Clause (3)—Piers v. Piers, 2 H. L. C. 331; Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. and Fin. 163 (265) 47 R. R. 50; Lopez v. Lopez, 12 C. 706 (752);

Luchmi Koer v. Roghu Nath, 27 C. 971 (978); P.C. Imambundi v. Matasuddi, 15 C.L.J. 621, 13 I. C. 678; O. A. 35 M. L. J. 422=45 I. A. 83 (P. C.); Moji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 701 (706, 707) P. C.; Bopin B hari v. Atul Krishna, 15 I. C. 328.

Clause (4a).—Thakur Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram, 11 M. I. A. 189 (175); Gangaram v. Ballia, (1876) B. P. J. 26 (29); Keser Bai v. Valab, 4, B. 188 (197); Gojaban v. Shabajirao, 17 B. 114 (117); Chunilal v. Surajram, 33-B. 433 (437); Jaganmath v. Norayan, 35354 B. (559); Jadoonath v. Basunt Coomar, 19 W.R. 264 (266); Jaganmath v. Ranjit, 25 C. 354 (366); Thayammal v. Annamalai, 19 M. 85; Authikasevalu v. Ramannujam, 32 M. 512, 515, (516); in Jai Kisondas v. Harkisondas, 2 B. 9 (14), it is said to be matter of enquiry but this is no longer tenable.

Clause (4b)—Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M. I. A. 141 (158); Brindaban v. Chundra Kurmoker, 12 C. 140.

Clause (4c)—Bhima v. Dhulapa, 7 Bom. L. R. 95.

and it presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and a woman have co-habited continuously. The presumption of marriage is a presumption of a very special kind much stronger than most presumptions. "The presumption of law is not lightly to be repelled. It is not to be lightly broken in upon or shaken by a mere balance of probability. The evidence for the purpose of shaking it must be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive." (8)

525. A presumption in favour of marriage arises from mere co-habitation, conduct or repute. (4) Marriage being so presumed it warrants another presumption in favour of the legitimacy of all children born in wedlock and within 280 days of the death of the husband or dissolution of the marriage. This is proof by presumption; but legitimacy may be proved aliunde as where a child was born after 357 days of the husband's death and at least 365 days from the last coitus the court considered the prolonged period of gestation as unique though not impossible and decided against its legitimacy on that improbability supported as it was by other evidence. (1)

The other presumptions specified in clause (3) are consequential, and justified by the fact that a person going through the form of marriage is most unlikely to omit its ceremony. (2)

526. Proof of marriage and its validity.—In cases between the husband and wife, created by or in respect of rights arising out of the marriage relation, such as divorce, the restitution of conjugal rights and offences and wrongs committed in violation of the marriage vow, if the marriage is denied, it is incumbent on the party relying upon any right consequent thereon, to prove both the factum of marriage as also its validity by proof of the nature of the ceremonies performed and their legal or customary sufficiency. (3) This strictness of proof is justified by the nature of the rights involved and their dependence upon the legality of marriage; while in criminal cases the sanctity which law attaches to the person of its subject requires that no one shall be condemned for violating any person's marital rights unless there was clear proof that he possessed those rights. The higher standard of proof required in such cases justifies the necessity for positive evidence, which as to the factum may be furnished by the witnesses who were present at the marriage or by the production of the register, or certified copy or of such other record as the law of a country or custom of a class may provide, (4) while its validity may be established by the examination of the caste panches or of those whose evidence is otherwise relevant. The Court will make no presumption when law requires proof of fact by positive evidence. In cases affecting the liberty of third parties law requires not only positive but also independent evidence and the evidence of the husband or of the wife that they were married is insufficient. (5)

527. Except in cases previously mentioned, law presumes and presumes Cl. (2) Legal pre- strongly in favour of marriage from the fact of continuous co-habitation, conduct and repute. In cases affecting the legitimacy of children this presumption is very strong indeed, though where there are no children and the validity of the

(1) Per Lord Lyndhurst in Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. and F. 163 cited by Sir Barnes Peacock in Sastry v. Sembecuttly, 6 A. C. 864 (372).

(2) Sastry v. Sembecuttly, L. R. 6 A. C. 864.

(8) Tikam Singh v. Dhan Kunwar, I. L. R.

24. A. 448.

(4) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M. L. A. 141 (158).

(5) S. 50, Evidence Act

(6) Pitambur, 5 C. 566 F. B.; Kallu, 5 A. 288.

(7) See Gour's Penal Law (2nd Ed.) §§.

marriage is alleged, the presumption is yet strong, though not as strong as in the other case. <sup>(6)</sup> The Court will make every possible presumption against bastardy presuming not only the marriage but due compliance with all the forms and ceremonies of marriage and the removal of all impediments, if any, existing in the way of marriage.

528. This rule was put to a somewhat severe test in a case in which the court had to presume marriage on the following facts. One Sirdar Thakur Singh, a Hindu Sikh Jat, owned a large estate in the Jullundhar District. He died in 1907 leaving him surviving his two widows, his mother and a Lady Lal Kuar (alias Mt. Fatti) who claimed to be his married wife. She was the daughter of one of his Mahomedan tenants, and had been married to one Dulla but had lived with the Sirdar for four or five years up to his death. In 1904 he had secured for her a divorce from her husband on payment of Rs. 750. In a suit between his widow Dalip Kuar and Fatti, the former contended that there was and could be no valid marriage between her husband and Fatti who was a Mahomedan. The trial judge held with the plaintiff, but on appeal, the Divisional Judge reversed the decree presuming that Fatti had been married because the Sirdar called her by the name "Lal Kuar" and had obtained her divorce from her former husband. As for the religious impediment, the Court held that Sikhism was a proselytizing creed and the conversion of a Mahomedan to Sikhism being possible, there was no insuperable obstacle in the way of their marriage. These facts were concurred in by the Chief Court who presumed marriage from the lady's co-habitation with the deceased Sirdar, his procuring divorce for her and from the fact that she was known by a new name, all of which symbolized a changed status. <sup>(1)</sup> The same court had previously in other cases upheld inter-caste marriages between a Jat and a Brahmin woman, <sup>(2)</sup> opposed to all shastras, and even suggested the possibility of a marriage between a Hindu casteman and a Mahomedan woman, if tolerated by the caste people. <sup>(3)</sup>

529. But in a Burmah case decided by the Privy Council a similar presumption was contended for, but their Lordships, while conceding the principle, counselled caution in its application to Oriental people amongst whom open co-habitation without marriage was not so exceptional as in the Western countries. The case was however, an exceptional one. The alleged husband of the plaintiff, who sued for a share of his estate as his widow, was a Burman and had his house and wife at Moulmein in Burmah. He paid business visits to Siam where he co-habited with several women, admittedly concubines, including the plaintiff whom both the courts in India found to be the same. The Privy Council was, however, pressed to apply the presumption, but they found themselves unable to disturb the finding of fact, upholding it on the ground that the presumption, though natural, was in this case weakened by total absence of habit and repute inasmuch as the deceased had lived in a place where there were not many people to act the part of neighbours, or the public, and at all events there was no tangible evidence of the recognition of the plaintiff in her quality of wife, by people external to the house and independent of it: "What evidence she has, is that of the people who either speak to the abandoned marriage ceremony or distinguish her position in the house as one of more consequence, and her stay in it as of longer duration, than those of the other women. In truth, when all is said, there is little

(1) Re M'Longhin's Estate, (1878) 1 L.R.

421.

(2) Dalip Kuar v. Fatti, (1918) P. R. 99 ;
18 I. C. 980.

(3) Ship Ditta v. Bela, (1900) P. R. 50.

(1) Sodhi Kartar v. Sher Singh, (1895)
P. R. 50.

more pointing to marriage than the use of the word 'wife' by some of the witnesses ; and the most cursory, as well as the most careful examination of the evidence shows that it is applied to persons whose status is not matrimonial." (1)

530. But, as already remarked, this was an exceptional case and one in which their Lordships were moved to depart from their usual practice of letting alone concurrent findings of fact of the courts in India based upon the evidence that the plaintiff lived like the rest of the three other concubines of the deceased, that the witnesses called by the plaintiff to prove the contract and ceremony of her marriage did not support her, that though the Buddhist law permitted polygamy, it was rare and that the plaintiff never lived or associated with the married wife of the deceased who had no reason to contract a marriage with plaintiff when he could have followed, as regards her, the custom he did in fact follow as regards the remaining three of his mistresses. A similar argument was addressed to the same Board in an appeal from Ceylon (2) in which the parties were Tamil settlers in that island. The plaintiff claimed a share in her husband's estate against his surviving brother, who denied her marriage. The trial judge held it proved that she had co-habited with the deceased and given birth to a child which survived the deceased a few months. On appeal the Supreme Court dismissed her suit practically holding that the plaintiff had failed to discharge the burden. On appeal to the Privy Council it was contended that the burden had been misplaced in the court below who should have presumed marriage from the facts found by the trial judge, which the defendant had not rebutted by proof of any specific facts disproving the marriage. In upholding this contention, Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, held that continuous co-habitation raised a strong presumption of marriage which not only might, but ought to be drawn and which could not be rebutted by the mere proof of improbability: "The evidence for the purpose of repelling it must be strong, distinct, satisfactory, and conclusive." Mere proof that no one knew what ceremonies constituted marriage amongst the Tamil settlers in the locality or that the marriage was interrupted and all its ceremonies remained unperformed is not enough. (3) It was contended for the respondent that in a district where concubinage was not considered as immoral, the same presumption would not arise, but their Lordships wholly dissented from that view, observing that because a number of persons live in a state of concubinage it is not to be presumed that a man and woman who were living together as reputed husband and wife were not lawfully married. (4)

531. The same view was reiterated in another case in which the plaintiff claimed to be the wife of a dissolute Bairagi Mahant married seven months before his death which the trial Judge held proved but with which finding the High Court did not agree. It appeared that the Mahant was a libertine and had contracted diseases induced by his excesses of which he died when he was under thirty years of age, and the plaintiff had only lived with the deceased for seven months before his death. There was further the direct evidence of the factum of marriage of several respectable witnesses. Their Lordships considered these facts sufficient to raise a strong presumption in favour of the plaintiff's marriage which the defendant could not rebut by mere proof of its improbability on the grounds of the disparity of age and status, the health and disease of the deceased Mahant, the absence of religious motive for the

(1) Ma Wun Di v Ma Kie, 35 C 292 (240, 241) P. C.

(2) Sastri v. Sambecuttu, L.R. 6 A.C. 3361

(3) Sastri v. Sambecuttu, L. R. 6 A. C. 364 (370, 372).

(4) Ib., p. 371.

marriage, and the unlikelihood of a man in his position going without attendants to marry plaintiff in a place distant from his home. The deceased had left a will in which he had made no provision for the plaintiff whom he referred to therein not as his wife but as if she were unmarried. This last fact was held to weigh against the plaintiff and to shift the presumption arising in her favour. Her claim was consequently decreed. (1)

532. The presumption that a Hindu marriage is in a Brahma form is

(4) (a) Presumption of Brahma Marriage. made upon similar considerations, the presumption being founded upon what ought to be and is ordinarily done. It has already been seen that of the eight recognized forms of marriages the two forms now extant are the Brahma and the Asur marriages, which are open to all Hindus the Shudra being equally free to contract a Brahma marriage (2) and a twice born-being equally free to contract an Asur one. (3) In fact the form of marriage nowadays is not so much determined by the caste of the contracting parties as by the natural law of supply and demand.

533. The presumption of marriage necessarily implies a presumption of the

(4) (b) Presumption of due ceremonies due performance of all its essential ceremonies. This presumption is justified by the fact that no one intending to marry would go through the form without its ceremonies if he knew that their non-observance would invalidate the marriage. (4) It is a strong legal presumption and one which cannot be rebutted by any evidence which merely raises a counter-presumption, that is, evidence which is merely inferential and does not directly attack the marriage on any of its essential ceremonies. To be of any value such evidence must be clear, cogent and conclusive. (5) In the Breadalbane Peerage case the House of Lords went so far as to hold that the presumption was one which not only might, but ought to be drawn from co-habitation with habit and repute although the co-habitation commenced with a ceremony which was not only invalid by reason of the real husband of the woman being alive at the time, but was known by both parties to be so. (6) Such presumption of marriage was made even between a Pariah and Burmese woman. (7)

534. Since it is not usual for married persons to divorce each other, there

(4) (c) Continuance presumed. is naturally a presumption in favour of the continuance of a marriage. Such presumption is all the greater in the case of a Hindu whose marriage is normally indissoluble. In monogamist countries the fact that a person was remarried would necessarily carry with it the presumption of dissolution of the previous marriage by death or divorce. But there is no room for any such presumption in the case of Hindus.

(1) Luchmi Koer v. Roghu Nath, 27 C. 971 (1977-79) P. C.

(2) Sivarama v. Bagavan, (1859) M. S. D. 44; Aiskisondas v. Harkisondas, 2 B. 9 (18, 14).

(3) Nundlal v. Tapeedas, 1 Borr. 14 Keshov v. Naor, 2 Bcrr. 194; Vijayarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B. H. C. R. (O.C.) 244; Visvanathan v. Saminathan, 13 M. 88.

(4) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M. I. A. 141 (158).

(5) Hewries Peerage claim L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 258 (268.)

(6) Piers v. Piers, 2 H. L. C 881; Morris v. Davies, 25 Cl and F. 865 (888).

(7) Breadalbane's case L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 269 cited in Sastry v. Semitecutty, 6 A. C. 864 (872). (The report of the case cited however, does not contain the passage quoted by their Lordships who must have taken it from the journal of The House of Lords.)

CHAPTER IV.

AFFILIATION AND LEGITIMACY.

535. Topical Introduction.—The two following facts are a common feature of all primitive societies. First, the existence of a patriarchy; and secondly, ownership by the patriarch of his wives and children and disposing of them as would a present day-farmer his live stock. The joint family system which was only an incident of the patriarchal system postulated one undivided head, who was the father, who held sway and exercised complete dominion over all members of his household. The evolution of the modern conception of marriage and sonship is the outcome of ages of culture. The patriarch of primitive society sold and hired out his wives and children exactly in the same way as the keeper of a livery stable today sells or hires out his horses. Slavery was recognized and the father freely requisitioned the services of other men to beget children upon his wives whom he sold into slavery as a matter of routine business. But since male children are not only more useful but also necessary for the protection of the family and of the tribe against hostile aggression, it follows that they would be more prized than mere girls who being helpless could be seized by force or theft. The necessity for males being established, the necessity for begetting or buying sons followed as a matter of course. The civil law conferred special privileges on the father of three or more sons, and it popularized the institution of adoption (§ 552). The primary motive for adoption was thus entirely secular. The religious halo which came to surround this social necessity is a later development, and due to priestly laudation of a purely defensive act of which the mainspring was the instinct of self preservation. The son in archaic society took the same place as a recruit in a modern regiment. And that term did not convey what it has come to mean since.

536. The Sanskrit writers enumerate twelve kinds of sons, as they describe eight kinds of marriages (§§ 59 and 63). Some enumerate as many as 17 kinds. The Dattak Mimansa mentions 15 kinds, <sup>(1)</sup> and Baudhayan 13. <sup>(2)</sup> Their description will show how loose was the primitive conception of family and sonship. These facts apparent to every student of social archæology have only become gradually established. As recently as 1834 the Privy Council were unable to trace the history of the law of adoption to the natural gregarious instinct of animal creation. "The law of adoption" their Lordships observed: "owes its origin to the timorous superstition of the inhabitants of India. That people vainly imagining that by leaving male children in this world they secured themselves against the torments of the next, seem to have been so anxious to obtain natural or adopted sons that they have established but imperfect securities against fabricated adoption." <sup>(3)</sup> But the real explanation of the origin of subsidiary sons is to be found in the primitive conception of family relations, and the exigencies of the time.

537. A society in which the sole security lay in the strength of its members welded into a defensive and offensive alliance for mutual support and self-protection could not think of the fears of a future purgatory any more than a herd of deer or a flock of geese. The spiritual element was a fiction introduced

(1) II. 57.

(2) 14 S. B. E. 228.

(3) Sootrugun v Sabitrya, 2 Knapp. 287.

later to emphasize a precept when the necessity for it became less obvious. This is even evident in the pages of Manu, who said: "The rule is that women who are devoid of valour and destitute of scriptural learning are useless." (1) Those who added to the physical strength of the social unit counted, the rest were relegated to a position of dependence and lifelong servitude. The blind, the deaf, dumb or lame and those suffering from bodily infirmity which detracted from the tribal strength were not fit for inheritance. They contributed nothing to its strength, and they could not, therefore, share in its rights. The patriarchal family was a self-centred state of which the father was its king. He levied an income-tax from the dependant relatives owned by him. They had no property of their own. All that they had earned belonged to the patriarch. "A wife, a son, and a slave are devoid of property; whatever they acquire becomes his whose they are." (2) Being their father's chattel, even his death did not determine their obligation to discharge his debt even if he had left no assets. (3) But otherwise the patria potestas being removed the sons commenced to enjoy a certain measure of independence. This then is the common genesis of the law of sonship and adoption.

538. It has already been seen that the primitive notions of the relationship of sons and wife were considerably loose. The Hindu law-givers describe several kinds of sons, most of them of 12 kinds, of whom the first six are placed in the category of heirs, the remaining six being merely classed as kinsmen who are not entitled to inherit to their father. But neither in the description nor in the order, do the sages agree.

Manu describe the twelve sons as follows:—

Class 1 (Heirs):—

- (1) Son begotten by a man on his own wedded wife (Auras son).
- (2) Son of the appointed wife, that is a son begotten on his wife by others with the permission of her husband.
- (3) Son of his appointed daughter.
- (4) Son by adoption.
- (5) Secretly born son of an adulterous wife.
- (6) Son discarded by his natural parents and brought up by another.

Class 2 (Kinsmen):—

- (7) Son of an unmarried woman.
- (8) Son of a pregnant bride.
- (9) Son bought.
- (10) Son by a twice married woman.
- (11) Son self-given, i.e., (an orphan or one abandoned by his parents and accepted by another as his son.)
- (12) Son by a Shudra wife.

539. These sons gradually dropped out of account (1) as society became more settled and the notion of family relationship more defined. The Mitakshara

(1) IX-18.
 (2) Manu VIII-416.
 (3) Yaj II-50.
 (4) Manu, IX-159; Baudhayan, II-2, 3, 31-33, 14 S. B. E., p. 298; Gautam Ch. XXVII-82-84; 2 S. B. E. 803, 804; Yaj. II, 132, 134 classifies them in a different order. Vishnu (XV-1-80) and Vashisth, (XVII-12-3) agree with each other but differ from Manu with whom Yama cited in Dattak Chandrika

V-3) and Narad (XIII-45-47) generally agree. Brihaspati (2 Dig 349) regards only two sons, viz., Auras (one's son) and that of the appointed daughter as entitled to inherit, the rest being merely kinsmen and so relegated to the second class adding "The sons made in various ways by the ancient Rishis, the powerless modern people have not the power to make in the Kaliyug (or present age)" cited in Datt. Mim-1.64 (Sutherland) p. 16.

mentions all these sons <sup>(1)</sup> but agrees with Brihaspati in regarding all but the Auras son and that begotten on an appointed daughter as disentitled to inherit. <sup>(2)</sup> It adopts Yajnavalkya's order of merit as follows:—(1) Auras son, (2) Son of an appointed daughter, (3) Son of the wife begotten by a husband's kinsman, (4) Son of the wife secretly produced in the house by illicit intercourse, (5) Son of an unmarried woman considered as son of his maternal grandfather, (6) Son of a twice-married woman, which means a wife re-married or one who had previous intercourse with another man though she be not actually married a second time. <sup>(3)</sup> The wife whose husband is impotent and has therefore been enjoyed by another falls into the same class. (7) Adopted son, (8) Son bought, (9) Son made (Kritrim), i.e., "one adopted by the person himself, who is desirous of male issue; being enticed by the show of money and land, and being an orphan without father or mother; for, if they be living, he is subject to their control." <sup>(4)</sup> (10) Son self-given, i.e., "one who being bereft of his father and mother, or abandoned by them without cause, presents himself, saying "Let me become thy son." <sup>(5)</sup> (11) Son accepted "is a son, who being in the womb, is accepted when a pregnant bride is espoused. He becomes son of the bridegroom." <sup>(6)</sup> (12) Son deserted (Apavidit) "is one, who having been discarded by his father and mother is taken for adoption. He is son of the taker." <sup>(7)</sup> According to the Mitakshara all these sons are entitled to succeed in the order of their seniority. <sup>(8)</sup> But if they all co-exist then the Mitakshara makes no distinction between the legitimate and the appointed daughter's sons giving each an equal share. <sup>(9)</sup> These it regards as the primary or superior sons, the rest being spoken of as the secondary, subsidiary or inferior sons who receive a quarter share. <sup>(10)</sup> It then enters into a disquisition into other matters relative to the rights of all these sons, but they have long since disappeared from that category, and the only sons now recognized are the Auras and the adopted sons, though the law books will be found loaded with minute details of the other ten vanished sons.

It has been stated that the wide conception of sonship owes its origin not to the notion of spiritual advancement but the stern necessity of the age.

Children defined.                      22. (1) Children may be natural or adopted. Of these the former may be legitimate or illegitimate.

(2) A legitimate child is one begotten by a person on his lawfully married wife.

(3) An illegitimate child is one begotten by him on one who is not lawfully married to him.

A lawfully begotten son is called Auras putra.

(4) An adopted son is one legally adopted by or to a man as his son.

(1) Ch. 1-Sect XI, §§ 1-9 16-19. 22.
 (2) Ib., § 3
 (3) Vishnu, XV-8, 9 : Cole. Mittak. Ch. 1-Sec. XI-8
 (4) Mit. Ch. 1-Sec. XI-17.
 (5) Ib. § 18.

(6) Ib., § 19.
 (7) Ib., § 20.
 (8) Ib., § 22.
 (9) Ib., § 23.
 (10) Mit. Ch. I-S. XI § 24.

A son taken in adoption is called Dattak putra or adopted son.

Synopsis.

Different kinds of children (540).

540. Analogous Law.—The only children now possessing any legal status as such are the natural and adopted children. Natural children may be legitimate or illegitimate and may belong to either sex, though except in the case of dancing women, a child taken in adoption must be a male. But legally there is no legal impediment to the adoption of a daughter so that the father may theoretically possess children of either sex who are either natural or adopted. Of the 12 kinds of sons of various degrees mentioned by the ancient law-givers (§§ 538-539) only two now survive, viz., the legitimate son and the son by adoption. Of these the legitimate son calls for no notice. His legitimacy is a question of proof or of presumption to be made in accordance with the next rule. The adopted son is a subsidiary son and one still recognized. The law relating to him will be found set out in the next chapter.

541. This chapter deals only with the status of natural children, and of these, the subject may be considered in the following order.

(i) Presumption of legitimacy, (ii) proof of legitimacy, (iii) proof of illegitimacy, (iv) status of a legitimate son, (v) status of a legitimate daughter, (vi) status of an illegitimate son, (vii) status of an illegitimate daughter.

Presumption of legitimacy of 23. The legitimacy of a child born of a married wife of a person is conclusively presumed in the following cases, namely:—

(a) where it was born during the continuance of the marriage.

(b) or within 280 days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried, unless it is proved that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when it could have been begotten.

Illustrations.

(a) A had validly married B in the morning. B was delivered of a child in the evening. The child is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to disprove it.

(b) A had validly married B. After his marriage A became an ascetic. He visited B casually now and then. B was delivered of a child. It is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to prove that by reason of his vow, A could not have begotten it.

(c) A validly married B. A was then aged 10 and B aged 14. A few months after the marriage, B was delivered of a child. The child is the illegitimate child of B since A could not have begotten it.

(d) A aged 30 married B aged 15. B subsequently gave birth to a child. It is the legitimate child of A and B, and evidence cannot be given to disprove it.

(e) A had validly married B. A child was born to them in wedlock. Evidence is led to prove that B was congenitally impotent. The evidence is admissible as proving sexual non-access.

Synopsis.

- (1) Presumption of legitimacy (2) Proof of non-access (545).
 (542-547). (3) Other presumptions (548).

542. Analogous Law.—The rule here enacted is adapted from S. 112 of the Evidence Act which enacts a rule in consonance with both the English and Hindu Laws <sup>(1)</sup> but at variance with that of the Mahomedan law. <sup>(2)</sup> The former treat a child as legitimate whenever conceived if it was born in wedlock but the latter treats it as legitimate only if the parties were married at the date of conception. The Evidence Act now formulates a general rule and this section merely reproduces it here, being equally applicable to Hindu Law.

543. The word “access” used in the proviso is held to mean “generating access,” <sup>(3)</sup> i.e., such access as made conception possible. It has accordingly been held that the presumption may equally be rebutted by proof of impotency in the husband. <sup>(4)</sup> Non-accessibility in this sense was pleaded in a case in which however the husband’s incapacity due to illness was alleged, but not proved. <sup>(5)</sup> The period of 280 days fixed in clause (b) is regarded by the obstericians as about the maximum period of normal gestation, though instances are on record of the period being as much as 311 days and in some rare cases it may extend to even 322 days. <sup>(6)</sup> The Evidence Act takes the usual period for presumption and leaves other cases to proof.

544. Presumption of Legitimacy.—The presumption of legitimacy under this section is conclusive if it is proved or admitted that the child was born in wedlock. <sup>(7)</sup> But since marriage may itself be the subject of a presumption <sup>(8)</sup> it follows that in order to raise the presumption of legitimacy all that is necessary is to prove birth of the child of the wife within any time however short or long after marriage up to 280 days of the death of the husband or divorce of the wife by him. This presumption is conclusive in the sense that it is not open to the parties to rebut it in any way otherwise than as stated in the proviso. Consequently, such presumption cannot be rebutted by proof that the child was begotten by some one else, or that other people had likewise access to the wife <sup>(9)</sup> or in fact by any other circumstances of general improbability.

545. The only fact allowed to be proved in rebuttal is non-access to the wife. This includes, as previously remarked, not only non-access in fact but also non-access in a sexual sense such as precludes the possibility of conception. Evidence may then be led to prove that the husband was impotent, <sup>(10)</sup> too young or too old, or otherwise incapacitated to beget a child. The fact that the parties lived apart or that the husband had remarried, and deserted and

(1) Per Lord Langdale in Jeswant Sing v. Jet Singh (1844) 6 W. R. 46 (47) P. C.; Per Sir Barnes Peacock in Pedda Anani v. Zemindar of Marungapur (1874) 14 B. L. R. 115 (122) P. C. S. 112 of the Evidence Act was drawn from the statement of the common law in the Bombay (Peerage) case 1 Sim. St. 158.

(2) Per Lord Langdale in Hargrave v. Hargrave 9 Beav. 552 (556).

(3) Ashrafoddowlati v. Hyder Hossain 11 M. I. A. 94.

(4) Danbury (Peerage) case 1 Sim and St.

158: Cope v. Cope 1 M. and Rob. 275; Bury v. Hilpot 2 My. and K. 345.

(5) Narendra v. Ram Gubind, 29 C. 111 (125) P. C.

(6) 2 Taylor Med Jur (4th Ed.) p. 265.

(7) S. ante: Ghazaffar Ali v. Kaniz Futema, 11 C. L. J. 649, P. C. Manji Lal v. Chandrabati, 38 C. 700 P. C.

(8) Umra v. Mhd. Hayat, (1907) P. R. 79.

(9) Macris v. Davies, 3 C. & P. 215; Cope v. Cope, 5 C. & P. 604; Wright v. Moldgate, 3 C. & K. 158.

(10) Rozario v. Ingles, 18 B. 468.

discarded his wife would not exclude the presumption, unless there was proof of non-access to her <sup>(1)</sup> evidence as to which must be cogent and almost irresistible. <sup>(2)</sup> Such evidence was furnished in the case where the wife had admittedly lived in open concubinage with another man and they both had acknowledged the children born of them. <sup>(3)</sup>

546. The same presumption in favour of legitimacy continues for a period of 280 days after dissolution of the marriage by death or divorce. Considered as a rule of limitation the day of death or dissolution would probably be excluded.

547. But apart from presumption, legitimacy may be the subject of direct Proof aliunde. proof, though where one can rest his case on so conclusive a presumption it would be not only supererogatory but at times risky, to attempt it.

548. Other presumptions.— Besides the conclusive presumption in favour of legitimacy, others may arise from circumstances the strength of which must naturally vary in each case. So in a case of disputed legitimacy of the plaintiff on the ground that there could be no legal marriage between his mother who was alleged but not proved to be a dancing girl attached to a Pagoda and his father who was a Zemindar, it was found that both were, however, Shudras belonging to different castes between whom inter-marriage was uncommon and its legality doubted. The evidence on both sides was conflicting and that adduced by the plaintiff as to how his mother (co-plaintiff and his next friend in the case) was married to the Zemindar false. But their Lordships held that the evidence failing the presumption remained: "The legal presumption in favour of a child born in his father's house of a mother lodged, and apparently treated, as a wife, treated as a legitimate child by his father, and whose legitimacy is disputed after the father's death, is one safe and proper to be made; and the opposing case should be put to strict proof."<sup>(4)</sup> The plaintiff's claim was consequently decreed.

In the case of disputed legitimacy it is the child and not its mother that possesses the "legal character" referred to in S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act to obtain a declaration as therein provided. <sup>(5)</sup>

24. Every child, whether legitimate or illegitimate, possesses the right of maintenance against its father or his estate. Provided that in a family subject to the Bengal School, such right, in the case of an illegitimate child, ceases upon its attaining majority.

549. Analogous Law.— The children's right of maintenance against their father is supported by the jus naturale and is recognized in all systems of law. It underlies S. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which prescribes a summary remedy for maintenance of wives and children limited to a monthly allowance not exceeding Rs. 50. The common law right here declared is independent of that section and may be enforced by suit. In the case of legitimate issue the right is lifelong but both the Mitakshara and the Daya-bhag qualify it in the case of illegitimate issue, the former by continued

(1) C. F. R. v. Mansfield, 11 Q. B. 441.

(2) Bosville v. Attorney-General, 12 P. D. 177.

(3) Bahadur Singh v. Vru, (1906) P. R. 23.

(4) Ramamani v. Kulanthas 14 M. I. A. 346 (365-366)

(5) Lutifan v. Moorti, 23 C. W. N. 171.

service and obedience to the head of the family, the latter by his age and capacity to earn his own livelihood. (1) According to Yajnavalkya the illegitimate child of a regenerate father is entitled to maintenance not as a matter of consideration, as a provision against starvation and vagrancy, but as a matter of right and in recognition of his status as a member of his father's family and by reason of his exclusion from inheritance. As in the case of females of the family or of disqualified heirs, an illegitimate son is entitled to maintenance as long as he lives, and he possesses such right independent of his earnings, though they cannot be ignored in fixing his maintenance. But though the claim while it lasts may be charged upon the inheritance it still remains a purely personal claim and is not a heritable right. (2) It is not settled that the right of maintenance is independent of the mode of illegitimacy, so that the child whether born of a permanent mistress or a concubine is equally entitled to it. (3) The right of the child cannot be affected by reason of the fact that it was the issue of an adulterous intercourse. (4)

550. The amount of maintenance depends upon circumstances. It must bear some relation to the position and property of the father but an illegitimate son cannot claim a share therein in the guise of maintenance. (5) In one case the court decreed it at Rs. 25 per mensem but the value of the estate did not enter into its calculation, and it was treated merely as a compassionate allowance. (6) In another case the person entitled to maintenance was in possession of the inheritance the income from which yielded only Rs. 150 per annum which was found insufficient to maintain the claimant. The heir asserted his right to possession of the estate which the court decreed but burdened it with the payment of that amount though it represented the entire profit received therefrom. (7)

551. It has been held in a case that the common law right of maintenance is only available to an illegitimate son and not to an illegitimate daughter whose case is not supported by any text. (8)

For a further discussion see Chapter, on "Maintenance" post.

CHAPTER V

ON ADOPTION.

552. Topical Introduction.—It has already been seen that the adoption of children is not an institution peculiar to Hinduisim, but owes its origin to the social communism peculiar to the primitive races. All the European races have outlived that stage. In India it has become stereotyped as an integral

(1) Ananthaya v. Vishnu, 17 M. 160.

(2) Roshan Singh v. Balwat Singh, 22 A. 191 (1923) P. C.

(3) Chhoturya v. Sahub Purhulad, 7 M. I. A. 18 (50, 52) followed in Roshan Singh v. Balwant Singh 22 A. 191 (97) P. C. affirming Balwant Singh v. Roshan Singh, 18 A. 25.

(4) Rahi v. Govinda, 1 B. 97; Subramanya v. Velu, 20 M. L. J. 350; 5 I. C. 919;

Muttasamy v. Venkataswara, 12 M. I. A. 208; Venkatachella v. Parvatham, 8 M. H. C. R. 184; Kuppa v. Singaravelu, 8 M. 835 (827); Viraramurthi v. Singaravelu, 1 M. 806.

(5) Gopalasami v. Arunachalam, 27 M. 82.

(6) Ib. p. 37.

(7) Oomrao v. Mankoonwer, 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 186.

(8) Bhayalal v. Churaman, 9 C. P. L. R. 33.

part of the Hindu personal law. In early times children irrespective of their sex were taken in adoption, and this is recommended by Nanda Pandit who commends the adoption of daughters as equally conducive to spiritual efficacy since both the gift of a daughter in marriage <sup>(1)</sup> and the birth of a son to her are spiritually meritorious acts, <sup>(2)</sup> and children of both sexes are necessary to free one from the torments of hell. <sup>(3)</sup> This special pleading to bring into vogue an old custom which had long since fallen into desuetude does not appear to have appealed to the populace, and though the adoption of a daughter is not altogether unknown <sup>(4)</sup> it is now as dead as the Dodo amongst all classes of Hindus except the dancing girls amongst whom it is still common.

Leaving this out of account for the present, the adoption as now practised is the adoption of a son.

Adoption defined. 25. (1) Adoption is a formal recognition of a person as the son of another.

(2) No adoption is valid unless it is made in conformity with law.

(3) Any Hindu, not having a son, grandson, or a great grandson alive at the time of adoption, may adopt a son to himself, and his wife or widow may with his consent do the same.

Synopsis.

- (1) Texts on Adoption (553). (3) Who may adopt (555).
(2) What is an adopted son (554). (4) Adoption by minor (556-557).

553. Analogous Law.—The law of adoption is supported by the following texts :—

Yajur Veda :—"A Brahmin on being born becomes a debtor in three obligations : to the Rishis (who are propounders of the sacred books) for studentship (to study the same) : to the gods, for sacrifices : to the ancestors, for progeny ; he is free from the debts who has son, who has performed sacrifices, and who has studied the vedas." <sup>(5)</sup>

Manu :—"A son equal in caste and affectionately disposed whom his mother or father or both give accompanied by the pouring of water at a time of calamity is known as the Dattim (Dattak) son. He is considered as a son made or adopted, whom a man takes as his own son, the boy being equal in class, endued with filial virtues, acquainted with the merit of performing obsequies to his adopter, and with the sin of omitting them." <sup>(6)</sup>

Ib —(cited in Dattak Mimansa) "By a sonless person, should any description of a son be anxiously made for the sake of funeral oblations libations of water, and obsequial rites as well as for the celebrity of name".

Vaishith :—"If the father sees the face of the living son on birth, he transfers the debt to the son, and attains immortality. It has been revealed that endless are the heavenly regions for those having male issue, but there is no heavenly region for a sonless man."

Ib—"He who has no son may appoint his daughter in this manner to raise up a son for him saying, "the male child who shall be born from her in wedlock shall be mine for the purpose of performing my obsequies." <sup>(7)</sup>

Attri :—"By a sonless person only, should always a substitute of a son be anxiously made for the sake of funeral oblations, libations of water and obsequial rites. If the father sees the face of a living son after birth, he transfers the debts to him, and attains immortality. As soon as a son is born the father becomes absolved from the debts to ancestors : on that day he acquires purity, since the son saves him from the infernal regions." <sup>(8)</sup>

(1) Dat. Mim. VII-1, 16.

(2) Ib., VII 16 18.

(3) Ib., VII-8.

(4) Nowab Ray v. Bhugbutte, 6 B L R.

(5) Nursing v. Bhuttun Lall, W. R. (Gap.

No) 194.

(5) Ashtak VI 8-10 Hang. Vol. 1. p. 179.

(6) IX-168, 169

(7) IX-127.

(8) Cal. Ed Vol. 1, p. 17, cited in Mandlik's

H. L., p 468 F. N. (2).

554. What is an adopted son.—An adopted son is a creature of the law. He is spoken of as a secondary, subsidiary or a substituted son. His affiliation is stated to be an imitation of nature. His necessity arose from secular motive. His continuance has been assured by an assumed spiritual benefit he is supposed to confer upon his adoptive father and his ancestors. But even persons, e.g., the Jains, who do not believe in a hereafter, practise adoption. The fact that other sons whose spiritual efficacy was as great, if not greater, have become obsolete and the adopted son remains, suggests that its raison d'être must be “the ordinary human desire for perpetuation of family properties and names.” (1) This was stated by Manu himself in a passage already quoted.

But according to the sacred precepts the adoption of a son by a sonless man is a matter of religious necessity, but it does not mean that it is therefore necessarily a matter of legal obligation. All that it means is that adoption is commendable to one who has no present issue. (2)

555. Who may adopt.—In the matter of adoption the Indian Majority Act is inapplicable. Consequently there is no statutory bar as regards the age of adoption, and since the only direct provision of Hindu Law fixes the age of minority, in the sixteenth year (3) it follows that a person below that age cannot adopt. But since the affiliation of a stranger calls for the exercise of discretion the courts have laid down that no one who has not attained the age of discretion is competent to make an adoption.

556. The question then is what is an age of discretion. It would seem that in the absence of any specific rule of Hindu Law the statutory law of majority should guide the courts as courts administering the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. This the courts have generally enjoined but on the subject of adoption they have held the attainment of 15 or 16 years by a husband as a sufficient age “which according to the law prevalent in Bengal is to be regarded as the age of discretion.” (4) But this case was never intended to settle a general rule of Hindu majority and if it has that effect, then a Hindu adopter would fare much worse than a Hindu transferor or testator, inasmuch as a boy of 16 might at the age of impressionable youth, moved perhaps by a feeling of religious piety, or unduly alarmed by a passing ailment, commit an act for which he might heartily feel sorry when he foresees the consequence of it. Moreover the two ages of majority may, at times, lead to awkward results. Thus while a person below 18 may not execute an authority to adopt a son, since it is compulsorily registrable, (5) he is competent to confer such authority verbally or by a will, and what is more, make an adoption himself. In other words, he is a minor to delegate his authority to another, though not a minor to exercise it himself.

557. The Legislature has made some provision for protecting such minors as are placed under a certificated guardian (6) or the management of whose estate is assumed by the court of wards, (7) but the Legislature should certainly protect

(1) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M 398 (414) P. C.; S. O 21 A 460 (477) P. O.

(2) Ib contra Rajendra v. Saroda Soonduree, 15 W. R. 548.

(3) Manu VIII-27

(4) Rajendra v. Saroda Soonduree, 15 W. R. 548 followed in Jumona v. Bamasoondari,

1 C. 289 (295, 296) (P. C.)

(5) Ss 17 (3) and 35 (3) (b) of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908)

(6) The Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)

(7) The Court of Wards Acts.

other minors as well. As it is, it is left for the court to decide whether the adopter in a given case had attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature of his act and its consequences upon his natural heirs and after-born progeny.

26. No one can adopt a son unless at the time of adoption he had no living son, grandson, or great grandson.

Adopter must be issueless.

Synopsis.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| (1) Adopter to be issueless (558).                    | (7) Kritrim adoption (566).                             |
| (2) Historical retrospect (559).                      | (8) Usage prohibiting adoption (567).                   |
| (3) Simultaneous adoptions (560).                     | (9) Invalidity of adoption of one by two persons (568). |
| (4) Adoption by person having disqualified son (561). | (10) Motice immaterial (569).                           |
| (5) Adoption by Jains (564).                          | (11) Adoption of a daughter (570).                      |
| (6) Parsi adoption (565).                             | (12) Illatom adoption (571).                            |

558. Analogous Law.—This condition is supported by a text of Manu which runs as follows :—

“ By a son, a man conquers worlds : by the son's son he enjoys immortality ; and afterwards by the son of a grandson, he reaches the solar abode ” (1)

As all these relations are qualified to perform the obsequies, (2) the main object of adoption is thus attained and there is no necessity for adoption.

559. But this qualification is of a later growth. In ancient times a ### Historical Retrospect.

son being property necessary to strengthen the family, any person was entitled to acquire a son of which twelve modes of acquisition were recognized. The acquisition of all these sons was still customary up to a very recent age when the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag were written since they both recognize their status. The texts however discourage the affiliation of a substitute when the real son is in existence. But the texts have not the effect of illegalizing such acquisition, if made. But the growing public opinion, strengthened by changed environments discountenanced the appointment of substitute sons to the detriment of the legitimate issue. This is reflected by Nanda Pandit who struggles to read a positive prohibition in the old texts, but even he could not circumvent the Vedic legend of Vishwamitra's adoption of Devarat even though he had 100 sons of his own. (3) Importuned by his pupils to reconcile this precedent with his view that a man with a living son could not take another by adoption, and unable to explain it away, Nanda Pandit reluctantly conceded that a man with a living issue might adopt, provided he took permission of his legitimate issue. (4) This was acceded to by Devand Bhatt, the author of Dattak Chandrika, the other recognized authority on adoption. (5) And this view was accepted by

(1) IX-137 cited Datt, Mim-Sec 1 13.

(2) Vishnu Puran cited Id Sec 1-14

(3) The veda Aitreya Brahmana set out in Sarkar's H. L. 181.

(4) Sec. Datt Mim Sec 1-12 : “ But, however, if you pertinaciously insist on the superior cogency even of the indication of a revelation to a revelation recorded from memory then we accede that a man, though possessed of male issue, may adopt another son with the sanction of such issue.”

(5) Datt. Chand 13-8 disposes of the other substituted sons by citing rihaspati's text “ sons of many descriptions who were made by ancient saints, cannot now be adopted by men, by reason of their deficiency of power ” Id (Suth) p. 109.

Colebrooke as correct and is echoed in his Digest. (1) Then again neither writer adverts to, or expressly prohibits the adoption of a second son in the presence of the first adopted son. The question was considered by the Privy Council who decided against its validity ; from which it, of course, follows a fortiori and was so regarded by their Lordships, that there could be no adoption when a legitimate son was alive. (2)

560. Two other questions remain. Can a man having two or more wives adopt as many sons as he has wives, and in any case, can, he make two or more adoptions simultaneously ? Gulab Shastri answers both these questions in the affirmative, adding, that it is not only legal but usual in Bengal. (3) He argues that the fiction of adoption should imitate nature. But the courts even in Bengal have answered both the questions in the negative holding two simultaneous or successive adoptions equally invalid and unsupported by the text or usage. (4) And the questions are really ones for usage and not logic to answer. In any case, it is against the policy of law to favour the creation of artificial relations, and it would treat that as prohibited what is not expressly permitted.

561. Since the primary purpose of adoption, as now understood, is to provide for the adopter's spiritual advancement by having some one legally qualified to perform his obsequies, and since such qualification must be judged by Hindu Law which disqualifies a son who is impotent, an idiot or insane, blind, deaf, dumb, lame, congenitally suffering from leprosy or from any infirmity or disease which disqualifies him for inheritance or one who has become a convert to an alien faith or has turned a hermit, sanyasi or Fakir, (5) and thereby snapped the natural tie by which he was bound to his father, the latter may make an adoption as such disqualified son is as good as civilly dead to him. This is also the view of Nanda Pandit who argues that since subsidiary sons were neither entitled to perform the obsequies nor share the inheritance, and participation in the obsequies and estate is the result of filial relation, a person who is impotent and the rest merely bears the semblance of being a son but is of no use for either purpose. (6) A son who has merely become a Bairagi who is not an ascetic does not forfeit his religious efficacy. (7) In order to have that effect the renunciation must be complete with no legal possibility of return to civil life. Such is the case of an ascetic, Sanyasi or Fakir who then form a brotherhood of their own and whose return even to their domestic life does not revive their lost right of inheritance. (8) There is of course, nothing in the Caste Disabilities Removal Act (9) to militate against this view, since the renunciation of worldly pursuits and worldly ties does

(1) Dig. p. 398 : cited in Rungama v. Achama 4 M. I. A 1 followed in Akhoy v. Kalapahar 12 C 406 (1 2) P C ;

(2) Rungama v. Achama 4. M I. A explained in Akhoy v. Kalapahar 12 C. 406 (412) P C.

(3) Adoption (2nd Ed) p. 183, 184.

(4) Joy Chunder v. Bhyrub Chunder (1849) S. D. A. 461 : Sudanund v. Benomallee 1 Marsh 317.

(5) Mohru v. Moti (1875) P. R. 52.

(6) Datt Mim S. II-32 (Suth) p. 31 To the same effect 1 Strange H. L., p 77; Sarkar Adoption (2nd Ed) 195, 196

(7) Teeluk Chunder v Shama Churn, 1 W. R. 209; Jagannath v. Bidyanudna, 10 W. R. 172; Khoderam v. Rookhinee, 15 W R. 197.

(8) Dayabhog 5.14.

(9) XXI of 1850.

not amount to his "renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste." (1)

For the same reason a father whose son has disappeared for a time, sufficiently long to raise the presumption of death, is set free to make an adoption. Such presumption will arise if he has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive. (2)

563. It has been said that in such a case the adoption is not valid unless it is proved that the son was dead at the date of the adoption, (3) but presumption is one mode of proof where the son has not been heard of for seven years prior to the date of adoption. Of course, where the question of the date of death is material it must be proved and cannot be left to presumption, since presumption merely extends to death and not to the date and time thereof.

564. It has already been seen that Jains though forming a sect of dissenters are classed as Hindus (§§ 296-297). As such they have the same right of adoption though their adoption is a purely secular institution (4) and is free from many of the restrictions of orthodox Hinduism. (5) For instance a Jain widow is entitled to adopt without the authority of her husband (6) and there is no objection to the adoption of a married man, (7) or sister (8) or daughter's son. (9)

565. Parsi adoption.—The Parsis who are Persian refugees in India have brought with them the ancient Aryan custom of adoption. Their adoption lacks the religious element of spiritual efficacy, though the adopted son has to perform the funeral ceremonies of his adoptive father to whom he inherits as a natural son. According to the evidence given in a case which was ultimately decided by the Privy Council (1) an adopted son may be either a "Dharm putr" or merely a "Palak Putra." In the case of the former, adoption is made in the presence of the priest who reads the "Tundurasti" or a benedictory prayer in the name of the person who claims to be the adopted son. A declaration of his adoption is usually made on the third day after the decease of the adoptive father though it is not indispensable and it is usual to take a writing in the absence of which the adopted son is treated merely as a palak putra.

566. Kritrim adoption.—A Maithil widow has no power of adoption to her husband with or without his consent. Any authority given by him will not, therefore, confer on her any power of adoption as it would be illegal.

She can however, adopt a boy to herself. But as already stated the son so adopted becomes her own son and not the son of her husband. He has no right to inherit her husband's estate and a fortiori has no right of collateral succession.

(1) Contra Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.), p. 197.

(2) S. 108 Ev. A. (A 1 of 1872) as to the meaning of which see In re Phene's Trusts L. R. 5 Ch. 189 (144); Parmeshar v. Bisheshar 1 A. 53 F. B., Mashar Ali v. Budh Singh, 7 A. 297; Dharup v. Gobind 8 A. 614; Dhondo v. Ganesh 11 B. 438; Rango v. Mud yappa 32 B. 296 (808); Contra Janumajay v. Keshublal 2 B. L. A. (Ac) 134; Guru Das v. Matilal 6 B. L. R. (App) 16 following the Hindu Law are now superseded by the Evidence Act.

(3) Trev. H. L. (2nd Ed.) 105.

(4) Asharfi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197.

(5) Lakhmichand v. Gatto, 8 A. 819; Harnabh v. Mandil, 27 C. 879.

(6) Asharfi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197.

(7) Hassan Ali v. Naga Mal, 1 A. 288.

(8) Lakhmichand v. Gatto, 8 A. 819.

(9) Homabae v. Punjabhade, 5 W. R. 102 P. C.

Even where the father adopts him in the Kritrim and not in the Dattak form it merely creates a personal relationship between him and his adoptive father and the adopted son succeeds only to his estate. (1)

567. Adoption may be prohibited by custom, but in this case if the parties are admittedly Hindus, adoption will be presumed to be permissible till the contrary is established by custom. (2)
Usage may prohibit adoption. But if the family was one of non-Hindu origin and had adopted only some of the customs of Hinduism, then it would be on it to prove that the custom of adoption was also the one adopted by it. Such was held to be the case of a Cooch Bihar family which had only become partially Hinduised and as to whom the custom of adoption was pleaded but which the Privy Council held required to be proved like any other custom. (3)

568. Two persons, even brothers, cannot take the same boy in adoption either conjointly or consecutively. If they do, both the adoptions would be invalid. (4) Even as regards the adoption by two widows taking one boy in adoption to their husband, its legality depends upon local custom which justifies such adoption in Western India. (5) but not elsewhere.

569. The adopter's motive influencing his adoption is wholly immaterial and does not affect its validity, even if it be to defeat an alienation or disappoint an expectant heir. But of course, an adoption cannot be made a cloak for defrauding bona fide transferees who would be entitled to retain their property, or decreed restitution, if their title is attacked by the adopted son in collusion with the adopter.

570. It has already been seen (§ 552) that the Smritis favour the adoption of a daughter on the same ground of religious efficacy. Even Nanda Pandit (6) commends it on the grounds that it is conducive to a dual spiritual benefit derived from the gift of a daughter in marriage (7) and from a daughter's son (8) and the necessity of having children of both sexes to save one from the torments of hell. (9) Consequently in old cases such adoptions were upheld (10) and the Pandits, who were consulted by the Sadar Court, supported their view in favour of such adoptions by citing a considerable body of authorities. (11) And this custom was in keeping with that in vogue with the other branches of the Aryan race. (12) But though possessing ample sacred authority in support of the

(1) Jiwan Mal v. Jamna Das, (1911) P. L. R. 87; 10 I. C. 822

(2) Vandrayan v. Manilal, 16 B. 470 (476); Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba, 27 E. 492 (498, 499) P. C.; Bishmath v. Ramchurn, (1850) S. D. A. B. 20 followed in Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 468 (478) P. C.

(3) Fanindra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 468 (478) P. C.

(4) Raj Coomar v. Bissesur, 10 C. 688 (696, 697).

(5) Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal, 15 C. 725 (746, 747) P. C.; Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 189 (220) P. C.

(6) "The daughter given resembling the legitimate daughter is a substitute for a son"

Datt. Mim. VII-81 Suth. p 98. Nanda Pandit supports his view by citing a considerable array of authorities favouring her adoption—See Sec. VII devoted to that topic (Suth.) pp. 91-100.

(7) Datt. Mim. VII-§ 1.16.

(8) Ib. VII-§ 16, 17, 18.

(9) Ib. VI-§ 8.

(10) Nowab Ray v. Bhuguttee, 6 Beng. S. R. 4; 7 I. D. (O.S.) 669; see authorities in support cited at pp. 675-678.

(11) Printed at the end of Nowab Ray v. Bhuguttee, 6 Beng. S. R. 4; 7 I. D. (O.S.) 669 (675, 678).

(12) See General Introduction, §§

custom, it does not appear to have been ever popular with the Hindus and in course of time it fell into desuetude, till it now survives only in the case of women of an unfortunate class who are suffered to take daughters in adoption. But the present tendency of the law is to discourage such adoptions. In Bombay the Court refused to uphold such an adoption by a Brahmin, holding it to be opposed to Mayukh <sup>(1)</sup> and the Madras Court has held it equally inapplicable to a family man, <sup>(2)</sup> while even as regards prostitutes and dancing girls, the courts differ as to the legality of their adoptions of daughters. Both in Calcutta and in some cases in Bombay, such adoptions are held illegal on the ground that an adoption by a woman can only be to her husband and as these adopters have no husbands, they cannot adopt to themselves. <sup>(3)</sup> But the Madras High Court upheld such adoptions as sanctioned by usage <sup>(4)</sup> though if their purpose be immoral they cannot be tolerated. <sup>(5)</sup> And this view has also prevailed in some cases in Bombay. <sup>(6)</sup>

571. No other relationship except that of a son or of a daughter can be ordinarily created by adoption. One cannot for instance, adopt a person to be one's grandson, great grandson, brother or a nephew.

The only deviation from this rule is the adoption of a son-in-law which has become rooted in the districts of Bellary, Cuddapah, Kurnool, Nellore, and the North and South Arcot Districts of the Madras Presidency. <sup>(7)</sup> This is locally known as the custom of illatom and is quite independent of the adoption of a son. A person who has no son living at the time though he may have any number of daughters may adopt an illatom son-in-law <sup>(8)</sup> but it does not prevent the subsequent adoption of a dattak son. <sup>(9)</sup> The illatom son-in-law counts as a son and has the same rights as the duras son sharing equally with him on partition. <sup>(10)</sup> Among the Reddis or the Kapu caste of Vellore he is allowed even to continue his connection with his natural family being a preferential heir to his natural father's divided brother <sup>(11)</sup> while the members of his natural family continue their right of succession to him. <sup>(12)</sup> The illatom son-in-law may during his life-time deal with the property as he chooses and his sons have no right by birth in such property. <sup>(13)</sup> On his death it passes to his heirs in the same way as self-acquired property, the heirs of the adopter having no right to it. <sup>(14)</sup> Where he lives with the adopted son there may be commensality but in the absence of custom, there cannot be any co-parcenership between the two and there is no right of survivorship. <sup>(15)</sup> The relationship of illatom commences as soon as a person is admitted into the family, with a

(1) Ganga Bai v. Ananta, 13 B. 690.

(2) Guddati v. Ganapati, 23 M. L. J. 493.

(3) Hancower v. Hancower, 2 Mor. Dig 188; Narendra v. Dinanalli, 86 C. 824
Mathura v. Esu 4 B. 545; Tara v. Nana 14 B. 90 (92); Hira v. Radha, 37 B. 116.

(4) Venku v. Mahalinga 11 M. 398; Muttukannu v. Paramasami 12 M. 214; Sivasangu v. Minal ib. 277.

(5) Kamakshi v. Ramasami, 19 M. 127.

(6) Manjamma v. Seshagiri Rao, 26 B. 491 (496).

(7) Hanumantamma v. Rami, 4 M. 272 (288).

(8) Id.; contra Nallury v. Kamapalli, 26

I. C. (M) 54 the existence of a natural son is no bar to illatom adoption.

(9) Chanchamma v. Subbaya, 9 M. 114 (115).

(10) Hanumantamma v. Rami, 4 M. 272 (288); Chanchamma v. Subbaya, 9 M. 114 (116).

(11) Shivada v. Shivada, 6 M. 267.

(12) Balarami v. Pera, 6 M. 267; Liamkrishna v. Subbakka, 12 M. 442.

(13) Challa v. Challa, 7 M. H. C. R. 25.

(14) Challa v. Challa, 7 M. H. C. R. 25; Ramkrishna v. Subbakka, 12 M. 442 (444).

(15) Chanchamma v. Subbaya, 9 M. 114 (116).

view to marrying him to the daughter of the taker though the marriage takes place after the latter's death. (1) Since an illatom adoption, though recognized, is based on custom, it follows that the claim founded on that relationship cannot be made good unless the relationship itself is strictly proved. (2)

27. Save as provided by any law for the time being in force, every Hindu has the right to adopt a son provided—

Who may adopt.

- (a) he has attained the age of discretion ;
- (b) and has no son, legitimate or adopted, or grandson or great grandson in the male line then living ;
- (c) is possessed of sound mind ;
- (d) and is not suffering from any mental or physical disability which disqualifies him from inheritance.

Explanation 1.—The facts that the adopter is a bachelor or a widower, or that his wife is pregnant or opposes the adoption are immaterial to the validity of adoption.

Explanation 2.—A son mentioned in clause (d) does not include a son who suffers from any of the disabilities which disqualifies him from inheritance.

Illustrations.

(a) A is a Government ward subject to an Act which prohibits A from adopting without the consent of the Local Government. A adopts. The adoption is invalid unless consented to as provided in the Act.

(b) An eunuch registered under Act (XXVII of 1871) is declared by S. 29 thereof incapable of adopting a son. A cannot adopt.

(c) A suffers from virulent leprosy which disqualifies him to inherit. A cannot adopt.

(d) A has turned a Sanyasi and so renounced the world. A cannot adopt.

(e) A has a son who is deaf and dumb, or suffers from any of the disabilities mentioned in ills. (c) and (d). A can adopt.

(f) A who has an adopted son B, adopts C. The adoption is invalid, for a Hindu cannot have two adopted sons at the same time.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Capacity to adopt (572).                 | inherit (579).                                |
| (2) Simultaneous adoptions in valid (573).   | (9) Adoption during pollution (580).          |
| (3) Adoption during pregnancy of wife (574). | (10) Agreements against adoption (581).       |
| (4) Degradation of adopter (575).            | (11) Statutory prohibition of adoption (583). |
| (5) Adoption by lunatic (576).               | (12) Assent of wife unnecessary (585).        |
| (6) Adoption by bachelor or widower (577).   | (13) Participation by one of the wives (586). |
| (7) Adoption by ascetic (578).               | (14) Texts on adoption by woman (587).        |
| (8) Adoption by person disqualified to       | (15) Working rule stated (589).               |

(1) Venkayalapatti v. Nagendra, (1911) 2 M. W. N. 193 and 11 I. C. 25; Vachora v. Vachora, 13 M. L. T. 118; 18 I. C. 698.

(2) Pattya v. Venkamma, 17 M.L.T. 393; 29 I. C. 54.

572. Adoption is a solemn act and alters the course of devolution of property. In effect it is even more far reaching than a will. No adoption without discretion.

There can therefore be no valid adoption unless, the adopter had obtained sufficient maturity of understanding and was otherwise in possession of his senses. While therefore an idiot and a lunatic are not inherently incompetent to make an adoption, an adoption made by them may be set aside on the ground that they did not fully understand the nature of the act and of its effect upon their rights. So in setting aside the adoption and a will alleged to have been made by a dying man almost continually insensible, though occasionally roused to consciousness by loud tones or pungent applications to his nostrils, but almost immediately afterwards relapsing into a state of insensibility with his mind quite inert, and instantly fatigued upon the slightest exertion, their Lordships observed: "How is it possible that a man in such a condition could be capable of any act requiring judgment and reflection, especially one to which no antecedent circumstances appear to have led, and for which the enfeebled and scarcely conscious mind was unprepared. In such a state as that described, even if the mind were passively awake to the suggestions made to it, it would naturally cling to repose, and yield, for the sake of it, to any external suggestion . . . If the law were to countenance acts of this description, performed at such a time and under such circumstances, without the clearest and most cogent evidence to establish their validity, relations and the managers would be encouraged to advance their own private notions of what might be advisable to be done for the good of the family, and to ascribe acts to a dying man in which he would have been the merely passive instrument to prolong their own gain and authority." (1)

These words are equally applicable to persons of immature intellect and especially women who are often imposed upon to adopt by persons who are less anxious for the repose of the adopter's soul than for feathering their own nests.

573. The existence of any of the relations specified in cl. (b) of the section is a bar to an adoption, for every one of them is an heir and is capable of conferring the fullest spiritual benefit on the adopter. It does not make any difference in the rule if the person in existence is himself an adopted son.

Simultaneous adoptions invalid. For much the same reason the simultaneous adoption of two or more sons is invalid as to all. This was laid down by the High Court of Calcutta in several cases, one of which has been affirmed by the Privy Council, who said, "The observation which appears to their Lordships to be the strongest against such an adoption as this being allowed by the Hindu Law, is that no authority and no text has been, or apparently can be produced showing that the Hindu Law allows it. . . . The entire absence of any authority in favour of such an adoption is an argument that the Hindu Law did not recognize it, and that it has really not been the practice amongst Hindus; for if such a practice had prevailed to any appreciable extent, some authorities would have been found on the subject." (2)

(1) Tayammal v. Sashachallia, 10 M. I. A. 429 (184 435).; Bulub v. Kishenpria, 6 B. S. R. 219.

(2) Monemotho Nath v. Onath Nath, Bourke 189; Sidessur v. Doorga, Ib., 260; Gyanendra

v. Kolapahar, 9 C. 50 affirmed O. A. Akhoy Chunder v. Kolapahar, 12 C. 406 (412) P. C.; Doorga v. Surendra, 12 C. 68; O. A. 19 C. 513 P. C.; Mahesh v. Taruck, 20 C. 487.

574. Though Hindu Law counts the birth of a child as from the date of its conception <sup>(1)</sup> there is no prohibition against adoption by a person during the pregnancy of his wife. <sup>(2)</sup> The right to adoption cannot be suspended upon so remote and contingent a possibility—and such contingencies may often occur, as not only the adopter's but his son's, grandson's and great grandson's wives may become pregnant. As Sargeant, C. J., observed: "It may doubtless be contended, that when the wife is in a state of pregnancy there may be a son in the womb at the moment of adoption; but the possibility that the child in utero may be a female, would, if the power to adopt were to be deemed suspended by the mere fact of pregnancy, always imperil, and in some cases seriously so, the acquisition of those spiritual benefits which the rite of adoption is supposed to supply in default of a legitimate son."

575. But though the apostacy of the son frees the father for adoption, his own apostacy or degradation from caste does not disqualify him for adoption. In this he is protected by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act. <sup>(3)</sup> But though a convert to Mahomedanism or Christianity may nominally continue to possess his previous right of adoption, it will be a question, whether, by his abandonment of Hinduism, and acceptance of the doctrines of a new religion he has not abandoned the practice of adoption which only the religion he had abandoned allowed, but which his new religion does not. Moreover, since adoption is merely a means to the attainment of spiritual beatitude in accordance with the tenets of the Hindu religion, the renunciation of the religion would carry with it also a necessary inference that the convert had also abandoned a usage of that religion. <sup>(4)</sup> But this is a mere presumption. It does not preclude the possibility of adoption by a converted Mahomedan, and such customary rights are known to have persisted in the Punjab, <sup>(5)</sup> where adoptions by converted Mahomedans are both customary and common, and some of whom even closely follow the Hindu rule that a widow cannot adopt without the authority of her husband. <sup>(6)</sup>

(2) or is a lunatic. 576. So again lunacy is no bar to a person's right of adoption, provided the act is performed in a lucid interval.

This he may do even though he had been adjudged lunatic and a manager appointed for the custody of his person and the management of his estate. <sup>(7)</sup>

(3) Bachelor or a widower. 577. There is no express authority prohibiting the adoption by a bachelor <sup>(8)</sup> or a widower and both are therefore competent to adopt. <sup>(9)</sup>

(1) Mit. 16-8-11; Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W. R. 859 P. C.

(2) Doulat v. Ramlal, 29 A. 310; Nagabhushanam v. Seshamma, 3 M. 180; Hanmant v. Bhimacharya, 12 B. 105.

(3) XXI of 1850.

(4) Machhi Lai v. Hirbai, 23 B. 264 (265)

(5) Najibulla v. Nadir, (1881) P. R. 120; Umar Baksh v. Dhandu, (1894) P. R. 89; Nada v. Nur Muhammad, (1894) P. R. 143; Kur Ali v. Mawaz Khan, (1900) P. R. 214; Muhammad Niazuddin v. Mhd. Umar Khan, (1907) P. R. 1; Jivan v. Harnam Das, (1907) P. W. R. 77.

(6) Abdul Rahiman v. Bure Khan (1811) P. R. 196; Kallu v. Nur Muhi, (1891) P.

R. 104.

(7) S. 67 Lunacy Act Act IV of 1912; Amanchi v. Amanchi, 19 M. L.T. 243 : 83 I. C. 578.

(8) Gunnappa v. Sankappa, (1889) B. Sel. R. 202; Gopal v. Narayan 12 B. 829; Chandrasekharudu v. Bramhanna 4 M. H. C. R. 270; Monemtho Nath Dey v. Oononthnath, 2 I. J. (N.S.) 24 (48).

(9) Nagapa v. Subha, 2 M. H. C. R. 367; Chandrasekarudu v. Brahmanna 4 M. H. C. R. 270; Gopal v. Narayan 12 B. 829; contra Bhattacharje's H. L. (8 Ed.) 848; Sarkar Adoption (2nd Ed.) 200 dubitante; Somanath in his Datt. Mim. cited per Strange, Manual of H. L., p. 61.

578. But a person who has permanently renounced the world and turned a hermit has no need for adoption and he is held to be ineligible. (1) But such ineligibility must arise from custom or nature and purpose of the life affected. A mere change of status does not carry with it any disqualification to adopt as a matter of legal necessity. If any such did arise, it would be obnoxious to the provisions of the Caste Disabilities Removal Act. At any rate there is no law to prevent a Grihast Gossain from making an adoption. They are entitled to hold property and have now come to be regarded as a caste by themselves following a secular occupation. (2)

579. The question whether a person suffering from mental and physical infirmities, e.g., congenital blindness, deafness, dumbness, impotency, lunacy, virulent leprosy, idiocy, lunacy, disqualifying him from inheritance, forfeits his right of adoption is neither covered by authority nor by judicial precedent. And a reasoning by analogy, always to be deprecated in the interpretation of law, does not lead to unequivocal results. In a case of disputed succession to a Mahant ultimately decided by the Privy Council, the plaintiff claimed to succeed to the Muth properties as the chela of the deceased Mahant. The defence was that the Mahant was a leper and so disqualified to make a valid appointment of his successor. The High Court threw out his suit holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had been appointed by the Mahant, and that the Mahant could not have validly adopted him for he was suffering from leprosy. Mr. Mayne who supported this decree before the Privy Council conceded on the authority of decided cases (3) that only virulent leprosy would have disqualified the Mahant and that his leprosy was not of that type. As there was no evidence to prove that the deceased's leprosy was of this type, the Privy Council reversed the decision of the High Court by merely reversing their finding that the plaintiff had failed to prove his appointment. (4) But the fact that Mr. Mayne conceded and Sir R. Couch adopted this concession as the statement of sound law, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships, by observing that "in order to disqualify from making an adoption the leprosy must be of a virulent form" shows that this malady was treated by all concerned as a sufficient disqualification for adoption. If so, the other infirmities which occur in the same text would be equally a bar to adoption. In the case of Shudras, leprosy is no bar. (5) It is submitted that neither leprosy nor any other infirmity is a legal bar to adoption because a leper still remains a Hindu and has a right to have his obsequies performed and his soul transferred to heavenly regions which he would not be able to do without adoption. If at all, adoption is to him a greater necessity, otherwise, since his sufferings of this life are due to the sins he had committed in his past life, if he dies with his obsequial rites

(1) Teku v Busti, (1874) P. R. 15; in Mhalsa Bai v Vithoba, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) XXVI (XXXI) the validity of an adoption was challenged on the ground that the adopter had undergone the ceremony of "Vibhut Vida" i.e. the father had assumed the role of a Lingayat ascetic but the court held this not proved and held that even if proved, it did not amount to Sanyas or complete abandonment of worldly matters.

(2) Balaqir v. Dhondgir, 5 Bom L. R. 114.

(3) Ananta v. Ramabai, 1 B. H. C. R. 554; Janardhan v. Gopal, 5 B. H. C. R.

(AC) 145; Muthuvelayuda v. Parasakti (1859-1862) Mad. S. D. A 238

(4) Bhagoban v. Ram Prapanna, 22 C. 848 (858) P. C. In Uchobunessuree v. Gourree Dass, 11 W. R. 535, the plaintiff had admitted that the disability due to leprosy could be expiated by penance (citing Shama Charan Siroor's Vyavastha Darpan, 2nd Ed., p. 1010) which the two courts below had found against the plaintiff. No further question was therefore gone into.

(5) Sukumari v. Ananta, 28 C. 168.

unperformed he would be exposed to even greater torments in the next life against which adoption is the only cure. <sup>(1)</sup> Moreover, the author of Dattakimansa commenting on the text of Yajnavalkya <sup>(2)</sup> on the right of the issue of disqualified persons, expressly contemplates adoptions by them <sup>(8)</sup> though the Mitakshara understands that text to forbid the adoption of other sons. <sup>(4)</sup>

But Babu Golap Shastri questions the correctness of this translation of the text and rightly, for a reference to the original shows that what the commentator meant was that the specific mention of the Auras and Kshetraj sons by Yajnavalkya was intended "to exclude other sons from inheritance" on the principle of expressio unius exclusio alterius. <sup>(5)</sup>

580. The validity of an adoption cannot be attacked on the ground that (6) Adoption during pollution. it was made during the period of ceremonial impurity following the birth or death of a relative. <sup>(6)</sup>

The question was raised and considered by the Madras High Court in which they said, "Pollution is only a bar to a religious act and renders religious ceremonies inefficacious, but a gift and acceptance are secular acts and may therefore be supplemented by Datta Homa after the period of pollution." <sup>(7)</sup> As, however, Datta Homa is not necessary in all cases it follows that an adoption may be completed even during a period of pollution. <sup>(9)</sup> And this seems to be essential since the services of a son, natural or adopted, are indispensable for the performance of the obsequial rites. Moreover, the Shastras provide for the vicarious performance of the ceremonies of adoption and the natural father has been held competent to delegate his authority to a relative, in case of his own sickness, to make the delivery <sup>(9)</sup> for otherwise the delay might imperil, and in some cases seriously so, the acquisition of those spiritual benefits which the rite of adoption is supposed to supply in default of a legitimate son. As observed in a Bombay case, "A man in bad health or on his death bed, as in the present case, might not live till the child was born and yet, if the rule be as contended for the appellant, the suspension must ipso facto take place in all cases during pregnancy: for we entirely agree with the Madras High Court that it would be impossible to make the validity of an adoption dependent on knowledge or ignorance of the fact of pregnancy." <sup>(10)</sup>

581. An agreement not to make an adoption may be made by two undivided relatives, subject to the Mitakshara Law, such as Agreements against adoption. brothers, to preserve their right of survivorship to one another, or it may be that one or of both of them prohibit

(1) Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.), p 202
(2) "But their sons, whether legitimate, or the offspring of a wife by a kinsman, are entitled to allotments, if free from similar defects" Yaj. 2 S 141.

(3) Datt Ch. Sect VI-§ 1.
(4) Mit. 2.10, 10.11. See Suth. Note to Datt. Ch. p 144.

(5) Sarkar Adoption (2nd Ed.) p 202
(6) The period of pollution (mourning) varies with the caste and closeness of relationship. The extreme period for Brahmins is 10 days, for Kshatriyas 12 days, for Vaishyas 16 days and for Shudras 30 days. But on the death of a man's parent or a woman's husband, the period of pollution lasts for a whole year.

(7) Santappayya v. Rangappayya. 12

M. 897 (898, 899) followed in Asita v. Nirodi 20 C.W.N. 901 (908); 35 I.C. 127. In Ranganayakamma v. Ahwar Setti 18 M. 214 (222) pollution was incidentally mentioned as an objection to adoption but its effect was not considered the adoption being set aside as brought about by coercion (see Ib p. 224). So in Romalinga v. Sadasiva 1. W. R. 25 P. C. pollution was pleaded as a bar but the P. C. found as a fact that the adoption had been made after the period of pollution which, they observed, extended to 16 days.

(8) Thangathanni v. Ramu, 5 M. 358.

(9) Jannabai v. Raychand 7 B. 221 (227, 228); Vijjarangam v. Lakshuman 8 B.H.C. R. 244 (257) and see post.

(10) Hanmant v. Bhimacharya, 12 B. 105, their descendants to make an adoption. In the latter case, it is now settled that the father cannot fetter his son's right to adopt or legally stipulate that if he should adopt, the son so adopted should not inherit. <sup>(1)</sup> The Privy Council however refrained from considering its effect inter partes. But there can be no doubt that if adoption is favoured by law and indeed an act, at least morally obligatory upon the sonless father, then such an agreement in restraint of acquiring an issue, would ordinarily be void and in any case, it could not shake the status of the adopted son, whatever consequences a breach of such agreement might entail inter partes. But this does not of course, prevent a father who has, in Bengal, the unfettered power of disposal of his property, from devising his estate to his son on condition that he does not make an adoption before he attains the eighteenth year, up to which period he was to remain in charge of his testamentary guardians. Here the clause was upheld not because there was any prohibition against adoption but because the father had by inserting the clause merely postponed the Hindu age of minority for a period of two years. In other words, while the father could not alter the son's general right of adoption, he was well within his right to guide and control his discretion. <sup>(2)</sup>

582. The term "son" in the section means the natural son and includes an adopted son. It does not include the fraternal nephew though he is declared by Manu to be a son of all his father's brothers. <sup>(3)</sup> Similarly the existence of a daughter's son is no bar to adoption though he is spoken of as equivalent to the son's son.

Nephew and daughter's son no bar to adoption.

583. The right of a ward of court to adopt is now the subject of express statutory enactments, which prohibit a Government ward from making an adoption without the previous or subsequent consent of the Local Government. The question in such a case is one of construction of the statutes concerned and the extent of their legality which should, however, be presumed. <sup>(4)</sup>

Statutory prohibition against adoption.

584. Eunuchs registered under the provisions of the Criminal Tribes Act <sup>(5)</sup> are expressly precluded from adopting a son. They therefore forfeit by force of this statute any common law right they may have had to make an adoption.

585. It will be presently seen that the wife has no power to adopt without the consent of her husband, but is the husband on his part bound to consult his wife before introducing a stranger into the family? An adoption being regarded as an imitation of nature, the wife logically could not be ignored. This argument was addressed to Nanda Pandit who had no difficulty in answering it on the

Assent of wife unnecessary.

(1) Suriya v. Raja of Pittapur, 9 M 499 (508), (505) P. C.; Hurrosoondery v. Cowar, 1 Fulton, 898; 1 I D (O. S.) 877.

(2) Hurrosoondery v. Cowar 1 Fulton, 898 (898); 1 I. D. (O. S.) 877 (879).

(3) Manu—"If amongst uterine brothers one becomes father of a son, Manu ordained that all the rest became fathers of male issue by that son." IX. 182; Datt. Mim II 29.

(4) For provisions prohibiting adoption by a Government ward see C. P. Court of Wards Act S. 32 (XXIV of 1899); Beng. Act IX of 1879. S. 81 read with Act VII of 1912 S 5; Mad. Act 1 of 1902 S. 34; Jamuna v. Bama Sounderi, 1 C. 289 (295) P. C.; Mad. Reg. V of 1804, S 25 U. P. Act IV of 1912, S 37; Punj. Act II of 1908, S 15; Orissa-Beng Act IX of 1879 S. 61 Bombay (Bom Act 1 of 1908); Ajmere (Reg 1 of 1889) seems to be a similar provision.

(5) III of 1911.

ground of the inferiority of women and the superiority of the husband <sup>(1)</sup> who can validly adopt a son not only without consulting her but in spite of her opposition <sup>(2)</sup> but she nevertheless, if she is the sole wife, comes to be regarded as mother of the adopted son and her parents, as his maternal grandparents. <sup>(3)</sup>

586. So while the wife does not count in the matter of adoption and it makes no difference in her status if she is the sole wife, her non-participation will however prejudice her right if she has a co-wife who had joined in the adoption. In that case the latter acquires the status of a mother and the former that of a step-mother so that on death of the adopted son, the former inherits to him to the exclusion of the latter. <sup>(4)</sup>

587. Adoption by woman.—The woman's right of adoption is based upon the following express texts:—

"Yashisth.—Man formed of uterine blood and virile seed proceeds from his mother and his father (as an effect) from its cause. Therefore the father and the mother have power to give, to sell, and to abandon their son".

"5. Let a woman neither give nor receive a son except with her husband's permission " <sup>(5)</sup>

Baudhayan : " Man, formed of virile seed and uterine blood proceeds from his mother and father as an effect from its cause.

" 3. Therefore, the father and the mother have power to give, to abandon, or to sell their son."

" 6. Let a woman neither give nor receive a son except with the permission of her husband." <sup>(6)</sup>

These texts are explained away by Nanda Pandit who argues that since the permission of her husband is essential, it is the husband and not the wife who adopts and on his death since " the assent of her husband is impossible " the wife could not adopt. Then as to adoption with the consent of his kinsmen he thinks it would defeat the very purpose of adoption. <sup>(7)</sup> The argument is throughout sophistical, but whatever might be the value of his argument, his views are unmistakeable against woman's adoption. Vachaspati Misra <sup>(8)</sup> of the Mithila School supports the same opinion but on the ground that a woman is incapable of performing the religious ceremony of adoption. According to him Vashisth and Baudhayan merely empowered the wife to become associated with her husband in the act of adoption.

Devand Bhatt author of the Dattak Chandrika does not appear to be so hostile to her claim. He even goes so far as to explain away the qualification as to the husband's assent by arguing that assent must be presumed from the absence of express prohibition. <sup>(9)</sup> With this both Mitra Misra <sup>(10)</sup> and Nilkanth <sup>(11)</sup> agree.

(1) Datt. Mim. 1-22 (Suth) p. 5; Annapurni v. Collector, 18 M. 277 (283) affirmed O.A. Sub. nom. Annapurni v. Forbes, 23 M. 1 P. C.

(2) Narain v. Gopal, 18 O. C. 341; 33 I. C. 31.

(3) Datt. Mim. Sec. VI 50; Annapurni v. Collector, 18 M. 277 (283).

(4) Annapurni v. Forbes, 23 M. 1 (9) P. C., following Kaheeshuree v. Greesh Chunder. (1864) W. R. (Sup. Vol) 71, dissenting from Macnaughten's view in his Prel. Remarks to his H. L. pp. 12, 13.

(5) Ch. XV-§§ 1-2, 5, 14 S. B. E. 75.

(6) Baudhayan Parisisht, Q. 7, Ch. 5 §§ 2-3, 6; 14, S. B. E. 335.

(7) Datt. Mim. Sec. 1 §§ 15-19, Datt. Ch. seems to favour the woman's right (See 1 §§ 31, 32.)

(8) Vivad Chintamani (pp. 74, 75.)

(9) Datt. Ch. 1 § 32.

(10) Vira Mitroday, pp. 115-119.

(11) Vyvhar Mayukh (Mandlik) p. 57.

588. Other writers proceed on lines of their own so that there is ample authority afforded by the text for any view one chooses to support. (1) This conflict was noticed and passed in review by the Privy Council in a case in which they said: "All the schools accept as authoritative the text of Vashisth which says: 'Nor let a woman give or accept a son unless with the assent of her lord.' But the Mithila School apparently takes this to mean that the assent of the husband must be given at the time of adoption, and therefore, that a widow cannot receive a son in adoption according to the Dattak form at all. The Bengal school interprets the text as requiring an express permission given by the husband in his life-time, but capable of taking effect after his death, whilst the Mayukh and the Kaustubh, treatises which govern the Maratha School, explain the text away by saying that it applies only to an adoption made in the husband's life-time, and is not to be taken to restrict the widow's power to do that which the general law prescribes as beneficial to her husband's soul. Thus upon a careful review of all these writers, it appears that the difference relates rather to what shall be taken to constitute, in cases of necessity, evidence of authority from the husband, than to the authority to adopt being independent of the husband." (2)

589. "The duty, therefore, of a European Judge, who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law, is not so much to

Working rule stated. inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal, and has there been sanctioned by usage. For, under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law. (3)

Adoption by wife. 28. A wife may adopt a son to her husband with his express consent.

Synopsis.

- (1) Adoption by wife (590). (3) Joint authority invalid (592).
(2) Husband's authority (591).

590. Adoption by a wife is supported by the text of Vashisth who allows it subject to the assent of her lord. (4) Cases of such adoptions are rare. Such an adoption contemplates the absence of the husband, in which case, the wife exercises the authority within the limits set by her husband, and is, in effect, his agent for that purpose. The consent requisite is express though it may be oral (5) but when given in a non-testamentary writing, it must be registered. (6) And since the provisions of the Registration Act are not controlled by Hindu Law, and are only subject to the Majority Act and the registrar has no option but to refuse registration of any such instrument if executed by a "minor, an idiot or a lunatic" (7) it follows that a person under 18 years of age cannot validly convey his authority in writing though he may do so by parol, a result which the law never could have contemplated, while extending its policy of laissez faire to Hindus in the matter of adoption in enacting the Indian law of majority.

(1) Sarkar's Adoption (2nd Ed.) pp. 224-227.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (485, 487).

(3) Ib., p. 486.

(4) Narayan v. Nana, 7 B. H. C. R. (A c.)

153.

(5) Soonder v. Gudodhur, 7 M. I. A. 54

(6) S. 17 (3) Registration Act (XVI of 1908); Somasundara v. Duraisami, 27 M. 80.

(7) Ib S-85 (3) (b); contra 12 C. W. N. CXXX., VIII cannot be maintained.

591. But the law must remain in this unsatisfactory state till the Legislature intervenes to place it on a more logical footing. Where, of the two wives, the junior joins with her husband in adoption, she becomes the adoptive mother and is entitled to succeed to the adopted son in preference to the senior co-wife, who is assigned only the status of a step-mother. (1)

592. The authority given must be to the wife alone and not to her conjointly with another. Such authority, if given, vitiates it altogether. (2) But a person may while authorizing his wife to adopt provide that she should not adopt without consulting a person named (3) or even make the exercise of the power contingent upon the consent of other persons. (4)

The subject of authority to adopt will be found more fully discussed in the sequel.

Adoption by widow. 29. (1) A widow may adopt a son to her deceased husband with his express authority :

Provided that, in places not subject to the Bengal and Benares schools, she may also adopt without such authority in accordance with the following rules :—

(2). (a) In the Dravid country she may make an adoption after consulting thereon all her husband's sapindas, and with the assent of all or the majority of them, thereto: provided that if only some of them assent to the adoption made, it will still be valid if it is proper and was made in the bona fide performance of a religious duty.

(b) Provided also, that where the family is joint, the consent of the father-in-law, and in his absence, of its managing member would be sufficient for an adoption made in their own life-time.

(3). (a) In the Maharashtra, where the widow succeeds to her husband who died a separated member from his family, she may adopt without his consent which is presumed.

(b) But if her husband died a member of an undivided family then she may only adopt with the consent, of his undivided co-parceners, in which case in lieu of such consent the consent of persons mentioned in clause (2) (b) will be sufficient, and the provisions of clause (2) (a) mutatis mutandis apply.

Explanation : 1.—The consent herein before mentioned must be free and not one induced by fraud or corruption.

Explanation : 2.—Where the majority of co-parceners or sapindas as the case may be, have assented to an adoption, it will be presumed that their assent was bona fide.

(1) Surendra v. Sailaja, 18 C. 385.

(2) Beem Churn v. Heeralall, 2 I. J. (N. S.) 225; Amritlal v. Surmonoyee, 27 C 996 (1002) P. C.; Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivasa, 39 B. 441.

(3) Annapurni v. Collector, 18 M. 277 (288).

(4) Amrito Lal v. Surmonoyee, 27 C 996 (1002, 1003) P. C.

Exception 1.—A widow in Mithila can make no adoption to her husband with or without his consent.

Exception 2.—In the Punjab, the validity of an adoption by a widow depends upon her compliance with the tribal and territorial custom.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Adoption by widow (593).                                     | (5) Consent of husband necessary in       |
| (2) Necessity for consent (593-594).                             | Bengal and in Benares (599,               |
| (3) Whose consent necessary (594-595).                           | 604).  |
| (4) Difference of opinion between the various schools (597-598). | (6) Prohibition to adopt (601-603).       |
|   | (7) Adoption by minor female , (605-611). |

593. Analogous Law.—The foundation of the woman's right to adopt is the text of Vashisth's already cited. (§ 587) It makes her power subject to the assent of her lord. (1) But later usage has interpreted this text, giving rise to a diversity of views which have become more or less crystallized into fixed rules qualifying it. Thus in Bombay if the husband died separated from the family, his assent is presumed and the widow is empowered to make an adoption unrestricted by any of his relatives whose just expectations she might disappoint. (2) But if he died in jointness, then her power is limited and she cannot adopt without the consent of her father-in-law during his life time (3) after whose death she must obtain the consent of all her husband's undivided co-parceners, or of the managing member of their family. (4) In Madras the widow can never adopt free from the control of a masculine mind, whether her husband died separated or not. In either case, she must have been either possessed of the authority of the husband, or in its absence, she must act with the consent of her husband's Sapindas. She is bound to consult all, but for the validity of her adoption it is not necessary that all must concur in her act. If all or the majority do, then her act becomes final, but if only some of them concur and the rest dissent, then the validity of her act is put to another test: was it proper and made in pursuance of a religious duty? The question in this case becomes one of fact to be decided on the circumstances of the family and a fair consideration of its expediency.

594. But both the Bombay and the Madras schools agree that in an undivided family the consent of the father-in-law alone is sufficient. And so is that of the managing member of the family. If this is secured, the widow need not seek the assent of the other Sapindas. The managing member, must, however have given his independent assent uninfluenced by fraud, misrepresentation or valuable consideration, though he is entitled to stipulate that his own share should not be reduced by the adoption. But in either case the consent must be acted upon during the life time of the person consenting.

595. The Bengal (5) and Benares (6) schools understand Vashisth's text to imply the express authority of her husband and insist upon it, while in the

(1) Mutsaddi Lal v Kundan Lal, 28 A. 877 P. C.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 897 (436), Gopal v. Vishnu 28 B. 250 (256); Malgouda v. Babaji 37 B. 107.

(3) Ramji v. Ghaman 6 B. 498; Dinkar v. Ganesh id 505; Vithoba v. Bapu, 15 B. 110.

(4) Lakshmi Bai v. Vishnu, 29 B. 410.

5) Bachoo v. Mankorebai 31 B. 373 P. C.

(6) Janki v. Sudasheo, 1 Beng. S. R. 197; Solukhna v. Ramdolah, 1 Beng. S. R. 435; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 318; Tara Munee v. Derrnarayan, 3 Beng. S. R. 516; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 1058

Mithila country the widow can, under no circumstances, adopt a son to her husband even with his express authority, though she may adopt a son to herself in the Kritrim form. (1) But such adoption is not an adoption to her husband, but to herself and consequently, the adopted son does not succeed to any estate but her own. (2) In the Punjab adoption is so entirely subject to tribal and territorial custom that it admits of no general statement.

596. The next few sections state the general rules and the discussion there under sets out their detailed import.

But all schools are agreed that whatever the nature of qualification upon her right, her power of adoption remains discretionary in her. She is not bound to adopt unless she chooses to do so. But if she does adopt, then the "assent of her lord" which may be given either orally or in writing, must be strictly pursued. If therefore, the assent did not limit her as to time, she may exercise the power at any time. (3) But the authority is of course personal to her. She cannot delegate, transmit or transfer it to another. (4)

597. All start by accepting the text of Vashisth as of unquestionable authority. But the text is bald and merely provides that the wife must adopt with the "assent of her lord." What is the meaning of "assent"? This is the sole question upon which there is divergence of views between the various schools. According to some, the consent of the husband is provided for because he is the natural guardian of the wife. Adoption affects the family and he consents for the family who should have something to say in his absence. This too is admitted and its admission involves a further admission that if the husband had separated from the family the latter could then have neither the motive nor the right to control the wife's adoption. This is the Bombay and Madras view.

598. According to the Western or Bombay school, in the case of a separated husband, his consent is necessarily implied, and in the absence of a prohibition, must be presumed (5) while according to the Eastern or Benares and Bengal schools it cannot be presumed but must be expressly given. (6) The Dravid (or Madras) school adopts an intermediate course between the stricter law of Bengal and the wider law of Bombay by making an adoption by the widow dependent either, as elsewhere, upon the consent of the husband or in its absence, upon the concurrence of her husband's Sapindas.

599. But while this has been literally understood in Bengal and Benares, other schools understand it merely to signify that the assent of a masculine mind is all that is required and would be sufficient to validate a woman's adoption and it may be furnished not only by the husband, but by any of his kinsmen who are interested in him and in his estate. Such assent is provided for to prevent a woman from making an improper adoption which is prejudicial to the family. Being condemned to a lifelong tutelage, a widow was not intended to act independently of those who are her guardians. Consequently when

(1) Oomra Singh v. Mahtab Koonwar, 3 Agra 103; Haimun v. Hunsheam, 5 W. R. 69 P. C.; Pudum Singh (Chowdhry) v. Koer Oodey Singh, 12 M. I. A 350, Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 12 A. 328.

(2) Sreenarain v. Bhya Jha, 2 Beng. S. R. 23 (27).

(3) Collector of Tirhoot v. Huopershad, 7 W. R. 500; Shibo Kooeres v. Joogun Singh, 8 W. R. 155.

(4) Bamundoss v. Turince, 7 M. I. A. 169 (190); Mulasadi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P. C.; Uma Sundari v. Saurobinee, 7 C. 288.

(5) But this is only the later view. Lakshmi Bai v. Saraswati Bai, 23 B 789 (795). Contra Per Westropp, J. (dissentiente) in Bayabar v. Bala, 7 B H C R (App) 1 who held express authority necessary.

(6) See cases cited in F. N. (4) and (5).

her husband was alive, his consent was sufficient. But on his death his guardianship ceasing, any consent given by him to a post mortem adoption became inoperative, except only in the case when he died separate from the family, in which case the widow being the heir, she took the estate independent of his kinsmen's control. And as adoption was beneficial to his soul he must be presumed to have consented to an act which was conducive to his spiritual advantage. (1) Therefore, in such a case, in the absence of an express prohibition, consent is presumed. On this subject then, the Eastern and Western schools, take diametrically opposite views. The one presumes prohibition and requires express consent; the other presumes consent, till any prohibition is proved. The Madras school presumes neither way, but stipulates for consent either of the husband or his Sapindus.

600. During his life-time, as her natural guardian and protector, the father-in-law is the proper person to give the requisite consent. (2) But if he too is dead, then her husband's joint co-parceners must accord their authority to an act which, however beneficial to her husband's soul, is highly prejudicial to their temporal interests. But should they be unanimous and what if some of them dissent? Should the majority favour the adoption? And is the managing member competent to authorize it? All these questions are natural but cannot be answered in a general way as "it is not easy to lay down an inflexible rule for the case in which no father-in-law is in existence. Every such case must depend upon the circumstances of the family. All that can be said is, that there should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen, as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously, nor from a corrupt motive." (3) In determining the sufficiency of the assent the court will look to its propriety. If it was given from corrupt motive by some, even though by the managing member, it will be insufficient; otherwise, probably, the consent of the managing member, should suffice. (4) Her own motive for adoption is however, irrelevant. She may, for instance adopt with intent to defeat her co-widow's share. (5)

601. Husband's prohibition to adopt.—It will be observed, that by the consensus of opinions of all schools the express permission of the husband entitled the widow everywhere to make an adoption. But his express prohibition is nowhere stated to be necessary to destroy her right. If, therefore, by his words and acts a prohibition might be reasonably inferred, then it amounts to such prohibition as will be sufficient in law to preclude an adoption by her. This was pointed out in the Ramnad case (6) in which their Lordships observed: "Inasmuch as the authorities in favour of the widow's power to adopt, with the assent of her husband's kinsmen, proceed, in a great measure, upon the assumption that his assent to this meritorious act is to be implied wherever he has not forbidden it, so the power cannot be inferred when a prohibition by the husband either has been directly expressed by him, or can be reasonably deduced from his disposition of his property, or the existence of a direct line competent to the full performance of religious duties, or from other circumstances of his family" which afford no plea for a supersession of heirs on the

(1) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (485); Datto v. Pandurang, 32 B. 499.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 375.

(3) Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (190)

P. O.

(4) Ganesa v. Gopala, 2 M. 270 P. C.

(5) Ishimawa v. Sangawa, 22 B. 206.

(6) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (448).

ground of religious obligation to adopt a son in order to complete, or fulfil, defective religious rites. (1)

602. The prohibition to adopt may be expressed or implied and may equally be inferred from other facts inconsistent with a sanction. So where the husband at the point of death positively refused to adopt a son, died without retracting his refusal, the court considered it necessarily to carry with it an implied prohibition to the wife to do what he himself had deliberately refused to do. (2) So where the wife had misbehaved and had been for 30 years living apart from her husband, who had deserted her and married three other wives in succession, adopted a son with the consent of her husband's brother, the court held that the presumed authority in a normal case was more than rebutted by those facts which justified a finding of prohibition to her to adopt whereupon the consent of his brother to the adoption became irrelevant. (3) So where a testator by his will provided for the contingency of his having a son in these words, viz., "if by divine favour I have child of the male sex," these words were construed to mean only a natural son and were not sufficient to confer an authority to adopt. (4) The terms of a will or other disposition of property by the husband might imply a prohibition. (5)

603. It has already been stated that such prohibition is legally presumed both under the Bengal and Benares systems of law while under the other two systems, there is equally a presumed permission in favour of adoption. The burden of proving permission in the one case lies upon the widow while the burden of proving prohibition in the other case lies upon those who dispute her presumed authority.

604. The view that the widow subject to the Bengal (6) and Benares school (7) cannot adopt without the express authority of her husband is supported by the highest authorities. (8) In Bengal the question was settled as far back as 1811 when the Pandits consulted, opined that the widow was competent to adopt with the authority of her husband which may be provisional as, if he had a son then alive, the husband might direct that in the event of his death, the widow was at liberty to adopt. (9) Such authority might be verbal or in writing. (10) As regards Benares, a similar question put to the Pandits in 1816 elicited the reply that though the authority of the widow to adopt without the authority of her husband was admitted by Vir mitroday and Samskar Koustubh, their authority was overruled by that of the Dattak Mimansa which required his authority. (11) The authority of her "lord" could not, the Pandits added, mean or be

Adoption by Bengal and Benares widows

(1) Ib., p. 443.

(2) Bayabai v. Bata, 7 B. H. C. R. (App) 1 (xix-xx).

(3) Dyanoba v. Radhabai (1894) B. P. J. 22.

(4) Shiyah v. Calve, 21 M. L. T. 315; 37 I. C. 404.

(5) Malganda v. Babaji, 37 B. 107.

(6) Solukhna v. Pande, (1811) 1 S. D. A. B. 433; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 818 (820); Tara Munee v. Debnarayan, (1824) 3 S. D. A. B. 517; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 1058.

(7) Shumshere (Raja) v. Dilraj Konwur, (1816) B. S. D. A. 216, 6 I. D. (O. S.) 523; Haimunchull (Raja) v. Ghunshcam, 5 W. R. 69 P. C. Pudum Singh (Chowdhry) v. Koer Oodey Singh, 12 M. I. A. 350; Tulshi Ram v.

Behari Lal 12 A. 328.

(8) Solukhna v. Pande, (1811) 1 S. D. A. B. 433; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 818 (820).

(9) Tara Munee v. Debnarayan, 3 Beng. S. R. 516; 1 I. D. (O. S.) 1058; in Janki v. Rai, (1807) Beng. S. R. 289; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 193, the necessity for authority was admitted though the one produced was found forged.

(10) In Jai Ram v. Musam, (1850) S. D. A. B. 86; 1 I. D. (O. S.) 836 (841) there is a note that "The necessity of the husband's permission to legalize the widow's adoption in Bengal is established by many printed cases."

(11) Shumshere (Raja) v. Dilraj Konwur, (1816) 2 S. D. A. B. 216; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 523 (525) (a Gorakhpur case).

replaced by the authority of his kindred. (1) The same opinion was expressed as regards the Dattak adoption in Bihar, and on the same grounds. (2)

In all these cases the permission is assumed to be express and not merely implied.

That is how they have been understood by the Calcutta High Court. (3) It has already been stated that the written authority of her husband releases her power, which the widow may then exercise or not at her discretion, and unless her authority is limited as to time, there is no limitation to its exercise. (4)

605. Adoption by a Minor Female.—The Indian Majority Act saves a Hindu as regards marriage, dower, and adoption (5) which means that in these matters the Hindu law remains unaffected by that Act. The question therefore arises as to the age of majority of a Hindu female. The Smritis prescribe an age of majority for a male to be the 15th (6) or the 16th year (7) which may mean either the commencement or completion of that year. (8) This has been assumed to be the age of majority also for a Hindu female in a case in which it has been accordingly held that no Hindu minor can make any adoption before completion of her 15th year. (9) But this assumption would appear to be unjustifiable since while the Smritis have of necessity, to prescribe an age of adolescence for males, after which they have to enter upon their pre-ordained duties, there is no necessity to prescribe the same or any age for the majority of women, who according to the oft repeated text are condemned to life long dependence upon men (10) and who, therefore, never in the eye of the law, attain the age of discretion in the same way as men.

606. There being then a paucity of express texts prescribing an age of majority for women, the only view possible is that the age of discretion for women must be deemed to be the same age as is prescribed by the Indian Majority Act, not proprio vigore, but as embodying the rule of justice, equity and good conscience. In this view a woman on completion of her 18th year may validly make an adoption, though even then there must be some evidence that she had done so after taking independent advice, and realizing the nature of her act and its effect upon her own rights. The necessity for such independent advice will be greater if she is a young pardanashin woman leading a secluded life, who is ignorant and had taken no part in the business of her husband.

607. If the adopter was below 18 then her tender years would be her best protection, and no Court would drive her to the logical consequence of her act unless, it is convinced that she had acted of her own free will with due advertence to the sacrifice she was making in letting a stranger into her family.

608. Where a person claims to disinherit such a minor heir on the score of his adoption by her, the burden is upon him to shew not only that he had been

(1) Ib. p. 526.

(2) Jai Ram v. Musan, (1880) S. D. A. B. 8; 7 I. D. (O.S.), 856 (840)

(3) Lala Parbhu Lal v. Mylne, 14 C. 401, (115, 416) *

(4) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M. I. A. 169 (190); Mutasaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 877 P. O.; Uma Sundari v. Sornobinee, 7 C. 288.

(5) Act IX of 1875 S. 2.

(6) Madhu Sudan v. Debigbinda, 1 B.L. R. 49 F. B.; Mothoormohun v. Soorendra, 1 C. 108 (114) F. B.; Sattiraju v. Venkataswami,

40 M. 925 (929.)

(7) Manu VIII-27

(8) But in Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba, 27 B 452 P. C. the Privy Council regarded a boy before completion of his 16th year as a minor even under Hindu law. See ib pp 496-499 p. 496 for the S.J.'s opinion, affirmed by P. C. at p. 499 To the same effect Kishori Lal v. Chunnital, 31 A. 116 (127) P.C.

(9) Sattiraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925

(10) Manu IX-3; V 148; Yajnavalkya I-85

duly and validly adopted, but that his adoptive mother had done so after mature reflexion and with the advice of her competent advisers.

609. If her husband had charged her with the power to take a particular boy in adoption and she does so, her act would be intelligible as in that case she was merely acting as the instrument of his will. There is then no necessity for independent advice. Even so, but to a less degree, would be an adoption made in pursuance of a general power to adopt conferred by her deceased husband. But time in such cases is a material factor. If the widow had refrained from making an adoption for, say 10 or 20 years, some explanation, may be necessary for the discharge of her delegated power.

610. This is the trend of cases which may be now considered. In 1866 Westropp, J., had to consider the legal effect of an adoption by a Hindu widow aged 17, wife of one Ramakant, Brahman, who carried on business as shroff and died leaving an estate mostly comprising moveable property worth over four lakhs. It was pleaded that the adoption was with the authority of her husband but it was not proved. Its factum was however established whereupon the learned Judge observed: "Not only was the appellant a Hindu female, whom the law only barely recognizes as sui juris, so careful does it require that the Court should be, in ascertaining that she has full knowledge of the nature and consequence of any acts affecting her legal rights, which she has been induced to perform—but she was only seventeen years of age at the time of the alleged adoption (as was admitted in the course of the argument), and she could have had little more experience or knowledge of the world than a mere child. If she adopted, or assented to the adoption of, the infant plaintiff at all, she manifestly did so at the suggestion of the Brahmans, Gumashtas, and clerks who surrounded her, and who were the real actors on the occasion, and who were desirous to transfer to their own hands, the control and management of Ramakant's property and firm during the minority of the infant plaintiff. Looking at the effect of adoption upon the rights of a Hindu woman who succeeds to the property of her husband, we should expect clear evidence that she was fully informed of those rights, and of the effect of the act of adoption upon them—an act which reduces her from the position of complete and absolute mistress of her husband's moveable property, and tenant for life at least, of his immoveable property, to a mere right of maintenance. Hindu women should be shielded from cajolery and undue influence with nearly all the jealous strictness with which the rights of a minor or other person not sui juris are watched—not an iota of which strictness should be abated in the instance of a widow just emerging from infancy, as was the case with the appellant at the time of the alleged adoption. Some relaxation of this strictness would, of course, be allowable in the case of a Hindu woman whose husband has directed that she should adopt. She is then under at least a moral duty to adopt, and the act of adoption by her is one which may justly be expected. It is different in the case of a woman whose husband leaves no such direction, because the act is one in derogation of her own right, and not in obedience to any order of her husband, and especially so in this case, in which the husband, from an anxiety to preserve his estate intact for his wife, has positively refused to adopt. If the conscience of the Court were satisfied that the widow voluntarily performed the ceremonies absolutely essential for adoption, and had been previously fully informed, first, of her rights, and secondly, that the effect of an adoption upon them must be wholly to divest her of those rights and to reduce her to a maintenance, it would be the duty of the Court to uphold the act of adoption." (1)

611. In another case one Balkrishnan had adopted a son in whose favour he had executed a will a few hours before his death, in the presence of his wife who participated in it. Balkrishnan was then in a dying condition and was barely conscious. On his death his widow allowed the adopted son to perform the funeral rites of her deceased husband and on the day after the adoption and the death, she affixed her mark to a petition addressed to the Collector informing him of the adoption and performance of the obsequies by the adopted son, and praying for mutation in his favour. Both the Courts in India found these facts proved and decreed the son's claim for possession of the estate against the widow, but the Privy Council reversed the decree holding that even if all these acts be proved against the widow, it did not prove that a legal adoption had been made. Their Lordships held that so far as regards the husband, he was insensible, and as both the adoption and the will were not shown to be supported by antecedent circumstances and there was nothing to show that the deceased even though conscious, was possessed of a mind capable of judgment and reflection, his acts must be ignored as of no account. There then remained the act and conduct of the wife, as to whom they observed: "The appellant is a Hindu female. So long as she is acting without the guidance of a disinterested adviser her acquiescence in an alleged adoption or will ought not to prejudice her. In such a case as the present, it was hardly to be expected that she would be capable of distinguishing between an adoption in fact, and a legal adoption, or between a will in fact, and a valid will." (2) In other words, in their Lordships' view, it was incumbent upon those who relied upon the dual acts to shew not only that the wife had consented to them but also that she was made aware of the effect of those acts upon her rights. These two cases were not cases of Pardanashins whose helplessness is greater and in dealing with whom a much higher degree of responsibility rests with those who rely upon acts imputed to them to the prejudice of their interest. (3)

612. Such cases bear no analogy to male adoptions by minors though they are equally entitled to protection. As previously remarked (§ 593) adoption to a Hindu is a religious necessity and adoption, if otherwise valid, cannot be held invalid, merely because it was made with the authority of a minor husband, or was made by the minor himself (4) provided he had then attained years of discretion, (5) that is to say, was in or had completed his sixteenth year.

613. Adoption by Dravid woman.—As the whole law of adoption by a female has been evolved out of a single sentence of Vashisth's, so the whole of the Dravid view of that law is the outcome of a single sentence in Colebrooke's note on the Mitakshara (6) where he says that in some of the schools adoption is admitted to be valid "if made by the widow with the assent

(1) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1 followed in Somasekhara v. Subba drama, 6 B. 524.

(2) Tayamma v. Sashachalla, 1 M. L. A. 429 (488); Ranganayakamma v. Alwar, 13 M. 214 (221).

(3) Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali, 31 A. 456 (462) P. C.; Kali Bakshi v. Ram Gopal,

36 A. 81 (89) P. C.

(4) Rajendro v. Saroda Soonduree, 15 W. R. 548; Jumona v. Bama Sundari, 1 C. 289 P. C.; Alendakim v. Adinath, 18 C. 69 (72).

(5) Jumona v. Bama Sundari, 1 C. 289 (296) P. C. following Rajendro v. Saroda Soonduree, 15 W. R. 548.

(6) Ch. 1, Sec. XI § 9.

of the husband's kindred." This statement was repeated by Sir Thomas Strange in his Hindu Law <sup>(1)</sup> in which he said, "According to the doctrine of the Benares and Maharashtra schools prevailing in the Peninsula it (i. e., the husband's assent) may be supplied by that of his kindred, her natural guardians." The Privy Council quoted and accepted these opinions, <sup>(2)</sup> and held them to reflect the current usage of the Dravid country also, supported to that extent by a collection of Sanskrit texts made for the purpose of the case before their Lordships <sup>(3)</sup> as well as by the opinions of the Pandits <sup>(4)</sup> and of the decided cases <sup>(5)</sup> cited and discussed in the court below. <sup>(6)</sup>

614. The statement that in the absence of the husband's authority the widow could adopt, with the "assent of her husband's kindred" has thus been the foundation of all law relating to the subject of woman's right to adopt in the Dravid country, now to be examined. That Colebrooke's statement is as vague as the text of Vashisth was admitted by the Privy Council <sup>(7)</sup> who said: "It must, however, be admitted that the doctrine is stated in the old treatises and even by Mr. Colebrooke, with a degree of vagueness that may occasion considerable difficulties and inconveniences in its practical application. The question who are the kinsmen whose assent will supply the want of positive authority from the deceased husband, is the first to suggest itself. Where the husband's family is in the normal condition of a Hindu family—i. e., undivided—that question is of comparatively easy solution. In such a case the widow, under the law of all the Schools which admit this disputed power of adoption, takes no interest in her husband's share of the joint estate, except a right to maintenance. And though the father of the husband, if alive, might as the head of the family and the natural guardian of the widow, be competent by his sole assent to authorize an adoption by her, yet, if there be no father, the consent of all the brothers, who, in default of adoption, would take the husband's share, would probably be required, since it would be unjust to allow the widow to defeat their interest by introducing a new co-parcener against their will. Where, however, as in the present case, the widow has taken by inheritance the separate estate of her husband, there is greater difficulty in laying down a rule.

615. The power to adopt when not actually given by the husband can only be exercised when a foundation for it is laid in the otherwise neglected observance of religious duty, as understood by Hindus. Their Lordships do not think there is any ground for saying, that the consent of every kinsman, however remote, is essential. The assent of kinsmen seems to be required by reason of the presumed incapacity of women for independence, rather than the necessity of procuring the consent of all those whose possible and reversionary interest in the estate would be defeated by the adoption. In such a case, therefore, their Lordships think, that the consent of the father-in-law, to whom the law points as the natural guardian and "venerable protector" of the widow, would be sufficient. It is not easy to lay down an

(1) 1 Strange H. L., p. 79.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (432, 433).

(3) Dattaka Mimamsa of Vidyaranya-swami in which the widow is declared to possess the right to adopt with the authority of her father-in-law, etc cited per curiam in Collector of Madura v. Muttu, 2 M. H. C. R. 206 (221) O. A. 12 M. I. A. 397 (438).

(4) See them collected in the H. C. judgment Collector of Madura v. Muttu, 2 M. H. C. R. 206 affirmed O. 12, A. M. I. A. 397.

(5) Appanienger v. Alemaloo, (1858) D. A. M. 5, 6.

(6) Collector of Madura v. Muttu, 2 M. H. C. R. 206.

(7) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (441, 442).

inflexible rule for the case in which no father-in-law is in existence. Every such case must depend upon the circumstances of the family. All that can be said is, that there should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show, that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive.

616. The Dravid widow takes an intermediate place, between the Bengal and Benares schools on the one hand, and the Maharashtra school on the other, inasmuch as her power to adopt depends either on the consent of her husband or on that of his Sapindas. So far then as she may adopt with the express authority of her husband, her power is the same as in the Bengal and Benares schools. But so far as she may adopt without such authority but with the assent of her husband's Sapindas, she possesses an added power denied to her sisters subject to those two schools.

This power she may invoke only if her husband has not prohibited an adoption. In fact no widow under any system can adopt in such a case. It is only when there is neither prohibition nor permission that it is possible for the Dravid and Maharashtra widows to exercise their power. As between them, the Dravid widow must seek the counsel and consent of her husband's Sapindas. This is equally necessary whether the family to which her husband belonged was joint or separate, and consequently the other interest affected by her adoption would be that of a co-parcener or a reversioner. Their consent she must ask for, and the consent of some of them she must get, otherwise, she cannot adopt at all.

617. But if her husband was a joint member of the family which remains joint on the date of sanction, then the widow is allowed the alternative of seeking and obtaining only the consent of her husband's father who as the head of the family and the natural guardian of the widow, is competent, by his sole assent to authorize an adoption by her. <sup>(1)</sup>

618. But if there be no father-in-law, by parity of reasoning, the consent of the managing member of the family should be equally sufficient. As the Privy Council observed: "The requisite authority is, in the case of an undivided family, to be sought within that family. The joint and undivided family is the normal condition of Hindu society. An undivided Hindu joint family is ordinarily joint not only in estate, but in food and worship; therefore not only the concerns of the joint property, but whatever relates to their commensality and their religious duties and observances, must be regulated by its members, or by the manager to whom they have expressly or by implication delegated the task of regulation." <sup>(2)</sup> This case is then an authority for two propositions: (i) That where the family is joint, the widow must seek permission of its joint members. In that case "she cannot at her will, travel out of that undivided family, and obtain the authorisation required, from a separated and remote kinsmen of her husband." <sup>(3)</sup> (ii) Such consent may be accorded by the manager as its head representative, as a part of his ordinary duties.

(1) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I A 397 (441, 442) The Datt Mim. of Vidyaranya-swami explicitly declares the authority of the "father-in-law, etc." to sanction the adoption.—See Ib p. 488.

(2) Pratap v. Kishuro, 1 M. 59 (81)

P. C

(3) Ib p. 81.

619. But if the consent of either the father-in-law or of the manager is not available, then the widow must consult all her husband's Sapindas, i. e., her own reversionary heirs. And amongst them, it is essential that she should consult and if possible, receive the assent of her next reversioners whose reversionary right will be defeated by the adoption. If these do not agree to the adoption she may then secure the assent of those next to them and so on, but the question of consent cannot be decided by the numerical votes of the reversioners but rather by the nature of the interest possessed by those who have consented to the act. For instance, an adoption would probably be upheld, if it is made with the consent of the next reversioner though it be opposed by the rest. <sup>(1)</sup>

620. To enable her to adopt she is not bound to obtain their unanimous assent to her act. This was the view of the Madras High Court in a case which was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council <sup>(2)</sup> who admitted that the assent of all the kinsmen was not necessary but that "there should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive." <sup>(3)</sup>

621. On the assumption made by the Privy Council that the propriety of such an act should be referred to and decided by a family council <sup>(4)</sup> it is clear that if the majority of the members consent then the adoption will be presumed to be prima facie justifiable and valid. <sup>(5)</sup> But it does not mean that all the available Sapindas should be made to sit in conclave and decide the question. <sup>(6)</sup> As was observed in a case affirmed by the Privy Council "The expression 'family council' in the above extract is no doubt rather too general and comprehensive. It is not probable that it was intended to include the whole circle of Sapindas and Samantodakas or to imply that they should assemble. The presumptive reversionary heir or heirs are the nearest of kin to the deceased husband and as such the natural advisers of the widow; and if his or their assent be obtained and the same be given bona fide, and not from any corrupt motive, that would be sufficient authority on which she could act, and it would not be necessary that she should seek the assent of remoter reversionary heirs" <sup>(7)</sup> whose dissent is then immaterial. <sup>(8)</sup> But, of course, it is not always that the expectant heir is anxious to forswear his heritage. In that case the widow must seek the counsel and consent of those in the next degree, and finally, of the general body without reference to their propinquity.

622. It is, of course, a counsel of perfection to the next reversioner to subordinate his self-interest to his duty and to offer disinterested advice to the widow, though such is the behest of law. <sup>(9)</sup> But as this is sometimes paid for, if received and often refused, the widow is not helpless in the exercise of her power which she may do, even with the consent of remote reversioners account-

(1) Kandukuri, v. Kandukuri 28 C. W. N. 251 P. C.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Moottoo, 2 M. H. C. R. 205 (230) O. A. 12 M. I. A 397.

(3) Collector of Madura v. Moottoo, 12 M. I. A 397 (442, 443) explained in Arundadi v. Kuppanmal, 3 M. H. C. R. 233; Raghunadha v. Brozo, 1 M. 69 (79) P. C.; Parasara v. Rangaraja, 2 M 202; Venkata Krishnamma v. Annappurnamma, 23 M. 436 (488)

(4) Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (191) P.C.

(5) Venkata Krishnamma v. Annapur- namma, 23 M. 436 (488, 489).

(6) Adusumalli v. Adusumalli, 30 M. L. J. 265; 32 I. C. 253

(7) Subramanyam v. Venkamma, 26 M. 627 affirmed O. A. 30 M. 50 P.C. Veera Basavaraja v. Balasuriya, (1914) M. W. N. 502; 25 I. C. 3 affirmed O. A. 11 M. 928 P. C. Adusumalli v. Adusumalli, 30 M. L. J. 265; 32 I. C. 253; Parasara v. Rangaraja, 2 M. 202.

(8) Sohnaj Kiam v. Ramlal, (1914) P. L. R. 78; 22 I. C. 542

(9) Venkatarama v. Bappamma, 30 M. 77.

ing for the refusal of the nearest on the ground of self-interest, in which case the court will uphold the adoption regarding their refusal as improper. (1)

But it may be that the widow does not even secure a majority, as while some consent the majority might dissent from her decision. In that case too, the adoption may be valid, though its validity cannot be presumed; but nevertheless the widow or her adopted son may establish its validity by proving that the adoption was made "in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

Proof of this must necessarily depend upon the circumstances of the family. But in such a case the court will require strong evidence to support an adoption affecting the rights of parties in actual possession not forgetting the "pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women possessed of or capable of exercising dominion over property." (2) On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that the right of adoption is inherent in the widow and the consent of the kinsmen is required, not because their rights in property will be prejudicially affected by her act, but rather because law assigns to the woman a position of perpetual incapacity without the direction of a masculine mind. (3)

623, It is perhaps unnecessary to add that such a consent must be by a person, who, if otherwise competent, though a female, must not be a minor. (4) It was so held where the widow of a predeceased son of one Vithoba justified her adoption on the ground that it had been consented to by his two daughters aged 25 and 12 in whom the estate had vested on their father's death. The only fact proved was that they were both present at the adoption. But the court threw out the adopted son's suit holding first that one of the daughters, being a minor, could not legally consent and that the consent of the adult daughter could not be proved by her mere presence at the adoption. Even if such presence amounted to acquiescence it is not equivalent to the consent legally necessary to legalize such an adoption. (5) As the Privy Council remarked "one of the plaintiffs in this case is an infant, the other is a Hindu female. Against neither is it the practice of the courts in India to press a presumption by acquiescence in a rival claim, from the mere non-contestation for a limited time of an adverse title, and especially not of such a title as this certificate evidences." (6) But this does not preclude such evidence being given in support of ratification in a case properly pleaded or where it is relied upon to prove consent or a case of estoppel. (7) But since previous consent of the reversioners is a conditio sine qua non under the textual law, a mere ratification ex post facto is not such consent as the law contemplates (8) though it may estop a party from pleading it. (9)

(1) Adusumalli v. Adusumalli, 30 M.L.J. 265 : 32 I.C. 253; Nagarampalli v. Nagarampalli, (1914) M.W.N. 650, 24 I.C. 257.

(2) Raghunatha v. Brozo, 1 M. 69 (83) P.C. (3) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo, 12 M.I.A. 397 (442); Narayanasaami v. Mangammal, 28 M. 815 (819).

(4) Vasudeo v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 551

(5) Vasudeo v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 551 (557, 558) following on the subject of presence as being insufficient to prove consent: Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M.I.A. 346;

Rungama v. Achama, 4 M.I.A. 1 (107, 108) followed in Bhimappa v. Basawa, 29 B. 400 (403) To the same effect Tarinee v. Shoroda, 11 W. R. 468 (476).

(6) Ramamani v. Kulanthai, 14 M.I.A. 346 (360).

(7) Bhimappa v. Basawa, 29 B. 400 (408). See this subject discussed post, under the head "Evidence of Adoption."

(8) Dorasami v. Chinna, 22 M.L.T. 538.

(9) Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Sing, 34 A. 398 I.P.C.

624. No consent is valid if it is obtained by corruption, coercion, undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation. These facts vitiate both the consent as well as the adoption consequent thereon (§ 635).

A consent purchased is not a free consent, though there is nothing illegal in a co-parcener of the husband stipulating with his consent that his own share should remain undisturbed by the adoption, since the protection of one's share in such cases cannot be said to constitute a corrupt or improper motive actuating his consent if it did not prejudice those for whom he was equally consenting. (1) The question is really one of degree. Where however, the consenting Sapinda had stipulated for some land to be transferred to him by the widow (2) or some one offered him Rs. 1,000 for his consent (3) the court naturally regarded them as cases of naked bribery. Such was the case where the consenting manager of the family agreed to an adoption stipulating for himself, that he should be its guardian and obtained a declaration from the widow that a village admittedly belonging to the joint family was his self-acquisition, as having descended to him from his maternal grandfather. The adoption was sought to be put in force against the manager's brothers but the Privy Council held that, in the circumstances, it could not bind them. (4)

The question of coercion and the rest are dealt with under a separate section (S. 33 § 653).

625. From this it follows that the widow is not bound to consult any female member of her household not even her junior co-widow. (5) She is in an equal position of dependence with herself though as between her and herself the latter occupies a position of pre-eminence due to her being the elder wife of her husband.

Consent of co-widow unnecessary.

626. A reversioner may revoke his consent to an adoption before it takes place. As his consent is gratuitous, made in the sole exercise of his discretion, it is necessarily subject to revision and he is not bound to assign any cause for it. (6)

Consent Revocable.

627. Though the Maharashtra widow in an undivided family and the Dravid in any case, has to secure the assent of her husband's kinsmen for the validity of her adoption, the question arises in both places as to whose consent is sufficient. It has already been seen that the consent of the father-in-law as the head and manager of the undivided family and in his absence, the consent of the manager is sufficient without reference to the other co-parceners. (7) But if the manager's consent is not available and in the Dravid country there is no manager, the family being divided, whose consent should then be applied for?

Case of divided Counsels.

It is conceded that if all the Sapindas or the majority of them consent, then it has the same effect, in the absence of which, consent of the

(1) Srinivasa v Rangasami, 30 M. 450.

(2) Rami v. Rangamma, 11 M. L. J. 20.

(3) Danakoti v. Bala Sundara, 36 M. 19(27)

(4) Ganesh v. Gopala, 2 M. 270 (280, 281) P. C.

(5) Ib.

(6) Vithoba v. Bapu, 15 B. 110 (114, 115), Subramanyam v. Venkammal, 26 M. 627 affirmed, O. A. 30 M. 50 P. C.

(7) Mami v. Subbarayar, 36 M. 145.

nearest Sapinda is essential and sufficient. Consequently, if the deceased has left an undivided brother or brothers related to him in equal degree, the consent of one of them should suffice, though the rest may withhold their consent for reasons of their own. (1) But she is bound to consult them although she might believe that some of them were hostile to her proposal and would certainly refuse their assent. (2) The general rule applicable to such cases was stated by the Privy Council to be "that there should be such proof of assent on the part of the Sapindas as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives, or in order to defeat the interest of this or that Sapinda, but upon a fair consideration by what may be called a family council, of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband." (3)

628. In accordance with the dictum of the Privy Council which applies to widow's adoptions whether in the Maharashtra or the Dravid peninsula, even where the widow adopts to her separated husband her act may be challenged on the ground that the adoption had been induced by corrupt motives and not in the bona fide assertion of a right. Such charge was made against a widow who had admittedly received Rs. 4,000 from the father of the adopted boy as a consideration for the latter's adoption, but the court held it to be insufficient to rebut the presumption in her favour. (4) In a later case the Full Bench of the same court had to consider the question of motive and held it to be altogether irrelevant. (5) This is in consonance with the principle that a person having a right to do a thing is entitled to do it whatever his motive. In the case of adoption in an undivided family it was observed "that even supposing that the motives which influence the widow may be puerile or even malicious, still if no fraud or deception has been practised on the head of the family, who is her rightful guardian and protector, and with whom she lives, and to whom she must look for maintenance, and if he had assented to her taking a proper person in adoption, then that son takes the estate of the widow's late husband." (6) The fact that the motive was to defeat or divest her husband's kinsmen of her husband's interest which had devolved on them, by survivorship is no ground for attacking an adoption, for it is one of its necessary incidents. As the Privy Council observed "it would be very dangerous to introduce into the consideration of these cases of adoption nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow." (7)

629. Punjab adoptions.—The law of adoption in the Punjab is mostly dominated by custom, in which the leading principles of Hindu Law are faintly reflected. As such, adoptions in the Punjab may generally be said to be subject to the rule that where the adopter is a wife or widow, her power to adopt is limited by the authority of her husband or her husband's kinsmen.

630. Adoption by the Maharashtra Widow.—In the matter of adoption the Maratha widow possesses a peculiar privilege of adopting to her separated husband without his or anybody else's permission. The genesis of this rule is the outcome of the following reasoning. There is nothing in Manu or in the Mital shara on

(1) Parasara v. Rangaraja, 2 M. 202 (206, 207) explaining Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 P. O.

(2) Subrahmanyam v. Venkamma, 26 M. 627 affirmed, O. A. 80 M. 50 P. C.; Palani-swamy v. Vanniammal, 4 I. C. (M) 86; Veera Basavaraju Balasurga Prasad Row, 41 M. 998 (P. C.)

(3) Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (190, 191) P. C.

(4) Mahableshwar v. Durga Bai, 22 B. 199.

(5) Ramchandra v. Mulji, 22 B. 558 (568) F. B.

(6) Vithoba v. Bapu, 15 B. 110 (134, 135).

(7) Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 (190) P. C.

the subject of woman's adoption. Therefore the Bombay school turn to their local authorities for the definition of her power. The Mayukh carries it no further than the Dravid school for it says :

"Therefore if there must be an order from the husband, it is for a married woman only, as above shown ; but for a widow even without it, adoption may be made with the permission of her father, or, on failure of him, of the relations under this precept : " Let a woman be taken care of by her father while a child, by her husband when married, by her sons in her old age. If none of these exist let her other relations take care of her. A woman is never fit for independence." This has been declared by Yajnavalkya only with reference to difference of age, and the circumstances of a woman being under the power of her husband. In case of his being dead, or unable from old age or other disqualification or from helplessness, then she is indeed under the power of her sons or other relatives. <sup>(1)</sup>

Her power is carried a step further in the Dattak Chandrika which is a recognized authority in the Maratha country :—

" But by a woman the gift may be made with her husband's sanction if he be alive ; or even without it if he be dead, have emigrated, or entered a religious order.

" Now, if there be no prohibition even, there is assent : on account of the maxim ' The intention of another, not prohibited is sanctioned ' " <sup>(2)</sup>

631. These works merely reflected the usage to that effect which had taken root in the Maratha country as is testified to by the Pandits consulted, whose opinions will be found recorded in several old cases <sup>(3)</sup> passed in review by Sir Michael Westropp in 1866 <sup>(4)</sup> and two years later by Sir Richard Couch <sup>(5)</sup>. The tendency in the Western school has throughout been favourable to the emancipation of woman. Kaustubh in his Sanskar written about 1750 A. D. <sup>(6)</sup> dispenses with all consent, holding that adoption being a religious ceremony, required no male direction <sup>(6)</sup> and could be made by a widow even against the consent of her guardians. <sup>(7)</sup> The Privy Council had previously, in a case decided in 1834, recognized the exceptional position of women in the Marathi country referring to whom Parke, J., said : " According to the native text-writers, it seems to be clear, that the ancient law of Hindustan required the authority of the husband ; but it is also clear that the strictness of that law has been in many districts, relaxed, or modified by local usage ; and the opinion of the Shastris as published in Mr. Borrodaile's Bombay Reports is very strong to show, that in the Malhratha States, to the west of the Peninsula the law does not require any such authority to render the act valid." <sup>(8)</sup> This view was echoed by the same high tribunal in several subsequent cases. <sup>(9)</sup> But this plenary power of adoption was in later cases held to be limited only to where the husband had died a separated member.

632. The necessity for the limitation which arose from the observations of the Privy Council in the Ramnad case, <sup>(10)</sup> was further accentuated by the remark of the Board in a later case, <sup>(11)</sup> in which some limitation on the widow's

(1) Mayukh, Ch. IV. Sect. V § 17.

(2) Datt Chand. Sect. 1-§§ 31, 32.

(3) 2 Dig. 257; Brijbhookanjee v. Gooloolootsanji, 1825) 1 Borr. 181; Huebat v. Gorind Rao, 2 Borr. 75 appended to which are the opinions of the Shastris, Thukoo v. Rama, 2 Borr. 446; Virbudra v. Rase, 2 Morr. S. D. A. B. p. 1; Abajee v. Gungadhar 3 Morr. S. D. A. B. 420. Bhashkar v. Narro, B.S.R. 24

(4) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B.H.C.R. (App) 1.

(5) Raktimabai v. Radha Bai, 5 B. H.O.R. (A.C) 181.

(6) Steele's Law of Caste p. 10

(7) Per Curiam in Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B

C. R. (App) 1 (XIII)

(8) Raja Haimun Chul v. Koomer Gun, (1834) 2 Knapp, P. C. 203 (221); 11 F. R. 457(464)

(9) Collector of Madura v. Moottoo, (1868) 12 M. L. A. 397 (410); Chowdry Pudumsingh v. Kcer Oddey Singh, ib. 350; Raja Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. L. 174 P. C.

(10) Collector of Madura v. Moottoo, 12 M. L. A. 397 (441, 442). See the point discussed in Ramji v. Ghannvu, 6 B. 498, F. B.

(11) Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 (82, 83) P. C.

power to adopt when she was a member of a joint family in which she had no interest beyond a bare right of maintenance, was insisted upon. The whole question came before a Full Bench who accepted the distinction pointed out by the Privy Council between a divided and an undivided family, and held her power of unfettered adoption as merely limited to the latter case. In the case of an undivided family, where the widow of a joint member had no right beyond one for maintenance, they agreed that her adoption to her husband must be subject to the approval of her husband's co-parceners. (1)

633. These decisions placed the Maratha widow of an undivided co-parcener exactly in the same position as the Dravid widow of a divided or undivided family. In other words, except that in Bombay the widow of a separated member may adopt acting on a presumed authority of her husband, her power of adoption is otherwise generally the same as in the Dravid country, with the necessary exception due to the greater restriction placed on the power of the Dravid widow who even where her husband died a separated member, has still to obtain the sanction of his separated Sapindus. But leaving this question out for the present and confining the discussion only to a case of joint family, in the two systems, the consent to be taken in the one case is of the "Sapinda" while in the other, of the husband's "undivided co-parcener."

634. It is admitted on both sides that the consent of all, however desirable, is not always possible. It is equally conceded that in an undivided family the consent of the father-in-law as its head and manager should in any case be sufficient if the adoption is made while he continues to occupy that position (2) and that since the father-in-law's consent is valid in Bombay qua manager and not qua father-in-law, there is no reason why the consent of any other managing member should not be equally sufficient. (3) Such manager is ordinarily the seniormost male member of the family but it does not necessarily follow that he is the nearest relative of the husband. It may sometimes happen that he is the most remote. Is his consent then to prevail against the combined dissent of the other and nearer co-parceners? These questions can only be answered in the language of the Privy Council already quoted, viz., the question is then reduced to this: Was the adoption made capriciously or from a corrupt motive, or was it done in the proper bona fide performance of a religious duty? (4) In other words, the test here is the same as in Madras.

30. The authority by the husband to adopt may be verbal or in writing, but if it is in writing of a non-testamentary nature, it must be stamped and registered.

Synopsis.

(1) Form of authority (635-636).

(2) Construction of authority (637).

635. Form of authority.—There is no general law (5) requiring the husband's authority to be in writing and without such law, its reduction to

(1) Ramji v. Ghamnu, 6 B 498 (503) F. B.; Dinkar v. Ganesh, ib 505 (.08) F. B.

(2) Vithoba v. Bapu, 15 B. 110; Lakshmi Bai v. Vishnu, 29 B 410. In Madras the pre-eminence of the father-in-law is established by direct text. See discussion ante (§ 617).

(3) Bachoo v. Manisorebai, 31 B. 373 (390)

P. C.

(4) Collector of Madura v. Mootloo, 12 M. I. A. 397 (442, 443).

(5) Under the Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869) the Taluqadar's authority to adopt should have been in writing—Bharba v. Indar Kunwar, 16 C. 556 (562) P. C.

writing is optional. (1) If the writing be in the nature of a will then its registration is optional; otherwise such authority must both bear Rs. 10-stamp (2) and be registered. (3) Otherwise it cannot be used in evidence at all (4) and secondary evidence of that fact would be barred by S. 91 of the Evidence Act; which means that the authority cannot be proved at all. It has already been stated before, that for this purpose, the husband is subject to the Majority Act, and that if he has not attained the age of majority there fixed, he cannot register his authority as the registrar is bound to refuse registration of a document presented to him for registration by a minor within the meaning of that Act, inasmuch the Registration Act has not saved any rule of Hindu Law on the subject of majority. (5) Law has prescribed no form in which an authority to adopt should be couched.

636. Such a writting is known as Anumati Patra or consent deed and it usually recites the status of the husband in his family—whether he is joint or separate, the fact that he is without any male issue, the reason and necessity for adoption, and why it was deferred during his own life-time. Where the husband has more than one wife the authority may further define how far they are to act in concert. The boy to be adopted may also be named. It is usual however to confer upon the wife full discretion both as to the choice of the boy and the time of adoption. The question whether a writing constitutes a will or a mere authority to adopt depends upon whether the primary purpose was the one or the other. Such a case arose before the Privy Council who had to construe a deed styled Anumati Patra (or a permission deed) by which the executant empowered his wife to adopt a son. His wife was afterwards delivered of a son. Two years after his birth, he executed another deed similarly styled, authorising his wife to adopt on death of his legitimate son and to make successive adoptions to avoid extinction of the name. The son came of age and succeeded to his father and on his death his widow entered upon the inheritance as his heir. Some time after the son's death, his mother exercised the power given to her by her husband. The Sadar Diwani Court construed the deed as a will and held upon its construction as such, that it created a limitation on failure of male issue of the testator, in the life-time of his wife, to the son to be adopted by her as a persona designata. But the Privy Council deprecated the introduction of English rules of construction which were wholly inapplicable to the deeds executed by Indians. "There is no doubt that by the decision of courts of justice, the testamentary powers of disposition by Hindus, has been established within the Presidency of Bengal, but it would be to apply a very false and mischievous principle if it were held that the nature and extent of such power can be governed by any analogy to the law of England. Our system is one of the most artificial character, founded in a great degree on feudal rules, regulated by acts of Parliament, and adjusted by a long course of judicial determinations to the wants of a state of society differing as far as possible from that which prevails amongst Hindus in India." (6) Finally they held the deed to be what it was called and construed it as such, with the result that they set aside the adoption holding that the power must be exercised within reasonable time and that its

(1) Soondar v. Gadudhar, 7 M. I. A. 54

(64); Mutasaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A 877 P C

(2) Stamp Act (II of 1899) Sch. I Art. 3.

(8) Registration Act (XVI of 1908) S. 17

(8); Gopalswami v. Arunachalam, 27 M 33

Kachoo v. Khushaldas 4 Bom. L.R. 388 (1886).

(4) Registration Act (XVI of 1908) S. 49;

Gopalswami v. Arunachalam, 27 M. 33.

(5) Act XVI of 1908 S. 1

(6) Bhobhun v. Ram Kishore, 10 M. I. A. 279 (808, 809).

exercise would be to divest the son's widow which it could not be permitted to do, whatever may have been the intention of the husband. An incomplete testament may be legitimately used as evidence to establish the husband's authority. (1)

637. An authority to adopt must be strictly proved and pursued. (2) If he authorizes her to adopt A or B, minor sons of his junior paternal uncle, it is not open to her to adopt C, quite a different person without making any attempt to secure either A or B. (8) A Bengal father may, by his authority to adopt, direct that the adopted son should not interfere with or divest his adoptive mother of the estate during her life, just as he has the power to postpone the succession of his natural born son by interposing a life-estate. (4)

Where the authority is in writing, the question whether it empowers the wife in sufficiently clear terms to make an adoption, is simplified to a mere question of its interpretation. But where it is alleged to be verbal, which in the present unsatisfactory state of law, possesses some advantage over written authority, the question becomes more involved. For the court has then to find both the factum as well as its terms. And it is not always easy. Both the questions are of course, questions of fact in the determination of which the court cannot disregard antecedent probabilities. It is sometimes said that there is an antecedent probability in favour of such authority because every Hindu desires a son and every sonless Hindu must therefore desire to adopt one. (6) This is no doubt true. But as the Privy Council observed, cases cannot be decided upon mere probabilities. The court must look to the facts. And even against this probability one must also consider the circumstance that if the Hindu longed for such a son why did he not make an adoption before his very eyes. It may be that the pious thought arose uppermost in his mind as death approached and with it the fear of an unredeemed purgatory. The fact that the deceased could have committed his authority to writing but did not, that he was not imbued with an ultra orthodox value of adoption, that he was young and was carried off in a short illness from which he hoped to recover; that he was attached to his nephews or any of them whom he should have named, that he could have made no provision for adoption without making some provision for the maintenance of his wife and those near and dear to him whom the tenour of his whole life seemed to favour, are only some of the numerous questions that present themselves for consideration and will be found more fully set out in the sequel.

638 An authority to adopt given by a husband in a will subject to the provisions of the Hindu Wills Act (6) which extends to the Province of Bengal and to the towns of Madras and Bombay, must conform to its provisions. (7)

(1) Brijkishoree v. Sreenath, 9 W. R. 468.

(2) Pudum Singh (Chowdhury) v. Koeroodey Singh, 12 M. I. A. 350 (356) where the Privy Council are reported to have said "of course, such a power must be strictly pursued" but in the report of the case in 2 B. L. R. (P. C.) 101 (104) the words reported are "of course such authority must be strictly proved." Amrito Lal v. Surmomya, 27 C.

996 P. C.; Mutasaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 377 P. C.

(3) Sindigi v. Sindigi, 32 M. L. J. 47, 38 I. C. 164.

(4) Bhupendra v. Amarendra, 43 C. 432 P. C.

(5) Scondur Koomaree v. Gudadhur, 7 M. I. A. 54 (64).

(6) Act XXI of 1870.

(7) S. 2

31. (1) The authority of the husband to adopt must be Construction and limits of authority. liberally, though reasonably, construed so as to advance the purpose he had in view.

(2) Such authority may be general or limited, but it will be ineffectual if it is illegal, vague or void.

(3) The authority to adopt can only be conferred on, and used by, the wife.

(4) He who confers the authority may revoke it at any time before it is used.

Illustrations.

(a) A authorized his wife B to adopt a son. B adopted C who died after the adoption, where upon B adopted D. The adoption of D is valid for the general authority to adopt empowered B to make any number of successive adoptions.

(b) A authorizes his wife B to adopt C. C dies. B has no power to adopt.

(c) A authorizes B to adopt a son should their son C die unmarried. C dies unmarried. B adopts. The adoption is valid.

(d) A authorizes his wife B to make an adoption should their son C, die. C died leaving his widow D surviving him as his heir. B adopted E. The adoption is invalid as it would divest D.

(e) A authorized B to adopt C. B adopts D. The adoption is invalid for B's authority was limited to the adoption of C.

(f) A authorizes his wife B and executor C to adopt. The authority is invalid as A was legally competent only to authorize B.

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Successive adoptions (539).                       | (5) Provision for obtaining consent of others (643). |
| (2) Liberal construction of authority (640).          | (6) Limited authority (644).                         |
| (3) Authority to adopt a person designata. (641).     | (7) Illegal authority (645-646).                     |
| (4) Construction of authority to be reasonable (642). | (8) Vague authority (647).                           |
|  | (9) Revocation of authority (648).                   |

639. Analogous Law.—Clause (1) is supported by the authority of the Privy Council (1) who have overruled the earlier view that such authority must be strictly construed. (2)

Clause 2 recognizes that the authority to adopt may be general, in which case the widow's power to adopt is co-extensive with that of her husband and extends to any number of successive adoptions (1) or it may be limited, in which case she is bound by the limits of her authority. (2) But illustration (c) drawn from a reported case clearly shows that an authority however

(1) Suryanarayana v Venkataramana, 29 M. 382 P. C. affirming O. A. 26 M 681; overruling contra Gour Nath v. Annopoorna, (1852) S.D.A.B. 332: 12 I. D. (O. S.) 257; Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, 80 A. 549 affirmed O.A. 81 A. 598 P. C. in which however, the right to successive adoptions was upheld on the ground of estoppel. Bhagwat Prasad v. Murarilal, 15 C. L. J. 97 (105).

(2) Gour Nath v Annopoorna, (1852) S. D. A. B 332. 12 I. D. (O. S.) 25.

unlimited by intention, may necessarily become limited by the interposition of other interests. In this case the husband had, when his son was two years old, executed an Anumati Patra dated 1819 in favour of his wife empowering her to adopt should his son die and to make successive adoptions to preserve the line. The son grew to manhood and then died in 1840 being succeeded by his widow who entered upon the inheritance. The mother then exercised her power and in 1843 adopted a son who sued to eject the son's widow. The Sadar Court decreed the claim but the Privy Council threw out his suit holding his adoption invalid on the ground that the power had become spent by the intervention of an heir who could not be divested: "If Bhawani Kishore (the son) had died unmarried, his mother, Chandrabali Devi would have been his heir, and the question of adoption would have stood on quite different grounds. (1) By exercising the power of adoption she would have divested, no estate but her own, and this would have brought the case within the ordinary rule, but no case has been produced, no decision has been cited from the text books, and no principle has been stated to show that by the mere gift of a power of adoption to a widow, the estate of the heir of a deceased son vested in possession can be defeated and divested." (2)

640. Liberal construction.—It was at one time held that the authority of the husband being in derogation of the rights of the other members of the joint family, might be strictly construed. This view is now no longer tenable for it is settled that it must not be strictly but liberally construed with a view to advance the purpose the husband had in view. (3) But though the construction must be liberal it must not be loose, being reasonable and limited by the words used. For instance where the husband gives permission to adopt, it would be construed as a permission for successive adoptions in case of necessity. So where the husband authorized one of the sons of Hardeo Das to be adopted "within a year or two" and the adoption was not in fact made until about six years after the husband's death, and the boy adopted was not any of the four sons which Hardeo Das had at the time of the husband's authority, but a son subsequently born, the Privy Council upheld the adoption holding that inasmuch as the husband had named none of Hardeo's sons to be adopted, he had apparently intended merely to indicate that one of Hardeo's family should be adopted and that the direction had been sufficiently complied with by the affiliation of a boy who was of a more suitable age than his elder brothers and that as regards the time, the words when read contextually could not be treated as words of limitation. (4) Where the husband had given the power to his two widows jointly, having made no provision, what was to happen if one of them died before any adoption was made, the court held that as the exercise of the power was vested in the discretion of the joint donees, the death of one of them put an end to the power and the survivor of them could not make a valid adoption. The conclusion at which their Lordships arrived was based not on any peculiar doctrine of English law or the English cases but on the very nature and incidents of a joint power. (5) Where a person could exercise the power in one character but not in another, the court will

(1) Such was the case of Vellanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 P. C.

(2) Bhoobun Mayee v. Ramkishore, 10 M. I. A. 269 (311, 312).

(3) Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana, 29 M. 382 P. C. Ram Soondur v. Surbence, 22 W. R. 121; Chenga v. Vasudeva, 29 M. L. J. 144; 29

I. C. 770; Bhagabat v. Murari, 15 C. W. N. 524; 7 I. C. 427.

(4) Mutasaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, 28 A. 737 (382) P. C.

(5) Narasimhav Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 (P. C.) overruling Narasimha v. Rangaya Appa Rao, 29 M. 437.

presume that the power was conferred only in the character in which it could be exercised. The testator (A) father of his deceased son (B) executed a will in which he expressed a desire to adopt his nephew C but added that if he could not do so, then his daughter-in-law (D), B's widow was to adopt C whom he added, he had appointed as his heir. It was held that the direction to D to adopt must be construed as a direction to her to adopt a son to her deceased husband B and not a son to her father-in-law A, as that was the only adoption which she was by Hindu Law competent to make. (1)

641. This doctrine of liberal construction has been put in force in the case of a direction to adopt a persona designata. So when the husband authorized his wife to adopt a boy named by him the courts construed the naming of the boy as merely indicating a preference, so that if he was not available being dead or refused, the widow was at liberty to adopt any other boy unless her authority was expressly limited as if the direction were: "adopt A and no other." (2)

642. But a construction, though liberal, must be equally reasonable and not outside the pale of probability and the rules of judicial interpretation. This was pointed out in a case in which the son had executed a will appointing his wife, father and uncle his executors, and the latter two trustees as well, conferring upon all the three an authority to adopt and providing for his trustees to adopt should his wife die without making an adoption. The wife adopted the plaintiff with the consent of the uncle, her husband's father being then dead. It was contended that as the wife only could adopt, this power must be treated as one merely authorizing the wife and providing for the concurrence of the two executors. But the Privy Council held this to be a mere speculation which could not override the clear provisions of the will which intended to confer the power of adoption on all the three and in case of the wife's death, on his two executors, which showed the father and the uncle were conferred a power to adopt independently of the widow. The joint power being invalid, the adoption made by the widow with the consent of one of the executors was equally invalid. (3)

The same view was held in cases where the testator had empowered his wife to adopt a son along with a living son in which case the direction could not be construed to mean an authority to adopt on the death of the son. (4)

643. Such joint authority which is inconsistent with the sole legal authority inherent in the widow, for the proper exercise of which the consent of the husband is made pre-requisite, is not to be confused with a condition providing for the consultation or advice of a person named. So where the testator appointed his cousin as manager of his estate and provided that his wife will "manage all his affairs with the consent of the said manager," that if she did any wrongful act the said manager could cancel it and that his wife "will adopt a son with the good advice and opinion of the

(1) Karsandas v. Ladhavahu, 12 B. 185 (199).

(2) Ramchandra v. Bapu (1877) B.P.J. 42; Lakshmi Bai v. Rajaji 22 B. 996 followed in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana, 26 M. 681 (684). The somewhat narrower construction in Amirthayyan v. Ketharamayyan, 14 M. 65 may be justified on the terms of the will the court had to construe.

(3) Amrito Lal v. Surmomoni, 25 C. 662, affirmed O. A. 27 C. 996 (1002, 1008) P. C.

(4) Joy Chundro v. Bhyrub, (1849) S.D.A.B. 461; Basoo v. Basoo (1856) S. D. A. M. 20; Veragprashya v. Santanraja (1860) S. D. A. M. 165.

manager" the wife adopted without the advice of the manager who refused to advise or attend the ceremony. The court held the adoption good on the ground that while the will prescribed a penalty for mismanagement, it did not say that the manager's non-consent should invalidate the adoption. That the condition as to his consent was therefore not a condition precedent to the validity of an adoption by her, and as adoption by his wife was the testator's primary purpose, it could not fail for want of the manager's consent. <sup>(1)</sup> This was the view taken in another, case in which the authority was given in the following words: "If my younger brother has children, and if he would give his second son among them in adoption he should be taken. In the meanwhile if another son is adopted, much trouble would occur. If a boy is available among relations, with reference to whom trouble may not ensue, he may be taken." It was held that these words were merely commendatory and not imperative and that it left the wife free to adopt a stranger. <sup>(2)</sup> A Hindu testator by his will appointed five trustees of his property, and gave power to his widow to adopt a son with their consent and advice. One of the trustees declined to act. She adopted a boy with the consent of the remaining trustees who had in fact made the selection. The Privy Council upheld the adoption holding that the refusal of one of the trustees to act could not invalidate it and that the real authority to adopt was vested in the widow. <sup>(3)</sup>

644. The authority may be conditional, contingent or limited, but whatever its nature "it must be strictly pursued." <sup>(4)</sup> So the

Limited authority. husband may direct that his wife may adopt on the death of his legitimate son <sup>(5)</sup> or that the adoption should be of a boy from a certain family in which case the wife is bound to execute the limited authority. So where a Hindu made a will executed in favour of his wife addressing whom, he said therein, "You must adopt for me a boy you like from the children that may be born in the families of my brothers" and later on added, "the principal object of this will is that you should adopt for me any suitable boy" and the wife adopted one outside the husband's brothers' family, though one of the brothers had offered his own son in adoption, the court set aside the adoption holding the second clause controlled by the first and thereby limiting her authority, which she could not exceed, by adopting an outsider. <sup>(6)</sup>

645. Of course, it is a well-known principle of law that a person cannot authorize another to do what he is not able to do himself. <sup>(7)</sup> Consequently the husband being unable to make

Illegal authority. an illegal adoption cannot confer larger powers upon his wife. He cannot, for instance, make an adoption during the life-time of a son. If, therefore, he permitted his wife to make an adoption of a co-heir with his son, the authority is altogether invalid and cannot be validated by construing it to authorize an adoption on the death of the natural son then living. As the court observed: "It is impossible to convert this permission into a permission for what is altogether a distinct purpose, i.e., the adoption of a son after the death of the natural son then living . . . It can furnish no authority for enabling a widow to correct an illegal permission by modifying it,

(1) Surendra v. Sailaja, 18 C. 385 391.
Channappa v. Ramappa 10 M. L. J. 131.

(2) Radha v. Narasimha, 17 M. L. J. 186.

(3) Bal Gangadar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit, 39 B. 411 P. C.

(4) Padum Singh v. Koer Oodey Singh, 12 M.I.A. 850 (856).

(5) Solukhna v. Ramdolal, 1 Beng. S.R., 434;

6 I. D. (O. S.) 318; Bhubonmoyi v. Ramakishore, 10 M.I.A. 279; Bykant v. Kisto Sconderee 7 W.R. 332; Valanki v. Venkata, 1 M. 174 P.C.

(6) Amirthayyan v. Ketharamayyan, 14 M. 65.

(7) Gopee Lal v. Chunderboles, 11 B.L.R. 391 P. C.

or groundlessly assuming the existence of a permission which might have been legal." (1) So where the husband had two wives and a son by the senior wife, and when ill his junior wife complained to him of the ill-treatment awaiting her at the hands of her co-wife and her son, whereupon the husband empowered her to adopt a son if she could not agree with her step-son, it was held that as the husband could not adopt while his son was alive, so could not his widow. (2) So where the husband gave each of his two wives permission to adopt three sons in succession and acting upon this authority the two widows adopted two sons simultaneously and the question was, which of any of the two adoptions was valid, their Lordships had the two simultaneous adoptions invalid first because such adoptions are illegal and secondly because, if reasonably construed, the permission gave not a power to the widows to adopt simultaneously but first to the elder widow power to adopt three sons successively and then a similar power to the younger widow. (3)

646. So an authority, legal and sufficient, may by the intervention of other interests, become invalid if exercised thereafter. Such would be the case where the power to adopt by the widow in the event of the death of a legitimate son then living was exercised on his death after his marriage and when his wife entered into possession as his heir and when the adoption made by his mother in the exercise of her power had the effect of divesting her daughter-in-law. (4)

So it is illegal to authorize any person other than the wife to make an adoption, since the power is exercisable by the widow alone, though restrictions may be placed upon her choice of a boy, by the husband making it a condition that the person named by him should concur in the choice. But such power of concurrence is very different to a power of participation in the adoption. (5) So where the testator purported to authorize his widow, whom he made his executrix jointly with two other persons whom he appointed his executors to adopt a son to him, the court held the power invalid. They observed: "That no one can adopt a son to a dead man except his widow is such a rudimentary principle of Hindu Law and one constantly occurring in ordinary life, that it is difficult to suppose any educated man to be ignorant of it. That the widow's choice of a boy may be restricted in various ways, and among them, by requiring the consent of persons named by the husband, is also familiar law. If it turns out that such consent cannot be procured she has no authority to adopt, and that is the question which has been raised in this case with reference to the death of Madhusudan. (6) But the fundamental objection arises not on the events that have happened but on the provisions of the will as it stood at the testator's death. It never gave any authority at all to the widow." (7)

647. So an authority may be void for vagueness. Such was the case of the Vague authority.

husband who authorized his wife to adopt a boy "from amongst my near relatives" which clause was held to be too vague and therefore inoperative. (8) But in such cases

(1) Jou Chunder v. Bhjrub (1849) 5 S. D. A. B. 462; 10 I. D. (O.S.) 1006 (1009).

(2) Solukhna v. Ram Dolal, 1 B. S. R. 434; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 318 (320).

(3) Akhoy Chunder v. Kalapahar, 12 C. 406 (411, 414) P. C.

(4) Bhocbun v. Ramkishore, 10 M. I. A. 299 (811, 812); Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69 P. C.; Ram Krishna v. Sham Rao, 26 B. 526 (532); Bachoo v. Mankorebai, 31 B. 373 P. C.; Amulya v. Kalidas, 32 C. 861 P. B.; Dutto v. Panjurang, 32 B. 499; Maniyamala v. Nanda Kumar, 33 C. 1806;

Madana Mohana Purshotama, 41 M. 855 P. C. affirming O. A. Madana Mohana v. Purshotama 38 M. 1105.

(5) Amritolal v. Surnomoye, 27 C. 996 P. C.; Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (444, 445) P. C.

(6) The testator's father appointed as a co-executor and co-trustee,

(7) Amrito Lal v. Surnomoye, 27 C. 996 (1002, 1003) P. C.

(8) Sarda Prasad v. Rama, 17 C. W. N. 319 (323).

the court strives as far as possible to place a reasonable and probable construction upon vague and incomplete words.

The testator, the Taluqdar of Balrampur in Oudh, who died childless leaving two widows, bequeathed to "the Maharani Sahiba" his entire estate, giving her also a power to adopt, and also providing maintenance for both his widows after such adoption. On the question arising whether the term "Maharani Sahiba" applied to the senior or to the junior widow, the Judicial Commissioner held that term to refer to both the wives considered collectively, but the Privy Council overruled him holding that the employment of a singular number pointed only to one individual, which was otherwise consistent with the context, and that in that view the senior widow who retained the pre-eminence of an elder wife must be held to be the donee of her husband's power. <sup>(1)</sup>

648. He who gives the authority may equally revoke it before it has been acted upon. Such revocation may be express or implied. Revocation of authority. Such revocation will be presumed where after the authority is given, he himself gets a son or makes an adoption. <sup>(2)</sup>

32. (1) Where the authority to adopt devolves or is conferred on two or more widows, in the absence of any express direction to the contrary, it may be used by the senior widow then living at the time of adoption.

(2) But no co-widow can make an adoption without the consent of the other co-widow in whom by inheritance from her son the whole estate had become vested. <sup>(3)</sup>

Illustrations.

(a) A directs that his two wives B and C may jointly adopt a son. Here B, though senior, cannot adopt without C and if one of them dies, the other cannot adopt. <sup>(4)</sup>

(b) A directs that his two wives A and B should make an adoption. There is nothing to indicate that they are to act jointly. A if senior, may adopt and if she dies or refuses, B, may do so. <sup>(5)</sup>

A has two wives B and C of whom C has a son by him who survives A. A authorizes B to adopt in case his son by C should die. The son dies and his estate vests in his mother C. B cannot divest C by adopting to A without C's consent. <sup>(6)</sup>

Synopsis.

- (1) Adoption by co-widows (649-650). (2) Preferential right of senior widow (651).

649. Analogous Law.—Ordinarily where two or more co-widows survive their husband of a divided family in Bombay where his authority to adopt is presumed, that right is held to belong to the senior widow <sup>(7)</sup> by reason of her

(1) Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal, 15 C. 725 (748) P. O.

(2) Goureespershand v. Jymala, 2 B. S. R. 174; 6 I. D. (O S) 491 (492). The legality of two successive adoptions by two co-widows upheld in this case is now no longer tenable.

(3) Anandi Bai v. Kashibai, 28 B 461 (465); Faizuddin v. Tincowri Shaha, 24 C. 565.

(4) Narasimha v. Parthasaradhy, 37 M.

225 P. C.

(5) Mondakim Dasi v. Adinath Dey, 18 C. 69 (71, 72).

(6) Faizuddin Ali Khan v. Tincowri Shaha, 22 C 565.

(7) Anandi Bai v. Kashibai, 28 B. 461: (465) seniority being of course, determined by the order in which they were married and not by the seniority of age (Ranjit Lal v. Bijoy, 39 C. (582).

pre-eminence as the senior wife of her husband who may adopt without even consulting his junior co-widow <sup>(1)</sup> even though her interest may be affected adversely by the adoption, <sup>(2)</sup> by divesting the estate which she may have inherited. <sup>(3)</sup> This view is supported by the theory of the spiritual benefit accruing to the husband which it is the study of all widows to strive for. <sup>(4)</sup> This rule applies equally to the case of Jains though its underlying principle of spiritual benefit is wholly inapplicable to them. <sup>(5)</sup>

650. But the case is different where the junior co-widow succeeds to the estate as the heir of her son in which case the senior by her adoption could not divest her of the estate which has already vested in her as her son's heir unless she had consented to the adoption <sup>(6)</sup> for which she is under no religious obligation, to consent for she inherits the property not from her husband but from her son. <sup>(7)</sup> But this is an exceptional case.

651. Ordinarily, where the testator empowers his two or more widows to adopt and both have equal rights, the authority to adopt devolves upon them in their order of seniority. If the seniormost should refuse or become incapable of adopting then the right devolves on the one next senior to her. <sup>(8)</sup> It is however, open to the senior to waive her preferential right to adopt in favour of a junior widow. The latter would then become entitled to make the adoption. <sup>(9)</sup> But without such authority, the junior cannot even perform the ceremony of adoption of a boy selected by the senior for that purpose, since adoption implies the mutual acts of giving and receiving the child, and until they take place there is necessarily a locus penitentiae for the elder widow of which she may avail herself, although contrary to the wishes of the other widows, by changing her mind and selecting another child. To hold that any one of the junior widows might perform the formal act of adoption of the selected child, whenever it pleased her, is to force the hand of the elder widow, and compel her to complete the adoption, which, till it is completed, is at the most only in fieri. <sup>(10)</sup> Where both widows have equal presumed authority to adopt, the senior may adopt not only without consulting her junior but even in opposition to her wishes and even though it shall be may prejudice her right. <sup>(11)</sup> But this is only so where the husband does not give any specific directions to the contrary. He may, for instance, direct that it competent to his two widows to adopt jointly. In that case the exercise of the power being vested in the discretion of the joint donees, one is incompetent to act without the other, so that if one of them dies the power is at end. <sup>(12)</sup> It is, of course, competent to the husband to authorize his junior widow to adopt to the exclusion of the senior widow. <sup>(13)</sup>

(1) Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, 5 B. H.C.R. (Ac) 181; Rupchand v. Rakhmabai, 8 B. H.C. R. (Ac) 114; Ramji v. Ghamau, 6 B. 498; Keshav v. G. vind, 9 B. 94; Padajirav v. Ramrav, 18 B. 160; Ranjit Lal v. Bijoy, 88 C 694 O. A. 39 C. 532; Kakarla v. Kakarla, 28 M. L. J. 72; 27 I.C. 775; Damara v. Damara, 29 M. L. J. 13; 27 I. C 775

(2) Bhagubai v. Kato, (1875) B P. J. 45; Padajirav v. Ramrav, 18 B. 160; Bhimava v. Sangawa, 22 B. 206 (211, 212).

(3) Amava v. Mahadgauda, 22 B. 416.

(4) Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, 5 B H. C. R. (Ac) 181; Ramji v. Ghamau, 6 B. 498.

(5) Amava v. Mahadgauda, 22 B. 416 (423).

(6) Ramkrishna v. Shamrao, 26 B. 526 F.

B; Anandi Bai v Kashi Bai, 28 B 461 (464, 465); Datto v Pandurang, 32 B. 499.

(7) Faizuddin v. Tincouri, 22 C 555 (572).

(8) Sarada Prosad v. Rama, 17 C. W. N. 819; Mondakini v. Adinath, 18 C. 69 (71, 72); Doorga v. Soorendra, 12 C. 686; Padajirav v. Ramrav, 18 B. 160

(9) Padajirav v. Ramrav, 18 B. 160 (167).

(10) Ib p. 167.

(11) Bhimava v. Sangawa, (1896) B. P. J.

351.

(12) Narasimha v. Parthasarathy 87 M. 199 (225) P. C. overruling Narasimha v. Rangayya, 29 M. 487.

(13) Chennappa v. Ramappa, 10 M. L. J. 181.

33. An adoption brought about by coercion, undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation, mistake or otherwise than by the free consent of the parties thereto, is voidable at the instance of the party wronged, but subject to the rights of other parties, it may be confirmed.

Illustrations.

(a) A a widow in the Dravid country falsely represented to her husband's Sapindas that she had authority from her husband to adopt. They thereupon accorded their consent. The adoption is invalid as their consent was obtained by a misrepresentation. <sup>(1)</sup>

(b) A threatened B with a criminal prosecution falsely accusing her of forgery. B thereupon adopted A's son C. She treated C as her son for years. B could not afterwards avoid it, for she had ratified it.

Synopsis.

- (1) Voidable adoption (653). (655-658).
 (2) Ratification when possible (654). (4) Corrupt adoption (659).
 (3) Adoption must be voluntary (5) Adoption by fraud, etc. (661).

652. Analogous Law.—This section merely applies the general law to the subject of adoption, and is amply supported by authorities. (—) So the Succession Act <sup>(3)</sup> embodies the following provision equally applicable to Hindus subject to the Hindu Wills Act. <sup>(4)</sup>

Will obtained by fraud, coercion or importunity. 653. A will or any part of a will, the making of which has been caused by fraud or coercion, or by such importunity as takes away the free agency of the testator is void and the court is bound to ignore it. But assuming that fraud, etc., is pleaded, the proof by which it is supported must be precise and sufficient and as it is too often ignored, the fraud proved must be the fraud pleaded and not some other fraud which had never been pleaded at all and of which the other party had no notice. In the case of marriage and adoption which materially alter the status of the person married or adopted, this precaution is especially necessary; for it may affect his rights though, being a minor, he may have had no share in it at all.

654. As regards the effect of these acts, it has been held that neither coercion nor fraud nor undue influence nor misrepresentation renders an adoption invalid or void, though they make it voidable at the instance of the party coerced or the adopted son, whose status is altered to his prejudice by such coercion. But a party may have been coerced into the doing of a thing which he may ratify afterwards. Such was the case of the Hindu widow who had been coerced into making an adoption of a boy by an attorney who threatened the mother with prosecution for the forgery of a will executed in her favour, whereupon she took the boy in adoption, ratifying her act when the threat was removed by acknowledging the adoption and upholding it as a valid one. <sup>(5)</sup>

(1) Jonalagadda Venkamma v. Jonalagadda Subramaniam 30 M. 50 (52, 53).

(2) Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (445 446); Venkamma v. Subramaniam, 30 M. 50 (58) P. C.; Bal Gangadhar Tylak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (467) P. C.; Shamsunder Lal v. Achan Kunwar, 28 A. 188 (189) P. C.; Sitaram v. Hurihar, 12 Bom. L. R. 910; 8 I. C. 626

(8) Act X of 1865.

(4) Act XXI of 1870, S. 2

(5) Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (445, 446) reversed O. A. Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, 37 M. 199 P. C. though on a different point. The view set out in the text was dissented from in Sattiraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925 (980).

655. The first pre-requisite of a valid adoption is that it should be made and taken out of affection <sup>(1)</sup> which, of course, implies that it should be the voluntary act of parties and not one brought about by corruption coercion, or any of the other circumstances mentioned in the section which may defeat the very purpose of adoption. So, in setting aside the death-bed adoption of a person, the Privy Council said:—"How is it possible that a person in such a condition could be capable of any act requiring judgment and reflection, especially one to which no antecedent circumstances appear to have led, and for which the enfeebled and scarcely conscious mind was unprepared? In such a state as that described, even if the mind were passively awake to the suggestions made to it, it would naturally cling to repose, and yield, for the sake of it, to any external suggestion." <sup>(2)</sup>

(1) It must be voluntary.

656. Of course a person who from extreme youth or old age is unable to judge the nature of the act and its effect upon his rights, is equally incompetent to make an adoption. As was observed in a case, "a minor might make a valid adoption for the spiritual benefit of her husband, yet there must be cogent evidence to show that she did so under the intelligent and disinterested guidance of her legal guardian, seeking bona fide to provide for a spiritual necessity, with due regard to her interest as far as it is compatible with such necessity". <sup>(3)</sup> The plaintiff (a Vaishya by caste) claimed to be the adopted son of the defendant whom he sued for possession. Reversing the judgments of the two Lower Courts, the High Court set aside the adoption as brought about by coercion and undue influence of the defendant's caste people who hurriedly sent for the plaintiff who was a pauper and caused the defendant, then aged only 13 to adopt him in accordance with the authority of her husband before his corpse was removed from the house. There was a sufficient gift and acceptance though the performance of Datta Homam was deferred. Next day the defendant wrote to the Revenue Officers a petition announcing her husband's death and adoption by her of the plaintiff to perpetuate his family. The adoption was made in the presence and with the advice of the relations and caste people. Eight days after her husband's death she repudiated and turned the plaintiff out of the house. In reversing the concurrent findings of the two courts below and in holding the adoption coerced or unduly influenced, the High Court however, took account of the following facts namely (a) the adopter was aged 13. (b) her husband's corpse lay in the house till 10 A. M., as the assembled relatives persisted in the adoption and would not permit its removal till the adoption was made, (c) plaintiff's adoption was antecedently improbable as the defendant had more eligible relatives for adoption, (d) the plaintiff was a pauper and a recent arrival in the village but the defendant was well to do, (e) plaintiff was expelled from the house within 8 days of the defendant's husband's death and before the funeral ceremonies were completed. The court further found that the presence of the assembled relatives did not make the adoption voluntary, for they had all joined in exerting pressure upon the young widow to make the adoption. <sup>(4)</sup> A similar view was taken by Westropp, J., in another case <sup>(5)</sup> already cited in which an adoption by a young widow of 17 years of age was set aside as induced by undue

(1) Manu IX-168.

(2) Tayammaul v. Sashachalla, 10 M. I. A. 429 (435). To the same effect Bullub Kant v. Kishenpria, 6 B.S. R. 271; 6 I. D. (O S.) 869 (871).

(3) Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti, 18

M 214 (221).

(4) Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti, 18 M. 214.

(5) Bayabai v. Bala, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1 (20-24) followed in Somasekharaja v. Subhadramiji, 6 B. 524.

influence. The same learned Judge set aside another similar adoption in another case in which a recently bereaved widow aged about 17 had been induced to adopt the plaintiff, the second cousin of her husband, whom her husband had requested the plaintiff's mother to give him in adoption. The court found that there was coercion or undue influence and the absence of independent advice which rendered the adoption invalid. (1)

657. In another case a child-widow aged 11 was authorized by her husband to make an adoption if, and when, she chose. Soon after his death she was induced by her father to make an adoption which the court set aside on the ground that she was then a minor even under Hindu Law, and therefore legally incapable of making an adoption, and secondly because there was no evidence to show that she had disinterested and independent advice to give her discretion. The court further held that such adoption was absolutely void and not merely voidable and could not be legally ratified by the minor on coming of age. (-)

A case where the widow has to form an independent judgment is of course distinguishable from that in which she merely executes the command of her husband. Such was the case of the widow under 15 who took a boy in adoption in accordance with the direction of her husband (3) in which case the scope of the inquiry is shifted to a consideration not whether the widow's act was right, but whether the husband's authority was unobjectionable. These cases establish the duty that lies on the court to protect minors who under the guise of an adoption, are only too frequently stripped of their heritage. Those who are young or old, weak or feeble, are alike entitled to the same protection. (4)

658. The fact that the adopter was a young, inexperienced, female and a pardanashin, surrounded by interested councillors to whom independent advice was not available, are all facts which would strongly raise a presumption of undue influence in an adoption made, especially if it had not been thought of by the husband during his own life-time. As will be seen in the sequel, the courts require very clear and cogent evidence not only of the factum of adoption but also of its antecedent probability before disinheriting the natural heirs. The Privy Council even regret that writing and registration is not made compulsory in all cases of adoptions; (5) but so long as law remains in the imperfect state in which it is at present, the court must shoulder the heavy duty that lies on it to scrutinize every case with that care and circumspection that the highest tribunal has enjoined as essential for the right determination of all transactions made to the prejudice of persons placed in a position of helplessness and dependence.

659. Any consideration paid to the father for giving away his son in adoption is really the sale of the child, and is as such, now illegal and opposed to public policy. (6) But an adoption like a marriage involves the change of status and law does not ordinarily permit the cancellation of a filial relationship once completed (7) any more than it favours the cancellation of a marriage. But

(1) Somasekharaja v Subhadramji, 6 B. 624.
(2) Satteraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925 (1980) dissenting from contra in Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 487.

(3) Mondakini v. Adinath, 18 C. 69.

(4) Benee Prasad v. Abdool, 25 W. R. 192 (195) adoption by a man of weak intellect.

(5) Sutroogun v. Sabitra, 5 W. R. 109 P.C.

(6) A "son-bought" is the 8th out of the 12 recognized sons in the Smritis but he is no longer so recognized; Eshan Kishore v Hurish Chunder, 21 W. R. 881 (382); Murugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161.

(7) Murugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161 (164, 165).

nevertheless it discourages trafficking in children and regarding the passage of all consideration between the natural parent and the adopter as illegal, it would do all it can to prevent the parent profiting by it. Consequently if the adopter borrowed for payment to the natural parent the money so borrowed is not recoverable from his estate or his heirs including the adopted son. (1) And if the amount is promised but not paid it cannot be sued for. (2) But in such cases the reason why the adoption is not cancelled is, that it may cause irreparable loss to the adopted son. As was observed in a case: "That a rule which makes an agreement to pay, or the payment of such a consideration as that in question invalidate the adoption itself, would strike at the mischief more effectually than one which only prohibits the grant of relief in respect of the agreement or the payment, it would be idle to suppose, so long as the sentiments of the people concerned remain what they are. It is abundantly clear from the evidence that in the community to which the parties belong such payments form the rule, and the contrary, the exception. And so long as these men continue to be moved by the desire for the perpetuation of lineage by recourse to the fiction of adoption, the payments will not cease and the consequence of the stricter rule would only be that the payments would be made in secret . . . ." (3)

660. The court, however, takes this view in the interests of the adoptee and if he feels injured by his affiliation, he is entitled to have it cancelled on the ground of corruption. But otherwise the question of motive is immaterial to its validity and the court will not allow a stranger to shake his title on that ground.

But as pointed out in a later case, this view is not sustainable, as the act of adoption is not an act in the nature of a contract, and the validity of the act changing the status of a person cannot be made to remain in suspense at the option of one of the actors in the transaction. (4) Such cases may more appropriately be supported on the ground of estoppel rather than of ratification.

But in another case the widow in Madras being required to obtain the consent of her Sapindas to her adoption, falsely stated to them that she had the authority of her husband to adopt, which rendered their consent supererogatory. They, however, consented and the widow went through the form of adoption, but the court declared it to be a nullity on the ground that the widow had obtained the necessary sanction of the Sapindas by misrepresentation and that their consent was not the "independent approval of her natural advisers, the absence of which sufficed to vitiate the adoption. (5)

661. Adoption by fraud, etc.—An adoption by a widow must be made with an eye solely to the fitness of the boy to be adopted to fulfil the religious and secular duties binding on a son. That object is likely to be frustrated, if she is induced to adopt a boy out of greed for money and for pecuniary benefit to herself. If she is so induced, the money paid to her is a bribe, which is condemned by all Smṛiti writers as an illegal payment. Still less is the object fulfilled if she is defrauded or coerced into accepting a boy whom she is constrained to adopt, without the exercise of that unfettered judgment which is essential to the efficient discharge of her duties. It is consequently clear, that no adoption can be upheld, that is the result of coercion, fraud, misrepresentation

(1) Sitaram v Harihar, 35 B. 169 (181).

(2) Eshan Kishore v. Hurish Chunder, 21 W. R. 381 (382).

(3) Murugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161 (165).

(4) Sattiraju v. Venkataswami, 40 M. 925 (980);

(5) Venkamma v. Sonalagadda, 30 M. 50.

(6) Sitaram v. Harihar, 35 B. 169 (180, 181).

or undue influence. These are large words and commonly used in concatenation but as the Privy Council remarked "coercion, undue influence, fraud, and misrepresentation are all separate and separable categories of law. It is true that they may overlap or may be combined." (1) But it is nevertheless necessary and is indeed a well recognized rule of pleading (2) that he who relies upon them for relief must plead them specifically giving particulars, without which the court will take no notice of general allegations which do not amount even to an averment of fraud. (3)

34. The widow's power to adopt becomes incapable of execution on the vesting of her husband's estate in another by inheritance.

Provided that when the estate of the husband has vested in his co-widows by inheritance to him, an adoption made by one of them will not be invalid by reason of the fact that it has the effect of divesting them.

Illustrations.

(a) A the father of B then aged 2 years, empowers his wife C to adopt should B die. B lived to be of age, married D and on A's death inherited his estate. He then died and was succeeded by his widow D. C then adopted E. The adoption is invalid as E could not divest D in whom A's estate had vested as the heir of his son B (4)

(b) But if in the last case B had died unmarried and on his death the estate had vested in his mother C, C could have adopted to A as by so doing she would have merely divested her own estate (5)

(c) A and B are joint brothers. B predeceases A who succeeds to his share by survivorship. B's widow adopts to her husband. The adoption is valid as A has not inherited B's share. (6)

(d) But if in the last case A had also died and his estate had vested in his widow then B's widow could not adopt (7)

(e) A dies leaving two co-widows B and C in whom his estate vests by inheritance to him. B adopts divesting C. The adoption is valid. (8)

Synopsis.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| (1) Limits of widow's power to adopt (662).        | (6) Adoption when estate is vested in co-widows (667). |
| (2) No revival of power once at an end (663).      | (7) Consent if effective to revive power (668).        |
| (3) Widow adopting as Gotraj Sapinda (664).        | (8) Rule applicable to joint family (669).             |
| (4) Rule applicable to grandmother (665).          | (9) Estate vesting by inheritance (670).               |
| (5) Alter when son dies minor and unmarried (666). | (10) Fraud when immaterial (671).                      |

662. Analogous Law.—The rule set out in the section is the net result of numerous decisions, some of them conflicting and by no means reconcilable to the main principle here formulated. The leading principle was

(1) Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (467) P. C.

(2) O. 6 R. 4 C. P. Code (V of 1908).

(3) Wallingford v. Mutual Society, 5 App. Cas. 685 (697); Ganga Narain v. Tiluckram, 15 C. 588 P. C.; Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 39 B. 441 (467) P. C.

(4) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ramkishore, 10 M. I. A. 279.

(5) Ib. Verabhar Ajubhar v. Bai Hiraba, 27 B. 492 (499) P. C.

(6) Modan Mohan v. Purushotama, 38 M. 1105

(7) Adivi Suryaprakash Rao v. Nidamarty Gangaraju, 38 M. 228.

(8) Amara v. Mahadgauda, 22 B. 416.

stated by the Privy Council in a case in which the husband had empowered his wife to make an adoption should his son then aged 2 die. The son inherited his father's estate on coming of age and then died, whereupon his widow entered upon the estate as his heir. The mother-in-law then adopted a son to her husband which had the effect of divesting her son's widow. But the Privy Council held that by the vesting of her husband's estate in his son's widow, her power of adoption had become incapable of execution. "It might well have been that Bhawani (the son) had left a son, natural born or adopted, and that such son had died himself, leaving a son, and that such son had attained his majority in the life-time of Chandra Bulli Debi (the mother-in-law). It could hardly have been intended that after the lapse of several successive heirs, a son should be adopted to the great-grandfather of the last taker, when all the spiritual purposes of a son, according to the largest construction of them, would have been satisfied. But whatever may have been the intention, would the law allow it to be effected? . . . . The question is whether the estate of his son being unlimited, and that son having married and left a widow as his heir, and that heir having acquired a vested estate in her husband's property as widow, a new heir can be substituted by adoption who is to defeat that estate and take as an adopted son what a legitimate son of Gou Kishore would not have taken. . . . . If Bhawani had died unmarried, his mother, Chandra Bulli Debi would have been his heir, and the question of adoption would have stood on quite different grounds. By exercising the power of adoption she would have divested no estate but her own and this would have brought the case within the ordinary rule, but no case has been produced, no decision has been cited from the text books, and no principle has been stated to show that by the mere gift of a power of adoption to a widow, the estate of the heir of a deceased person vested in possession, can be defeated and divested." (1) Their Lordships had to test the same rule in the converse case in which the son having died a minor and unmarried, an adoption by the mother was upheld. (2) They have since reiterated their view in several other cases (3) and its application to other facts will be found illustrated in the Indian decisions. Where for instance, a Mitakshara father died leaving two widows G & B and a son S by G. By his will he authorized B to adopt a son in the event of S dying unmarried, which he did in 1883 whereupon B immediately adopted without consulting G. Six years later, both the widows mortgaged their land to pay off their husband's debts upon which mortgage the mortgagee F obtained a decree in 1892 and in execution sale the mortgaged property was purchased by a third party who applied for cancellation of the sale on the

(1) Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore, 10 M. I. A. 279 (309, 312).

(2) Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba, 27 B. 492 (499) P. C.

(3) Padmakumari v. Court of Wards 8 C. 302 P. C. reversing Puddo Kumari v. Juggut Kishore, 5 C. 615 (642, 643) in which the effect of the Privy Council ruling in 10 M. I. A. 279 was misunderstood, in that the court supposed that their Lordships had merely held that the vested estate could not be divested and not, that the adoption itself was invalid. The case in Ramsondur v. Surbanee, 22 W. R. 121 also proceeds upon the same erroneous view. In reversing 5 C. 615 the Privy Council made it clear that what they had decided in 10 M. I. A. 279 was not merely that a vested estate could not be divested but on that account, no adoption which had that effect could be valid. It is now so settled: Annamma v. Mabbu, 8 M. H. C. R. 108; Rupchand v. Rakhmabai, 8 B. H. C. R. (Ac) 114; Ramji v. Ghamau, 6 B. 498; Keshav v. Govind, 9 B. 91; Chondra v. Goparabai, 14 B. 463; Krishnarav v. Shankarav, 17 B. 164; Vasudeo v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 551 F. B.; Ramkrishna v. Sham Rao, 26 B. 526 F. B. approved in Madana v. Puroshottama, 41 M. 855 P. C.; Manikyamala v. Nanda Kumar, 38 C. 1806 and cases therein cited at p. 1320.

ground that the property having vested in the adopted son, the widows had no saleable interest, and the Court held that since before the adoption the estate had already vested in G on the death of her son that estate could not be divested by any subsequent adoption by the junior co-widow. (1)

663. It is also manifest that where the power is once determined, it cannot be revived upon the estate reverting to the widow. It was so held in a case in which the husband's estate became revested in his widow on the death of his son, after attaining majority and of his widow, when the estate reverted to his mother who then exercised the power of adoption given to her by her husband. But the court held that her power was not suspended but determined by the vesting of the estate in her son's widow and that therefore, there could be no revival of that power to support her adoption. And the same view was taken where the son was subsequently adopted into another family. (2)

664. The same principle was applied to a woman in Bombay who had succeeded to her husband's brother as his Gotraj Sapinda. The argument was that since her husband and his brother were both joint, the death of the former vested the estate in the latter and that destroyed her power to adopt to her husband. Consequently, when she succeeded to her brother-in-law in the absence of his widow, mother or grandmother, the right which had become extinguished by the vesting of the estate in the brother could not revive afterwards when it chanced to revest in her. (3)

665. Of course the principle is equally applicable where the son instead of leaving a widow, leaves a son whether natural or by adoption, in which case the son's estate instead of vesting in his widow, vests in his son and this was a case a fortiori supported by the Privy Council (4) in a passage already quoted (§ 662). The same view was taken where the estate instead of vesting in the son had vested in his two daughters and the adoption was by the widow of a predeceased son. (5)

666. The facts that the son comes of age and is married, are both essential factors in determining the widow's power. For until he is major he cannot attain ceremonial competence and unless he attains ceremonial competence he cannot convey the spiritual benefit to his father for which he is prized. But this fact alone will not prevent the vesting of his estate in his widow if he is married. Therefore marriage is even more essential than the attainment of majority. If he had attained majority and died unmarried, his mother would be his heir and there being no other interest to divest, her power of adoption continues. (6)

(1) Faisuddin v. Tincowri, 22 C. 565.

(2) Sinnachami v. Ramasamy, 22 M. L. J. 85; 18 I. C. 7; Rampearl v. Bhogis, 8 I. C. (C) 718.

(3) Datto v. Pandurang, 82 B. 499 (508).

(4) Bhoobun Majee v. Ramkashore, 10

M. I. A. 279; Krishnarav v. Shankarav, 17 B. 164; Vasudeo v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 551

F. B.; Dharmidhar v. Chinto, 20 B. 250; Ramachandra v. Sham Rao, 26 B. 526 (531).

F. B. condra Babu v. Ratinji, 21 B. 319.

(5) Vasudeo v. Ramchandra 22 B. 551 F. B.; Gayabai v. Shridharachaya, (1881)

B. P. J. 115.

(6) Verabhai Ajubhai v. Bai Hiraba, 27 B. 492 (499) P. C.

667. The rule is also inapplicable where the husband's estate vests in his co-widows. Such an estate is limited and joint, and as all co-widows are equally bound to join in an act conducive to their husband's spiritual beatitude, any refusal by the junior to the pious act of the senior, cannot invalidate the adoption in which they are by duty, all equally interested. <sup>(1)</sup> As was observed in a case: "It would seem to be unjust to allow the elder widow to defeat the interest of the younger by an adoption against her wish, yet if the adoption is regarded as the performance of a religious duty and a meritorious act, to which the assent of the husband is to be implied wherever he has not forbidden it, it would seem that the younger widow is bound to give her consent being entitled to a due provision for her maintenance, and if she refuses, the elder widow may adopt without it." <sup>(2)</sup> This rule is spoken of as an exception to the general rule on the divesting of vested interests and it is said to support the wider exception that a person whose interest is threatened may validate the adoption by his consent. <sup>(3)</sup> But as already pointed out this position is untenable and the only ground upon which the rule can be logically defended is the legal identity of all the widows. The widow whose estate is thus divested is entitled to maintenance from the property. <sup>(4)</sup> The divesting of the widows by the adopted son naturally destroys the reversion, diverting the succession to another channel. For instance it will entirely destroy the reversionary right of the daughter or her son. <sup>(5)</sup>

668. The question whether the determination of such power can be prevented by consent of the vested interest has been considered and answered in the affirmative in a case in which the court upheld an adoption by the widow of a predeceased son on the ground that it had been made with the contemporaneous consent of the mother-in-law in whom the estate of the last full owner had then vested as an heir. <sup>(6)</sup> This view is in conflict with that taken in Calcutta, <sup>(7)</sup> Madras, <sup>(8)</sup> and in some cases in Bombay itself <sup>(9)</sup> where, it is submitted, the question was considered from the right standpoint.

669. Limits of the rule.—The rule here enacted only applies where the estate has vested in another by inheritance and not when it had devolved upon another by survivorship. <sup>(10)</sup> So where an estate vests in two undivided co-parceners, A and B, and on the death of A it passes by survivorship to B the widow of the former may, subject to proper consent, make an adoption; but her power to adopt would end with the death of the other, B and the vesting of his estate in his widow. <sup>(11)</sup>

(1) Rakhabai v. Radhabai, 5 B. H. C. R. 192; Rupchand v. Rakhabai, 8 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 1; Ramji v. Ghamau, 6 B. 4'8'; Keshav v. Govind, 9 B. 91; Bhāmara v. Sangawa 22 B. 206 (211); Anava v. Mahadgauda, Ib. 416; Narayanaswami v. Mangammal, 28 M. 915.

(2) Rakhabai v. Radhabai, 5 B. H. C. R. 181 (1921).

(3) Anava v. Mahadgauda, 22 B. 416 (420).

(4) Rakhabai v. Radhabai, 5 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 181 (198); Jamnabai v. Raychand, 7 B. 225.

(5) Ramkishan v. Dibia, 3 Beng. S. R. 459.

(6) Payappa v. Appanna, 28 B. 327 followed in Siddappa v. Ningangouda, 38 B. 724.

(7) Manikyamala v. Nanda Kumar, 28 C. 1806.

(8) Adivi v. Nidamarty, 38 M. 229; Annamah v. Mabbu, 8 M. H. C. R. 108.

(9) Ramkrishna v. Shamrao, 26 B. 266 F. B.; explained per Jenkins, C. J., in Anandi Bai v. Kashi Bai, 28 B. 461 (465).

(10) Madana v. Purshotama, 38 M. 1105, O. A. 41 M. 855 P. O.; Chandra v. Gojarabai, 14 B. 463.

(11) Adivi v. Nidamarty, 38 M. 228 (231); Sri Virada v. Sri Brozo, 1 M. 69; Chandra v. Gojarabai, 14 B. 463.

670. The rule is not limited to the vesting of the husband's estate by inheritance to himself, for it applies equally where the estate Where estate vests in succession to another. has vested in a collateral relation of the husband in succession to some other person, who had himself become owner in the meantime. (1) Such was the view taken in a case in which one Bapuji had a son Vasudeo and two daughters Bagubai and Lakshmi. Vasudeo predeceased his father leaving a widow Gangu. The father died four years later leaving a will authorizing his daughter-in-law to adopt. She adopted the plaintiff who sued Lakshmi on the basis of his adoption. But his suit was thrown out on the ground that on Bapuji's death the estate having vested in his two daughters, the daughter-in-law could not by her adoption divest it. (2)

671. It has been said that the rule is not affected even though the adoption be delayed by the fraud of the person who has thereby Fraud when immaterial. procured the vesting of the estate in him (3) but the statement is too wide and is not supported by the precedent cited for it. (4) In that case the Privy Council found that the fraud did not affect the adopted son who was not even born when the estate became vested in the person who practised it. (5) The defendant who was the reversioner of his brother's widow Chandramoni had prevented another brother's widow from making an adoption by fraudulently setting up a later will of her husband which cancelled the earlier will relied on by her and which empowered her to make an adoption. While litigation on this disputed will was going on Chandramoni died and her estate became vested in the defendant as her sole reversioner which he would not have been, had the plaintiff been adopted before Chandramoni's death. The plaintiff complained that the defendant's fraud in setting up a false will had delayed his adoption, but the reply was that though it had certainly delayed adoption it did not prejudice the plaintiff who could not have been adopted before Chandramoni's death as he was not even then in existence. In other words the fraud practised on the mother did not prejudice the son but on the other hand favoured him as it made his adoption possible. The case would have been very differently decided if the plaintiff had been in existence when Chandramoni died.

35. (1) A boy may be given in adoption by his natural Power to give in adoption. father, or by the mother with his consent, except where such consent cannot be obtained owing to his death or disability, provided that he had not at any time expressly or impliedly prohibited her from so doing.

Explanation.—Where the gift and acceptance of the boy to be adopted is completed by the parents in a manner required by law, the fact that they had in their unavoidable absence, delegated the performance of any of its ceremonies to a near relation on their behalf, will not render the adoption invalid.

(1) Chandra v. Gojarabai, 14 B. 463 (470); Lakshmi Bai v. Vishnu, 29 B. 410 (414).

(2) Lakshmi Bai v. Vishnu, 29 B. 410 (414).

(3) Trev. H. L. (2nd Ed.) p. 198.

(4) Bhubaneswari v. Nilcumul, 7 C. 178 affirmed, O. A. 12 C. 18 P. C.

(5) Bhubaneswari v. Nilcumul, 12 C 18 (arguendo at pp. 21 and 28) P. C.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Father's power to give in adoption (672-674).    | (5) Power and limits of delegation (680). |
| (2) Right unaffected by age or conversion (675-677). | (6) Conditional delegation (681).         |
| (3) Mother's authority (678).                        | (7) Who cannot give in adoption (682).    |
| (4) Unaffected by remarriage (679).                  |  |

672. Analogous Law.—The following texts refer to the persons entitled to give in adoption:—

Manu:—"He is called an adopted son whom his mother or father or both parents affectionately give, as a son, being alike and in time of distress, the gift being confirmed with water." (1)

Yashisth:—"A son formed of seminal fluids and of blood proceeds from his father and mother as an effect from its cause; both parents have power to give or sell or desert him" (2) "Let not a woman give or accept a son, unless with the assent of her husband" (3)

Yajñavalkya:—"He whom his father or mother gives for adoption shall be considered as a son given." (4)

Mitākshara:—"He who is given by his mother with her husband's consent, while her husband is absent or incapable though present, or without his assent after her husband's decease, or who is given by his father, or by both, being of the same class with the person to whom he is given, becomes his given son." (5)

Dattak Chandrika:—"But, by a woman, the gift may be made, with her husband's sanction, if he be alive; or even without it, if he be dead, have emigrated, or entered a religious order" (6)

As previously explained, children being the property of their father he has the right of their disposal, of which adoption is one. After the father, the mother possesses the same right, but subject to control when possible. If, therefore, he is dead or incapable of consenting by loss of reason or otherwise, or if he is permanently absent from home, as if he has entered a religious order, then the mother may in the absence of any express or implied prohibition from him, give away her son in adoption. (7)

673. Father's authority to give in adoption.—The person who adopts or with or without his authority his wife may, in accordance with the rules already set out, take a boy in adoption. But the authority to give remains. Primarily only the natural father possesses that power. An adoptive father has no right to give his adoptive son in adoption, for the simple reason that a boy who has once been taken in adoption cannot be again adopted. (8) Consequently, if the adoptive father begets a son he may give away in adoption this son, but not his adopted son.

674. The right of the father to give is uncontrolled by the mother. Even if she objects, he has still the right to give his son in adoption for "in the eye of Hindu Law, when a man gives his son in adoption he would seem to exercise a power, more like the power of an absolute proprietor than of a guardian." (9)

(1) Manu, IX-168.

(2) Yashisth, XV-172, 14 S. B. E. p. 75.

(3) Ib. XV 4; cited in Datt. Mim. 1-§§ 15 and 16 (Suth.) p. 4 This is repeated in Mayukh Ch. IV-Sec. V § 1c.

(4) Yajñavalkya, II 180.

(5) Mit. Ch. I Sec. XI § 9.

(6) Datt. Ch. I-§ 31 (Suth.) p. 115.

(7) Datt. Ch. I-82 (Suth.) p. 11b.

(8) Datt. Mim. 1-§ 80 (Suth.) p. 7 "The same son must not be adopted, by two or three persons."

(9) Chitko v Janaki, 11 B. H. C. R. 199; In Atank v. Fakirchand, 5 Beng. S. R. 418 (420): 7 I. D. (O. S.) 650 (651) the Judge having questioned the pandit of the court whether "the assent of the wife of the adopter was necessary to legalize the adoption" received a reply in the negative.

675. If a minor father can adopt or authorize an adoption, there seems no reason why such a father should not be competent to give his son in adoption. The question in each case is whether he had at the time, attained the age of discretion so as to be able to understand the nature of his act and its effect upon his rights. <sup>(1)</sup>

676. His conversion to an alien faith, e.g., Mahomedanism, <sup>(2)</sup> a fortiori Brahmoism, <sup>(3)</sup> does not affect his paternal right of giving his son in adoption. The fact that he may have by his conversion incapacitated himself from performing the religious ceremony, e.g., Datt Homam, is no disqualification since law allows such rituals to be performed vicariously in case of necessity.

677. There is no text that a person suffering from any of the disabilities such as congenital leprosy <sup>(4)</sup> impotency, blindness, deafness, idiocy or the like has no right to give in adoption <sup>(5)</sup> and as the gift of a son is a meritorious act, a father so afflicted would not be debarred from exercising a right which his position and his religious dogma alike justify.

678. Mother's authority.—While, therefore, the father has an absolute authority, the mother's authority to give is subject to his consent when possible. <sup>(6)</sup> Consequently if he is dead <sup>(7)</sup> or "has emigrated, or entered a religious order" <sup>(8)</sup> she can give. But these instances are merely illustrative and support the view that in the absence of the husband, the wife is competent to give her son in adoption <sup>(9)</sup> unless the husband has at any time expressly or impliedly prohibited. <sup>(10)</sup> In other words, in the absence of any such prohibition, she has the presumed authority of her husband in favour of her power. <sup>(11)</sup> According to the Madras High Court her implied authority can be curtailed only by an express prohibition of the husband to the contrary. <sup>(12)</sup> In any case, her right arises from maternal relation and not by any presumed delegation from her husband. <sup>(13)</sup>

679. Consequently, she does not forfeit that right by reason of her remarriage, whether or not she belongs to a caste in which remarriage is customary. <sup>(14)</sup> Nor has her conversion to an alien faith any effect upon it. <sup>(15)</sup>

(1) In Jumona v. Bamasoondari, 1 C. 289 (296) P. C. a minor under 18 was held competent to adopt as well as authorize an adoption. If so, he should be equally competent to give in adoption.

(2) Shamsingh v. Santa Bai, 25 B. 551 (554, 555).

(3) Kusum Kumari v. Satyanarajan, 80 C. 199.

(4) Anund Mohun v. Gobind, (1864) W. R. 178.

(5) Ib.

(6) Narayan v. Nana, 7 B. H. C. R. (Ac) 153 (167, 168); Bashettiappa v. Shintinaappa, 10 B. H. C. R. 263 (271, 272); Hangubai v. Bhagirathi Bai, 2 P. 377 (819, 820); Lallu bhai v. Mankurbar, ib., 888 (404) affirmed by F. B. at p. 435; Santappayaya v. Rangappayaya, 5 M. L. J. 66; Arnachellum v. Iyasamy, (1817) 1 M. S. D. 154; Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) xxvi (xxx); Hurosoondree v. Chundermoney, (1863) Sev.

998; Jogeshchandra v. Nrityakali, 30 C. 965 (971).

(7) Tarinee v. Sharada, 11 W. R. 468 (476).

(8) Datt Mim 1- 81 (Suth) p. 115 cited supra, 1 Str. H. L. 82.

(9) 1 Str. H. L. 95; Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) xxvi (xxxi-xxxii).

(10) Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) xxxvi (xxxii).

(11) Datt. Ch. Sec. 1 §§ 81, 42; Mit. Ch. 1 Sec. 11-§ 9, Colebrooke's note; Mayuk Ch. IV Sec. V-§ 1; Rangubai v. Bhugirathi, 2 B. 377 (380, 381); Mhalsabai v. Vithoba, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) xxxvi (xxxii).

(12) Narayanaswami v. Kuppusami, 11 M. 48 (47, 48) followed in Gurulingasami v. Ramalakshamma, 18 M. 53 (58).

(13) Putlabai v. Mahadu, 83 B. 107 (118).

(14) Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856) S. 5; Putlabai v. Mahadu, 83 B. 109 (115); Panchappa v. Sangambasawa, 24 B. 87.

(15) Ib.

680. Power and limits of delegation.—Adoption is the gift of his son by the natural father to another, and is completed on its acceptance by the latter. <sup>(1)</sup> This may partake of a contract followed up by simultaneous or subsequent manual delivery and acceptance, which symbolizes and completes the transfer of the boy from one parental control to another. The first essential contract of gift and acceptance can only be made by the parent of the child. It cannot be left to be performed vicariously. But if the contract of gift and acceptance is concluded between the principals competent to give and take <sup>(2)</sup> and either of them is through illness or otherwise unable to perform the only indispensable ceremony of corporeal giving and taking <sup>(3)</sup> or of the Datt Homam, if necessary, its performance may be delegated to be performed by the wife <sup>(4)</sup> or another son <sup>(5)</sup> on the part of the giver and any relation such as the uncle, of the receiver. <sup>(6)</sup>

681. Conditional delegation. The father may depute his wife to give away his son. In that case she acts as his delegate and is bound to act strictly according to his instruction. If he had ordered her to act only on the fulfilment of a certain condition then she has no power to act till that condition, however unnecessary, and even though imposed in consequence of a mistake, is fulfilled, provided it was made an essential term of her employment. So where the father had agreed to give his boy in adoption duly if the adopter obtained the previous assent of the British Government to it, without which the mother was not to give away her son in adoption, as there had been "former wrangles" about the estate. In this he was mistaken. His wife completed the adoption but the court set it aside holding that the condition precedent to her authority had not been fulfilled. "The mere fact that a man might have judged more wisely or have obtained more accurate information, does not justify those to whom his permission is requisite for a legal transaction, to think and judge for him. His volition and its legal consequences are, in fact not affected by a mistake under which he may labour. The business of the other parties concerned is not to supersede but to persuade him." <sup>(7)</sup>

682. Who cannot give in adoption.—It has been already stated that except the parents no other relation has the right to give their child in adoption. Following this principle the courts have negatived the right of the adoptive father or mother <sup>(8)</sup> the step mother <sup>(9)</sup>, the paternal grandfather <sup>(10)</sup> and of the brother <sup>(11)</sup> to give him in adoption.

(1) Collector of Surat v. Dhirsingi 10 B. H. C. R. 284 (287).

(2) Bhagwandas v. Rajmal, 10 B. H. C. R. 241 (265) citing Kenchava v. Ningapa ib. 265 note; Venkata v. Subhadra, 7 M. 548 (551); Subbarayar v. Subbammal, 21 M. 497 (502) O. A. 24 M. 214 P. C.; Shamsingh v. Santabai, 25 B. 551 (555).

(3) Vijjarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B. H. C. R. O. C. 244 (257).

(4) Subbarayar v. Subbammal, 21 M. 497.

(5) Venkata v. Subhadra, 7 M. 548 (551)

(6) Vijjarangam v. Lakshuman, 8 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 244 (257).

(7) Rangu Bai v. Bagirathi Bai, 2 B. 377

(888.)

(8) Datt Mim IV § 62.

(9) Papamma v. Appa Ram 16 M. 884 (394)

(10) Tara Mune v. Devnarayan, 8 Beng S. R. 516; Moolhoosarmy v. Lutchmydavummah, 1852) Mad S D 98, (contra) Veevaperumall v. Narrain, 1 M N C 78 (109) dissented from in Collector of Surat v. Dhirsingi, 10 B H C. R. 235 (287); Kenchava v. Ningapa ib. 265 note.

(11) Collector of Surat v. Dhirsingi, 10 B. H.C.R. 285; Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa, 10 B H C. R. 268 (274); Venkata v. Subhadra 7 M. 548 (551); Taminabai v. Raychand, 7 B. 225 (227, 228)

Qualification for adoption. 36. A boy must possess the following qualifications to be eligible for adoption, namely :—

(1) He must belong to the same caste as the parties giving and taking him in adoption.

(2) He must not be an orphan.

(3) He must not have been adopted by any other person.

(4) Except in Bombay, he must not be married.

(5) Under the Bengal and Benares Schools, he must not have been invested with the sacred thread.

(6) In Dravid, he may be adopted after his investiture with the sacred thread provided he is not married.

(7) Except in Dravid, if the parties are Dwijas he should not be the sister's son, daughter's son, and mother's sister's son of the adopter:

Provided that in the Bombay Presidency, and the Punjab, and amongst Jains, he may be adopted at any age, even though older than his adopter, is married and has children.

Exception.—Nothing in clauses (5) and (7) applies to Shudras.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Textual rules regarding qualification of adopted boy (683-688).  | (699-702).   |
| (2) Niyoga Rules (688).  | (12) Rule inapplicable to Shudras (704).          |
| (3) Identity of caste (689).   | (13) Adoption of daughter's son (705).            |
| (4) Orphan ineligible (690).   | (14) „ sister's son (706).                        |
| (5) Or a person already adopted (691).                               | (15) „ mother's sister's son (707).               |
| (6) Age immaterial (692-693).  | (16) „ wife's brother's son (708).                |
| (7) Adoptee to be unmarried (694).                                   | (17) „ brother (709).                             |
| (8) Exception in Bombay (695).                                       | (18) „ uncle (710).                               |
| (9) Status of son of adoptee (696).                                  | (19) Persons eligible for adoption (713-716).     |
| (10) Adoption before investiture in Bengal and in Benares (697-698). | (20) Objection to extension of Niyoga rule (717). |
| (11) Adoption of prohibited relations                                |  |

683. Analogous Law.—The following texts support this section :—

Manu:—“ He is called a son given (datrīma) whom his father or mother affectionately gives as a son, being alike (by class) and in a time of distress, confirming the gift with water.” (1)

(1) Manu IX.168 quoted in Mit. Ch. I. Sec. XI. § 9; the words “and in a time of distress” do not occur in Sir W. Jones' translation (See Ib., p. 210).

Mitakshara :—" By specifying distress, it is intimated, that the son should not be given unless there be distress. This prohibition regards the giver not the taker".<sup>(1)</sup>

Sakala :—" Let one of a regenerate tribe, destitute of male issue, on that account adopt as a son, the offspring of a Sapinda relation particularly, or also, next to him, one born in the same general family (gotra). If such exist not let him adopt one born in another family, except a daughter's son, and a sister's son, and the son of the mother's sister."<sup>(2)</sup>

Saunaka :—" Of Kshatriyas, of their own class positively, and on default of a Sapinda kinsman, even in the general family following the same primitive spiritual guide (guru), of Vaishyas from amongst those of the Vaishya class, of Shudras from amongst those of the Shudra class; of all, and the tribe likewise, in their own classes only; and not otherwise. But a daughter's son, and a sister's son are affiliated by Shudras. For the three superior tribes, a sister's son is nowhere mentioned as a son."

Ib. :—" Having taken him by both hands, with the recitation of the prayer, having kissed the forehead of the child; having adorned with clothes and so forth, the boy . . . bearing the reflection of a son."<sup>(3)</sup>

Dattak Chandrika :—" Reflection of a son " in other words—the capability to have been begotten by the adopter through appointment and so forth.<sup>(5)</sup>

Dattak Mimansa :—Referring to Saunaka's text before cited, says—By this it is clearly established that the expression "sister's son" is illustrative of the daughter's son and mothers's sister's son and this is proper, for prohibited connection is common to all three. To enlarge would be useless.<sup>(6)</sup>

Shankar Bhatt :—" It is established that the daughter's or the sister's son can be adopted even by the Brahmin or the like (i.e. Kshatriya or Vaishya); and that a Shudra should adopt the daughter's or the sister's son wherever possible "<sup>(7)</sup>

Vyavhar Mayukh :—" The word "Jate" (class) is not to be narrowed down to the daughter's son and sister's son: because the being a daughter's son or a sister's son is not co-extensive with being of the same class, and because there would also arise the difficulty of having in one and the same Smṛiti, a general proposition which would then become useless. This is fully explained by my venerable father in his Dwaita Nirṇaya.<sup>(8)</sup>

684. The sacred texts enunciate a large number of rules which have long since become obsolete and which the legal text books record and refute in their historical sequence. It is sufficient to say that the current adoption rules are those stated in the section. Even they are subject to local variations to be

Textual rules.

presently noticed.

A short historical retrospect of the archaic law is all that will be attempted here.

As caste rigidity in the matter of marriage and adoption is but the result of the growing reaction of the last three or four hundred years, prior to which inter-caste marriages were customary and legal, there are no specific rules in the earlier Smṛitis as to the qualifications of the son to be taken in adoption.

(1) Mit. Ch 1 Sec XI, § 10 "Distress is explained by Prakash cited by Chandeshwar as "inability of the natural father to maintain his offspring" Balam Bhutt explains it as meaning "famine or other calamity"—Colebrooke's note on Ib.

(2) Cited in Datt Ch 1-§ 12 (Suth) p. 10: also in Datt Mim II-107 (Suth), p 41

(3) Cited in Datt. Ch 1, § 17 (Suth), p. 110, also in Datt Mim II-74 (Suth) p 34. The words within crochets are stated to be unauthorized interpolations.—See Vaidyanada v. Appu 9 M. 44 (51, 54) F. B. for a discussion thereon.

sion thereon.

(4) Datt Ch. II-§ 8 (Suth). p. 117; to the same effect Datt. Mim. v. §§ 15-16 (Suth). p. 62.

(5) Datt. Ch II-§ 8 (Suth), p 117.

(6) Datt. Mim. II-§ 108 (Suth), p. 41.

(7) Shankar Bhatt was the father of Nilkanth, author of the "Vyavhar Mayukh" and the quotation is from his Dwaita Nirṇaya. (from the chapter styled "The solution of doubts in regard to adoption") quoted in Mandlik's H L, pp 54, 56).

(8) Ch. IV-S V, § 41 (Mandlik, p. 54.

The only qualification Manu mentions is that the boy to be adopted must belong to the same caste or class as the adopter. (1)

Katyayan refers to adoption of a son of a different caste but adds that he is entitled to "food and raiment only." (2) Yajnavalkya also refers to such adoptions. (3)

Nanda Pandit quotes Vriddha Gautam in support of the view that the adopted son should belong to the adopter's Gotra (4) or be a Sapinda (5) but this rule is obsolete. (6)

685. The rule which has aroused much comment is that incidentally mentioned by Saunaka as an attribute of the adopted son. Describing the ceremony of adoption, he says, "Having kissed the forehead of the child, having adorned with clothes, and so forth, the boy bearing the reflection of a son—" This incomplete quotation Nanda Pandit subjects to a lengthy comment concluding that "such person is to be adopted as with the mother of whom, the adopter might have carnal knowledge". (7)

He refers to the practice of Niyog and adds that the adopted son must be one as could have been produced of the wife by Niyog, thereby expressly excluding the brother, paternal and maternal uncles, the daughter's son and that of the sister "for they bear not resemblance to a son". (8)

The rule has been understood as prohibiting adoption of a person whose mother the adopter could not have married.

686. It has been held applicable only to an adoption by a male and inapplicable to an adoption by a female to her husband (9) or any adoption by a Shudra. (10) Even where it is applicable, it is limited to the possibility of a marriage with her when she was a virgin, having reference only to the law of propinquity (11) without any reference to the law of appointment or Niyog, with reference to which the rule was framed. But as Niyog is now obsolete, the courts have made it a new rule of their own. The rule originally framed was no doubt intended to prevent an incestuous connection between the adoptive father and the natural mother of the boy adopted, in imitation of nature. The rule substituted in its place has the same purpose in view but since the original rule had reference to the relationship upon marriage while the rule substituted refers only to the relationship before marriage, it is apparent that two rules though possessing the same aim, are not in conflict, though they do not completely coincide.

Sakala :—"A sonless twice-born should also adopt a son of a Sapinda, next to him a Sagotra, in default of whom he should adopt Agotra excepting a daughter's son, sister's son and mother's sister's son. (12)

(1) IX-§§ 168, 169. Nanda Pandit points out that if Manu be followed the result would be 18 kinds of sons-Datt. Mim II § 55 (Suth) p. 30.

(2) Datt. Mim III § 3 (Suth) 12.

(3) Ib.

(4) Datt. Mim S. II § 4 (Suth) p. 18, § 71 (Suth) 84.

(5) Datt. Mim S. II § 8 (Suth) 18.

(6) Gocoolanund v. Wooma Dass 23 W.R. 340 O. A. Uma Doyi v. Gocoolanund 3 C. 587 P. C.; Babaji v. Bagirathi Bai, 6 B. H. O. R. (Ac) 701; Dharma v. Ram Krishna, 10 B. 80.

(7) Datt. Mim II-S 20 (Suth), 68.

(8) Ib., § 16 17 (Suth) p. 63—See also Datt. Ch. S-V § 8.

(9) Jwan v. Jwan 2 M. H. C. R. 462. Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15; Minakshi v. Ramayya, 11 M. 49; Cicpat v. Hanmant, 3 B. 273 (298); Vyas v. Vyas, 24 B. 473.

(10) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15.

(11) Minakshi v. Ramayya, 11 M. 49.

(12) Sakala cited in Datt. Mim. II-14, 107; literal translation quoted in Datt. Ch. I-10-17, 29, also in Mandlik's H. L. 52; Wabhai v. Heerbai, 84 B. 491 (495).

This is construed to mean that, "in the order of selection for adoption, the first choice is directed in favour of a Sapinda, failing him a Sagotra and in default of these, a stranger, excepting always the specific instances mentioned, viz., a daughter's son, a sister's son, and the mother's sister's son" these three being strangers and neither "Sapindas" nor "Sagotras" of the adopter. (1)

687. But even any of these three, though excepted by the text, may be adopted if permitted by custom and one such custom in favour of the validity of adoption of a daughter's son being proved in a case arising in the Umbala District of the Punjab, the Privy Council held it unobjectionable (2) and even in the case of Brahmins of Southern India the custom of adopting a sister's or daughter's son has been recognized by the courts. (3) And so Strange wrote in 1806 that "in practice the adoption of a sister's son by persons of all castes is not uncommon" (4) And similarly the custom of adopting the daughter's son has survived the appointment of a daughter for that purpose. (5)

688. Niyog rules.—They prohibit adoption of the following relations: the paternal and maternal uncles, the brother, the four first cousins on the paternal and maternal side, the brother-in-law, the sister's son, and the daughter's son. The marriage rules do not exclude adoption of the father's brother's son and the mother's brother's son. (6)

The Bombay High Court has held the Niyog rules of ineligibility for adoption as merely directory and not imperative (7) and that the rule that no one can be adopted whose mother the adopter could not have legally married, is confined to the three specific instances forbidding the adoption of the son of a daughter or of a sister or of mother's sister (8) though he may also happen to be a son of his father's brother (9) as these three are expressly excluded by both the works on adoption. (10)

689. Persons eligible for adoption.—All schools and courts now agree that the first pre-requisite of eligibility for adoption is that

(1) Identity of caste. the boy selected must be of the same caste as the adopter. For this purpose law recognizes only the four primary castes and if the boy and his adopter both belong to any of them, then there is no Shastric impediment in the way of their adoption. (11)

This rule is sought to be justified on various grounds, that an adoption being an imitation of nature, and since a son if born, must belong to the father's caste, so must be the son adopted (12) or that since an adopter cannot marry a

(1) Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B 619; Walbai v. Heerbai, 24 L. 491 (495)

(2) Itup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C 780 (795) P. C.

(3) Vandinada v. Appu, 9 M 44 F B

(4) 2 Str H. L. 100 (App): To the same effect 2 West and Buhler's H. L. (3rd Ed.), pp. 884—888.

(5) 2 West and Buhler's H. L. (3rd Ed.), pp. 884-888 cited with approval Vayidinada v. Appu, 8 M. 44 (53) F.B

(6) Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 19 (54).

(7) Virayya v. Hanuman'a, 14 M. 459 (460, 461); Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B. 619 (680); Walhai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491.

(8) Kyas v. Vyas, 24 B. 478 (481); Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B. 619 Yamnav v.

Larman, 36 588; Ramakrishna v. Chinnaji, 15 Bom. L. R. 824; Gajanan v. Kashi Nath, 39 B. 410 (419); Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M 283. contra Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 19.

(9) Ramachandra v. Gopal, 32 B 619; Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagawan Singh, 21 A. 412 P. C overruling, 17 A. 294 F. B.

(10) Walbai v. Heerbai, 34 B. 491.

(11) Manu IX-168; Yajnavalkya II-132; Mitak Ch 1 S. XI § 9; Mayuk Ch 7-S. 5 §4; Datt. Mim II §22, 23-26 (Suth) p. 21; Saunaka cited ib § 21; (Suth) p. 21; Datt. Ch. 1 §§ 12-16.

(12) Mit Ch 1 S. XI § 9; Datt. Mim. II 74. 88

woman of a different caste and the fiction of adoption is founded upon the fiction that the adopter has begotten the boy upon his natural mother, therefore, it is necessary that she should be a person who might lawfully have been his wife—a rule which being pushed to its logical extreme implies (a) not only that the two must belong to the same caste; but (b) that the two must not be within the prohibited degree of relationship for marriage. (1) But the fact that the Mitakshara recognizes inter-marriages between different castes as lawful, (2) Saunaka recognizes adoption of sons of different castes and Nanda Pandit does not explain away this text but recognizes it as expounding the current law of his time (3) shows that the true reason to be found for desuetude of the custom is custom and that there is no logic behind it. (4) That there can be no adoption of a boy belonging to a different caste is, however, settled. So the court refused to countenance the adoption of a Brahmin boy by a widow of the Rajbansi Thakur caste. (5) But if the caste is one, the fact that the adoptee's father belonged to the Sadharan Brahmo Samaj is no obstacle to his adoption into an orthodox Hindu family. (6)

(2) Must not be an orphan

690. Secondly, the boy to be adopted must not be an orphan, that is to say one bereft of both parents, for in that case, he cannot be given in adoption (7) (§ 682).

691. Thirdly,

(3) Must not be adopted by another.

since a person cannot be the son of two fathers, his adoption to one disqualifies him for a second adoption. But if his first adoption was invalid, there being no adoption in law, it does not stand in the way of a second adoption.

692. The fitness of the boy for adoption by reason of his infancy is closely connected with his disqualification by reason of his marriage. In ancient times neither age nor marriage was a bar to adoption and an instance is frequently cited of the adoption of Sunahsepha by Vishwamitra in the vedic age.

Age immaterial.

The restrictions consequent on age and marriage are unquestionably innovations of a later age and so far as they are supported by the two law books on Adoption, they are based upon a passage in Kalika Puran, the authenticity of which is doubtful and has been doubted by the authors of Dattak Chandrika (8) of Vyvhar Mayuk, (9) and by Messrs. Colebrooke (10) and Sutherland. (11) This interpolated passage contains the following sentence: "O Lord of the Earth, a son, having been initiated under the family name of his father, unto the ceremony of tonsure inclusive, does not become the son of another man. The ceremony of tonsure and other rites of initiation being indeed performed under his family name, sons given, and the rest may be considered as issue; else, they are termed slaves. After their fifth year, O King, sons given, and the rest are not sons. But having taken a boy five years old, the adopter should not perform the sacrifice for male issue. But the son of a twice-married woman, immediately on being born, he should duly take as a son." (12)

This means that no adoption is valid unless the boy is below five, untorned and, therefore, necessarily unmarried.

(1) Sutherland's Synopsis II §1.

(2) Mit. Ch. 1 Sec VIII; Daybhag Ch. IX.

(3) Datt Mim. III §§ 1-3.

(4) Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 159 (460)

(5) Narain Singh v. Shiam Kali. 17 O. C. 186; 25 I. C. 45.

(6) Kusum Kumari v. Satya Ranjan, 30 C. 999 (1009, 1010).

(7) Balawantrao v. Bayabar 6 B. H. C. R.

(O. C.) 83; Bhashetappa v. Shivlingappa, 10 B. H. C. R. 268; Srinivas v. Balwant, 37 B. 513 518.

(8) Datt, Ch. II-25 (Suth) pp 121, 122.

(9) Mandlik H. L. p 58.

(10) 2 Dig. § 273 p 391.

(11) Suth. Note to Datt Mim. pp 46 and 47.

(12) Cited in Datt. Mim. IV. 22 (Suth.) pp. 46 and 47.

693. This question was for the first time agitated in the Sudar Diwani court in Bengal in 1806 who laid down the rule that the adoption of a boy over five years of age though not laudable, was yet valid, provided his initiatory ceremonies (Samskar) were performed in the family of his adopter and not in that of his natural father. Holding this view they upheld the adoption of a boy aged 8 years. <sup>(1)</sup> In another case decided in 1837 the Court even dispensed with the qualification of non-tonsure holding that its performance in the natural father's family could be expiated by a sacrifice. <sup>(2)</sup> Next year they had to deal with a Teli's adoption and on the present subject the Pandit's opinion was that in the case of Dwijas, adoption should be before the boy's thread ceremony and of a Shudra, before his marriage. <sup>(3)</sup> This is in accordance with the view of Vashishth quoted in the Dattak Chandrika. <sup>(4)</sup> In another case decided in 1859 an adoption of a Brahmin boy aged 12 was held good on the ground that the initiatory ceremony of investiture had not been performed. <sup>(5)</sup> The rules as to age and the non-performance of the ceremony of investiture have thus failed to obtain a foothold in the case-law of the country. On the other hand, the contrary custom has been found to exist even amongst the Brahmins of Southern India. <sup>(6)</sup>

694. In the cases cited, it was pointed out that even in the case of Shudras marriage was bar to adoption <sup>(7)</sup> and this has been the law even in Madras where, however, there is no restriction as to age, so much so that if the person is unmarried the fact that he is aged 40 is no bar to adoption. <sup>(8)</sup> That a married man cannot be adopted has also been decided in Allahabad <sup>(9)</sup> and in Nagpur <sup>(10)</sup> and is now the established doctrine of the Benares school applicable alike to the regenerate castes and the Shudras <sup>(11)</sup> and even to the Jains <sup>(12)</sup> amongst whom, however the custom of adoption of married men is not unknown and has been found proved in several cases. <sup>(13)</sup>

695. But in the Bombay Presidency even marriage is no bar to an adoption <sup>(14)</sup> and is in accordance both with the written law <sup>(15)</sup> and the prevailing usage <sup>(16)</sup> which sanction such adoptions even where the married man is aged 45 and is himself the father of a son. <sup>(17)</sup>

(1) Kirubarnsen v. Bhobinesree, 1 Beng. S. R. 213 (1837); 6 I D. (O.S) 157 (158).

(2) Jaymonoy v Sibosondry Fulton, 75, following 1 Str. H. L. p. 91 in which they also upheld the adoption of an only son. But the parties were Shudras.

(3) Bullubakant v Kishempura, 6 Beng. S. R. 270. 7 I. D. (OS) 869 (872). To the same effect Niradaye v. Bhola Nauth (1853) S.D.A. 553.

(4) 11-29 (Suth) p. 123.

(5) Ram Kishore v. Bhaubarnayee, (1859) S. D. A. B. 229 affirmed on review (1860) 1 S.D.A. B. 485; but the adoption was set aside on another ground by the Privy Council in 10 M. I. A. 279.

(6) Viraragava v. Ramalingo, 9 M. 148.

(7) Annasami v. Sivagamy, 1 Mad. D. 106; Chetticolam v. Vencolachella, (1823) M. S. D. A. 406; Sreenivasen v. Sushyammal, (1859) Mad. D. 118; Vythilinga v. Vijayalammal 6 M. 43; Pichurayyan v. Subbayyan, 18 M. 128.

(8) Papamma v. Appara, 16 M. 884.

(9) Gengasahai v. Lekraj, 9A. 253; Damodarji v. Collector of Banda, 7 A. L. J. 927.

(10) Tejabai v. Molunlal, 11 C.P. L. R. 56; Kanhyalal v. Satiya, 1. N. L. R. 1.

(11) Damodarji v. Collector of Banda, 7 A. L. J. 927; Jankiram v. Venkiah, 10 M. L. J. 21, 11 I. C. 388.

(12) Rupchand v. Jambuprasad, 32 A. 247 P. C. in which their Lordships however confined their decision to the custom found not proved in that case.

(13) Manoharlal v. Benarsidas, 29 A. 495.

(14) Mulsaribai v. Vithoba, 7 B. H. C. R. (App) 26; Nathaji v. Hari, 8 B. H. C. R. (A.C) 67; Dharma v. Ramkrishna, 10 B. 80 Query as to Brahmins in Sadasiv v. Hari, 11 B. H. C. R. 190; Lekshmanappa v. Ramova, 12 B. H. C. R. 364.

(15) Mayukh Ch. IV Sec. V (Mandlik) p. 58.

(16) Priyabhukhanji v. Gokuloottanji, 1 Borr 181.

(17) Gopal v. Vishnu, 23 B. 250; Kalgavada v. Somappa 33 B. 669.

696. Where a father becomes the son of another person, the latter acquires no right of accession in his adoptee's son who continues to retain his old gotra and his right of inheritance in the family of his birth. In other words, by his adoption into another family the father alone goes out of the family but he does not carry with him his son <sup>(1)</sup> though he would necessarily have to take with him his wife who completes his individuality and who therefore like her husband acquires his new gotra. <sup>(2)</sup>

697. The rule that in the case of the first three castes, the boy to be adopted must not have donned the sacred thread, is enforced only by the Benares and Bengal schools, the Dravid and the Bombay schools permitting such adoptions, the former only on condition that the adoptee is not married <sup>(3)</sup> which is the rule every where except in Bombay and the Punjab.

Adoption before investiture in Bengal and Benares. So dealing with the case of a Kshatriya adoption, Mahmud, J., held, "That according to the Hindu Law of adoption as prevalent in the Benares school, the performance of the Upnayan <sup>(4)</sup> or the ceremony of the investiture of the sacred thread, hallowed by the Gayatri representing as it does the sacred birth of a boy and the beginning of his education in the duties of his tribe as prescribed by Manu, is the ultimate limit when a valid adoption in the Dattak form can take place." <sup>(5)</sup> This doctrine has no application to the Shudras, for in their case the only ceremony of consequence in its theological and legal aspect in Hindu Law, is the ceremony of marriage. <sup>(6)</sup>

698. Now since the ceremony of investiture as already stated, may be performed in the case of Brahmins at any time between the 8th and 16th year, that of a Kshatriya between the 11th and the 22nd year and that of a Vaishya between the 12th and 24th year, it follows that this is the extreme age limit for the performance of the investiture as also for adoption. <sup>(7)</sup> But should the boy be for any reason not invested with the sacred thread beyond this age, there appears to be no legal impediment to his adoption before marriage, for if his eligibility is determined by the Upnayan, it cannot be assumed where it has not been in fact performed.

699. The texts favour the adoption of near relations, Sapindas first, Gotrajas after, and strangers if the first two are not available. These injunctions have been held to be only monitory and not mandatory. Consequently the adopter is free to choose any boy from amongst his caste fellows. And amongst these last, the Privy Council has now settled that since the texts of Sakala and Saunaka cited with approval in the two Hindu treatises on adoption <sup>(8)</sup> expressly prohibit the adoption of the sons of one's daughter, sister and mother's sister, these cannot be adopted. <sup>(9)</sup>

(1) Kalgavda v. Somappa, 33 B. 669.

(2) Ib. p 687.

(3) Viroragava v. Ramalinga, 9 M. 148 ; Pichuwayyan v. Subhayan, 18 M. 128.

(4) Lit. "up" near and "nayan" going, i.e., "going near the preceptor" for commencement of his vedic studies. All men are born Shudras and the ceremony of Upnayan symbolized by the investiture of the sacred thread is regarded as a sacred birth converting a Shudra into a *Dwij*a or twice born. It marks the termination of infancy and the commencement of the term of studentship.

(5) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj, 9 A. 53 (328) following on this point Keeratswarain v. Bhachunesree, B S D A. 161 ; Ramkishore v. Bhachumoyee, (1859) S. D. A. B. p. 229 (cited supra.)

(6) Ib. p 828.

(7) Manu II §§ 86-88.

(8) See texts already cited. § 688.

(9) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 (420-424) P. C. ; Walhai v. Heerbai, 84 B. 491.

700. There remains the question whether these texts equally prohibit the adoption of other relations with whose mother the adopter could not have at any time contracted a legal marriage. The Privy Council had not to and refrained from, deciding this general question as the case before them related to the adoption of a mother's sister's son which is expressly prohibited and as such their Lordships felt bound to follow the text, supported as it was by precedents and the opinion of text writers. The questions, therefore, still remain whether the prohibition is specifically confined to the specified relations, or is more general as stated in the rule.

701. The question has already been discussed in some detail (§§684-688) and all that is now necessary is to state the argument pro and con and the trend of decided cases. For the generality of the rule, the argument is, that since adoption strives to imitate nature, one cannot adopt a son with whose mother one had never any possibility of an intercourse even if one were to imagine oneself as appointed by her husband to raise an issue upon her. Now since such an impossibility exists only in the case of relations with whom intercourse would be incestuous, it follows that close female relations with whom Niyog was impossible are also relations whose sons can by no figure of speech be described as the "shadow of a son." This was the primary contention.

702. But since the discontinuance of Niyog, it is said, the essence of the rule remains; and if we substitute marriage for Niyog the modified rule holds good that no one can adopt a son whose mother one could never have lawfully married. The analogy of the two rules was thus defined in a Madras case. "There is no conflict between the law of appointment as to the person eligible for appointment and the law of marriage as to the person eligible for marriage. The object in both was that the sexual intercourse authorized by law should not be incestuous, and the religious foundation for the rule is that the offspring of incest is outcaste and not competent to offer funeral or annual oblations with efficacy. The point in analogy consists in securing a son competent to perform those oblations and the analogy holds good whether it is considered in connection with the law of appointment or the law of marriage." (1) On this principle a man cannot adopt his own brother or step-brother (2) or his uncle whether paternal or maternal (3) though he may adopt his brother's son, since he could have married his brother's wife when a maiden, (4) So again he may adopt his brother's son's son, (5) paternal uncle's son, (6) wife's brother, (7) wife's brother's son (8) or wife's sister's son. (9)

703. But the decided cases lack uniformity due to the variations sanctioned by local usage and the question therefore, now, is not only what the rule is, but how far it accords with existing practice. The cases that have so far attracted the notice of the court, are noted below.

704. The rule has in any case no application to Shudras. (10) They are expressly excepted in the very texts which are held to enounce the rule.

Or in Southern India Nor has it any force in Southern India. (11)

(1) Vayidinada v. Appu 9 M. 44 F. B. contra Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. F. B.

(2) Sriramulu v. Ramayya 3 M. 15

(3) Haran Chunder v. Hurro, 6 C. 41 (47).

(4) Bai Nani v. Chuni Lal, 22 B. 978; Jaisingh v. Bijai, 27 A. 417

(5) Haran Chunder v. Hurro, 6 C. 41.

(6) Virayya v. Hanumantha, 14 M. 459.

(7) Ruvce Bhadr v. Roop Shunker, 2

Borr. 656.

(8) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15.

(9) Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 283.

(10) Nunkoo Singh v. Purm Dhun Singh, 12 W. R. 356; Phundo v. Janginath, 15 A. 327; Chinna v. Pedda, 1 M. 63.

(11) Minakshi v. Ramanada, 11 M. 49 (54) F. B.

705. Invalid adoption.—Even the above express text has not received universal acceptance. For while the prohibition of adoption of a daughter's son is now accepted as the general

Daughter's son

rule of Hindu Law, deviation from it is permitted by custom. <sup>(1)</sup> While it has been given effect to in the Benares school <sup>2</sup>, the contrary has become customary in the Southern Mahratta country, <sup>3</sup> the Punjab <sup>(4)</sup> and amongst the Havi Brahmins of Kanara, <sup>5</sup> Nambudri Brahmins of Malabar <sup>(6)</sup> and amongst the Brahmins generally in the Tanjore, Trichinopoly and Tinnevely districts of Southern India. <sup>(7)</sup>

706. The same view holds good in the case of a sister's son, prohibition being the rule and premission an exception, when justified

Sister's son.

by custom. <sup>(8)</sup> Such custom was proved to exist amongst the Bhora Brahmins of the United Provinces <sup>(9)</sup> though not amongst the other Brahmins <sup>(10)</sup> and among the agricultural Khatri of the Punjab <sup>(11)</sup> and the Vaishyas of Bombay <sup>(12)</sup> and even the Brahmins of Southern India. <sup>(13)</sup> But in the Andra country as in Bengal, the normal rule holds good. <sup>(14)</sup> As Kayasths are Shudras, they are free to adopt a sister's son. <sup>(15)</sup>

707. So the prohibition of adoption of a mother's sister's son being covered by an express text, the prohibition is the rule and extended over to one though he may happen to be also his father's brother's son, <sup>(16)</sup> but an exception has been allowed in the case of Purbia Kurmis who though they call themselves Purbia Kshatriyas, do not really belong to the regenerate caste. <sup>(17)</sup> In this case the court upheld the adoption of the father's sister's grandson.

Mother's sister's son.

708. But the court has not tolerated the adoption

Wife's brother's son.

by a woman of her brother's son, <sup>(18)</sup>

709. Valid adoptions.—Nanda Pandit expressly

Brother.

excludes the brother and both the paternal and maternal uncles from adoption. <sup>(19)</sup>

The Niyog rules exclude both the brother and the step-brother, but their adoption, though not general, is nevertheless not unknown. Steele infers that a younger brother may be adopted by an elder brother because the Ramayan speaks of the latter as 'in the place of the father.' <sup>(20)</sup> But the Madras H. C. Court condemned the adoption of a brother and a step-brother, though it holds that the prohibition of the adoption of a half-brother had nothing to do with the possibility of a legal marriage between the son and his step-mother whose

(1) Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi, 36 C. 780 P. C.

(2) Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 (418) P. C.

(3) Bai Nani v. Chunlal, 22 B 978 (976).

(4) Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi, 36 C. 780 P. C.; contra Baij Nath v. Shamboo (1908) P. W. R. 53

(5) Gawri v. Shivaram (1884) B P. J. 80

(6) Vishnu v. Krishnan, 7 M. 8.

(7) Vayidinada v. Appu, 9 M 44 F B.; Appayya v. Vengu, 15 M. L. J. 311.

(8) Mansa Ram v. Sundar, 14 A 53, Sunder v. Parbati, 12 A. 51 P. C.

(9) Mansa Ram v. Sundar, 14 A. 53

(10) Parbati v. Sundar, 8 A 1.

(11) Sabha Mal v. Nanakchand, 13 P. L. R. 16; 9 I. C. 96

(12) Gampatray v. Vithoba, 4 B. H.

(Ac.) 188.

(13) Vayidinada v. Appu, 9 M 44 F. B.

(14) Narasamma v. Balaramcharlu, 1 M. H. C. R. 470

(15) Rajcoomar Lall v. Bussessur, 10 C. 688

(16) Wanar v. Heerbar, 34 B. 491; Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 A. 412 P. C.

(17) Jyonal v. Kallumal 28 A. 170.

(18) Ballas Koer v. Lachmansingh, 7 N. W. P. H. C. R. 117.

(19) Datt. Mim. V-17 (Suth), p 68.

(20) Steele's L. C., p. 44.

virgin state. <sup>(1)</sup> But such adoption was held valid in a Bombay case on the ground that he was not one of the relations expressly prohibited by Nanda Pandit. <sup>(2)</sup> It will be of course valid amongst Shudras <sup>(3)</sup> who are expressly exempted from the narrow texts. Whatever may be the established usage as regards the adoption of a younger brother, there can be no doubt that the latter cannot adopt his elder brother. Such a question was categorically put to the Pandit who opined that according to the doctrine of Saunaka stated in the Dattak Mimansa an elder brother, an uncle, etc., cannot become a son. <sup>(4)</sup>

710. The ineligibility of the uncle, both paternal and maternal, was incidentally declared by the Pandit in the case last cited.
Uncle. They stand in loco parentis to their nephew who cannot turn the tables upon them by becoming their adoptive father. Moreover the restriction as to age would in most cases prevent their adoption except amongst the Jains in Bombay and in the Punjab, even where the metaphor has not probably yet spent its force.

Paternal and maternal uncle's son and grandson. 711. But there is no objection to the adoption of the paternal <sup>(5)</sup> or maternal uncle's son, or even son's son. <sup>(6)</sup>

Maternal aunt's daughter or latter's son. 712. And neither text nor usage can oppose the adoption of the maternal aunt's daughter or the maternal son's aunt's daughter's son. <sup>(7)</sup>

713. Eligible for adoption.—Of all relations, both the Smritis and later texts commend the adoption of a brother's son, <sup>(8)</sup> and even on the Niyog rule, the adoption of the latter's son is not repugnant to Hindu Law since no rule prevented the marriage of the adopter with his nephew's wife when a virgin. <sup>(9)</sup> So there is nothing illegal in the adoption of a cousin's grandson. <sup>(10)</sup>

714. The adoption of a wife's brother is legal and its legality has been judicially affirmed <sup>(11)</sup> and the legality of his son's adoption by his sister settled by the Privy Council <sup>(12)</sup> in the case of a Brahmin family of the United Provinces. In that case one Gandharv had authorized his widow Parbati to take in adoption her brother's son which she did. The High Court upheld it <sup>(13)</sup> and its decision was only affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council <sup>(14)</sup> but their observations

Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15
Gajanan v. Kashi Nath, 39 B. 410

Phundo v. Jangi Nath, 15 A. 327.
Sujeet Singh v. Narain Singh, 2 R. 315; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 597.
Buta Singh v. Dial Singh, (1902) P

(6) Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 459
 (1) Haranchunder v. Hurro Mohun, 6 C.

14. Venhata v. Subhadra, 7 M. 548.

(8) Wooma Daer v. Gokulavand, 8 C. 587 (597, 598) P. C. in which the effect of Datt. Mim. 1 28-31, 67, 74 and Datt Ch. 1 20 22, 27, 28 enjoining the adoption of a brother's son was held to be merely directory and not imperative, and in any case condoned by application of the maxim Factum valet (Ib. p. 601).

(9) Morun v. Bijoy Kisho, W. R. (S. N.) F. B. 121 (122); Haran Chunder v. Hurro Mohun, 6 C. 41; Virayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 459.

(10) Morun v. Bijoy, W. R. (S. N.) F. B. 121 (122) explained in Haran Chunder v. Hurro Mohun 6 C. 41 (47).

(11) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15; Roop Shanker v. Shunkarjee, 2 Borr. 662; Kristwengar v. Vanamamalai, (1856) Mad. Dec. 213; Runganaigum v. Namosevaya, Mad. Dec. 94; Sarup Singh v. Jassi, (1891) (1857) P. R. 22.

(12) Puttu Lal v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 P. C.
 (13) Jai Singh v. Bajar, 27 A. 417

(14) Puttu Lal v. Parbati, 27 A. 359 P. C. approving Jai Singh v. Bijai, 27 A. 417; Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15; Bai Nani v. Chunilal, 22 B. 978 overruling contra in Battas Kuar v. Lachman, 7 N. W. P. H. C. R. 117.

shake to its very foundation the obsolete Niyog rule and its substituted analogue so far as that rule was attempted to be extended to an adoption by the widow. Their Lordships further expressed their approval of two cases decided by the Bombay <sup>(1)</sup> and Madras High Court <sup>(2)</sup> in the latter of which the adoption was by the husband, which in their Lordships' view, would have made no difference.

715. So the adoption of a brother's daughter's son has become established as a rule in the Punjab so that its validity is presumed, <sup>(3)</sup> while it is customary in Southern India. <sup>(4)</sup>

716. So the adoption by a man of his wife's sister's daughter's son has been held valid in Madras as would be a marriage between him and his adoptee's mother. <sup>(5)</sup>

717. The substitution of a new rule divorced from its context has been criticized by the Madras High Court on the ground that the usage of Niyog being obsolete, the courts were not at liberty to refer to it or to engraft on it a new rule as evidenced by the usage of the people. As such, the court upheld the adoption of the son of the paternal uncle of the adopter which would, of course, have been contrary to the principle of Niyog. <sup>(6)</sup> In another case referring to the phrase "the reflection of a son" the court thought it "very questionable, whether it was intended to limit the generation from which a son might be adopted, or is anything more than a descriptive epithet applied to the child adopted. The phrase, as has been said, occurs only in the portion of the books which prescribe the ceremonial, and not in the part which lays down rules as to the selection of a son. Had the law giver intended to limit the choice to the one generation next below the intending adopter, he would have surely laid it down distinctly and not have left it doubtfully, and with much dispute, evolved from an epithet that applied to the child in the verses describing the ceremonies to be performed and as to whom those ceremonies have been nearly completed." <sup>(7)</sup> The authority of this rule and its analogue has been much shaken by a decision of the Privy Council <sup>(8)</sup> in which Sir John Edge delivering the judgment of the Privy Council reiterated his former view <sup>(9)</sup> that the glosses of Nanda Pandit should be received with caution where they deviated from or added to the Smritis, and as such their Lordships rejected his extension of the rule that no one can be adopted as a son whose mother the adoptee could not have legally married, to females as both unauthorized and unsupported by usage. Now since the widow adopts for and to her husband, it follows that there cannot be one rule for the husband and another for his widow.

(1) Bai Nani v. Chunilal, 22 B. 978.

(2) Sriramulu v. Ramayya, 3 M. 15.

(3) Chuttan v. Ramchand, (1904) P. R. 86.

(4) Appayya v. Vengu, 15 M. L. J. 211.

(5) Ragavendra v. Jayaram, 20 M. 293.

(6) Vrayya v. Hanumanta, 14 M. 453 (461).

(7) Haran Chunder v. Hurro Mohun, 6 C 41 (48).

(8) Puttu Lal v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 P. C.

(9) Per Edge, C. J. and Banerji. J in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh 17 A. 294 F.B. reversed in 21 A. 412 P. C. in Puttu Lal v. Parbati, 37 A. 359 Sir John Edge supports Banerji, J's view on the general question in Jai Singh v. Bijai, 27 A. 417 (433) and (it is submitted) rightly. This case approves of Nani v. Chunilal, 22 B. 978 which cites and follows Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 17 A. 294 F. B. (at p. 977) which the P. C. overruled in 21 A. 412 P. C.

37. (1) No adoption is complete without the corporeal delivery of the adoptee to his adopter with a declaration by the person, delivering him, that he delivers him in adoption ; and of the adopter, that he so accepts him.

(2) Provided, that they have also performed such other act or ceremonies as may be required by law, or are customary to that end.

(3) Provided further, that if the parties thereto belong to any of the regenerate castes, and do not belong to the same Gotra, they must also perform the ceremony of Datt Homa.

(4) But non-performance of the Datt Homa or of the further ceremonies mentioned in clause (2) will not invalidate an adoption made as provided in clause (1) unless their performance is regarded by the caste as of the essence of the ceremony of adoption

Explanation.—No delivery and its acceptance is valid unless the parties thereto were capable of understanding the nature of the act and its effect upon their rights.

Illustrations.

(a) Amongst Nambudris an adoption is performed by burning a pan of sacred grass. A is a Nambudri. He adopts B without burning such grass. It is a question of fact whether without such burning, the adoption is complete.

(b) An adoption by a widow subject to the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) must be in writing attested as in the case of a will and registered. A is such widow. She performs the ceremony of giving and taking but omits to execute a registered deed of adoption. The adoption is invalid.

Synopsis.

- (1) Textual ceremonies (718). (3) Datt Homa (722-723).
 (2) Giving and taking (719-721).

718. Analogous Law.—The following texts refer to the necessary ceremonies for adoption.

Baudhayan :—“ One about to adopt produces two pieces of cloth, a pair of earrings, a ring and a priest thoroughly read in the Vedas, a bunch of 64 stems of the Kus grass and fuel of the Purni tree (1). Then having invited kinsmen into the middle of the dwelling, and having made a representation to the king, having sat down by the direction of a Brahmin in the assembly, or in the middle of his house, having caused to be exclaimed the auspicious day, benediction ‘prosperity’ having performed rites commencing with the recitation of the prayer ‘Yaddevayajana’ down to the placing of vessels for water; having advanced before the giver, let him beg “Give me thy son.” The other replies “I give.” He receives the child and says : ‘I receive thee for the sake of religious duty. I adopt thee for offspring’

(1) Butea frondosa.

"Then having adorned him with the clothes, the earrings and the ring, having performed the investiture and other ceremonials, down to the kindling a flame of fire, having dressed the oblations, he offers a burnt offering. After having recited the incantation in the first chapter of the Yajur Veda commencing Yastwa, etc' with recitation of the sacrificial prayer Yaswa twen, etc. he offers a burnt offering "

"Next having performed the burnt sacraments, where the prayers denominated Vyahruti are recited and that designated Swishtakriti with other ceremonials being completed down to bestowing an excellent cow, he presents the fee saying "Yours are these two clothes, the earrings and the ring likewise " (1)

Yashisth :—"He who desires to adopt a son, shall assemble his kinsmen, announce his intention to the king, make burnt offerings, in the middle of the house, reciting the Vyahrutis and take as a son a non-remote kinsmen, visit and the nearest among his relatives " (2)

Dattak Mimansa :—"The filial relation of these five sons proceeds from adoption only, with observance of the form of either Vashisth or Saunaka, not otherwise " (3)

Ib :—"It is therefore established that the filial relation of adopted son is occasioned only by the proper ceremonies of gift, acceptance, a burnt sacrifice and so forth. Should either be wanting, the filial relation even fails " (4)

Yama :—"The Homa or the like ceremony is not necessary in the case of adoption of the daughter's or the brother's son ; by the verbal gift and acceptance alone, that is accomplished : that is decided by Lord Yama." (5)

719. Giving and taking.—The indispensable and irreducible ceremony

Clause 1.

necessary to complete an adoption is that of giving and taking performed as stated in clause (1). (6) It may be supplemented but cannot be substituted by another ceremony. As the Privy Council observed, "according to Hindu usage, which the courts should accept as governing the law, the giving and taking ought to take place by the father handing over the child to the adoptive mother, and the adoptive mother declaring that she accepts the child in adoption." (7) The Madras Full Bench held this decision "as an authority for the proposition that any overt act is not sufficient, but that there must be corporeal delivery of the child by a person competent to give to a person competent to take, accompanied by the declaration on the one side "I give the child in adoption, and on the other, "I take the child in adoption." (8)

720. Such gift and acceptance are not merely necessary to furnish evidence of adoption but constitute its essential ceremony. Consequently even if the parties have executed and received a formal and duly registered deed of adoption evidencing such an intention, it is not sufficient to constitute a legal adoption unless there is the overt act of corporeal delivery of the child and its acceptance coupled with a declaration that the one was giving and the other receiving him in adoption. (9) This is the sole operative ceremony indispensable to all adoptions whether of the twice-born or of the Shudras (10) whether in the caste ridden Upper India or the custom ridden Punjab.

(1) Cited in Datt Mim. V 42 (Suth) pp 67, 68 ; Datt Ch. II-1-13 (Suth) pp. 116 117

(2) Vashisth XV-6 14 S.B.E. pp. 75, 76 cited in Datt. Mim III 81 (Suth) p 65; Datt Ch II-11 (Suth) p. 116.

(3) Datt. Mim. V-50 (Suth) 70.

(4) Ib V-56 (Suth) 71; Datt Ch. II-1-13 (Suth) pp. 116, 117

(5) Quoted and commented on in Valubai v. Govind, 24 B 213 (223).

(6) Shosinath v. Krishnu, 6 C. 381 (389) P. C.; Bireswar v. Araha Chander, 19 C. 452 (460 461) P. C.; Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M 5 (7) P. C.; Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti, 13 M. 214, 218 219.

(7) Shosinath v. Krishnu, 6 C. 381 (389)

P. C

(8) Govindayyar v Dorasami, 11 M. 5 (7) P. B

(9) Kenchawa v Ninjupa, 10 B. H. C. R. 265 note, Singanma v Vinjamuri, 4 M H. C. R 165 (167) following Veeraperumal v Naraina, 1 Str Notes 117 (quoted ib p. 167)

(10) Indromani v. Behari Lal, 5 C. 770 P. C.; Shosinath v. Krishnu, 6 C. 381 P. C.; (Shudra adoption), Bireswar v Araha Chander, 19 C. 452 P. C. (Brahmins); Kuppusami v Venkata Lakshmi, 18 M L T. 434; 31 I C. 855 (Shudra); Sheelatan v Bhirgaon, 2 Pat. L. J. 481; 41 I. C. 375; Sukumari v. Anantha, 28 C. 168.

721. As regards the performance of other ceremonies, they are important but not equally so. If they are customary, they will be

Clause 2. performed as a matter of course by parties who are interested in seeing that no ceremony customary in their caste is omitted. But if though inadvertance or otherwise they are omitted, it would not necessarily vitiate an adoption, if the operative ceremony mentioned in clause 1 is completed. As Sir Thomas Strange observed: "The operative part of the ceremony seems to be the giving and receiving, the rest is matter of customary solemnity, of decorum, of charity and conviviality varying under different circumstances in different parts of India." (1)

Amongst Marwadis, one such ceremony both customary and regarded as essential, is the tying of the turban of the adoptive father and seating the boy on his guddi (padded seat.) Presents called tilak are also made to the newly made son by the relatives and friends of the adopter.

One such ceremony is the Putreshta Jag which is usually performed by the twice-born, but it has been held to be a matter of form and not essential to an adoption. (2)

Datt Homa. 722. But the performance of the Datt Homa stands on a different footing.

"Datt Homa" is the service of the burning of clarified butter, which is offered as a sacrifice by fire by way of religious propitiation or oblation.

The Privy Council have recently affirmed the view previously maintained in several cases that the performance of this ceremony is not necessary where the two families belong to the same Gotra. (3)

Their Lordships however, refrained from deciding the general question as to the necessity of the ceremony of Datt Homa to complete an adoption, decided in the two cases of the Madras High Court which, however, they cited with apparent approval "being of value as containing a careful study of the authorities and affirming that the ceremony of Datt Homa is not essential to a valid adoption among Brahmins in Southern India." (4) In so holding they adopted both the reasons as well as the findings of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. in the under noted case (5) in which, though a Maratha Brahmin case, the learned Judge relied upon not only on the stare decisis but on the text of Yama already cited, which expressly dispenses with this ceremony in the case of the relations, because they are of the same Gotra and which furnishes a more general rule than that declared in the section.

There is no case in which the non-performance of Datt Homa has invalidated an adoption; and since the question has been canvassed by the courts for over a century, it may be safely asserted that however necessary may be this Homa to a twice-born, its non-performance would not seriously shake the legality of an adoption. (6)

(1) Veerapermal v Naraina, 1 Str. Notes. 117 cited in Singamma v. Vingamuri 4 M. I. C. R. 165 (167)

(2) Sheo Lal v Bhargun, 2 Pat. L. J. 431; 41 I C 375 contra Luchmun v Mohun Lal, 16 W. R. 179 in which Putreshta Jag is said to have been an error for Datt Homa—Sarkar's Adoption p 383.

(3) Bal Gangadhar Tilak v Shrinivas, 39 B 441 (468 467) P. C. citing Singamma v.

Vingamuri, 4 M. H. C. R. 165, Govindayyar v Dorasami, 11 M. 5. F. B and following Valubai v Govind, 24 B. 218 (221).

(4) Singamma v. Vingamuri v 4 M. H. C. R 165, Govindayyar v. Dorasami, 11 M 5; F B cited in Bal Gangadhar v. Shrinivas, 39 B 441 455) P. C.

(5) Valubai v. Gobind, 24 B 218 (221)

(6) Retki v. Lakpati, 20 C. W. N. 19, 25.

723. In the case of a Shudra it is of course, both inadmissible and unnecessary. <sup>(1)</sup> And in the case of the Dwijas besides the Deccan Brahmin Sagotras <sup>(2)</sup> which includes those of the Dravid country <sup>(3)</sup> it has been held that Datt Homa is not necessary to complete an adoption. This exemption has been held to extend to all Brahmins <sup>(4)</sup> while in the case of a Kshatriya in Madras <sup>(5)</sup> Datt Homa may be performed later on <sup>(6)</sup> and by a delegate <sup>(7)</sup> while it is wholly unnecessary in the Punjab <sup>(8)</sup> and amongst the Agarwal Banias of the United Provinces. <sup>(9)</sup>

38. (1) No adoption may be set aside for a mere irregularity or for non-observance of a form not essential to its validity.

Factum valet.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing rule, it may not be set aside on any of the following grounds, namely :—

- (a) That the adopted son was the eldest, the youngest or the only son of his father ;
- (b) that he was given in adoption after his investiture with the sacred thread ;
- (c) that the adoptee was older than the adopter ; <sup>(10)</sup>
- (d) that the adoption was made during pollution ; or
- (e) by an untoussured widow.

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Adoption of eldest or only son (724). | concubinage (730).                       |
| (2) Adoption of youngest son (725).       | (5) Adoption by untoussured widow (731). |
| (3) Factum valet (726-729).               | (6) Other disqualifications (732).       |
| (4) Adoption by widow pregnant in         | (7) Adoption through bribe (733).        |

724. Analogous Law.—As regards the adoption of an only son, the following texts discourage or forbid it.

Yashisth :—“ An only son should not be given nor accepted, for he is to continue the line of the ancestors ” (11)

Clause (2) (a) condones the adoption of (i) the eldest son, (ii) the youngest, and (iii) of an only son. As to the adoption of an eldest son Manu belauds him as one on whose birth the father discharges his debt to his progenitors. “The first born (if virtuous) exalts the family, or (if

(1) Thangathanni v. Ramu, 5 M 358.

(2) Atma Ram v. Madho Rao, 6 A 276 F. R. : Varuati v. Gobind, 24 B 218 (221) followed in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas, 89 B. 441 (465) P. C.

(3) Vedavalli v. Mangamma, 27 M. 538.

(4) Singamma v. Vinjamuri 4 M H C.R. 65.

(5) Chandra Mala v. Muktamala, 6 M 20.

(6) Subbarayar v. Subbammal, 21 M 497

(7) Lakshmi Bai v. Ramachandra, 22 B. 590.

(8) Dumanchand v. Dwaruknath, (1913) P. L. R. 271 20 I. C. 303

(9) Gangadot v. Gopaladas, 20 O. C. 356.

(10) Gopal v. Vishnu 23 B. 250 (257).

(11) 1 Str. 11, L. 85 ; 1 W. Mac. H. L. pp. 67, 77 : 2 W. Macn pp. 178 179 and note : Setaram v. Dhunook, 1 Hay, 268 ; Janoke v. Gopal 2 C 365 ; Kashi Bai v. Talia, 7 B. 221 ; Jannabai v. Raychand Ib. 225. The same text repeated in Baudhayan.

vicious) destroys it: the first born is in this world the most respectable; and the good never treat him with disdain" (1) From the position of pre-eminence he should not be given away in adoption. But there is no text in support of the rule except that of a modern work (2) which declares that "the first born should not be given." (3)

Referring to the text of Manu before cited, the Mitakshara says "An only son should not be given for Vashisth ordains, "Let no man give or accept an only son." (4) This statement is regarded by Nanda Pandit in his two works, as addressed to the parties rather than enacting a prohibition. (5) The author of Dattak Chandrika circumvents the text of Vashisth by interpreting it to refer to a Dwamushyayan adoption in which the adoptee being the son of both his natural and adopted father, the objection taken by Vashisth should disappear. (6) Jagannath regards the injunction to be remembered before making the gift, though it does not affect its validity. (7)

The courts appear to have vacillated between the two views, some declared it invalid (8) while others declared it to be improper though not illegal, (9) till the Privy Council finally settled the question by upholding its validity. (10)

725. Against the adoption of the youngest son there is no text at all, except the vedic legend already quoted (§ 692) of the adoption by Vishwamitra of Sunashepha who was the second of the three sons of his parents who could not give away the first son as he was dearest to the father, the youngest because he was dearest to the mother, which is regarded as a precedent in support of the view opposing the adoption of the youngest son.

In an old case (11) the Pandit consulted, gave his opinion against the validity of an adoption of the eldest son; but no case has found a similar champion for the youngest, while even as regards the former, later cases have settled the rule to be dissuasive and not peremptory.

726. Factum valet.—"Quod per non debuit factum valet" (12) is a well-known maxim of civil law applied to cure mere irregularities in form and defects

(1) IX-109.
(2) Dattak Didhiti, Sarkar's Adoption 2nd Ed. 238; Mayukh says that there is no precept prohibiting the adoption of an only son, (Mandlik) p. 51

(3) Dattak Didhiti cited in Sarkar on Adoption 2nd Ed. 238

(4) Mit Ch. 1 Sect 1 §§ 10-12.

(5) In his Vajiyanti and Datt. Mim IV-1-8, 18-20

(6) Datt. (h. 1-28; Sutherland adopts this view in his synopsis Head II.

(7) 2 Dig. 278

(8) Teja Singh v. Sachet Singh (1872) P. R. 78; Shumsher Mull v. Ram Dibruf, 2 Beng. S. R. 216 (valid only if Dwamushyayan); Nundram v. Kashee, 3 Beng. S. R. 310 (invalid); Debee v. Hursingh 4 Beng. S. R. 320 (mother gave without husband's authority); Upendur Lall v. Prasanna, 1 B. L. R. (Ac.) 221 S. C. Opendur v. Baom Moyee, 10 W. R. 847; Manick v. Bhugobutty, 8 C. 448; Bhaskar v. Mahadev, 6 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 1; Lakshmapa v.

Ramava, 12 B. H. C. R. 361; Rangu Bai v. Bhagirathu Bai, 2 B. 377; Somashekara v. Subhadramji, 6 B. 524; Kashi Bai v. Talia, 7 B. 221; Waman v. Krishnaji, 14 B. 249; Raiji v. Bai, 19 B. 658.

(9) Joymonoe v. Sibasoondery Fulton, 75; Takdey v. Hurreelal W. R. (Gap) 188; Veernpermau v. Narayan Pillay, Str. Notes of cases p. 91; Arunachallam v. Ayyaswami 1 M. S. L. 156; China v. Kumara, 1 M. H. C. R. 54; Hannuman v. Chirrai, 2 A. 164 F. B.; Beni v. Haridi 14 A. 67; Husbat Rao v. Govindrao, 2 B. R. 88; Vyankatrao v. Anandray, 4 B. H. C. R. (Ac.) 191; Mhalsabai v. Vilhoba, 7 B. H. C. R. (App) 26; Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 428; Harisingh v. Tulaba, (1874) P. R. 188; Divansingh v. Subbon, (1878) P. R. 238.

(10) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 395 P. C.

(11) Permaul v. Pottes, (1851) M.S.D. A. 281.

(12) "What should not be done, yet being done, shall be valid."

in procedure not affecting the essential principle. The Indian Legislature has inserted such saving clauses in several of its acts, as for instance in S. 87 of the Registration Act which provides that nothing done in good faith pursuant to the Act or any Act thereby repealed, by any registering officer shall be deemed invalid merely by reason of any defect in his appointment or procedure. (1) So Lord Mansfield said that there was a known distinction between circumstances which are of the essence of the thing required to be done by an Act of Parliament and clauses merely directory; (2) between a restriction and a moral precept only. (3)

The principle is frequently applied to cure formal defects in matters relating to marriage and adoption.

727. As regards adoption, it has been held that the maxim is applicable only "to cases in which there is neither want of authority to give or accept, nor imperative interdiction of adoption." "In cases in which the Shastra is merely directory, or only points out particular persons as more eligible for adoption than others", (4) or where it prescribes a form or procedure without prescribing any penalty for its non-observance, the maxim may be usefully and properly applied if the moral precept or recommendation is disregarded or the procedure is not strictly complied with. As Sir M. Westropp pointed out, in the maxim Quod fieri non debuit factum valet, on the one hand, "factum" must not be understood to mean a transaction which is a mere nullity; nor, on the other hand, should "debuit" be read as if it were "posuit". (5) So Mahmud, J., said: "Now, in the case of adoption, there are of course, formalities, ceremonies, preference in the matter of selection, and other points, which amount to moral and religious suggestions. Such matters, speaking generally, are dealt with in the texts in a directory manner, relating to what I may perhaps call the "Modus operandi" of adoption. To such matters, which do not affect the essence of the adoption, the doctrine of "factum valet" would undoubtedly apply upon general grounds of justice, equity and good conscience and irrespective of the authority of any text in the Hindu Law itself. There may, indeed, be cases where the express letter of the texts renders that which would, in other systems, be regarded as a matter of form, a matter of imperative mandate or prohibition affecting the very essence of the transaction. . . . There may, of course, be definite texts of the Hindu Law of adoption itself which, though, relating to matters of form, would be sufficiently imperative to vitiate an adoption in which they have been disregarded. But unless such texts are express and undoubted in their meaning, I would apply the doctrine of factum valet to adoptions which, having been made in substantial conformity to the law, have infringed only minor matters of form or selection." (6) So it was held that since the adoption of a daughter's son is incestuous amongst Brahmins, such adoption could not be legalized by the application of this maxim. (7) So when the Mitakshara widow adopted a son without the express authority of her husband, the court held it to be an adoption "wholly illegal and invalid, null and void" and such as could not be condoned by the application of

(1) R. v. Lowdale, 1 Burr. 447 adopted by Tyndal, C. J., in Southampton Dock Co., v. Richards, 1 Scott, 329

(2) Wright v. Horton 12 App. Cas. 371; Bosanguet v. Woodford, 5 Q. B. 310

(3) Mangala v. Dinanath, 4 B. L. R. (O. C.) (72) "

(4) Lakshmappa v. Ramava, 12 B. H. C. R. 864 (397, 398); Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B.

278 (293, 294).

(5) Lakshmappa v. Ramava, 12 B. H. C. R. 354; Gopal v. Hanmant, 3 B. 278 followed in Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu 22 M. 398 P. C. "Non debuit" should not be done; "non-posuit" not possible to be done

(6) Ganga Sahai v. Lekhras, 9 A. 253 (296, 297).

(7) Bhagirath Bai v. Hanumant, 3 B. 298.

the maxim. (1) On the other hand where an act is merely sinful but not illegal, it is a fit subject for application of the rule. As such, it was held to justify the adoption of an only son which is condemned, though not prohibited under sanction. (2)

728 Referring to this maxim, the Privy Council observed: "That unhappily expressed maxim clearly causes trouble in Indian courts. Sir M. Westropp is quite right in pointing out that if the factum, the external act, is void in law, there is no room for the application of the maxim. The truth is that the two halves of the maxim apply to two different departments of life. Many things which ought not to be done in point of morals or religion are valid in point of law. But it is nonsensical to apply the whole maxim to the same class of actions and to say that what ought not to be done in morals stands good in morals, or what ought not to be done in law stands good in law. Sir M. Westropp has, not without cause, reduced the ambiguous maxim to its proper meaning."<sup>(3)</sup> Their Lordships then upheld the adoption on the ground that there was no obligatory prohibition against it. The same high tribunal in another case refused to give effect to the injunction contained in the two treatises on adoption, that a person wishing to adopt should adopt in the first instance his brother's son if available, holding it as merely binding upon the conscience of the adopter and as not being so imperative as to have the force of law the violation of which would invalidate an adoption. (4)

729. The same principle would support the adoption of a married man of advanced age (5) or of one not otherwise a proper person for adoption (6) and would repel any objection on the ground that the adoptee was the eldest, the youngest, or the only son or that the adopter had previously agreed to adopt one boy and then capriciously adopted another, (7) or that the adoption was made in any of the circumstances mentioned in the section.

730. The question whether a widow pregnant in concubinage can make a valid adoption without expiation for her unchastity was answered in the negative by Norman, J., in a case in which however he completed that finding with a finding that there had been in fact no adoption at all. (8) The validity of such an adoption may be challenged by the reversioner as it vitally affects his interest. (9)

731. Among the Mahratta Brahmins a widow on attaining puberty cannot perform any religious act and therefore cannot adopt until she has undergone tonsure. (10) The validity of an adoption was challenged on this ground. The court found that some Shastris were consulted as to whether an untoussured widow could adopt and on making certain expiatory gifts, she was pronounced competent. The court held it to be sufficient to validate the adoption as "even if other Shastris were of a different opinion, it would be a delicate

(1) Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal, 1232 A S (385, 386) F B.

(2) Hannuman v Chirai, 2 A 164 F B.; Beni Prasad v. Herdai Bibi, 4 A. 67 F.B.O.A Sri Balusu v Sri Balusu, 22 M 398 (428) P. C.; S C 21 A 460 (487) P. C.

(3) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 22 M. 398 (428) P.C

(4) Wooma Dase v. Gokoolanand, 8 C. 587 (597, 598) P.C.

(5) Dharma v. Ramkrishna, 10 B. 80 (66)

(6) Nimbalkar v. Jayvantrav, 4 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 191 (195).

(7) Dharma v Ramkrishna, 10 B. 80 (86); Lakshmappa v. Ramava, 12 B. H. C. R. 364 (398).

(8) Sayamalala v. Saudamini, 5 B L. R. 362 (370) cited but neither followed nor discussed in Keri v. Moneeram, 13 B. L. R. 1 (14) F. B

(9) Kalava v. Padapa, 1 B. 248.

(10) West & B. H. L. p. 998.

task for the court to decide between conflicting opinions upon such a question of ecclesiastical etiquette." (1)

732. West and Buhler state that a woman who is afflicted with leprosy, (2) is unchaste and is pregnant in concubinage (3) cannot adopt, though she may do so after removal of the sin by penance. But a person himself incompetent to perform a religious act may do so through a delegated Brahmin priest. (4)

733. So again, while the giving of a bribe to the natural father to secure his son is now both illegal and opposed to public policy, (5) it does not vitiate an adoption already made though the payment itself is illegal. "To go further and lay down that the adopted son's status itself is affected thereby, would be to confound two transactions which, in the eye of the law, are independent of each other, since the transaction of the gift and acceptance which effects the change in the status of the son, is clearly separable from the agreement or payment which the law prohibits." (6)

But the result might be different if the adoptee complained of a status forced on him by his father being moved by mercenary motives.

39. An adoption is irrevocable but the rights thereby acquired may be limited or postponed to any reasonable extent.

Conditional adoption.

Illustrations

(a) A adopts B on condition that it shall be void on the birth of a son to A. The condition is invalid as an adoption when once completed cannot be revoked (7)

(b) A Hindu widow in possession of her limited estate adopts B on condition that A shall have full power of its disposal during her life time. The condition is invalid for it creates in A an unqualified power of disposal. (8)

(c) A adopts B on condition that A shall continue to manage her estate during her life time. The condition being reasonable is valid. (9)

(d) A directed in his will that his wife B should adopt a son who should take one third of his estate giving two-thirds to his wife and daughter. A adopted C. C is bound by A's direction. (10)

(e) A adopts B on condition that B shall not call for partition during A's life time. B is bound by the condition as it is reasonable (11)

Synopsis.

(1) Conditional adoptions (734).

(2) Anti-adoption agreements, how far valid (735-737).

734. Analogous Law.—An adoption may be void or invalid, in which case there is no legal adoption; but an adoption which is legal and complete cannot be revoked or cancelled at the instance of either a party or by consent of both,

(1) Ravi v. Lakshmi Bai, 11 B. 381 (395).

(2) West & B. H. L., p. 598.

(3) Citing Moniram v. Keri, 5 C. 776 P. C. But all this case lays down is that a widow inheriting her husband's estate cannot be divested of it by her subsequent unchastity.

(4) Indromoni v. Behari Lal, 5 C. 770 (774) P. C.

(5) A "son bought" is not recognized in the present age (or Kali Yuga) Pshan Kishore v. Hursh Chunder, 21 W. R. 381.

(6) Murugappa v. Nagappa, 29 M. 161 (164); Sitaram v. Harinar, 85 B. 169 (170, 180).

(7) Sant Snylt v. Mula, 17 I. C. 350 (P)

(8) Purshottam v. Rakhmabai, 16 Bom. L. R. 57.

(9) Visalakshi v. Sivaramien, 27 M. 577 F. B. contra Purshottam v. Rakhmabai, 16 Bom. L. R. 57.

(10) Bachoo v. Manohorebai, 31 B. 378 P. C. Tootsi Dass v. Madan, 28 C. 439; Surenara v. Kalachand, 12 C. W. N. 663; Lakshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 496; Narayanamsami v. Ramasami, 14 M. 172.

(11) Korab v. Fandani, 12 N. L. R. 29

since adoption, like marriage, creates a status which cannot be annulled save as provided by law. <sup>(1)</sup> As such it is not open to the natural parents of the adoptee or the adoptee himself to renounce the legal status conferred on him on adoption though he may give up his right of inheritance. <sup>(2)</sup>

And before his adoption it is open to his parent to enter into a binding agreement limiting or postponing his right thereto. If his right is so qualified by the terms of the authority of the husband which empowered his widow to receive him in adoption, then the authority being conditional, he is bound by its terms and he cannot be heard to question its legality or justice. <sup>(3)</sup>

735. He is also bound, though not to the same extent, by an agreement made with his natural father as a condition of his adoption that his adoptive mother should continue to retain her limited estate during her own life-time, or, in other words, relegating his right as son to that of a reversioner. <sup>(4)</sup> He acquires his status because his father submitted to the agreement. He cannot have the benefit of his status without submitting to its condition, provided it is reasonable and not such as might deprive him of his entire inheritance. As Farran, J., said: "By Hindu Law an infant will be bound by the act of his guardian when bona fide and for his interest, and where it is such as the infant might reasonably and prudently have done for himself if he had been of full age, but not where the act appears not to have been for his benefit, unless he has ratified it on reaching majority. I cannot but think that this principle ought to guide the courts in considering whether agreements like the one under consideration can be upheld or not. If the stipulations are unreasonable, such as giving to the widow an absolute power of disposition over the property, they should be rejected as ultra vires of the father; if reasonable, such as only to define and limit the son's enjoyment of the property, they should be upheld." <sup>(5)</sup>

736. As pointed out by a Madras Full Bench: "The validity of the adoption, if legally made, is quite independent of the validity of any agreement as to the property. If the agreement is such as to be inconsistent with the fundamental idea underlying adoption and the purpose for which it is sanctioned under Hindu Law, as for instance, if it deprived the adopted son of all right to the property of the adoptive father and so left him without any means of performing the necessary religious offices towards the manes of his adoptive father and his ancestors, it may well be that the courts will regard the condition as essentially repugnant to Hindu Law, and would refuse to uphold it. But it would seem that a fair and reasonable disposition of

(1) 2 Dig. 111; 2 Str. H. L. 108; Huebat Rao v. Govind Rao, 2 Borr. 75; Sukhibasi v. Gungan Singh, 2 A. 806; Sadashiv v. Hari, 11 B. H. C. R. 190; Chintu v. Dhondu, Ib. p. 192 note (a). Itavji v. Lakshminibai, 11 B. 381, (adopter estopped), Bhasbi v. Indra Kumar, 16 C. 556, 564; P. C. Bhupendra v. Amarendra, 43 C. 432; P. C. Dwarkan Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201, 206; P. C.

(2) Ituvee v. Itupshunkar, 2 Borr. 713, 729; Bathrishna v. Savitribai, 8 B. 64, 67; Mahadu v. Baijaji, 19 B. 289 (241, 245).

(3) Lakshmi v. Subramanya, 12 M. 490; Narayanasami v. Ramasami, 14 M. 172; Ganpati v. Savithri, 21 M. 10; Shalta v. Pallury, 31 M. 446 (450).

(4) Vinayak v. Govind Rao, 6 B. H. C. R. (A.O.) 224; Chitko v. Janaki, 11 B. H. C. R. 199; Radhika bai v. Ganesh, 3 B. 1 (8); Itavji v. Lakshminibai, 11 B. 381 (400, 401) explaining dictum of P. C. in Lamasawmi v. Venkataramanayyan, 2 d. 91; Vyasacharya v. Venkubai, 31 B. 251; Venkappa v. Fakurgowda, 8 Bom. L. R. 846; Per Beemar, J., in Persab v. Gurappa, 88 B. 227 (contra by the same learned Judge in Vyasacharya v. Venkubai, F. B. must be taken as corrected in supra); Radhabai v. Damodar, (1878) 15 F. J. 9 proceeded upon the construction of the deed which made the widow matrilineal; Visalakshi v. Sivaraman, 27 M. 577 (586) F. B. overruling Jagannadha v. Papanna, 16 M. 400.

(5) Itavji v. Lakshminibai, 11 B. 381 (408); Purshottam v. Rakhimbai, 16 Bom. L. R. 57 (60.)

the property is not essentially repugnant to Hindu Law, or the purpose for which adoption is allowed, and is nowhere forbidden by that law." (1)

737. So the adoptive father may validly stipulate with the father of the adoptee that the latter shall not call for partition during his own life-time. (2) So again he may before or at the time of adopting a son, give a portion of his ancestral property to his daughters which the adopted son cannot resume. (3) Of course, he who relies upon a condition as qualifying the legal right of the adopted son must prove it by as strong evidence as is necessary to establish a nuncupative will. (4)

40. A son may be given in adoption on condition that he shall be the son of both the natural and the adoptive fathers. Such a son is called the Dvamushyayan adoption.

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Texts on Dvamushyayan adoption (738-739). | (3) Conditions of Dvamushyayan adoption (741). |
| (2) Evolution of the law on the subject (740) | (4) Local varieties (742-744).                 |

738. Analogous Law.—The Mitakshara devotes one whole section to the rights of the Dvamushyayan son, or the son of two fathers. (5) But the son there intended is the Kshetraj or the son of the wife (6) who is so defined:—

"If the husband's brother, or other person duly authorized and being himself destitute of male issue, proceed to an intercourse with the wife of a childless man for the sake of raising issue both for himself and for the other the son, whom he so begets is the child of two fathers and denominated Dvamushyayan. He is heir to both, and offers funeral oblations to their manes" (7)

This is the prototype of the modern Dvamushyayan who owes his existence originally to the procreation by Niyog or appointment. As this practice became obsolete, the Dvamushyayan lost his original character, giving place to his modern analogue, which was originally sub-divided into a Nitya or permanent or absolute, and an Anitya i.e., a temporary son of two fathers.

739. The difference between the two is thus explained in the Dattak Mimamsa. "Sons of two fathers are of two descriptions—those absolute sons of two fathers, and those incompletely so. Of these those are named absolute Dvamushyayans who are given in adoption with this stipulation, this is son of us two (the natural father and the adopter). The incomplete Dvamushyayans are those, who are initiated by their natural father, in ceremonies ending with that of tonsure, and by the adoptive father, in those commencing with the investiture of the characteristic thread. Since they are initiated under the family names of both even, they are sons of two fathers; but incompletely so. Should a child directly on being born, be adopted, as his

(1) Visalakshi v. Sivaramien, 27 M. 577 R. 76.
(587) F. B.

(2) Korat v. Pancham, 12 N. L. R. 29 (84).

(3) Basava v. Lingangaula, 19 B. 428.

(4) Imrit Koonwar v. Reep Narain, 6 C L

(5) Yaj. 1.69. 70.

(6) Mit. Ch. I. S. X. To the same effect Manu IX 182.

(7) Mit Ch. 1 S X-§ 3 initiation under both family names would be wanting, he would partake only of the family of the adopter." (1)

740. The author of Dattak Chandrika recommends such an adoption to remove the objection to the adoption of an only son as entailing extinction of the lineage of the natural father (2) and this view received the sanction of the court in an old case; (3), but the validity of the adoption of an only son has been since otherwise settled, and the temporary son of two fathers has gone with the reason which restricted adoption within the narrow limits set out by the Dattak Mimamsa.

Even as regards the "perpetual Dvamushyayan" only the term remains, but its connotations have so materially changed that there is nothing but an identity of name to connect the new Dvamushyayan with his pristine prototype.

741. Conditions of a Dvamushyayan adoption.—The Dvamushyayan son or son of two fathers is a modern relic of the old but now obsolete institution of Niyog. As such, he has passed through four stages. In the first stage, he was the Kshetraj son of the wife who belonged both to the begetter as well as to his mother's legitimate husband, the rule being that if any one sows on my land, he shares the crop with me. In the second stage he was the son of Niyog or a relation or a priest appointed to procreate him on the wife. In the third stage he being the only son of his father, he was permitted to be shared by his brother who would have formerly been entitled to the Niyog company of his wife and who, therefore, was entitled to a share in his brother's son even though begotten by him without his assistance. (4) In the fourth and present stage he is merely the son of two fathers whether these be brothers or not and the only condition required for their joint paternity is that they should, before the adoption, have agreed to treat the son as the common son of both. Such an agreement may be express or implied, (5) but it cannot be presumed from the mere fact that the adopter was the full brother of the father (6) Not only the brothers but their widows may adopt a Dvamushyayan. (7)

742. Though the practice of filial partnerships is on the wane, the reported cases show that it is not yet dead, and amongst certain people as in the case of Nambudri Brahmins of Malabar it appears to be the usual form of adoption. (8) It is practised amongst Lingayats whether the brothers are joint or divided (9) and in the southern districts of the Bombay presidency (10) and is not unknown in Bengal, (11) the United (12) and the Central Provinces. (13)

(1) Datt, Mim. VI 41 (Suth) 85; Datt. Ch. 1.28 (Suth) 114

(2) Datt Ch.1 28 (Suth) 114.

(3) Shumshere Mall v. Duttaj, 2 Beng. S. R. 216; 6 I.D. (O.S.) 523.

(4) So Manu (IX-182) "if among several brothers of the whole blood one has son born, Manu pronounces them all fathers of male issue by means of that son." There is no such presumption now for the simple reason that there can be no partnership in a wife.

(5) Wooma Des v. Gokoolanund 8 C. 587 (598), P. C.; Behari Lal v. Shub Lal, 26 A. 472

(6) Laxmaputras v. Venkatesh, 41 B 315 (810, 941); Buchrao v. Bhimrao, 42 B. 277 (275) in which 41 B. 315 is followed and cited as an authority for an express agreement, but that case does not support the view that the agreement should be express.

(7) Krishna v. Parameshwari, 25 B. 587.

(8) Vasudevan v. Secretary of State, 11 M. 157 (167, 179).

(9) Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 455; Chenava v. Basangauda, 21 B. 105

(10) Steele, L. C. pp. 45, 47, 168, 884; Basava v. Lingangauda, 19 B. 428 (466, 467); Krishna v. Parameshwari, 25 B. 587 (548).

(11) Nil Madhub v. Bishumter, 18 M. I.A. 85 (100, 101)

(12) Behari Lal v. Shub Lal, 26 A. 472

(13) Laxmi Bai v. Shri Krishna, (1877) C.P.L.R.; Pt. 8, No. 50.

743. Though Dvamushyayan is ordinarily confined to the adoption of a brother's son still this is not necessary for any two persons may agree to hold a son in common (1) provided they follow the form and condition which are the same as in the Dattak adoption. (2)

744. A peculiar custom was proved to exist amongst the Pandus of Gaya whose son on adoption continues to retain his rights in his natural family. (3)

Rights of a Dvamushyayan.

41. A Dvamushyayan is entitled to inherit in both the families of his natural and adoptive fathers

745. Analogous Law.—(1) The Dvamushyayan's right of inheritance to his two fathers is thus set out in the Dattak Chandrika:—

“The son given, who is a Dvamushyayan, if both his adoptive and natural fathers have no other male issue, takes the whole estate of both : one adopted, where legitimate issue of the adopter existed, does not participate in the estate of the adopter ; but a legitimate son, being born, to the natural father subsequent to the adoption, the adopted son takes half of the share of a legitimate son. If however such issue be subsequently born to the adopter, the adopted son in question takes half of the share which is prescribed by law for an adopted son, exclusively related to his adoptive father, where legitimate issue may be subsequently born to that person.” (4)

If his two fathers both have legitimate sons he offers no oblation to either but takes “a quarter of the share allotted to a legitimate son of his adoptive father.” (5)

746. The Dvamushyayan son being the son of two fathers, it follows that he possesses all the rights and is equally subject to all the obligations of a son, in the two families. But as regards his status in his adoptive father's household, his position is different to that of a Dattak son, since his own sons revert to his natural family. (6)

His own mother remains his heir and may succeed to him in the absence of nearer heirs. (7)

42. (1) Customary adoptions.—A husband or wife may adopt a Kritrim son to himself or herself either jointly or separately in accordance with the following rules :—

(a) The adopter must have no son, grandson or great-grandson living at the time of adoption.

(1) Sutherland's Synopsis 5th Head. Datt. Mim VI 41 (before quoted) : 1 att Ch II 35

(2) Krishna v. Permeswari, 25 B 587.

(3) Lachman Lal v. Karhayatal, 22 C. 609 P. C

(4) Datt. Chand. V. 38.

(5) Mayukh, Ch 4 S V §§ 24-26 citing Vashisth quoted in Mit. II 1 55 (Mandlik) p. 60.

(6) Wooma Dace v. Gokochanand, 3 C. 587 (598) P C

(7) Behari Lal v. Shih Lal, 26 A. 472.

- (b) The adoptee may be an adult and married.
- (c) Both he and his parents must consent to his adoption.
- (d) A husband or wife may adopt jointly, or they may each adopt a separate son.
- (e) The son so adopted is the son of the adopter, even if she be a wife or widow.
- (f) A wife or widow may adopt a son in her own right, and without the assent of her husband or his kinsmen
- (g) Any relation, or a stranger may be so adopted.

(2) Such an adoption can only be made in the Mithila Province and the districts adjoining it; in the Punjab, and elsewhere if permitted by custom.

Illustration.

A is the father of B. B adopts A as his Kritrim son. The adoption is valid.

Incidents of a Kritrim adoption. 43. A Kritrim adoption is subject to the following incidents :—

- (1) The adoption is concluded by contract, no ceremony being necessary.
- (2) There is no restriction as to the qualifications of the adoptee except that he should of the same caste as the adopter.
- (3) For the purpose of marriage his Sapinda relationship in the family of his adopter extends only to three degrees. <sup>(1)</sup>
- (4) He does not assume the surname of his adoptive father.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) History of Kritrim adoption (747).   | (4) Who can adopt? (751)                 |
| (2) Ceremonies necessary for (749).      | (5) Relationship personal (752).         |
| (3) Incidents of Kritrim adoption (750). | (6) Adoption completed by contract (753) |
|   | (7) Qualifications of adoptee (754).     |

747. Analogous Law.—The Kritrim <sup>(2)</sup> son of old was a recognized subsidiary son like the "Swayumdatt" or "Self given" son from whom he was scarcely distinguishable except that the

Its history. Kritrim was an orphan and was hired by the wealth of his adopter to accept his proposal to become his son, while a Swayumdatt was

(1) Suth. Note, p. 162.

(2) Sk. Krit-made, a son made.

one, who, being abandoned by his parents, did the same. Both these sons have long since become obsolete, and the Kritrim son whose adoption is recognized in Tirhut is quite a modern institution engrafted on the old texts and said to flow from the absolute incompetency of a widow to adopt to her deceased husband. (1) "The practice (says Mr. Colebrooke) of adopting sons given by their parents was there abolished by Shridutt and Pratihast, although the latter had been himself adopted in that manner. Their motive was lest a child already recognized in one family, being again registered in another, a confusion of families should thence ensue." (2)

748. The Dattak adoption (3) having thus become obsolete, a substitute had to be found, and it is thus justified by Vachaspati Misra (4) an author of paramount authority in the Mithila country in his Dwanta Nirmay as follows:—

"Its purpose, for the man, that he may be excluded from the hell denominated 'put' : for the woman, that some one may exist, capable of performing her right of Sapindan, or association with departed ancestors. Should individuals, capable of promoting these objects exist, a son must not be adopted." (5).

The right of the widow to adopt a son of her own is justified on the ground that he is necessary for the performance of her Sapindi Karan or the rite of association with departed ancestors, the observance of which on the 11th day from her death exempts the other relatives, who are unable to celebrate such ceremony, from observing in her honour (as otherwise they would have to do) twelve monthly funeral repasts.

749. The ceremony of Kritrim (vulgarly) called Karta putra is thus described by Rudradhar in his Sudhivivek, a treatise on Kritrim adoption:—

"At an auspicious time, the adopter of a son, having bathed, addressing the person to be adopted, who has bathed, and to whom he has given some acceptable chattel says, "Be my son." "He replies I am become your son." This giving some chattel to him arises merely from custom. It is not necessary to the adoption. The assent of both parties is the only requisite, and a set form of speech is not essential." (6)

750. Incidents of Kritrim Adoption.—There can be no adoption in any but the Kritrim form in Mithila. The leading features of this adoption present such a striking contrast with the orthodox Dattak adoption in vogue in the rest of the country, that it is apt to be looked upon as no adoption at all, but a kind of affiliation which persists everywhere in spite of the law against it.

751. The first essential feature of a Kritrim adoption is that the Hindu widow may adopt a son to herself with or without the consent of her husband, but in either case, she can only adopt to herself and in no case does her adoptee succeed to any but her exclusive property. The consent of the husband does not make his wife's adoptee his own. Similarly, the husband may adopt a son to himself, and in that case he remains his own son, the relationship so created being in such case personal to the

(1) Datt. Mim. 1-16 (Suth) 4.

(2) Mr. Sutherland questions the correctness of Mr. Colebrooke's statement. See Note 15 to his Datt. Mim. (Suth) pp 160, 161

(3) Nund Ram v. Kashree Pande, 8 Beng. S. R. 310; 6 I. D. (O. S.) 906

(4) 2 W. Maon H. L. case 26 pp. 173, 174 in which the pandits hold the Kritrim adoption to be "in consonance to the doctrines of the learned Vachaspati Misra and others, whose works are current in Mithila."

(5) Suth. Note 5 to Datt. Mim. pp 156, 157.

(6) Sutherland's note 16 to Datt. Mim., p 161.

contracting parties: (1) the son so adopted will not be considered the grandson of his adopter's father nor will his own son be considered as the grandson of his adopter.

752. No relationship obtains between the Kritrim son and the father of Relationship per the adopter, from which it may be inferred that such sonal adopted son is not entitled to inherit to him and a fortiori to his adopter's collaterals. The adoptee is not considered a member of the adopter's family. He does not assume the surname of his adopter, or forfeit his claim to his own family. (-)

753. No ceremonies are necessary to complete this adoption which is completed on contract, the adopter agreeing to take the adoptee Adoption completed by contract. and the latter offering himself in adoption. (8) If he is a minor and cannot give himself away, then the consent of his parents is necessary. (4)

754. There is no restriction on account of age (5) or the previous marriage Age and relation (6) or relationship of the candidate for Kritrim adoption, the ship immaterial. only condition necessary being that the adopter and the adoptee must belong to the same caste; otherwise, his previous marriage or the fact that he is the only son or the sister's (7) or daughter's son of the adopter is no obstacle in the way of his eligibility. In fact, according to the Dvaita Parishusth of Keshab Misra a man is free to adopt his own brother and even his own father (8) and this is not merely a pandit's hyperbole, for, he says "when a father, a brother, or the like has been adopted as a son, the invocation to the adopter at a solemn obsequies is by his new relation of father, not by that of son or brother." (9)

44. A Kritrim son becomes entitled to the following rights in consequence of his adoption:—

- (1) He succeeds both to his father and the adopter.
- (2) He acquires no relationship with his adopter's father.
- (3) He does not succeed to his adopter's collaterals.
- (4) If adopted by a wife or widow, he succeeds to her exclusive property having no right in her husband's estate.

Synopsis.

- (1) Rights of inheritance (755). (3) Jain adoptions (757-759).
 (2) Kritrim adoption in the Punjab (756). (4) Burmese adoptions (760).

(1) Sreenarain v Lallut Narain, 2 Beng S. R. 29; 6 I. D. (O.S.) 380 (381); Collector of Tirhut v. Huopershad, 7 W. R. 500; Shiboo Koeree v. Jogun Singh, 8 W. R. 155.

(2) Ib., p. 158.

(3) 1 W. Maon. H. L., p. 83; Luchman v. Mohanlal, 16 W. R. 179 (180).

(4) 2 W. Maon. H. L. case 16, pp 173, 174.

(5) Ooman Dut v Kunhia, 3 Beng. S. R. 192; 6 I. D. (O.S.) 820; Shibkree v. Joogun, S. W. R. 155 (158).

(6) Ooman Dut v. Kunhia, 3 Beng. S. R. 192 (199); 6 I. D. (O.S.) 800 (825); 1 W. Maon. p. 64. The fact that a man may adopt his own father shows that age, relationship and marriage are equally immaterial.

(7) Purmessur v. Hunooman, 6 Beng. S. R. 235; 7 I. D. (O.S.) 848.

(8) 1 W. Maon. H. L., p. 64; Ooman Dut v Kunhia, 3 Beng S. R. 192 (199); 6 I. D. (O.S.) 820 (825). In Runjeet Singh v. Obhya Narain, 2 Beng. S. R. 815; 6 I. D. (O.S.) 597, the Pandit in the Mithila case erroneously relying on Baudhayan opined against the adoption of an elder brother. The case being an adoption recognized by law and not merely an affiliation extant in spite of the law, a Kritrim adoption once completed is as irrevocable as any other adoption.

(9) Cited in Ooman Dut v. Kunhia, 3 Beng. S. R. 192 (199), 6 I. D. (O. S.) 820 (825).

755. Analogous Law.—A Kritrim like a Dvamushyayan is really a son of two fathers. While he contracts himself to be the son of his adopter, he does not cease to belong to his natural family in which he continues to enjoy his ordinary rights. And being the son of two fathers, he inherits to both and is entitled to perform the obsequies of both his natural and adoptive parents.

756. The simplified Kritrim which merely created a personal relationship between the adopter and adoptee has become customary Kritrim in the Pon- both in the Punjab (1) and Burmah (2) where its incidents jab and Burmah. are mainly those of the Mithila Kritrim, viz., the adoptee becomes the son of the adopter but can claim no relationship beyond him and cannot succeed to any one save his own adopter. He has no right of collateral succession. Similar adoptions are practised by the Gayawal (3) and the Nambudri Brahmins (4)

757. Jain adoption.—Occasional references have already been made to the law of adoption by Jains. But this important community though nominally Hindus, are dissenters from Hinduism and their law of adoption has consequently none of the religious associations of the orthodox faith. In their case adoption signifies nothing more than the appointment of an heir. (5) No ceremony beyond that of a gift and acceptance is essential to their adoption. (6) The Jain widow is entitled to adopt without any authority, express or implied, of her husband. (7) And as regards the adopted son, she is free to adopt one who is married and has children of his own. (8) The Jains are subject to no prohibition as regards the adoptee, (9) being free to adopt a sister's son (10) or a husband's brother. (11) A Jain retains this custom of adoption even upon his conversion to Vaishnavism (12) and the same custom applies equally to Jains of all sects whether Agarwala, Churiwal, Khandwal or Oswal. (13) But in Bombay, the Hindu rule that the husband's power of adoption cannot be delegated to any one else except his widow, holds good. (14) And the rule that as between two or more co-widows the right to adopt belongs to the senior widow applies equally everywhere to them. (15)

758. Members of the Jain community are to be found scattered all over India. As such, they have naturally assimilated Jain ceremony. local customs as regards the ceremonies and rituals of

(1) Baijnath v. Shambhu, (1908) P. W. R. 58; Jwonnmal v. Jamina Das, (1913) P. W. R. 282; 10 I. C. 822.

(2) Mashwe v. Mashwe, (1910) 4 Bur. L. T. 158; 11 I. C. 776.

(3) Lachman v. Kanhaya, 22 C. 609 P. C.

(4) Subramanyan v. Paramaswaram, 11 M. 116 (124).

(5) Bhagwan Das v. Rajmul, 10 B. H. C. R. 241 (262); Asharfi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197 O. A. Rupchand v. Jambu Prasad, 32 A. 247 P. C.

(6) Rupchand v. Jambu Pershad, 32 A. 247 P. C.; Lakhmichand v. Gatto Bai, 8 A. 319.

(7) Bhadrabahu Samhita (J. L. Jain) p. 40, 41; Gobindan v. Camahchand, (1838), 8. D. A. B. 276; Sheo Singh v. Dakho 1. A. 688 P. C.; Manik Chand v. Jagat Sattani 17 C. 518.

(8) Pudmacoomari v. Court of Wards, 8 C.

302 P. C.; Asharfi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197 O. A. Rupchand v. Jambu Pershad, 32 A. 247 P. C.

(9) Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P. C.; Hasan Ali v. Nagamal, 1 A. 288; Lakhmichand v. Gatto Bai, 8 A. 319; Asharfi Kuar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 127; 6 A. Rupchand v. Jambu Pershad, 32 A. 247 P. C.

(10) Hasan Ali v. Nagamal, 1 A. 288.

(11) Nawickchand v. Munnadal, (1909) P. R. 95

(12) Manikchand v. Jagat Setani 17 C. 518

(13) Harnabh Pershad v. Mandil Das 27 C. 379; Manik Chand v. Jagat Sattani, 17 C 518; Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 1 A. 688 P. C.; Gopind Nath v. Gulal, 5 Beng. S. R. 276

(14) Bhagwan Das v. Rajmul, 10 B. H. C. R. 241; Amava v. Mohadgauda, 22 B. 416.

(15) Asharfi Kunwar v. Rupchand, 30 A. 247 O. A. Rupchand v. Jambu Pershad, 32 A. 147 P. C.

adoption. But as a rule the two ceremonies which this community everywhere regards as essential are, the giving and taking and tying of the father's turban on to the son to be. This is intended to symbolize the transfer of paternal authority from one head to another. The ceremony of giving and taking is, of course, indispensable in all adoptions and these ceremonies are concluded with distribution of cocoanuts and the other tokens of rejoicing.

759. The Jains acknowledge the authority of a Digest of their laws contained in a work known as the "Bhadrabahu Samhita" stated to have been compiled in the third century B. C., from which the following description of the ceremonies of adoption is extracted.

Bhadrabahu on adoption. 39. Not having a son of their bodies, the parents should take a son in adoption. For the adopted son like a son of the body serves the parents affectionately.

40. A sonless man or woman takes a son in adoption. First take a writing (deed) before witnesses, (sakshi) from the mother and father of the son to be taken in adoption.

41-42. Having the writing attested by one's relations, and the people of brotherhood; having had it sealed by the King's officers with the royal seal, they invite the men and women of their family and have music, dancing and singing along with auspicious introductory prayer.

43. In a Jain temple they perform the auspicious ceremony of Dvarodghatan (opening the door) and other good deeds, (charity, etc) and place a pitcher of ghee, Svastika and instal the (guru (preceptor) before the image of the god

44-45. Having given the upper garment (wrapping cloth) and lower garment (loin cloth) for use in worship in the temple and having rung the sacred bell, they return to their house and distribute betel leaves and cocoanuts to the assembled men. Women should be presented first with saffron (for decorating the head) and red paint (for decorating the feet) and a bodice should then be presented to them. Having feasted, all the ceremonies of birth should be performed.

46. The father of the boy should accept and keep the cap, <sup>(1)</sup> cocoanut and one, two, three or four coins presented to him by the members of the brotherhood and others

47. When giving and taking has taken place according to these rites and ceremonies, then the boy is said to be son of this man (the adoptive father).

48. And it is then alone that in works of state and trade the son gets recognition, and becomes entitled to land, villages, houses and other things.

49. And then he (the adopted son) obtains ownership and respect in the world, on this samsakara (the birth ceremony being performed) and the mother and father are considered to be sonful.

760. Burmese adoption.—The Burmese Buddhist Law recognizes the institution of adoption and presents some points in common and many points of contrast with the orthodox Dattak adoption, although the Keitima adoption is akin to the Kritrim adoption from which it has borrowed the name. The Burmese Law permits of the adoption of a child of either sex <sup>(2)</sup> and with absolute or only a qualified right of inheritance. <sup>(3)</sup> A Burman may make such adoptions even though he may have children of his own <sup>(4)</sup> and the presence of his previously adopted children does not prevent him from making fresh adoptions. <sup>(5)</sup>

No ceremonies are necessary to complete an adoption, but what is most insisted on is publicity. <sup>(6)</sup>

The Keitima adoption however requires the consent of the child's parents and the taking him with the intention and on the footing that he shall inherit <sup>(7)</sup>

(1) Muhut. Int. crown; here it means cap.

(2) Ma Me Gale v. Ma Sayi, 82 C. 219 P.C.

(3) Tet Tun v. Ma Chann, 5 L.B.R. 216; 8 I. C. 978.

(4) Ma Burk v. Ma Yin, (1872-92) L.B.R. 100.

(5) Ma Shwe Yin v. Ma Shwe Nym, 11 I.C.

776

(6) Ma Ywet v. Ma Me, 86 C. 978 P.C.; Ma Gyi v. Maung Tha, 14 Bur L. R. 15; Mein Gale v. Ma Kim, (1872-86) U.B.R. Vol. II. 81.

(7) Maung Thwe v. Maung Tun Pe, 45 C. 1 (P.C.).

while the apattiha is merely a compassionate adoption of a foundling or a destitute orphan who possesses only a partial right of inheritance. <sup>(1)</sup> But even an orphan may be made a Keitima son in which case his own consent is, of course, essential. <sup>(2)</sup>

An adopted son in Keitima form has the same right of inheritance as a natural son <sup>(3)</sup> but may be disinherited under the Buddhist Law if he becomes an enemy of his adopter <sup>(4)</sup> a salutary provision the force of which is recognized both in Madras <sup>(5)</sup> and Bombay, and elsewhere. <sup>(6)</sup>

Proof of adoption. 45. (1) He who relies upon an adoption must prove it.

(2) Where an adoption has the effect of disinheriting the natural heirs, it must be proved by such cogent evidence as is sufficient to prove its factum and validity and not merely its probability, due regard being had to all the circumstances including

- (a) its antecedent and attendant probability,
- (b) the existence of a writing,
- (c) the conduct of the parties before and since the alleged adoption, and
- (d) its publicity; and where the adopter is an illiterate widow,
- (e) the assent, intention and inclination of her husband,
- (f) the receipt by her of independent advice, and
- (g) the effect of the adoption upon her rights.

(3) Provided that where an adoption has been acted upon for a considerable time without dispute, the court may, upon proof of its factum presume its validity

Illustration.

A young illiterate pardanashin widow has for her adviser her husband's cousin B. She adopts his son C. C sues her for possession. The burden is on C to prove that A had not been unduly influenced by B to adopt him.

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Proof of adoption (761).                    | (5) Antecedent probabilities (765-767).              |
| (2) Strict proof essential (762).               | (6) Publicity (768).                                 |
| (3) No presumption in favour of adoption (763). | (7) Admissions and conduct of the parties (169-774). |
| (4) Evidence in writing, value of (764).        | (8) Independent advice where women adopts (775).     |

(1) Dhamma That Bk. 10 p. 305 :—Then sons and daughters of another person who shall be publicly taken and brought up in order or with the understanding that they should be made children to inherit, they are called 'keitima,' that is notoriously adopted children. Ma Me Gale v. Ma Say, 32 C 219 P. C.

(2) Tet Tin v. Ma Chai, 5 L. B. R. 216 ;

8 I. C. 978.

(3) Ma Tin Shive v. Maung Ka Gyi, (1897-1901) L.B.R. Vol. II-142

(4) Ma Ywet v. Ma Me, 36 C 978 P. C.

(5) Ma Mye Me v. Maung Ba Dun, 11, Bur. L. R. 240.

(6) Vedanayaya v Vedanmal, 27 M. 591 ; Vedanmal v. Vedanayaya, 31 M. 100.

(7) Gangu v. Chandrabhagabai, 32 B. 275.

- (9) Ancient adoptions, proof of, less difficult (777-778).
 (10) Estoppel by representation (778-780).
 (11) Estoppel by acquiescence (781-782).
 †(12) Limitation for challenging adop- tion (784-785).
 (13) Limitation for establishing adop-
tion (786).
 (14) Burden of proof (786).
 (15) Adoption by fraud force, etc. (789).
 (16) Working rules on the subject (790).
 (17) Pleading regarding adoption (791).

761. Analogous Law.—It has been seen that both marriage and legitimacy may be conclusively presumed ( §§ 527-544) from certain facts and that they need not then be proved. Law recognizes these relationships as natural and the institutions of marriage and sonship as common to all mankind. And consequently it presumes what it regards as being in consonance with approved usage. But adoption stands on a different footing. It is a mere local relic of an old obsolete institution deriving its nourishment and support from tradition and usage. When asserted it has therefore to be proved like any other fact. There is no presumption in its favour, <sup>(1)</sup> and on the other hand, in the case of a sonless man there is no presumption against it, though the degree of proof required to disinherit the natural heirs is naturally very high. <sup>(2)</sup>

762. As adoption implies the introduction of a stranger into the family and requires no writing or registration to complete it, but the courts enjoin a very high degree of proof akin to that necessary to establish a nuncupative will. <sup>(3)</sup> So Lord Wynford delivering the judgment of the Privy Council regretted that an adoption could be proved by parol testimony of witnesses <sup>(4)</sup> and added: "But although neither written acknowledgments, nor the performance of any religious ceremonies are essential to the validity of adoption, such acknowledgments are usually given, such ceremonies observed and notices given of the time when adoptions are to take place, in all families of distinction, such as those of Zamindars and opulent Brahmins. Wherever those have been omitted. it behoves this court to regard with extreme suspicion the proof offered in support of an adoption. I would say that in no case, the rights of wives and daughters should be transferred to strangers or to more remote relations unless the fact of adoption, by which this transfer is effected be proved, by evidence free from all suspicion of fraud, and so consistent and probable as to give no occasion for doubt of its truth." <sup>(5)</sup>

763. It is sometimes said that a childless Hindu anxious to be delivered from the torments of hell is naturally anxious to adopt a son to free him therefrom <sup>(6)</sup>, and that therefore, there is a prima facie presumption in favour of an adoption. But these remarks occur with reference to a second adoption,

(1) Kishorilal v. Channilal, 31 A. 116 (195) P. C.; Lal Kunwar v. Churanilal, 82 A. 104 (115) P. C.; Raja Gopala v. Nattu, 84 M. 929 (882); Venkata v. Papayya, (1918) M. W. N. 828; 22 I. C. 787.

(2) Sutroogun v. Sabitra, 5 W. R. 109 P. C. cited and followed in Divakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (210) P. C.

(3) Imrit Koonwar v. Roop Narain,

6 C. L. R. 76.

(4) Sutroogun v. Sabitra, 5 W. R. 109 P. C.

(5) Sutroogun v. Sabitra, 5 W. R. 109 P. C. cited and followed in Divakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (210) P. C.

(6) Huradhan v. Muthoromath, 4 M. I. A. 414 (425, 426). To the same effect Soondur Koomaree v. Gudadhur, 7 M. I. A. 54 (54).

their Lordships holding that if a man felt a necessity for one adoption, there was a probability that on the death of the first adopted son, he would make another adoption, but this is very far from supporting a general presumption. As their Lordships observed in a later case : " Much has been said of the old presumption which arises from the religious duty which is upon every childless Hindu to adopt a son. Their Lordships do not deny the force of that presumption, but they cannot shut their eyes to the fact that childless Hindus die daily without having fulfilled this obligation, or made provision for its fulfilment after their death." (1) In a still later case their Lordships referred to the dictum of Mitter, J., (2) who had ascribed the institution of adoption to a religious instinct, holding that the subject of adoption was clearly inseparable from the Hindu religion itself, and that as stated by Manu that religion enjoined that a man destitute of a son must anxiously adopt one for the sake of the funeral-cake, water and solemn rites. Referring to this dictum, their Lordships observed : " There is no doubt that this judgment has exercised very great influence on the controversy ; and indeed, if the learned Judge's fundamental position were sound there could be no controversy at all. Let us assume for this purpose, though it is a matter of grave dispute, (3) that the learned Judge is right in saying that adoption originated in motives of religion and not in the ordinary human desire for perpetuation of family properties and name, still the question is whether certain precepts have a legal or only a religious bearing." (4) Whether adoption is traceable to religious awe, or to a secular longing, the fact remains that every sonless man does not adopt and if he has that desire he fulfils it in his own life-time, for even assuming that the primary purpose of an adoption is to provide for the due performance of one's obsequial rites, that purpose cannot be fully achieved by delegating that duty to the wife since the most important of obsequial rites commence with one's death and last for 10 days thereafter. Moreover in the written authorities that have come under the notice of courts, the reason usually assigned for an adoption is the perpetuation of the lineage and name and not the propitiation of the forces of darkness in the next regions. The fact that adoptions are still common and customary shows that adoptions are prized and made ; the fact that they are not made by all or most sonless men shows that they are not so common as to raise any presumption in their favour. Much must, moreover, depend upon the education and views of the person concerned. The advancement of Western learning has rudely shaken many an old time belief and even those who nominally remain within the fold of Hinduism must not be too readily assumed to subscribe to its expiring dogmas or be impressed by the hopes and fears addressed to a primitive people.

764. The first thing the court will require where an adoption in a family of any importance is alleged, is the evidence in writing of the adoption deed, or at least of the accounts relating to the transaction, of the statements contemporaneously or almost contemporaneously made to the authorities for mutation of names, the invitations issued to kinsmen and castemen, their replies thereto, and the numerous other occasions which such an

Evidence of writing.

(1) Nilmadhav v. Bishumber, 18 M. I. A. 85 (100).

(2) Upendra Lal v. Prasannanaygi, 1 B. L. R. (A. C.) 2-1

(3) See General Introduction § 14 where the history of adoption is traced. This religious element was of course, only a later graft on the old secular institution common to most of the ancient Indo-Aryan races.

(4) Sri Balusu v. Sri Balusu, 21 A. 460 (477) P. C. S. C. 22 M. 898 (414) P. C.

event presents for the coming into existence of writings which are the best evidence of the transaction.

765. But though a writing furnishes valuable evidence, its value would be greatly enhanced by the presence of antecedent probabilities. The facts that the alleged adopter was sixty-seven years old, and that he had two wives to whom he had long been married, by neither of them he had ever issue, and both of them were past a child-bearing age, all add to the probability of an adoption (1) as the fact that he was young and had recently married tells against it. (2) But it often happens that when a person is moribund, scheming counselors hurry to his bedside, prepare deeds and go through a mock-adoption when his mind is inert, if not unconscious and when he has not the bodily strength to resist such officious importunities. Such was the adoption made to "a dying man, almost continually insensible, though occasionally roused to consciousness by loud tones, or by pungent applications to his nostrils, but almost immediately afterwards relapsing into a state of insensibility, and when momentarily conscious, with his mind quite inert and instantly fatigued on the slightest exertion." (3)

766. How is it possible (their Lordships continued) "that a person in such a condition could be capable of any act requiring judgment and reflection, especially one to which no antecedent circumstances appear to have led and for which the enfeebled and scarcely conscious mind was unprepared. In such a state as that described, even if the mind were passively awake to the suggestions made to it, it would naturally cling to repose, and yield for the sake of it, to any external suggestion. Viewing the adoption and the will together, they present every appearance of a concerted family arrangement. As an adopted child passes into a new family his natural relations become, as it were, strangers, and the association of the boy's natural uncle with the father of the adopting mother, must be regarded as a contemporaneous and concurrent act with the adoption. If the law were to countenance acts of this description, performed at such a time and under such circumstances without the clearest and most cogent evidence to establish their validity, relations and managers would be encouraged to advance their own private notions of what might be advisable to be done for the good of the family, and ascribe acts to a dying man in which he would have been merely passive instrument to prolong their own gain and authority." (4)

767. These words spoken with reference to a dying man, apply equally to young pardanashin women (5) who being illiterate are too often surrounded by such selfish advisers, and who as too often fall a victim to their interested counsels. In their case, no less than in the case of a dying adopter it devolves on the court to scrutinize all such evidence with jealous care and if it finds that the adopter was swayed by advice more than by his convictions it should not be slow to set aside an adoption which appears to it improvident and involuntary (6)

(1) Huradhun v. Muthoranath, 4 M. I. A. 414 (125)

(2) Saradasomulery v. Tincovry, 1 Hyde, 238 (250); Sootrugun v. Sakitra, 5 W. R. 109 P. C.; Dinakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (265) P. C.

(3) Tayammal v. Sashachalla, 10 M. I. A. 429 (434).

(4) Ib., pp. 434, 435

(5) Kishorilal v. Chunilal, 31 A. 116 (121, 122) P. C.

(6) Buyabai v. Bala, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1 followed in Somasekharaja v. Subhadramaji, 6 B. 524; Ranganayakamma v. Alwar, 13 M. 214 (221); Kishorilal v. Chunilal, 31 A. 116 (P. C.)

though the case might be different if the adoption were admitted, or afterwards acted upon. (1)

768. Publicity or notoriety is another element for consideration. Where for instance, a person was adopted and the fact noted by the Panchayat who prepared a pedigree in which the adopted son was mentioned, the court held it to amount to sufficient proof of adoption. (2) In one of these cases the question was whether one Sujan had been duly adopted by Fateh. In connection with another dispute in the family, Panchayat was appointed who drew up a report in 1819 which was filed in the collectorate. It contained a reference to Sujan's adoption but the words were smudged over with ink which the court suspected had been done fraudulently to destroy the force of the finding. The Privy Council considered this a sufficient evidence to establish Sujan's adoption as proved by the family pedigree prepared so far back as 1819. (3) In another case instituted in 1891 the same high tribunal had to find on the question of one Azmat Singh's adoption alleged to have taken place about 1681, and the evidence adduced was a copy of a village Wajibularz to which was attached a pedigree in which Azmat was described as an adopted son, added to which, the same fact was mentioned in the Oudh Gazetteer. There was no other evidence. Their Lordships observed: "At this distance of time it is, of course, impossible to prove that all the requisite ceremonies were duly and regularly performed. On the one hand, it is not disputed that Azmat and his descendants, successors in the Raj remained Bisains, though the adoption, if it took place, was an adoption into the Bandhalgoti clan, a clan much inferior in social position to the Bisains. It appears that on the death of a member of the Manakpur family, the ceremonies usual on the death of a member are observed amongst the Bisains of Birwa Mehnor, a circumstance unusual in the case of an adoption out of the family, though it is said, not unprecedented. On the other hand, there is a body of tradition strong and persistent in favour of the adoption, and there is a story still current which may possibly serve to throw some light on the transaction." (4) Their Lordships then detailed the story of a prophecy made that Azmat would become a Raja and within 8 days the prophecy was fulfilled by his adoption as heir to the Manakpur Raj. (5)

Publicity

The fact that upon an adoption, the adoptee's name was mutated in the Collector's books is of importance, but the fact that his name was mentioned in the income-tax receipts, a power of attorney, bonds or other private instruments is of little value as these documents do not afford sufficient publicity of the fact, being only available to those who are directly interested in them. (6)

769. The evidence furnished by conduct is often an invaluable guide in arriving at the truth. The facts the court has to examine

Admissions and conduct.

in this connection are how far they are consistent or inconsistent with the adoption alleged. If they are continuously consistent only with adoption and inconsistent with non-adoption then they add to its probability which would be material in

(1) Chandra Kunwar v Narpat Singh, 29 A 184 (195) P C. following Slatterie v Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664 (669); Heane v Rogers, 9 B.&C 577 (586); Newton v Luddiard, 12 Q. B 926; In re Simpson, 2 Ch D 72 (89); Trinidad Asphalt Co. v. Coryat, (1896) A. C. 687.
(2) Ajab Singh v. Nanabhan, 8 C.W.N. 180 P. C.

(3) Achal Ram v Hazim Husain, 27 A. 271 P C.

(4) Achal Ram v. Hazim Husain, 27 A. 271 (290, 291) P C.

(5) Ib., p 291.

(6) Pudum Singh v Coday Singh, 12 M.I.A. 350 (357-359).

deciding an issue in the conflict of evidence. If, on the other hand, they are only at times consistent with the factum of adoption being on other occasions equally opposed to it, then the court would not be right in laying undue stress upon any one set without considering the counteracting effect of the other. (1) Such facts as the change of name usually made by the adoptee, (2) the mutation of names in the Collector's books in respect of property which the adoptive mother resigns in favour of her adopted son (3) are not the least important. If the adoptions are not followed up by the mutation of names, the mere fact that the adoptee was occasionally described as the son of his adoptive father in a private document such as a power of attorney or in the income-tax receipts or other private instruments is of little value. (4) The acts and declarations of the widow who is alleged to have made the adoption are important. (5) So is also the conduct of the adopted son in suffering his adoptive mother to retain possession of the property after he came of age (6) or permitting her name to remain on the revenue records conjointly with his own. (7)

The court held an adoption proved where, soon after the alleged adoption, the adoptive father's name was entered in the school register under the heading "parent or guardian" against the boy's name and in a partition suit between his natural father and brothers, his rights were ignored and his name was mentioned in the genealogical tree with a bare mention of the adoption. (8) So where the adoptee renounced his rights in his natural family and commenced participating in the rents and profits of the Valan lands of his adoptive family the court held the adoption proved. (9)

770. The adopter's conduct towards the adoptee is very relevant in this connection. If the adoption was through "affection" as Manu enjoins, how was the adoptee treated by the adopter, before and since adoption. His relationship to the adopter, the natural affections felt towards him, are all facts which cannot be ignored. Indeed, where a person has for many years lived with his adopter and has been treated by her as her son, the court will not permit her afterwards to turn round and deny the adoption. (10) But the conduct must be unequivocal and only consistent with adoption. It must be naturally prolonged and continuous to give rise to such inference. Moreover in the case of illiterate pardanashin women, such circumstances might be easily faked as they were in a case which puzzled the Privy Council, but who eventually threw out the suit holding that the plaintiff had not been adopted by the defendant. The facts of this case are instructive. One Dwarkadas died in 1854 leaving his two widows Mts. Jasoda and Lacho surviving him. Jasoda died in 1863. Lacho was married in 1852. During the life-time of Dwarkadas and on his death his estate was managed by his first cousin Maya Ram who sometimes lived and dined with him. He had three sons—the youngest of whom by name Chunnilal was said to have been adopted by Lacho to her husband in 1877. Chunnilal lived with Lacho and managed her business for 8 years from 1891 to 1899 during which period he described himself as the son of Lacho in several documents purporting to have been executed by Lacho who bore the expenses of his investiture and marriage and

(1) Nalmadhab, v. Bishumber, 18 M. I. A. 85 (97, 98).

(2) Diwaker v. Chandan, 41 C. 201 P. C.

(3) Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh, 12 M.L. A. 350 (357, 358).

(4) Ib., pp. 358, 359.

(5) Ib., p. 361.

(6) Ib., p. 364.

(7) Ib. p. 360.

(8) Soankoro v. Soankoro, 6 M.L.T. 267

(9) Ram Krishna v. Hari (1888) B.P.J. 88.

(10) Ganga Prasad v. Budh Sen, 11 I. C. (A) 27.

executed a general power in 1891 appointing him her manager. A large number of witnesses swore to the factum of his adoption. The High Court held the evidence and the cumulative circumstances too overwhelming to resist the conclusion in favour of his adoption. The Privy Council reversed them on the ground that the plaintiff who knew best about his adoption had not pledged his oath in favour of his adoption, though the ceremony was stated to be a pompous function and no account books traced to plaintiff's possession had been produced. As for the numerous witnesses, their statements were so similarly worded as to suggest that they either possessed supernatural memory or had memorized their evidence. If the plaintiff had been adopted in 1877 then on coming to age in 1883 he did not take possession of the estate and in no way asserted his title thereto. The documents imputed to Lacho were really prepared by her managers who were the plaintiff's father and brother and it was suspicious that while they all mentioned the adoption, they omitted to mention its date. In any case Mt. Lacho could not be held bound by such collateral recitals even though they were registered and acted upon. <sup>(1)</sup>

771. In another case their Lordships had to find on the question of a husband's alleged adoption in a suit of the alleged adoptee against his widow. The adoption was said to have taken place in April 1889 some 10 months before the husband's death. The plaintiff was aged 5 at the time of adoption and 20 when he instituted the suit. Their Lordships again animadverted upon the plaintiff's absence from the witness-box and the absence of any writing. Several applications were filed purporting to be on behalf of the plaintiff through his guardian and mother, the defendant, which their Lordships rejected as made under the supervision of his own father on purpose to support the adoption. In the result they reversed the High Court and held that the plaintiff had not made out his case of adoption holding that his absence from the witness-box had covered his case with suspicion which was strengthened by the non-production of any account books showing the expenses of the alleged adoption. <sup>(2)</sup>

772. In another case of adoption to a wealthy Zemindar, the same Board even more emphatically commented on the absence of any writing which they regarded as a matter of great suspicion added to which they commented on the fact that the ceremonies were of the briefest character, that the child's name was not changed and that he was never taken to live with his adoptive father or recognized by him in any way. They rejected the evidence of the natural father despite his high position on the ground of its improbability and concurred with the court below in holding the alleged adoption not proved. <sup>(3)</sup> Another case decided by the same high tribunal supports the same view, namely, that the court should be guided not so much by the spoken word as by the inherent probabilities and when these are evenly balanced, the safest course is to rely upon an undoubted admission.

773. Such admission may be contained in a registered adoption deed, or be the sworn statement in a mutation proceeding, but whatever its form, it is sufficient to shift the burden of proof. So their Lordships held citing Baron Parke <sup>(4)</sup> "what a party himself admits to be true may be presumed to be so." In this case Makund Singh was alleged to have adopted Kishan Singh.

Admission shifts burden.

(1) Kishorilal v. Channilal 81 A 116 J. C.
(2) Lal Kumar v. Chironji Lal 82 A. 104
(115) P. C. followed in Dwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C. 201 (208) P. C.
(8) Dwakar Rao v. Chandan Lal, 44 C.

201 P. C.
(4) Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M & W. 664 (669) followed in Chandra Kumar v. Nupat Singh,
29 A 184 (194, 195) P. C.

Deeds were filed in which Makund Singh and his father had admitted the fact, as to which the Privy Council said that while a party remains free to explain his own admission, if they remained unexplained, the court could not but use them as proving the fact against the party.

774. Proof of adoption by a widow.—Where the adoption is alleged to have been made by a wife or widow, the proof of adoption must not only comprise proof of its factum but also of its validity. (1) In that case it is not only the authority, whenever necessary, but its exact terms must be strictly proved, since the validity of an adoption made in pursuance of an authority from the husband depends upon its terms which must be strictly followed. (2) Even where the widow is possessed of such authority it may still be a question how far she was inclined to carry it. If she has, for instance, waited for a considerable period without adoption, the court will require some explanation of the delay or doubt the authority. Even where, as in the case of a departed husband in Bombay, the widow has the power to adopt without her husband's authority, evidence of his intention and inclination should afford strong proof of the probability of an adoption, while on the other hand, his disinclination or refusal to adopt should equally tend the other way. So it has been held that where there is a permission to adopt the court will exact slight proof of the performance of ceremonies. (3)

775. The court looks askance at the adoption by young widows of their manager's relative or even strangers at their suggestion. As Westropp, J., observed: (4) "The appellant (was) a Hindu female, whom the law only barely recognized as sur juris—so careful does it require that the court should be in ascertaining that she has full knowledge of the nature and consequences of any acts affecting her legal rights, which she has been induced to perform—but she was only seventeen years of age at the time of the alleged adoption, and she could have had little more experience or knowledge of the word than a mere child. Looking at the effect of adoption upon the rights of a Hindu woman who succeeds to the property of her husband, we should expect clear evidence that she was fully informed of those rights, and of the effect of the act of adoption upon them—an act which reduces her from the position of complete and absolute mistress of her husband's moveable property and tenant for life at least, of his immoveable property, to a mere right of maintenance."

776. The fact that the adopter was an illiterate pardanashin adds to the burden of those upon whom lies the duty of supporting her adoption. (5) It is sometimes said that an adoption once completed must not be viewed with undue severity. But the question of severity does not arise till the adoption is proved and is a part of the res gestae of the widow in which the court seeks for the exercise of that discretion and reflection, without which the form and ceremony are but a tinkling cymbal. (6)

It must also be remembered that an adoption is enjoined by law to be made for the benefit of the husband by redeeming his soul and preserving his

(1) Pudum Singh v. Oodley Singh, 12 M. I. A. 350 (356, 357).

(2) Ib., p. 356.

(3) Nadhamadhab v. Radhaballab, 1 Hay 311, Mohendro v. Doohany, 1 Croyton, 42 (45, 46).

(4) Bayabai v. Balu, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1

(20).

(5) Bayabai v. Balu, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 1 (20, 21); Sowdur v. Kishoree Lal, 5 W. R. 246.

(6) Kishenilal v. Chammilal, 31 A. 116 (121, 122) P. C.

estate. It is not intended for the benefit of the adoptee. If, therefore, the former purpose had become too remote and no extraneous assistance could achieve the latter purpose, it devolves on the court to enquire why an adoption long delayed had become suddenly so urgent.

777. Ancient adoptions.—The rule stated in the proviso is supported by ample authority <sup>(1)</sup> and is based on the impossibility of proving it by any living witness. The same principle runs through S. 90 of the Evidence Act which in the cases therein mentioned dispenses with their formal proof. Any other rule would penalize an adoption, however old, and howmuchsoever it may have been acquiesced in, or acted upon by those very persons, who might have been most interested in challenging it. But since there is a danger of inventing an adoption and placing it past challenge by investing it with imaginary antiquity, law requires that the adoption should have been acted upon without dispute by those who would be most interested in challenging its authenticity. It would then presume that they had either admitted or acquiesced in it.

From these facts the courts may hold its factum proved, and it may then presume its validity. In other words, the question whether an adoption did or did not take place is a pure question of fact which may be proved by evidence either direct or circumstantial. Where the direct evidence is unobtainable the court may hold it proved upon a consideration of circumstantial evidence. Such evidence may consist of the admissions and conduct of the parties, some old pedigree <sup>(2)</sup> or even only a strong and persistent tradition. <sup>(3)</sup> The factum being thus proved, the court will presume its validity holding that if the adoption was in fact made, it must have been attended by the performance of all the requisite ceremonies. <sup>(4)</sup>

778. Adoption by estoppel.—A party relying upon an adoption may hold his adversary estopped from denying it. This plea is, however, only available to a party, if it is shown that by reason of the adoption the position of the adopted son has been affected owing to some act or omission on the part of his alleged adopter. If the latter is a man, the adoptee stands on firm ground, but if she be a woman or a minor, then the court is slow to apply it when it finds her conduct involuntary, or swayed by other influences.

779. But where a Mitakshara widow, one Dharam Kunwar, took a boy in Estoppel by representation. adoption declaring that she had her husband's authority to adopt, and about 18 months afterwards her reversioner sued for a declaration of the invalidity of the adoption, the court held that inasmuch as the boy was given in adoption on Dharam Kunwar's declaration of her husband's authority and married on that footing, she was estopped from disputing the adoption, but the estoppel was held personal to her and did not bind the reversioners. <sup>(5)</sup> In another case a young widow aged 19 had adopted the plaintiff alleging husband's authority and had his Upanayan performed.

(1) Anand Rao v. Ganesh, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 33 (85); Kishen Moneo v. Kasee Somduree, W. R. (F. B.) 106; Rajendra Nath v. Jogendranath, 14 M. I. A. 67 (76, 77); Jagadamba v. Dakshina, 18 C. 308 (321) P. C. Rupnarain v. Gopal, 36 C. 7207 (95) P. C.; Retki v. Lakpati, 20 C. W. N. 19; Mullangi v. Venkatasubbanmah, 25 M. L. J. 373; 19 I. C. 740.

(2) Ajab Singh v. Nasubhan, 25 B. 1 P. C.

(3) Rajendra Nath v. Jogendra Nath, 14 M. I. A. 67

(4) Har Sanhar v. Lal Baghurat Singh, 29 A. 513 P. C.; Anandray v. Ganesh, 7 B. H. C. R. (App.) 33

(5) Dharam Kumar v. Balwant Singh, 30 A. 549; Kannammal v. Virasani, 15 M. 456; Parratibayamma v. Ramakrishna, 18 M. 145.

She professed to manage the property for him for 18 months after which she repudiated his adoption, and the court held that since the adoption was in fact, invalid, its invalidity could not be cured by any misrepresentation of the widow and that even she was not estopped from impeaching it on that ground. <sup>(1)</sup> But this case was distinguished in a later case on the ground that there the repudiation followed the adoption. If, however, it had been acquiesced in for say 20 or 25 years, then the case would have been quite different. <sup>(2)</sup> It would thus appear that the court allows an adopter a certain degree of locus penitentie.

780. Time has a curative effect upon all adoptions, a principle recognized in the law of limitation (§ 484) which permits "only a moderate time within which such delicate and intricate questions as those involved in adoptions shall be brought into dispute." <sup>(3)</sup> It is sometimes said that no lapse of time can make an invalid adoption valid. This is true. But after a lapse of time the door of inquiry is closed. And where there has been acquiescence, the court presumes that the adoption must be invalid, otherwise the party interested in challenging it would not have suffered it to stand so long. Of course, no estoppel can prevent an enquiry into the truth where an adoption is tainted by fraud, misrepresentation, corruption or collusion.

781. But excepting such cases and taking only a normal case, the law is clear and it was so stated by the Privy Council, that Estoppel by acquiescence. although the adopted son is bound to prove his title as a fact, if challenged, still where it had been acquiesced in for a long period, say 27 years every allowance for the absence of evidence to prove such fact was to be favourably entertained, and that the case was analogous to that in which the legitimacy of a person in possession had been acquiesced in for a considerable time and afterwards impeached by a party, who had a right to question the legitimacy, where the defendant in order to defend his status is allowed to invoke against the claimant every presumption which arises from long recognition of his legitimacy by members of his family; and that the case of a Hindu, long recognized as an adopted son, raised even a stronger presumption in favour of the validity of his adoption, arising from the possibility of the loss of his rights in his own family by being adopted into another family. <sup>(4)</sup> So as regards the adoption of the plaintiff which took place twenty years back, the defendant's father was shown to have been present at the ceremony and afterwards joined with the plaintiff qua adopted son in recovering the land from the Patel, obtaining a decree in execution of which the plaintiff was on the security of the defendant's father put in possession, the court held the defendant estopped from disputing the adoption by his father's conduct and acquiescence in the plaintiff's title. <sup>(5)</sup>

782. So as regards the adopter, where it is admitted or proved that the plaintiff was adopted by the defendant who pleaded her own incapacity as an untowered widow to invalidate the plaintiff's adoption, the court held her estopped from denying the validity of her own act after having adopted and acknowledged the plaintiff as her own son and when the latter might have lost

(1) Parvatibayamma v. Rama Krishna, 18 M. 145.

(2) Santappayya v. Rangappayya, 18 M. 397 (399).

(3) Jagadamba v. Dahlma, 18 C. 308 (321) P. C. followed in Mohesh Narani v. Taruck Nath, 20 C. 487 (495) P. C.; Ravji v.

Lakshmi Bai, 11 B. 381 (396); Kanmammal v. Virozami, 15 M. 486; Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna, 18 M. 145 (152).

(4) Rajendro Nath v. Jogendro Nath, 14 M. 1. A. (67 (76, 77)).

(5) Chintu v. Dhondu, 11 B. H. C. R. 192 notes; Sadashiv v. Hari, Ib., 190.

all right in his natural family: "It may be, that an adoption is not effectual to confer all spiritual benefit upon the manes of the deceased husband, and yet it is effectual to give the boy the civil status of son to the adopting widow, a status which like the status of the impotent party to a marriage, voidable on that ground, the widow is by her act estopped from denying."<sup>(1)</sup> The same view was taken in another case in which the plaintiff's adoption had been acknowledged and acted upon by his adoptive mother for twenty years, which was held to create an estoppel against her who could not challenge it on the ground of its invalidity.<sup>(2)</sup> Where the adoptee has his Upanayan performed or was married in his adopter's family, it involves a definite change of status in law upon which the adopter may be estopped.<sup>(3)</sup> So where third parties advance money upon the faith of his adoption. But it is not necessary to formulate a precise plea on the altered position of the adoptee.

For as their Lordships observed: "It is no slight matter for a boy to be passed from one family to another. Even in England, such a thing cannot be done without a serious effect, for good or ill, on the boy's welfare. In India the ties of family life are far stricter, and if a boy has been transplanted from his own family into another by a de facto adoption and then the adoption turn out to be invalid in law, and he is rejected out of his adopted family, his relations to his natural mother must be seriously disturbed. Whether his previously existing legal status would be taken away is a point not calling for any opinion. Assuming that the plaintiff could return after an absence of five years, and so resume his legal position, it is impossible that his personal position should be the same as if the tie to his family had never been broken."<sup>(4)</sup>

783. There can be no estoppel unless a party acts with the knowledge of his right and in a manner inconsistent with them. He does not impair his right by merely consenting to a deed which, with or without his consent, was invalid.<sup>(5)</sup>

Limits of the rule Estoppel merely creates a personal disqualification affecting only one and one's legal representatives. It does not affect the validity of the adoption which may yet be challenged by others.<sup>(6)</sup>

784. Limitation.—Closely associated with the question of acquiescence is the subject of limitation which limits a party suing for declaring an adoption valid or non-existent and invalid, to six years, calculated in the former case from the time "when the rights of the adopted son, as such, are interfered with" and in the latter case from which the adoption becomes known to the plaintiff.<sup>(7)</sup> In the first place it should be added that these articles merely prescribe a period for obtaining a declaration, a relief which is optional to those whose rights are infringed. Consequently, the mere omission to obtain such declaration does not preclude a party from challenging or supporting an adoption in a suit for possession of property.<sup>(8)</sup>

(1) Ravji v. Lakshmidasi, 11 B 381 (396)

(2) Santappayya v. Rangappayya, 18 M. 397; Parvatibayamma v. Rama Krishna, 18 M 115; Dharam Kunwar v. Bahwant Singh, 31 A. 549. (P. C.)

(3) Santappayya v. Rangappayya, 18 M. 397 (400); Dharam Kunwar v. Bahwant Singh, 31 A. 549 (P. C.)

(4) Cited in Parvatibayamma v. Rama Krishna, 18 M 145 (147).

(5) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (796, 797) P. C.

(6) Parvatibayamma v. Rama Krishna, 18 M. 145 (146).

(7) Lim. Act. (IX of 1908) Art. 119.

(8) Ib., art. 118.

785. Assuming however, that a person resorts to the optional remedy here contemplated, and taking first only the case of those who challenge the factum on the validity of an adoption, it will be seen that the starting point for limitation is the knowledge of adoption. It is also the starting point for estoppel and acquiescence. Such knowledge must not necessarily be at first hand, though it must be of necessity something more than a floating rumour. The question is one of fact <sup>(1)</sup> which he who wishes to bring his suit within limitation has to prove. The persons who are interested in maintaining such suits are the adopter and his heirs, and where the adoption is by a widow, her reversioners. Third parties who have become interested in the estate, such as transferees from the alleged adopter may equally maintain such a suit. <sup>(2)</sup>

786. The question of the burden of proof in such suits is one of some nicety and one upon which the courts are not agreed. The Burden of proof. Allahabad Court holds that the plaintiff who seeks a declaration must establish the invalidity of the defendant's adoption, <sup>(3)</sup> while the Madras High Court maintains the contrary, holding that if the estate had fallen into possession and the plaintiff had to sue for its recovery and the defendant resisted his claim on the ground of his adoption, the burden would unquestionably be on him. Why should then the rule be different if he merely sues for a declaration? <sup>(4)</sup> But it is submitted that the two cases are distinguishable, since when the reversioner sues for possession the title has already become vested in him by law which the defendant has to displace, but till then his interest is merely a spes successionis and he must follow the ordinary rule, and would not be entitled to a decree as a matter of course, if the defendant refused to give any evidence.

787. The person primarily entitled to obtain a declaration as to the validity For supporting an of a person's adoption is the adoptee himself, though others, adoption. such as his heirs, and transferees may equally maintain such a suit. The right to sue commences as soon the adoptee's rights are interfered with, and not merely denied. <sup>(5)</sup> Again, such a suit, to quote the language of Art. 119 may be brought only "to obtain a declaration that an adoption is valid," that is to say, it must not be a suit to establish the factum but merely its validity. <sup>(6)</sup>

788. The subject of limitation for possession will be dealt with in the sequel.

(1) Tirbhuvan v. Itaneshor, 28 A. 727 P. C.; Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Naizuddin, 39 C. 418 (432) F. C.; Velaga v. Bandlunadi, 30 M. 308. There was at one time a conflict between the High Courts on the effect of these articles on a suit for possession, the Bombay and Madras High Courts holding that it became barred. Parvathi v. Saminathan, 20 M. 40; Ratnajasora v. Aikalandammal, 26 M. 291; Srinivas v. Bahwant, 37 B. 513; Ramchandra v. Narayan, 27 B. 614; Barot v. Barot, 25 B. 22; Srinivas v. Hanmant, 24 B. 260 overruling centra in Hari Lal v. Bai Rewa, 21 B. 376; Fannyamma v. Manjaya, 21 B. 159; Padojirar v. Ramrai, 13 B. 160; also Inda v. Jehangirva, (1890) A.W.N. 241.

But the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts held contra in Ramchandra v. Ranjit Singh 27

O. 242 (253-255) : Perbhu Lal v. Mylne, 14 C. 401; Baskanta v. Kali Chakm, 9 C.W.N. 222; Basudeo v. Gopal, 8 A. 644; Ganga Sahai v. Lekhras, 9 A. 253 (267 269); Nathu Singh v. Gulab Singh, 17 A. 167; Lali v. Murlidhar, 24 A. 195. The latter view is (it is submitted) correct, though the Bombay High Court still maintains its previous view (Srinivas v. Bahwant, 37 B. 513) a view upon grounds sufficiently met even by the language of the article.

(2) Yamunabai v. Balshet, 5 Bom L. R. 584 (587).

(3) S. 8. Lim. Act. (IX of 1908); Ayyadorai v. Solai Ammal, 24 M. 406.

(4) Asharfi v. Rupchand, 30 A. 197.

(5) Raja gopala v. Nattu, 24 M. 829.

(6) Ningawa v. Ramappa, 28 B. 94.

789. Again, no estoppel can shut out an enquiry into an adoption, if it was brought about by fraud, corruption, etc., mentioned in Adoption by fraud, S. 33. (1) No person is estopped for merely expressing an opinion which may or may not be correct. An erroneous opinion given by a person as to the law of adoption or even that an adoption was valid in law, does not estop him from afterwards disputing its validity. (2) It is only a misrepresentation on a matter of fact that creates an estoppel, though such misrepresentation may have been made innocently under a mistake or misrepresentation. (8) There is no estoppel unless one person causes or permits another to believe in an adoption. If therefore A claimed as an adopted son of B and B's true heir C did nothing to oppose him, but on the other hand, supported him, A could not hold C estopped, because C had done nothing to alter A's position to his prejudice. (4) The facts might be relied upon as an admission, but where C had admitted or denied A's adoption as it suited him, the Privy Council were not prepared to attach any value to them, apart from creating an estoppel which they did not create. (5) Such act may also amount to an acquiescence, but mere acquiescence does not create an estoppel (6) though it sets limitation in motion, (7) and may, apart from limitation, let in the rule stated in the proviso.

790. Working rules.—From the foregoing discussion it will be observed that the highest judicial minds are agreed upon the following working rules in determining the question of adoption:—

(1) First and foremost, they require and look for documentary evidence. If it is wanting, they demand to know why? Its absence leaves a serious hiatus in the case.

(2) Next to writing, the court pays regard to the admitted facts and circumstances.

(3) An admission of adoption is very strong evidence of it against the person admitting it; but it may be explained away.

(4) In the fourth place, they consider the trend of antecedent probabilities:

(5) Believing or disbelieving oral evidence according as it is supported by facts mentioned in the preceding paragraphs:

(6) Failing which, they require clear, cogent, and consistent evidence in support of a right which disappoints the natural heirs.

(7) Where, however, an adoption has been acted upon for a length of time, say at least for twenty or thirty years, without any opposition, it considers it a sufficient proof of adoption, presuming its validity from its long continuance, and the impossibility of proving its details.

(1) Sukhdasi Lal v. Guman Singh, 2 A. 366; Dharam Kumar v. Balwant Singh, 31 A. 398; Chintu v. Dhondu, 11 B. H. C. R. 192 note; Chiko v. Jonaki, 11 B. H. C. R. 199; Ravi v. Lakshmi Bai, 11 B. 381 (896).

(2) Gopee Lall v. Chandrabee, 19 W. R. 12 (18); Raj Narain v. Universal Life Assurance Co. 7 C. 594; Kaverji v. Babai, 19 B. 374 (890, 891).

(3) Sarat Chunder v. Gopal Chunder, 20 C. 296 (810) P. O. overruling contra in Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh, 2 A. 809; Vishnu v. Krishnan, 7 M. 8.

(4) Har Shankar v. Lal Itayhura Singh, 29 A. 519 (538, 534) P. C.

(5) Ib. p. 584.
Peddammululaty v. Timma ib. 2 M. H. C. R. 270 (278); Rajan v. Basava ib. p. 428; Uda v. Imamuddin, 1 A. 82; Taruck Chunder v. Harro Sunker, 22 W. R. 267.

(6) Papamma v. Appa Rao, 16 M. 384 (391); Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakeshmmamal, 18 M. 58 (60); Vasthilingam v. Murugan, 37 M. 529

(7) Ram Rau v. Raja Itau, 2 M. H. C. R. 114.

(8) In appraising oral evidence, while regard must necessarily be had to the education, position and character of the witness, his testimony must be judged in the light of probability.

791. Pleading on adoption.—It is, of course, an ordinary rule of pleading that no party can be permitted to spring upon his adversary a new plea at the close of the evidence. Where a party generally denied an adoption and it was put in issue and tried, he could not at the close of the evidence be permitted to raise a new plea that the adoption was invalid in law, on the ground that under Hindu Law there could be no valid adoption of a daughter's son. This is not a pure question of law, for though the prohibition is the general rule, it may be varied by custom, and it was therefore held, that a party challenging an adoption could not raise such a mixed plea at a late stage. (1) So following this case the Madras Court declined to entertain a plea on appeal impeaching an adoption on the ground that the adoptee was the younger brother of the adopter. (2)

46. (1) A person whose adoption is for any reason void, acquires no right as an adopted son.

(2) And where a gift is made to such person, described as an adopted son, the adoption failing, the gift also fails unless it was intended as a gift to a persona designata and was not a condition of the gift.

Illustrations.

(a) A bequeathes a legacy "to B whom I have adopted." A directs his wife C to perform the ceremonies and bring up B. C fails to perform the ceremonies and the adoption is invalid. A's bequest takes effect for he had intended to benefit B as a persona designata.

(b) But if in the last case, A bequeathes a legacy to B by virtue of B being his adopted son, then on the failure of B's adoption, A's bequest would also fail as A intended to benefit B qua his adopted son.

Synopsis.

(1) Effect of invalid adoption (793). (3) Persona designata (794-795).

(2) Construction of bequest (794-795).

792. Analogous Law :—The first clause of this section declares the general rule, (3) while the second clause is really a rule of construction. The question whether a gift is intended to benefit a person irrespective of or on account of his adoption is a question of intention to be collected from the wording of the instrument. In this respect the rule follows the English Law.

793. Effect of invalid adoption.—Where an adoption is for any reason invalid, the adoptee acquires no right in the family of his adopter. He is as good as if he had never been adopted. His natural rights remain. If there be no adoption nothing can have been acquired and nothing lost. He has not even the right of maintenance in the family of his adopter. (4) So much is clear.

(1) Rup Narain v. Gopal, 36 C. 780 (795)
P. C.

(2) Sindigi v. Sindigi, 32 M. L. J. 47; 38
I. C. 164.

(3) Bawani v. Ambabay, 1 M.H.C.R. 363.

(4) Bawani v. Ambabay, 1 M. H. C. R. 363
(367,368) followed in Lakshmappa v. Ramava,
12 B. H. C. R. 364 (395); Rajcoomaree v.
Nobocoomar, 2 Borr. 137.

794. Construction of bequest.—But where a gift or a bequest is made to an adoptee whose adoption fails, the question whether the gift or bequest will nevertheless hold good depends upon the donor's intention, the question in such cases being whether the donor intended to benefit the adoptee by reason of his adoption or even independently of it. So where the testator declared in his will that he had loved and brought up one Ardha as his son, who was very much attached to him and his wife, and that he had a mind to give him a share of his estate, but that he had taken him in adoption, and as such bequeathed to him his property, but the adoption failed as there had been no ceremony of giving and taking, the Privy Council held the gift nevertheless valid as made to a persona designata, whom the donor intended to take for reasons independent of adoption. (1) Such was also held to be the case where a will was to the following effect: "I declare that I give my property to K, whom I have adopted" followed by the direction, "my wives shall perform the ceremonies according to the Shastras, and bring him up." (2) This case was distinguished by the same Board in a case where the testator declared that he had secretly adopted one Jagadindra whom he authorized to offer oblations of water and pinda, "to me and my ancestors after my death by virtue of your being my adopted son." The adoption being held invalid, their Lordships held the gift also failed as the testator had made his gift by virtue of the adoption and not independently of it. (3) Their Lordships followed this case in another case in which the testator had similarly declared that he had adopted his sister's son seven years ago, adding,—"He is my heir and successor or (malik). If, after this agreement, a son is born to me, half the property would be received by him and half by the adopted son." The adoption of a sister's son being held invalid, the Privy Council construed the gift as dependent upon the adoption, since it was declared liable to variation on the birth of a legitimate son. (4) The result would, of course, have been different if the gift had not been liable to variation. (5)

795. These are comparatively easy cases. But their Lordships were not quite so sure as to what was intended by a will in which the testator had directed the widow of his deceased son to adopt the son of his nephew, to whom he had bequeathed his residuary estate in the following words: "My property which may remain as a residue after all the things in my will have been done, I give to this lad as his inheritance." The controversy centred on the construction of the words, "after all things mentioned in my will have been done," whether they were to be read as qualifying the preceding word "residue" or the following words, "I give," in which case the gift would be conditional on the adoption which was one of the things mentioned in the will, which was the construction placed on them by the High Court, and which their Lordships affirmed, holding the words "very obscure" and the other construction not so clear as to justify disturbance of the decree appealed against. (6) This case illustrates the truth of what was said in another case: "The distinction between what is description only, and what is the reason or motive of a gift or bequest, may often be very fine, but it is a distinction which must be drawn from the consideration of the language and the surrounding

(1) Biraswar v. Ardha Chander, 19 C. 452 (461) P. C.

(2) Nidhoomoni v. Saroda Pershad, 26 W. R. 91 P. C.

(3) Faminudra v. Rajeswar, 11 C. 463 (485) P. C.

(4) Lali v. Mulidhar, 28 A. 488 (495, 496) P. C.

(5) Murari Lal v. Kunalan Lal, 31 A. 339.

(6) Karamsi v. Karsandas, 23 B. 271 (277-279) P. C.

circumstances." (1) A party may implement a construction by his own conduct. Such was the case where a Zamindar A with the consent of his wife adopted a son B, and appointed him his heir, after which he married a second wife and made another adoption C when his first adopted son B was still alive. He divided the estate between them and B managed C's estate during his minority. On the adopter's death, B however laid claim to the entire estate, alleging that A could not have legally alienated his estate in favour of C or legally adopted him. The Privy Council held C's adoption during B's life-time invalid. They also held B's acquiescence in A's partition and in C's possession and his own management of his estate for him during A's life in no way prejudiced his claim, but inasmuch as A could have given a portion of his estate to C during his life-time without B's consent, B was bound to deliver to C that portion of A's estate which A could have given to C if the gift had been inter vivos. (2)

47. (1) The adoption of a person has, from the date of Effect on natural his adoption, the effect of determining all his family. rights and liabilities in the natural family, but not so as to divest him of any property which may have already vested in him prior to that date.

(2) But no adoption severs the natural relationship of the adopted son with his natural family so as to exempt him from the prohibition which would otherwise bind him as regards marriage and adoption.

Synopsis.

- (1) Results of adoption (796). (3) Prohibited degrees for marriage and
(2) Position in the natural family (797). adoption in natural family (798).

796. Analogous Law.—The two rules here stated are the outcome of Text. the view partially embodied in the following text:—

Manu.—A given son must never claim the family and estate of his natural father: the funeral cake follows the family and estate; but of him, who has given away his son, the funeral oblation is extinct.. (3)

Vrihat Manu—Sons given, purchased and the rest, retain relation of Sapinda to the natural father as extending to the fifth and seventh degrees; like this, their general family, which is also that of their adopter. (4)

The rule that an adopted son cannot be divested of the estate which had already vested in him follows the general rule that an estate once vested cannot be divested. (5) Nor does it disqualify one for adoption. (6)

(1) Panindra v. Rajeswar, 11 O. 468 (484) P. C. cited in Lali v. Murlidhar, 28 A. (495) P. C.

(2) Rungama v. Alchama, 4 M. I. A. 1 (108).

(3) IX-142; cited in Mit. 1 82; Mayukh IV-V-21 (Mandlik) 59; Datt. Mim. VI-§ 6: Datt. Ch. II-18 (Suth), 72, 119.

(4) Cited in Datt. Mim. VI-9 (Suth) 73.

(5) Moniram v. Kerikulitani, 50 776 (788);

Amamah v. Mabbu, 8 M.H. C. R. 108; Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (447-451) (Mitakshara cases). In Venkata v. Rangayya, 29 M. 437 (451) the rule here stated and the texts bearing thereon have been fully discussed. Behari Lal v. Kailas Chunder, 1 C. W. N. 121 (Dayabag case).

(6) Papamma v. Appa Rau, 16 M. 884 (396, 397).

797. Adoptee's position in the natural family.—An adoption effects a complete severance of the adopted son from his natural family. His adoption is said to operate as a civil death of the adoptee in the natural family and his re-birth in the family of his adopter. But this is scarcely correct. For although adopted into another family the adoptee still retains the property which had vested in him prior to his adoption, which of course, he could not be permitted to do if he were civilly dead. By his adoption he merely loses all future interest he may acquire in his own family and vice versa.<sup>(1)</sup> His severance from his natural family is so complete that no mutual rights as to succession to property can arise between them, so that while he cannot inherit to any of his natural relations, the latter equally cannot inherit to him. His heirs are his new Sapindas of the adoptive family, his own relations of his natural family being placed in the catena of his heirs as such.<sup>(2)</sup>

An adopted son on adoption ceases to be liable for the debts or other obligations for which he would have been liable as a member of his natural family, except, of course, such debts and obligations for which he may be liable by reason of the property which he may have inherited or acquired before his adoption.<sup>(3)</sup>

798. Marriage and adoption.—The adopted son is a mere substitute for a real son, and as such, he has by usage acquired a filial status and rights in his adoptive family. The creation of such a jural relation does not sever the tie of blood which binds him to his natural family. He cannot, therefore, marry in his natural family within the prohibited degrees, nor can he adopt from that family a boy whom he would not have adopted if he had remained in that family.<sup>(4)</sup> But on this question usage may have something to say.

48. In the absence of a natural son, an adopted son possesses all the rights and is subject to all the liabilities of a natural son in the family of his adoptive father, including the right of lineal and collateral inheritance.

Synopsis.

- (1) Rights of adopted son (799-800). (3) Rights commence with adoption.
(2) Rights of inheritance (801-802). (803).

799. Analogous Law.—The theory of adoption implies a complete change of paternity, and an adopted son must, in all respects, be considered as having been begotten by his adoptive father.<sup>(5)</sup> It is now settled that the adopted son possesses in the family of his adopter the same status and rights as an Auras (or lawfully begotten) son,<sup>(6)</sup> being as such entitled to enforce a partition against his adoptive father or his co-parceners, and to inherit both lineally and collaterally to his adoptive relations,<sup>(7)</sup> except in a few instances to be presently considered. As Mitter, J. observed: "According to Hindu Law, an adopted son

(1) Duttanarain v. Ajeet Singh, 1 Beng. S.R. 26; 6 I.D. (O.S.) 20; Srinivasa v. Kuppan, 1 M. H.C.R. 130; Muthayya v. Minakshi, 25 M. 394.

(2) Muthayya v. Minakshi, 25 M. 394.

(3) Prasvullabh v. Dookristu, (1824) Ben. S. R. 4; Kashee Pershad v. Bunseedhur, 4 N.W.P. S.D.A. 348.

(4) Mootia v. Uppen (1858) M.S.D.A. 117.

(5) Narasannal v. Balaramachariu, 1 M.H. C.R. 420.

(6) Sunboo Chunder v. Narain, 3 Knapp

55; Pulmacoomari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker, 6 C. 256 (259, 220) F.B.O.A. Uma Shunker v. Kali Komul, 10 C. 282 P.C.; Naginidas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (287, 288) P.C. reversing Bachoo v. Naginidas, 16 Bom. L.R. 268.

(7) Sunboo Chunder v. Narain, 8 C. 302 P.C.; Uma Shunker v. Kali Komul, 6 C. 256 (259, 260) F.B.O.A. Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker, 10 C. 282 P.C.; Naginidas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (287, 288) P.C. reversing Bachoo v. Naginidas, 16 Bom. L.R. 268.

occupies the same position, and has the same rights and privileges in the family of the adopter as the legitimate son, except in a few, specified, instances, which have been clearly and carefully noted and defined by writers on the subject of adoption. The theory of adoption depends upon the principle of a complete severance of the child adopted from the family in which he is born, both in respect to the paternal and the maternal line, and his complete substitution into the adopter's family, as if he were born in it." (1)

800. The property inherited by the adoptive son from his adoptive father would be ancestral or self-acquired according to the nature of the property inherited by him. It is not in the nature of a gift to the son but is his inheritance. (2)

He is the adopted son of both his adoptive father and of his wife whether she consented to his adoption or not. Consequently, he succeeds both to him and to her. (3) So when one S, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara school married four wives in succession, and in conjunction with his first wife by whom he had no issue he adopted a son H, after which he had a son G by his second wife, S predeceased his fourth wife M having had no issue by her. On M dying intestate, both H and G were held equally entitled to inherit M's stridhan as the sapindas of S. (4)

801. Adoptee's rights in his adopter's family.—It has now been settled by a series of rulings of the Privy Council, that except in the cases and to the extent expressly limited by the texts, the rights and liabilities of an adopted son are exactly identical with those of a natural born son, that is to say, so far as regards rights, he is entitled to inherit to his adoptive father, and the latter's natural or adoptive father, grandfather and his other more distant lineal ancestors. He is equally entitled to inherit to his father's wife who is treated as his adoptive mother whether she took part in his adoption or not and to her relations, such as her father and brothers. And conversely both the adoptive father and mother and their relations are entitled to inherit to him. (5)

802. Similarly, he is entitled to inherit to their relations collaterally, such as their sons, brothers, uncles, and other collateral relations. (6) So where a legitimate and adopted son survive a father and the legitimate son afterwards dies, the adopted son takes the whole property by survivorship. (7) So he is entitled to succeed to his father's daughter's son, (8) his father's brother's son, (9) paternal uncle, (10) father's first (11) or third cousin (12) and grandfather's first cousin. (13)

(1) Uma Shunker v Kali Komul, 6 C. 256 (259, 260) F. B. affirmed O A. Kali Komul v Uma Shunker, 10 C. 232 P. C. approved in Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (288) P. C.

(2) Heera Singh, v. Buryar Singh 1 Agra. 256.

(3) Sham Kuar v Gaya Din, 1 A. 255 F. B.; Gunga Mya v. Kishen Kishore 3 Beng. S. R. 128; Gunga Pershad v. Brijessures (1859) S. D. A. B. 1091; Puddo Kumara v. Juggut Kishore, 5 C. 615; Uma Shunker v. Kali Komul, 6 C. 256 (263) F. B. O. A. Kali Komul v. Uma Shunker 10 C. 232 P. C. approved in Nagindas v. Bachoo 40 B. 270 (288) P. C. overruling contra in Morun Mose v. Bejoy W. R. (1. N) 121; Chinarama Krishna v. Minatchi 7 M. F. C. R. 245.

(4) Gangadhar v. Hiralal 43 C. 944; Joy Kishore v. Panchoon, 4 C. L. R. 581; Surjo-

kant v. Mohesh, 9 C. 70.

(5) Kali Komal v. Uma Shunker 10 C. 232 P. C.; Radha Prasad v. Itaneo Mani, 38 C. 947.

(6) Padma Kumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P. C.

(7) Ranganama v. Aichamma, 4 M. I. A. 1 (108); Sudarund v. Bonomallee, March 817.

(8) Padma Kumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P. C.

(9) Banundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M. I. A. 169; Harekchand v. Bejoy Chand, 9 C. W. N. 795.

(10) Lokenath v. Shamasoondares, (1858) S. D. A. B. 1863.

(11) Sumbhoochunder v. Narain, 5 W. R. 100 P. C.

(12) Dino Nath v. Gopaul, 6 C. L. R. 379.

(13) Mokundo v. Bykunt, 6 C. 289.

So an adopted son of one daughter will share equally with the natural son of another daughter in the inheritance left by his natural grandfather. (1)

And so an adopted son by one wife is entitled to inherit the stridhan of another wife equally with the legitimate son of a third wife as their predeceased father's sapindas. (2) So an adopted son of the maternal grandfather of a deceased man, though the gotra into which he was adopted was not the same as the latter's was an heir nearer to him than such maternal grandfather's grand nephew. (3)

803. Such rights, however, only arise on adoption. Even in the case of an adoption by the widow, though the adoption by her is to her husband, still the adoptee's rights do not relate back to the death of the husband (4) except, it is said, in the case of a trading partnership where the adopted son takes the place of the deceased as from the date of his death (5) thus preventing its automatic dissolution. (6)

Adopted son's rights in the adopted
family.

49. (1) Save as otherwise provided in clause (3), the rights of an adopted son arise at adoption.

(2) An adopted son cannot dispute an alienation made by the adopted father before his adoption; and on his adoption he would be bound by an alienation made by his adoptive father or any other manager of the family to the same extent as a natural son.

(3) The rights of a son adopted by a widow do not relate back to the death of her husband, except in the following cases and to the following extent, namely:—

- (a) His adoption relates back to the death of her husband for the purpose of continuing a partnership of which he was a member.
- (b) He divests the co-parcenary interest of the husband which has become vested in another by survivorship.
- (c) He may set aside an antecedent gift of her husband's property made by his widow, and in the case of other alienations, he may dispute their propriety if unsupported by legal necessity.

Synopsis.

- (1) Rights of adopted son (805).
- (2) Effect of adoption on alienations made by widow (806).
- (3) Share of adopted son on partition (807).
- (4) Adopted son's rights against his father (808).

(1) Tara Mohan v. Kripa Moyce, 9 W. R. 428.

(2) Surjokant v. Mohesh Chunder, 9 C. 70; Raja v. Subharaya, 7 M. 253.

(3) Joy Kishore v. Panchoo, 4 C. L. R. 538; Gangadhar v. Hirulal, 43 C. 944.

(4) Pudma Kumari v. Court of Wards, 8 C. 802 P. C.

(5) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M. I. A. 169; Harekchand v. Bejoychand, 9 C. W. N. 795.

(6) S. 253 (10) Contract Act (IX of 1872); Kapurchand v. Narinjainall, 1897 P. R. 20.

804. Analogous Law.—The rules here stated are really illustrative of the general rule declaratory of the rights of an adopted son. (1) As he is the image of the natural son his rights and liabilities are also identical. This is so as regards clause (1) which is amply supported by authorities. (2)

805. As regards clause (2) his rights are retrospective and in a measure opposed to the rule which declared the contrary. But they could not be otherwise, since a widow's estate is limited and controlled by the reversioners and she could not be permitted to make an adoption to defeat her reversioners' expectancy while remaining irresponsible for her waste and improper alienation to her adopted son. If the law were otherwise, adoption would be an effective camouflage to mask her misdeeds.

806. The rule was admitted as far back as 1858 by the Privy Council who observed: "The son when adopted became the undoubted heir; and it was of course correct doctrine that no sale made by a widow, who possesses only a very restricted life interest in the estate could have been good against any ultimate heir, whether an adopted son or otherwise, unless made under certain circumstances of strict necessity." (3)

807. From what has been stated above it is clear that the rule only applies to a case where the adopted son is in competition with the after born son of the same father. If therefore, of two brothers, one adopts a son and another has a natural son, the two being the sons of two brothers will share equally on partition. (4) The same rule of equality would extend to their sons, son's sons, and son's son's sons, that is to say it will extend to all and every relation except a natural son of the adopter. So in a competition between an adopted son D of a naturally born son B and the latter's brother C, that is to say the adopted son D and his uncle by adoption C, the two share equally both on partition and inheritance, because since the adopted son's father B was a natural son of his father A and so was his uncle C the two would take equally and so would the adopted son D as representing his father B. But if his father B was himself an adopted son, then since B could not have taken a share equal to C's, it follows that his adopted son D cannot take more than his father B. In other words in such a competition, D's share is only liable to reduction if his father was himself an adopted son, but not otherwise. (5)

(1) S. 45.

(2) Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 (413); Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M. I. A. 169 (180); Girdharilall v. Kantoo Lal, 22 W. R. 56 P. C.; Raghunadha (Sri) v. Brozo Kishore, 1 M. 69 P. C.; Krishnarav v. Rangrav, 4 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 1, (4); Kustur Bhavani v. Appa, 5 B. 621 (628, 629); Rambhot v. Lakshman, 5 B. 630 (687); Goura v. Chummun, W. R. (S. N.) 340; Lakshman v. Radhabai, 11 B. 609; Moro Narayan v. Balaji, 19 B. 809 (815); Ramakrishna v. Tripurabai, 33 B. 88 (92).

(3) Bamundoss v. Tarinee, 7 M. I. A. 169 (180); Lakshman v. Radhabai, 11 B. 609; Moro v. Balaji, 19 B. 809; Ramakrishna v. Tripurabai, 33 B. 88 (95) dissenting from contra in Sreeramulu v. Kristamma, 26 M. 143.

(4) Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P. C.; overruling Raghubanund v. Sadhu Churn, 4 C. 425 and following Tara Mohun v. Kripa Mouee, 9 W. R. 423; Dinonath v. Gopal Churn, 8 C. L. R. 57.

(5) Nagindass v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (284, 285) P. C.

Since the rights of an adopted son are settled to be those of a natural son, it follows that like a natural son, the adopted son becomes a member of the joint family taking therein a vested interest as if he had been born therein from the moment of his adoption.

808. What those rights are must depend upon the personal law to which the family is subject. For instance, since there is no distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property in Bengal where the father possesses the absolute right of disposal and since the same right is possessed by the Mitakshara father in respect of his self-acquired property, it follows that an adoptive father may dispose of all such property by a gift inter vivos (1) or by a will (2) even if it should have the effect of completely disinheriting his adopted son with whom he makes no implied contract that he will not make a will (3) or refrain from exercising his legal right of disposing of his property at his pleasure. (4) But if there has been a previous express agreement restricting his right made in consideration of the adoption with the parent of the adopted son, he would be bound by it. But he is then bound because of the contract and not because of the adoption. In this view it is, of course clear that an adopted son in a Mitakshara family becomes a co-parcener in the joint family property of his adoptive father from the moment of his adoption. (5) And if the property be his father's ancestral property it becomes his ancestral property in which he takes the same vested interest from his adoption as a natural son would from his birth. (6) In a joint Mitakshara family an adoption by the widow has necessarily the effect of divesting the co-parceners of her husband's interest which had devolved on them by survivorship. (7) So where an impartible Zemindari had devolved on the undivided brother of the deceased holder, an adoption by the latter's widow was held to divest the brother in favour of the adopted son. (8)

Adoptee's rights limited by auras son.

50. (1) Except in the case of a Shudra the rights of an adopted son are, on the birth of an auras son, limited as follows :—

(2) He loses all rights to the performance of religious ceremonies.

(3) He is not entitled to succeed to an impartible estate in preference to the auras son.

(4) His right of inheritance in other cases is reduced to one-fifth share of the natural son.

Synopsis.

(1) Texts on adopted son's rights as against auras son (809-819).

(2) Reasons for divergent views (811).

(1) Rungama v. Atchama, 4 M. I. A. 1.
(2) Sadanund v. Benomalee, 2 Hay. 205;
Purshotam v. Vasudev, 8 B. H. C. R. (O. C.) 198.

(3) Venkata v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 383 P. C.

(4) Surendra v. Kala, 12 C. W. N. 668.

(5) Sumboo Chunder v. Naraini, 5 W. R. 100 P. C.; followed in Pudma Coomari v.

Court of Wards, 8 C. 302 P. C.; Kali Komul v. Umo Shunder, 10 C. 232 P. C.; Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 (287) P. C.; Gangadhar v. Hiralal, 43 C. 944.

(6) Rambhat v. Lakshman, 5 B. 680 (685).

(7) Chandra v. Gojara, 14 B. 468.

(8) Sri Virada v. Sri Brojo, 1 M. 60 P. C.; Bachoo v. Markorebai, 29 B. 51 O. A. 31 B. 373 P. C.

809. Analogous Law.—The reduction of the rights of an adopted son in competition with an after-born legitimate son is based on the following textual authority :—

Vashisth :— When a son has been adopted, if a legitimate son is afterwards born, the son given shares a fourth part. <sup>(1)</sup>

Devala :— Those twelve are pronounced sons for the sake of issue ; some are sprung from himself, some from another also. Some acquired by an overt act of adoption ; and others filially related independent thereof. Of these, the first six are kinsmen and heirs to collaterals, the rest are so merely to the father ; and a special rule obtains according to the priority in rank of the sons ; all these sons are considered as heirs to one having no real legitimate son, but should a son be subsequently born no right of primogeniture attaches to them. Of these those who are equal in class take a third share, but those inferior in rank should live in subjection to one of equal rank receiving maintenance. <sup>(2)</sup>

Katyayan :— If a legitimate son be born, the rest are pronounced sharers of a third part, provided they belong to the same tribe, but if they be of a different class they are entitled to food and raiment only. <sup>(3)</sup>

810. Dattak Chandrika contains a long disquisition on the share of the adopted son in competition with the auras son <sup>(4)</sup> concluding it by a reference to the Shudras who are excluded from the special rule, citing the following text in support of the exception :

Vridhdha Gautam :—A son being thus adopted, if by any chance a legitimate son should be born, let them be equal partakers of the father's estate <sup>(5)</sup>

Therefore, by the same relationship of brother, and so forth, in virtue of which the real legitimate son would succeed to the estate, of a brother or other kinsmen, where such son may not exist, the adopted son takes the whole estate even.

Since it is a restrictive rule, that a grandson succeed to the appropriate share of his own father, the son given, whose adopter is the real legitimate son of the paternal grandfather is entitled, to an equal share even, with a paternal uncle, who is also such description of son : therefore, a grandson, who is an adopted son, may [in all cases], inherit an equal share even with an uncle. This must not be alleged, [as a general rule.] For there would be this discrepancy : where, the father of the grandson, is an adopted son, he would receive a fourth share : but the grandson, if he were such son, [of him] would receive an equal share [with an uncle in the heritage of the grandfather]. And accordingly, whatever share, may be established by law, for a father of the same description as himself ; to such appropriate share of his father, does the individual in question, [viz. the adopted son of one adopted], succeed. Thus, what had been advanced, only is correct. The same rule is to be applied by inference to the great-grandson also.

The difference between the Bengal and the Benares schools on the share of the adopted son arises from a difference in the reading of the text of Vashisth's. <sup>(6)</sup>

811. All the schools proceed upon the text of Vashisth's before quoted. The difference of opinion between them arises from the different readings of the same text and the meaning of the ambiguous expression " shares a fourth part " which may mean either (a) a fourth of the whole or (b) a fourth part of what he would

(1) XV-9 : 14 S. B. E. 76 ; quoted in Mit. 1-XI-24 with the following comment on a "Son given." "Here the mention of a son given is intended for an indication of others also, as the son bought, son made by adoption, and son self-given and the rest ; for they are equally adopted as sons." Vashisth's verse is cited without comment in Datt. Mim. X-1 (Suth) 106 ; Datt. Ch. ii-11 (Suth) 118.

(2) Quoted in Datt. Ch. 5-16 (Suth) 198, 199.

(3) Quoted in Datt Ch. V-16 (Suth) 189 ; in some copies the reading is "are pronounced sharers of a fourth part" Suth. p. 199.

(4) V-19-29.

(5) Quoted in Datt. Ch. V-32 (Suth) 148 ; followed in Raja v. Subbaraya, 7 M. 258.

(6) "Shares a fourth part" being read as "shares of third part" in Daya Bhag, X-18 ; The other text is followed in Madan Parijat, Vir Mitrodaya and others—Cole-Note to Mit. 1—XI-25.

have received if he were a natural son, or (c) a fourth part of the natural son's share. According to the first view the dattak gets one-fourth of the whole estate leaving the remainder to be appropriated by the natural son or if there be more than one son, to be divided amongst them. According to the second view the dattak takes one-fourth of what he would have taken if a legitimate son, i.e.,  $\frac{1}{4}$  of  $\frac{1}{2} = \frac{1}{8}$ ; while according to the last view he takes  $\frac{1}{4}$  of a son's share, i.e., if the latter gets 4 the former gets 1 or  $\frac{1}{5}$  of the whole. Thus if the property be valued at 40 the dattak's share according to each view will be 10, 5 or 8 respectively. Each of these views has found its supporters. Sir Thomas Strange and the early writers favoured the first view <sup>(1)</sup> while Nanda Pandit argues in favour of the second view <sup>(2)</sup> but recent opinion <sup>(3)</sup> inclines to the third view. It is contended that the first view cannot be correct because in that case the adopted son would get a fourth of the estate while the remaining three-fourths may have to be divided amongst as many or more natural sons which would be inconsistent with the spirit of Hindu Law which places the secondary son in a lower position than the auras son. Both the Bombay and the Calcutta Courts, therefore, agree in rejecting the first interpretation. <sup>(4)</sup> They equally reject the second interpretation as strained and unnatural; but now agree on the third which is also supported by some cases of the other courts. <sup>(5)</sup> The same rule applies where the adopted son sues for partition an adopted son of a deceased natural son of the proprietor and there being no text to curtail his right, he would take the full share of his father. <sup>(6)</sup>

812. So again where a person was a member of a partnership at the time of his death such partnership is not dissolved by reason of his death if his widow makes a valid adoption in which case his adoption would relate back to the death of her husband. <sup>(7)</sup>

51. No suit lies for the specific performance of an agreement to adopt, the breach of which may, however, be redressed by damages.

813. Analogous Law.—There can be no suit for the specific performance of a contract to marry or to adopt, <sup>(8)</sup> as both depend upon the volition of the parties, and its breach may be otherwise redressed. <sup>(9)</sup>

In one case the parties had agreed not to adopt against which agreement the defendant was about to make an adoption. The plaintiff sued her for an injunction restraining her from making an adoption and prayed for an interim injunction as the adoption was to take place the next day. The court, however,

(1) 1 Str. H.L. 99; Wilson's works, V 52: 1 Wm. Maon. 70; 2 Wm. Maon. 134; F. Maon. 137; Madhaviya Dayavibhag (Burnell's Tr.) 48; Taramohun v. Kripa Moyee, 9 W R 423; Rukhal v. Chunilal, 16 B. 347; Preag Singh v. Ajoodya, 4 M. S. R. 96; 1 Mor. Dig. 306.

(2) Datt. Mim. V. 40.

(3) Birbhadra v. Kalpataru, 1 C. L. J. 898 (392, 898) following Giriapa v. Ningapa, 17 B. 100; Ayyavu v. Niladatchi, 1 M. H. C. R. 45.

(4) Birbhadra v. Kalpataru, 1 C. L. J. 898 (892); Giriapa v. Ningapa, 17 B. 100 dissenting from Raghunand v. Sadhu Churn, 4 C. 425 since overruled in Nagindas v. Bachoo, 40 B. 270 P. C.

(5) Dhondo v. Appaji, (1898) B. P. J. 398;

Giriapa v. Ningapa, 17 B. 100 without reference to the earlier decisions in Hanmant v. Bhimacharya, 12 B. 105; Rukhal v. Chunilal, 16 B. 347 in which the court allotted him one-third of the share of a natural son Ayyavu v. Niladatchi, 1 M. H. C. R. 45.

(6) Raja v. Subaraya, 7 M. 253 followed in Baramanund v. Krishna Charan, in 14 C. L. J. 133 (187) doubting contra in Raghunand v. Sadhu Churn, 4 C. 425.

(7) Kapur Chand v. Narainjan Lal, (1897) P. R. 20.

(8) S. 21 (b) Sep. Rel. Act (I of 1877)

(9) The contrary stated in Sreenarayan v. Kishen Soondery, (1873) 11 B. L. R. 171 (188) P. C., must be taken as overruled by the statute law.

refused it holding that the court should be cautious in restraining an adoption the result of which might be serious to the party restrained. (1) The fact that the breach of such contract is redressable in pecuniary compensation is sufficient to prevent a party from obtaining an injunction. (2)

52. (1) An invalid adoption cannot be validated by a subsequent consent, though the person so consenting may be estopped from denying it; but there can be no estoppel unless there is such a course of acquiescence in treating the adopted boy as a member of the adopted family that it will be impossible to restore him to his original position in the natural family.

(2) Mere acquiescence or even presence at the adoption does not necessarily amount to an estoppel.

Synopsis.

- (1) Effect of consent on invalid adoption (815). (2) Acquiescence, no bar (816).
(3) Estoppel (817).

814. Analogous Law.—This section involves three propositions: (i) that the invalidity of an adoption cannot be cured by the subsequent consent of those whose consent was pre-requisite to its validity, (3) (ii) that no acquiescence in an invalid adoption can make an invalid adoption valid, (iii) and no acquiescence short of estoppel, precludes one from disputing it. (4)

815. Effect of consent on adoption.—It is an established rule that consent cannot cure the invalidity of an adoption. So where the consent of the husband's kinsmen is necessary to empower the widow to adopt, an adoption made by her without such consent cannot be validated by their subsequent ratification. Even if the kinsmen whose consent was a pre-requisite were present at the adoption it does not amount to either consent or acquiescence. (5) Even where the acquiescence has continued for even as long as 50 years it would not validate the adoption though it may estop the party if his acquiescence had led the adoptee to abandon his rights to the property in his natural family and render his service in that of his quasi adoptive father. (6)

The equitable doctrine of laches and acquiescence does not apply to suits for which the Legislature has prescribed a limitation. (7) A legal title cannot be displaced by mere acquiescence, laches or delay. The fact that a person did not protest does not prove his acquiescence. (8)

(1) Assur v. Ratan Bai, 13 M. 55.

(2) S. 54 (c.) Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).

(3) Konvidi v. Venkataswami, 32 M. L. J. 119; Adivi v. Nidamarty, 38 M. 228.

(4) Vaithilingam v. Murugaian, 37 M. 529.

(5) Papamma v. Appa Rau, 16 M. 388 391; Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshamma 14 M. 53 (58); Parvatibayamma v. Rama- krishna Rau, ib. p. 145.

(6) Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan, 7 M. H. C. R., 250; Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau, 18 M. 145 (151, 152).

(7) Rama Rau v. Raja Rau 2 M. H. C. R. 114; Peddamuthulay v. Timma Reddy, ib. p. 270 (273); Baruck Chunder v. Huro Sunkur, 22 W.R. 267; Rahmatullah v. Secretary of State, (1918) P. R. 63; 18 I. C. 799.

(8) Rajan v. Basu, 2 M. H. C. R. 428.

816. In any case, acquiescence is never a ground for depriving a person of his legal rights unless the acquiescence amounts to estoppel. Acquiescence no bar. Silence is not acquiescence, unless one was under a legal duty to speak. <sup>(1)</sup> There is a difference between acquiescence before the act and after it is completed. In the first case it affords evidence of consent, <sup>(2)</sup> but in the other case it may amount to waiver of a right, but a waiver must be an intentional act done with the knowledge of one's right.<sup>(3)</sup> Mere delay is not waiver and apart from limitation, it does not deprive one of his rights. <sup>(4)</sup>

There can be no acquiescence unless one is cognizant of one's right to dispute it <sup>(5)</sup> and where both parties equally knew the facts, there is neither estoppel nor acquiescence. <sup>(6)</sup>

817. Estoppel.—But where for a long series of years a person has acquiesced in the adoption of another and the latter has in consequence lost all rights in his natural family it may then be a case in which, while the adoption remains invalid, the court may hold a party estopped from showing its invalidity on the ground that it would be inequitable to permit him to show the contrary when he has by his own conduct induced another to alter his position to his disadvantage to which he can no longer be restored. <sup>(7)</sup> Such a case must be brought within the principle stated in S. 115 of the Evidence Act.

(1) Chadwick v. Manning, (1896) A.C. 231 (298); Bindu v. Bugli, (1909) P.R. 73; 2 I. C. 814; Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C. W. N. 882.

(2) Duke of Leeds v. Amherst, 2 Phillips, 117; 78 R. R. 47.

(3) Darnby v. L. C. & D. Ry. Co I. R. 2 H. L. 43 (60); Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C. W. N. 882 (886).

(4) Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C. W. N. 882 (886).

(5) Papamya v. Appa Rao, 16 M. 384 (391); Shyama Charan v. Prafulla, 19 C. W. N. 882 (886).

(6) Proscenna Kumar v. Srilantha, 40 C. 173.

(7) Varthalingam v. Murugaiyan, 37 M. 529.

CHAPTER VI.

MINORITY AND GUARDIANSHIP.

818. Topical Introduction.—The law of guardianship is based on the principle that infants being of immature intellect and imperfect discretion, are incapable of exercising any civil right or performing civil duties and their interests consequently require to be protected by the recognition and appointment of a guardian to their person or property or both.

819. All laws recognize this incapacity and the necessity for protection. And all laws accept the parents as the natural guardians of their offspring. Of these however, the father has an almost absolute right to the guardianship of his children of both sexes. This is the relic of his old patria potestas which enabled him to own, sell, or kill his own offspring. But this can only be by analogy for when the father exercised his patria potestas his minor children had no individual rights or property. They were merely his chattels. Their individual rights are of later growth. Consequently, the Hindu Law-givers do not recognize any absolute rights of guardianship in any one, the sovereign being entrusted with the guardianship of all minors <sup>(1)</sup> and entitled to appoint any person as their guardian. <sup>(2)</sup> But nevertheless the parental power and authority was a fact which the courts could not ignore and following the broad analogy of their pristine rights, their claim to guardianship of their children was never contested. And as between them, the father as the head of the family and its bread winner, was held to possess an absolute right. But his present power, though nominally absolute, is limited by his capacity of which the court as representative of the sovereign is the sole judge. Next to the father stands the mother. Other things being equal, she has a preferable claim and according to a decision, even a better claim for the guardianship of her minor daughter than the father. <sup>(3)</sup> But as will be presently seen, this was the exceptional case of a Kulin father with his numerous wives. In normal cases the courts recognize the father's right as stronger than that of any other relation and in a competition between the father and the mother, the former starts with a clear advantage which the latter has to meet. Apart from the parents no other relation has any right in the same degree. Hindu Law no doubt favours the paternal over the maternal relations and this is never left out of account. But the welfare and wishes of the minor are then accounted as of a greater moment.

820. The law of guardianship is now codified in the Act <sup>(4)</sup> which however does not affect the personal law of the Hindus so far as it relates to the power to appoint a guardian but otherwise it controls his appointment.

OF MINORITY.

53. (1) In matters relating to marriage, dower, and adoption, a person attains the age of majority on completion of the sixteenth year : otherwise

Age of majority.

(1) Manu, VIII 27 : 2 Dig., 574, 575 ; Ram Bunsee v. Soobh Koonwaree, 7 W. R. 321 (325); Runseedhur v. Bindeseree, 10 M. I. A. 454; Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 (819) P. C.; Jago v. Oodal, 4 N. L. R. 20.

(2) Muthu Vicerappa v. Ponnuswami, (1911) M. W. N. 561; 18 I. C. 16.

(3) Modhoooodun v. Jadub Chunder, 8 W. R. 194.

(4) VII of 1890.

except in the cases herein after provided, he attains it on completion of the eighteenth year.

(2) Every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been appointed or declared under the Guardians and Wards Act, and every minor whose property is under the superintendence of a Court of Wards, attains his majority on completion of his twenty-first year.

Synopsis.

(1) Hindu Law of majority (822). (3) Mode of calculation (824).

(2) Age of majority for Hindus (823).

821. Analogous Law.—This section is a summary of the Hindu Law modifying and as modified by the Indian Majority Act. Clause 1 reproduces the saving clause 2 of the Act <sup>(1)</sup> and states what is now regarded as the age of majority under Hindu Law.

822 The saving clause in the Indian Majority Act was, of course, inserted Hindu Law of majority out of respect to the personal laws of Hindus and Mahomedans which it has been the policy of the Government to leave unmolested. The only textual rule to be found on the subject of Hindu majority is the following :—

Manu :—The property of a student and of an infant, whether by descent or otherwise, let the King hold in his custody, until the owner shall have ended his studentship, or until his infancy shall have ceased in his sixteenth year. (2)

According to this rule the infancy of a minor “ceases in his sixteenth year.” But the phrase is vague and might mean either upon entering the sixteenth year <sup>(3)</sup> or upon its completion <sup>(4)</sup> and there is authority for either view. When Manu enacted the rule, women were incapable of holding property or entering upon a course of studentship.

No doubt a period has been prescribed for the termination of the age of studentship and infancy but as has been pointed out before, that period is strictly speaking inapplicable to women who have been declared ineligible for religious studies and whose perpetual dependence upon men is consistently insisted upon.

These are the inherent defects of the Hindu system and failing a direct rule, some limitation had to be fixed which the courts have, in several cases, fixed as stated in clause (1).

823. Clause (1) of this section is taken from S. 2 and clause (2) Hindu age of majority. abstracted from S. 3 of the Majority Act which prescribes a uniform age of majority applicable to all minors including Hindus who are however declared exempt

(1) IX of 1875

(2) Manu, VIII. 27 ; IX—146, 190, 191.

(3) 1 Dig 298 ; 1 Dig 115 : Dayabhag iii. 1. 17 Note. Datt : Mim. IV. 47 ; 1 W. Maon 103 ; 2 W. Maon ; 220, 288. N. Lachman v. Rupchand, (1881) 5 B. S. D. R. 136 : Tuckheeraram v. Mudhoosoodun (1853) B. S. D. A. 505 ; Sheetsunker v. Manakchunder, (1859) B. S. D. A. 885 ; Dehomoyee v.

Juggessur. 1 W. R. 75 ; Monsoor Ali v. Ramdayal, 3 W. R. 50 ; Callychurn v. Bunggobutty, 19 W. R. 110 ; Mothoor v. Surendra. 1 C. 108.

(4) 1 W. Maon H. L. 108 1 Str. H. L. 72 ; Str. H. L. 76, 77, 80 ; Lachman v. Rupchand 5 S. D. A. B. 136 : Gowind Nath v. Gulalchand, 5 B. S. R. 322 ; Shirji v. Datu, 12 B. H. C. R. 281 (290).

from that Act, thereby impliedly reserving to them their own personal law of majority, if any. Now since the Majority Act applies to other cases including guardianship, it follows that a person may be still a minor under the Majority Act and yet a major under his personal law and therefore, free to enter into the three excepted transactions, viz., marriage, dower and adoption. Since the saving clause does not exempt guardianship and wills, it follows that a minor under the Act can neither make a will nor can he act as a guardian. Under S. 3 of the Majority Act the normal age of majority for every person irrespective of nationality or religion is reached on completion of the eighteenth year, except (a) where before completion of that age a guardian is appointed or declared under the Guardians and Wards Act; or (b) the management of his estate is assumed by the Court of Wards, in which cases the age of majority is extended by another three years. It will be seen that this extended non-age does not continue where a guardian is appointed otherwise than by a court of justice. Consequently, where a guardian is appointed by the will of the father it does not extend that period, nor, of course, is it extended by the existence of a natural guardian. This may sometimes lead to awkward results. Since a guardian may be younger than his ward, and while the former may be a major, the latter may still be a minor. It has been held that if the guardian is "appointed" or "declared by the court," the period of majority is postponed even if the guardian should resign or cease to act. (1) Such appointment or declaration must be under S. 7 (1) of the Guardians and Wards Act. (2) Where therefore, the court merely granted letters of administration to the de facto guardian of a minor in respect of an estate under S. 13 of the Probate and Administration Act (3) or appoints merely a guardian ad litem for the purpose of a suit, the period of majority is not postponed.

824. In calculating the age of a minor, the day on which a person is born and the day on which he completes his eighteenth year or twenty-first year are both counted in computing his age of majority. So if A be born a minute before midnight of 1st January 1900 and die a minute after the 31st December 1918 he would have died a major, for he had attained eighteen years of age at midnight of the 31st December, although really 48 hours short of two minutes will be wanting from the instant of his birth. This is in accordance with the rule that law generally ignores fractions of a day.

"Guardian" defined. 54. Guardian means a person having the care of the person of another or of his property or of both.

825. Analogous Law.—This definition is adapted from S. 4 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act (4) where it is limited to a minor. But since a Hindu husband is the natural guardian of his wife, the definition here has been enlarged to include such guardianship.

Three classes of guardians.

55. (1) A guardian may be natural, testamentary, or one appointed by the court.

(1) Sadholal v. Murlidhar, 29 A 672 F.

B. (3) V of 1881; Ganeshilal v. Surajmal, (1903) P.R. 89.

(2) VIII of 1890.

(4) VIII of 1890.

(2) A natural guardian is one who is entitled under the personal law to which he is subject to act as the guardian by virtue of his relationship to the minor. Such guardian is also called a de facto guardian.

(3) A testamentary guardian is one so appointed by the father in his will for his children.

(4) The court may appoint or declare a guardian in accordance with the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act <sup>(1)</sup> or the High Court might do so in the exercise of its inherent power. The guardian so appointed may be called the certificated guardian. He is also called a de jure guardian.

Synopsis.

- (1) Different classes of guardians (2) Certificated guardian (823). (822).

826. Analogous Law.—A natural guardian is one who derives his status from the fact of his relationship to the minor. Till he is declared appointed or superseded by an order of the court, he remains both the de facto and the de jure, guardian of the minor. As such, the father, in his absence the mother, and in the absence of both, the elder brother is recognized as the natural guardian. But where these are not available the same office devolves on his nearest paternal relative and after him on his nearest maternal relatives. But except in the case of the parents, the rule as to guardianship is not inflexible and any relation interested in the welfare of the minor may assume his guardianship and till his status is questioned, he remains his lawful guardian and is entitled to exercise all the rights and subject to all the liabilities of guardianship.

827. It is also lawful for an adult father to appoint a guardian for his children by his will. In that case the testamentary guardian acquires the sole right in supersession of all other guardians to guardianship of the minor. Any one disputing his right must then move the court for his removal. Such appointment must, however, be only made by the father, and as his testamentary capacity is subject to the age prescribed in the Indian Majority Act it follows that no father who has not completed his eighteenth year is competent to make a will <sup>(2)</sup> or by his will appoint a guardian of his children after his death. Where moreover, the father was himself subject to the Guardians and Wards Act then his incapacity to make a will or appoint a guardian for his children would be further prolonged till he has completed his 21st year. <sup>(3)</sup>

828. Both natural and appointed guardians are however, liable to be superseded by a guardian appointed by the court in accordance with the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act <sup>(4)</sup> which however, does not entitle the court to wholly ignore them (§ 842). Since such appointment or declaration is by a certificate issued in favour of the guardian <sup>(5)</sup> the latter is ordinarily called "certificated guardian."

(1) VIII of 1890.

(888).

(2) Harduani Lal v. Gomi, 8 A.L.J. 885

(3) VIII of 1890.

followed in Gulab v. Thakore Lal, 16 B. 622.

(5) Rambhaji v. Harnarain, (1889) P.R.

(6) Harduani Lal v. Gomi, 8 A. L. J 885

105.

OF NATURAL GUARDIANS.

56. The following relations are the natural guardians of the person and property of a minor in the order mentioned below, namely :—

Natural guardians

(a) The father.

(c) The paternal relations.

(b) The mother.

(d) The maternal relations.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Natural guardians (829).                                     | (9) Stepmother, competency of (838).                                 |
| (2) Their position under the Guardians and Wards Act (830-831).  | (10) Claim of paternal relations (839-841).                          |
| (3) Father's right (832).  | (11) Appointment of guardian by court (842).                         |
| (4) Competition between adopted father and natural father (833). | (12) Grounds of unfitness (843).                                     |
| (5) Guardianship of illegitimate children (834).                 | (13) Parents' claims (844-845).                                      |
| (6) Guardianship of converts (835).                              | (14) Comparison between English and Hindu Law (846).                 |
| (7) Father's right to appoint guardian (836).                    | (15) Mother as guardian (847).                                       |
| (8) Mother's right of guardianship (837).                        | (16) Claims of other relations (848).                                |
|   | (17) Natural claims when subordinated to welfare of the minor (849). |

829. Analogous Law.—Both the English and Hindu Law declare the sovereign as the guardian of all infants. (1) The authority of the sovereign is now exercised by the courts whose authority being quasi parental (2) must be used in the best interest of the minor, whose welfare should be its paramount concern subject only to the legal rights of persons whom the law acknowledges as the natural or preferential guardians. (3) But in this respect the Guardians and Wards Act is stated to have modified the pre-existing rule of Hindu Law which recognized an absolute right in the father and the mother. The law now qualifies this absolute right by subordinating it to the minor's welfare. (4) But nevertheless it cannot ignore their claim. Their predominant right still remains though if they be unfit, the court is free to supersede them for a sufficient reason. But this is in view of the statutory enactment, merely reduced to a rule of practice.

830. The act merely saves the personal law so far as it relates to an appointment by the father (5) and recognizes the predominant claims of the father and the husband whom it is bound to appoint unless they are declared to be unfit. (6) Clause 1 is based on S. 8; clause 2 on Ss. 6 and 7 (3), clause 3 partially on S. 19 and the rest on case-law; clauses 4 and 5 on S. 17 and clause 6 on a recent Bombay case. (7)

831. The Guardians and Wards Act saves from its operation the Hindu personal law so far as it relates to any power to appoint a guardian of a minor's person or property or both. It does not save any rule which, apart from appointment, vests the right of guardianship of one person over another. Consequently it is competent to the court to remove a natural guardian, even though the father, and appoint another in his place (8) the result

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Manu VIII-27.                      | 191.   |
| (2) Skinner v Orde , 14 M. I. A. 309   | (5) S. 6, Act VIII of 1890.                    |
| (329)   | (6) Ib. S. 19.                          |
| (8) Basanta v. Chedilal , 40 C. 241;   | (7) Achral Lal v. Chimanlal , 40 B. 600 |
| In re Joshy tasam 23 C. 290.           | (605).   |
| (4) Bhikno v. Chamelakoer , 2 C. W. N. | (8) Bindo v. Shamal , 29 A. 210.        | being that a guardian may be appointed under the personal law independently of the Act or under the Act ; but unless there has been such appointment, any party may have recourse to the provisions of the Act for such appointment. Now since the right to appoint a guardian apart from the Act, is held only to reside in the father when making a will, it follows that his right to appoint a guardian is only then absolute: otherwise the guardian whoever he be, is always liable to be superseded by an appointment by court under the Act.

832. With these necessary qualifications the father may be said to possess

(1) Father's right. the best claim for his appointment as guardian of his minor children.<sup>(1)</sup> And without such appointment he is their guardian both of his natural children and adopted son. <sup>(2)</sup> And he does not lose that right even by his conversion to Christianity <sup>(3)</sup> though the court has the power to remove him from his guardianship if it finds it prejudicial to the welfare of the minor. Such was the case of the daughter aged 10 whom the court refused to withdraw from the custody of her maternal grandmother to be made over to the father who had re-married and thereby place her under the control of her stepmother, a stranger to her. There was nothing against the father but the court based its decision solely upon what it considered to be for the welfare of the minor. <sup>(4)</sup> But this case was dissented from in Madras where it was pointed out that it did not discriminate sufficiently between the case of parents and other relations, since the parents have a legal right to be appointed guardians of their children and unless they are shown to be wholly unfit, they cannot be superseded in favour of a more distant relative. The mere fact that he had re-married is no ground for rendering him ineligible <sup>(5)</sup> though the fact that the father was not during the mother's life-time on good terms with her, had re-married and had practically deserted both the child and its mother, was possessed of no means to maintain it and was living beyond the jurisdiction of the court, would be sufficient to neutralize his legal right in favour of the grandmother with whom the child was living and who was treating it as her own. <sup>(6)</sup> Such was also the case of the Kulin Brahmin with his numerous wives whom he visited after lengthened absence whom the court did not regard as such natural guardian as the mother of their daughter. <sup>(7)</sup> It seems that under the Mitthila Law the mother is the acknowledged guardian of all her children whether male or female. <sup>(8)</sup>

833. As already stated, a boy on adoption completely passed into the family of his adopted father who is then his natural pre-ferential guardian even against his natural father, who with the adoption resigns all his parental connection, control and authority but where in the absence of the adopted father the natural father acted for his son and effected a compromise on his

(1) S. 19 (b) Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890); Lachmi Narayan v. Balaram, 2 Pat. L. J. 190; 39 I. C. 652; Appan v. Srinivasa, 40 M. 1122; Subramania v. Ammayee, (1915) M. W. N. 414; 29 I. C. 740; same under Buddhist Law. Mathlin v. Maung Po, 8 Bur. L.T. 73; 29 I. C. 890.

(2) Iakshmibai v. Shridhar, 3 B. 1; Sree Narain v. Kishen Soondery, 11 B. L. R. 171 (191) P. C. S. C.; Nugendo v. Kishensoondery, 19 W. R. 183 (189) P. C.

(3) Machen v. Arzon 5 W. R. 285.

(4) Bindo v. Sham Lal 29 A. 210.

(5) Subramania v. Ammayee, (1915) M. W. N. 414; 29 I. C. 740; Andiappa v. Nallendran, 22 M. L. J. 443

(6) Muthuveerappa v. Ponnuiswami, 22 M. L. J. 68; 13 I. C. 16; Ganga Narain v. Kaunsilla, 11 A. L. J. 209; 19 I. C. 65.

(7) Modhusordun v. Jadub Chunder, 3 W. R. 194.

(8) Jussoda v. Lallah Netiya Lal 5 C. 43.

behalf and for his benefit, the court held the compromise good as the natural father was a proper guardian to assert the right of his son as adopted heir against a rival claimant. (1)

In another case, the claim of the natural father, was on the death of the adopted father, sustained in preference to the latter's relations and even daughters, on the ground of his natural affection for his child. (2)

834. An illegitimate child, is in the eye of the law, nobody's child and the natural guardian of such children is their mother (3)
Illegitimate child. unless the child was born in continuous concubinage, when, probably, the ordinary rule would apply. But as observed by Lord Herschell, "it is no longer important to enquire what are the rights of the mother in relation to an illegitimate child at common law. All the courts are now governed by equitable rules, and empowered to exercise equitable jurisdiction." (4) In other words, the question in such cases is not whether the mother should possess the child, but what would be for the benefit of the child. Consequently, though the mother is the guardian of her illegitimate children, the court would not consign them to her care if she is leading an immoral life and is likely to corrupt their morals. (5) On the other hand where the child is too young to be removed from her care the court would tolerate her guardianship till it can safely place it in better hands.

835. Neither the conversion of the father (6) nor that of his children to Christianity (7) deprives the one of his natural right of guardianship over the other. No doubt, where the child has obtained sufficient maturity of intellect and discretion, he should be consulted and due regard paid to his wishes; but it has been held that a child below 14 is not one who, in the eye of the law, has acquired the requisite intelligence and discretion to elect for himself whether or not he will return to his parent. (8)

836. The father has moreover, the right of appointing a guardian for his children after his death. As already remarked, in this respect his power is absolute (§ 831). He may exclude even the mother from the guardianship. (9) But this power of appointment can only be made by a will and it must be confined to a guardian as distinguished from a trustee whose appointment stands on a different footing. (10) But as the Privy Council observed, his guardianship is in the nature of a sacred trust, and he cannot, therefore, during his life-time substitute another person to be guardian in his place. He may entrust their custody and education to another person, and the

(1) Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya, 9 B. 365 (867).

(2) Ganga Prasad v. Nara Kanta, 15 C. W. N. 558; 7 I. C. 284.

(3) Venkanma v. Savitramma, 12 M. 67 (68, 69); Saithri In re, 16 B. 307 (317); Maneya v. Felix Slyn, 5 Bur. L. T. 164; 17 I. C. 986.

(4) Barnado v. Mc Hugh, (1891) A. C. 888 (898).

(5) Venkanma v. Savitramma, 12 M. 671; In re G (Infants) (1889) 1 Ch. 719.

(6) Kuchoo v. Arsoo, 5 W. R. 235.

(7) Himnath Bose, In re 1 Hyde. 111; Q. v. Nesbitt Perry's, C. 108 (108); Q. v. Fletcher, 1b, p. 109; Reade v. Krishna, 9 M. 391; Sarat Chandra v. Forman, 12 A. 213, Saithri in re 16 B. 307.

(8) Saithri in re 16 B. 307 (318).

(9) Raj Lakhee v. Gokool Chunder, 18 M. 1 A. 909; Soobah Pirthe Lal v. Soobah Doorga Lal, 7 W. R. 78; Mahabeswar v. Ramachandra, 15 Bom. L. 882 (889); in Budhilal v. Morarji, 31 B. 418 (418) the point was not decided.

(10) Harilal v. Bai Mani, 29 B. 351.

authority he thus confers is a revocable authority, and if the welfare of his children require it, he can, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, take such custody and education once more into his own hands. If, however the authority has been acted upon in such a way as, in the opinion of the court exercising the jurisdiction of the crown over infants, to create associations or give rise to expectations on the part of the infants which would be undesirable in their interest to disturb or disappoint, such court will interfere to prevent its revocation. (1)

The father's right to appoint only extends to his own children and not to any other relation such as a nephew. (2)

837. Next to the father, the mother (3) is entitled to the guardianship of her minor children, but unlike the father she does not possess the power of appointment. Her remarriage does not deprive her of the guardianship of her son (4) though the court may apply a different rule if she has young daughters and a strange stepfather, or if she was leading an immoral life. (5)

The fact that the mother is a pardanashin is no objection to her eligibility (6) unless it will interfere with her duties, as if she is a young widow, or only a stepmother, and the estate is large which will have to be managed by her father,—who is himself in embarrassed circumstances, and there is a reasonable fear of the estate being squandered. (7)

838. As to the stepmother's right of guardianship, Manu declares: "If among all the wives of the same husband, one bring forth a male child, Manu has declared them all, by means of that son to be mothers of male issue." (8) Following the verse it was held in some old cases that a stepmother is the legal guardian of her stepson in preference to the paternal uncle (9) though in a Bengal case her right was generally doubted and denied in preference to the paternal grandmother. (10) But it has since been held that a stepmother is a competent guardian. (11)

839. Next to the parents, the right of guardianship is said to vest in the paternal relations of the minor in preference to his maternal relations (12) but neither has any paramount right, and the court is free to appoint any one it considers competent to take the place of the child's parent. (13) So it was observed, "The mere legal rights to be appointed a guardian, the preference of the minors, and the existing or previous relations, are very

(1) Besant v Narayaniah, 88 M. 807 (819)
P. C. following Lyons v Blain, Jac. 245.

(2) Dhanpat Ram v. Premsingh, (1911) P. L. R. 220; 12 I. C. 452.

(3) Jogo v. Codal, 4 N. L. R. 20; Ganga; Prasad v. Jais, 15 C. W. N. 379; 10 I. C. 69; Fatma v. Rani, (1915) P. L. R. 110; 28 I. C. 587.

(4) Bindo v Shamlal 29 A. 210.

(5) Venkamma v. Savitramma 12 M. 67 (68,69); following R. v. Clarke 7 E. and B. 18; Skinner v. Orde 14 M. I. A. 309; Harmar v. Partalu, (1911) P. L. R. 67.

(6) Jaiwanti v. Gajadhar, 38 C. 783.

(7) Sundarmani v. Gokulanand, 18 C.W. N. 160; 16 I. C. 900.

(8) Manu 1X-188.

(9) Jukmee v. Umar Chund, 2 B. S. D. R. 14; Nunko Lal v. Sohodra, 1827 S. D. A. N. W. P. 115; Vyastha Darpan, p. 563; W. Mac H. L. 105 following the first case.

(10) Ram Bunsee v. Sooth Kconwaree, 7 W. R. 321 (325).

(11) Sundarmani v. Gokulanand 18 C. W. N. 160 (169); Muthu Veerappa v. Ponnuswami, 22 M. L. J. 68; 13 I. C. 16.

(12) Gulbai (Re), 32 B. 50.

(13) Kristo Kissors Neoghy v. Kadermoye, 2 C. L. R. 585.

minor considerations as compared with the main question, what order would be for the welfare of the minor? In making orders appointing guardians for the persons of minors, the most paramount consideration for the judge ought to be, what order under the circumstances of the case, would be best for securing the welfare and happiness of the minors? With whom will they be happy and who is most likely to contribute to their well being and look after their health and comfort? Who is likely to bring up and educate the minors in the manner in which they would have been brought up by the parents if they had been alive? In fact the main question for the court to consider in the case of the unfortunate minors who have lost their natural guardians is, who amongst the relations, or for the matter of that, friends of the minors, can you select who will supply as nearly as possible the place of their lost parent or parents." (1) But the nearness of relationship of the guardian to the minor is always germane to the discussion, because near relations feel natural love and affection for the minor which insures his welfare. (2)

As such the minor's elder brother ranks next in affection after the parents and he is placed in a class apart from the rest of his paternal relations. (3)

840. After the brother the paternal lineal relations and after them, the maternal lineal relations are held qualified to act as guardians. But their claim is so slender that the court does not weigh it in golden scales, placing before it the broad question, which amongst the several claimants would treat the minor kindly and study his welfare, in short, who will be his best appointed parent.

841. Consequently, the courts have preferred a maternal grandmother to a paternal grandfather (4) and a father's mother to a paternal granduncle, (5), a maternal uncle to a paternal uncle, (6) a maternal grandmother to a paternal grandfather's brother, (7) a mother's sister to a father's brother, (8) in all of which the court regarded welfare of the minor as more important than the propinquity of the claimants. It was also pointed out that except the parents of the minor, no other relation had the same legal right to be a guardian of the minor whose welfare must be the paramount consideration for the court, though due regard will always be paid to the rights of blood relations and failing them, to other relations who by reason of their kinship are likely to take more care of the minor than mere strangers who, however, are not wholly disqualified on that account.

842. Appointment of a guardian by court.—The law of guardians is now consolidated in the Guardian and Wards Act which supersedes Hindu Law so far as it is not expressly or by necessary implication saved by it. The limits of this saving clause are set out in the last paragraph.

(1) Kulbai (Re) 92 B 50 (54) following Bindo v. Sham Lal 29 A 210

(2) Kristo Kissors Neoghy v. Kadermoye, 2 C. L. R. 588 (586); Bhikno v. Chamela, 2 C. W. N. 191

(3) 1 Mac. H. L. 103, 104; 1 Str. H. L. 71; Kristo Kissors Neoghy v. Kadermoye, 2 C. L. R. 583; Bhikno v. Chamela, 2 C. W. N. 191; Thayammal v. Kuppamma, 38 M. 1125.

(4) Ambo v. Ganga Sahai, (1913) P. L. R.

193 18 I C 141.

(5) Venkatasan v. Ethirajammal, 5 M. L. T. 208; 4 I. C. 1117.

(6) Bairjnath v. Emp. 1 O. L. J. 416; 25 I. C. 840

(7) Buta v. Bhagan, (1918) P. W. R. 45; 19 I C. 609.

(8) Fulkumari v. Buañ Singh, 18 C. W. N 1198; 25 I. C. 112.

Apart from those express exemptions, S. 17 enacts that "in appointing or declaring a guardian of a minor the court shall, subject to the provisions of this section be guided by what, consistently with the law to which the minor is subject, appears in the circumstances to be for the welfare of the minor." In other words, while the court has to pay due regard to the welfare of the minor it must do so "consistently with the law to which the minor is subject," which means that its order must not ignore the claims of the minor's legal guardians, though it is not bound to treat them as sacrosanct.

843. A person otherwise eligible cannot be condemned as unfit on the ground of his extreme youth<sup>(1)</sup> or old age. The unfitness must be found by proving specific acts of mismanagement. <sup>(2)</sup>

844. But both under the Hindu as well as under the English law, the claims of the parents to guardianship of their children are regarded as absolute. Consequently, where they are alive, their legal claims must be considered, and though they may be rejected for sufficient reason they cannot be ignored. As between the parents the father has undoubtedly an absolute right and the Act recognizes this fact in enacting that he must be appointed the guardian unless he is found to be unfit. The Act does not define this term, but it is apparent that his unfitness must be relative to his duties as the guardian of his minor son.

845. Such has been held to be the case where the father had practically deserted his religion and his object was to get his child converted to Christianity<sup>(3)</sup> or where the father had got the child converted to Christianity and the mother after three years, applied with the object of getting her to renounce Christianity.<sup>(4)</sup>

846. The English and Hindu laws of guardianship to a large extent coincide. Both under the Hindu Law and the English Law, the father is the guardian by nature of his minor children and at common law he is entitled to the custody of them against all the world, even including the mother.<sup>(5)</sup> And so under both laws, on the death of the father the mother is the natural guardian of her children, but at law she has no right to interfere with them against a testamentary guardian appointed by the father.<sup>(6)</sup> Equally under both laws the mother is prima facie the natural guardian of her illegitimate children, and therefore under ordinary circumstances entitled to their custody,<sup>(7)</sup> and thus her right must be recognized unless there are strong grounds for displacing her.<sup>(8)</sup> But it is not an absolute right; nor can she transfer her right to another person.<sup>(9)</sup> It is not the practice of the court in either country to appoint or declare a guardian of a minor who has no separate property of his own.<sup>(10)</sup> In England the Guardianship and Infants Act,

(1) Rangubai v. Gopal, 5 Bom. L. R. 542.

(2) Rindabai v. Girdharlal, 4 Bom. L. R. 799.

(3) Mokoondal v. Nobodip, 25 C. 881.

(4) Albrecht v. Bathee, 22 M. L. J. 247; 18 I. C. 458

(5) Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort, (1827 2 Russ. 21 : 38 E. R. 296.

(6) Eyre v. Countess of Shaftesbury (1722) 2 P. Wms. 103 (115); 24 E. R. 659.

(7) Larcys (In re) 1860 11 Ir. R. 298.

(8) R. v. Nash, Barnardo v. McHugh, (1891) A. C. 399

(9) Ullee In re, 53 L. T. 711

(10) Humphreys v. Polak (1891) 2 K. B. 385.

1886 <sup>(1)</sup> now regulates the appointment of guardians as the Guardians and Wards Act <sup>(2)</sup> regulates their appointment here. In both countries the common law has been brought under the control of the statute and the leading principles of English Law will be found to have crept into the rules which the courts now enforce as the acknowledged rules of Hindu Law. And this was to be expected, since Hindu Law has no developed system of guardianship and English Law naturally fills in the void as embodying the rules of justice, equity and good conscience.

847. The right of the mother to the guardianship of her children is inferior only to the father, and though it cannot be compared in point of strength to his right, it is nevertheless a legal right which for obvious reason may prevail even against him in the case of an infant in arms but as the child is weaned and old enough to be independent of her nursing, she must submit to the father's will as regard its management and care. But in his absence, her legal right can neither be ignored nor passed over in favour of another person on the ground of his superior fitness. Even if she is 18 years old, it is no ground for superseding her. <sup>(3)</sup> In certain matters, e.g., the selection of a suitable husband for her daughter she is entitled to and obtains a determining voice <sup>(4)</sup> and in the Mithila country, she is entitled to the guardianship of her children adversely to her husband. <sup>(5)</sup> So also is the guardian in respect of her illegitimate children, though, as already stated, this is a right which may be overborne by a consideration of the minor's welfare (§ 834). Her conversion or remarriage is not a disqualification for guardianship <sup>(6)</sup> but the court may regard it as a circumstance detracting from the minor's welfare. <sup>(7)</sup>

848. Claim of other relations.—After the parents, Hindu Law places the paternal and then the maternal relations preferring lineal to collateral relations. But in practice, the elder brother stands next only to the parents, and after him the court regards no one's claim more paramount than the welfare of the minor which determines its choice and in a choice between fitness and propinquity, the former prevails. <sup>(8)</sup> As Sir Richard Garth, C. J. said "The child belongs to the parents, but does not belong to its relatives. The affection of the parents is generally so strong, that kind treatment may safely be presumed, until special circumstances leading to a contrary presumption are proved. The kind treatment of another person's child by a relative, however near, cannot be so certainly relied upon as in the case of a parent. On the other hand, there are often, in the case of relations claiming to be guardians of children, conflicting considerations which it is impossible to overlook. The nearer relations are generally those who would succeed to the child's share of the property, if the child died; and to ignore this consideration altogether, would be contrary to the Hindu Law." <sup>(9)</sup>

The sons of the paternal grandmother by another husband are no relations of the minor qualified to be his guardian. <sup>(10)</sup>

(1) 49 & 50 Vict. C. 27 S. 3 (1).

(2) Act VIII of 1890.

(3) Rangubai v. Gopal, 5 Bom. L. R. 542.

(4) Acha v. Acha, 21 M. L. J. 600; 11 C. 570.

(5) Jusoda v. Lalla Nettiylall, 5 C. 48.

(6) Ganga Pershad v. Jhalo, 38 C. 862.

(7) Skinner v. Orde, 14 M. I. A., 309 (323).

(8) Akima v. Azeem, 9 W. R. 334; Sohna v. Khalak Singh, 13 A. 78; Birode v. Bholanath, 26 I. C. (C.) 300; Mashin v. Maunqchit Pan, 2 L. B. B., 408.

(9) Kristo Kissor v. Kadermoye, 2 C.L. J. 588 (587) followed in Nirode v. Bholanath, 26 I. C. (C.) 302 (302).

(10) Sita Ram v. Inkhla 6 C.P.L.R. 15.

849. The adoptive father is the natural guardian of his adopted son and is entitled to preference over the natural father, and on his death his own relations are naturally entitled to guardianship. But the courts do not regard this artificial relationship as a sufficient assurance of the minor's welfare, and on death of the adoptive father they prefer to appoint the son's natural father as his guardian. <sup>(1)</sup> On the same ground the court preferred to appoint the father as the guardian of his widowed daughter, though her natural guardian would have been her husband's relations. <sup>(2)</sup>

Where natural claims subordinated to welfare.

57. (1) Neither remarriage, conversion nor loss of caste is any disqualification to act as a guardian.

(2) Where a Hindu child becomes converted to an alien faith it is for the court to consider whether it would for the welfare of the child that it should be restored to its parents.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Disqualification for guardianship (850). | sion (854).  |
| (2) Remarriage of father (851).              | (5) Guardian of minor co-parcener of a joint Hindu family (855). |
| (3) Conversion of father (852).              | (6) Guardianship of converted child (856-857).                   |
| (4) Mother's remarriage and conver-          |   |

850. Analogous Law.—All the facts mentioned in the section would have been insuperable obstacles to guardianship under Hindu Law, but they have all been removed by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act, 1850, which has abrogated any law or usage in force in British India which inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property by reason of his or her renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion or being deprived of caste. <sup>(8)</sup>

851. The effect of the parents' conversion has already been incidentally considered in the foregoing discussion (§ 832). It has been there seen that the father has the inherent right to the guardianship of his children, both male and female, and that that right cannot be ignored merely because he has remarried or has forsaken his religion. This is undoubtedly the law. <sup>(4)</sup> But the fact that the father has been remarried or become a convert to an alien faith cannot be altogether ignored, if his right to guardianship is challenged in Court. The question would be solved not with reference to its legality but with reference to its propriety in a given case.

If, for instance, the child is a daughter and the father had practically abandoned it, having lived apart from its mother whose relations had brought her up, the court though conceding the father's legal right may yet deem it

(1) Ganga Prasad v. Hora Janta, 15 C. W. N. 558; 7 I. C. 284.

(2) Tota Ram v. Ram Charan, 7 A. L. J. 1149.

(3) XXI of 1850; Muchoo v. Arsoon, 5 W. R. 285; Kanhai Ram v. Biddya, 1 A. 549;

Kubera v. Jirai, 28 A. 233; Gul Mohamed v. Wajirugam, (1901) P. L. R. (167)

(4) Narayan v. Luxmeebase (1850-1) Morris S.R. 61; Sham Singh v. Santa Bai, 25 B. 551 (555); Muchoo v. Arsoon, 5 W. R. 285.

expedient that his daughter should not be torn away from her familiar surroundings to be placed in the strange company of a stepmother (§ 845).

852. So again where the father becomes a convert to Mahomedanism or Christianity, he does not forfeit his paternal right of guardianship of which he can be deprived only if the court is satisfied "not only that it has the means of acting safely and efficiently, but also that the father has so conducted himself, or has shown himself, to be a person of such a description, or is placed in such a position as to render it, not merely better for the children, but essential to their safety or to their welfare, in some very serious and important respect, that his rights should be treated as lost or suspended." (1) So where the daughter of a Chinaman was delivered by the father to a Mrs. Allen whose husband was a Chinese Christian and who herself was a Christian, the court on the application of the father for the custody of his child, refused to accede to his prayer holding that though as father he was the natural guardian of the child, her moral and intellectual well being required that she should not leave the family in which she was treated as a daughter of the house. (2) In another case the plaintiff originally a Hindu, abandoned his family residence and left his minor son in the custody of his grandfather, a Hindu, on whose death he began to live with his maternal uncle. He applied for custody and his application was refused by his paternal and maternal uncles. It appeared that the father was not well off, being dependent upon a Mission for his support, that he had practically abandoned the son, who being aged 12 or 13 expressed a desire against his conversion to Christianity which appeared to be the father's ulterior motive for getting himself appointed as his guardian which the court refused holding "that the father must be regarded as having abdicated his strict legal parental rights and that it would be a capricious, if not a cruel resumption of his paternal authority, if he could now compel his child to be brought up henceforth as a Christian which admittedly would be the result of handing over the child to the custody of his father". (3)

853. Two questions determine the course the court would take in such cases. If the child is old enough to make an election as to the custody in which it should like to be, then it is delivered into that custody; otherwise, the court has to decide as to what would be to its best advantage. (4)

In following this rule the court does not contravene any rule of Hindu Law for there is no rule on the subject in that law which remains unrepealed by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act (5) but follows the rule of equity taking its guidance from the English law which is on this subject based upon the natural principles of justice and right. (6)

854. The analogies furnished by the father apply with even greater force to the case of the mother, whose right to the guardianship of her children is not equal to that of the father. But Mother's remarriage and conversion. her remarriage is equally no insuperable obstacle to the assumption of her duties as the natural guardian of her children. But it cannot be forgotten that by her remarriage she herself passes into another control and the question is how far her own subjection to

(1) Per Knight-Bruce V C in Flynn, In re cited with approval in Joshy Assam, 28 C. 290 (297, 298).

(2) Joshy Assam, 28 C. 290 (297, 298).

(3) Mookond v. Nobodip 25 C. 881 (886).

(4) Saithri (In re) 16 B* 807; Sarat

Chandra v. Forman 12 A. 218; Rende v. Krishna 9. M. 391; Besant v. Narayaniah, 88 M. 807 P.C.

(5) Act XXI of 1850.

(6) Saithri (In re) 16 B. 807 (828). Besant v. Narayaniah, 88 M. 807 (819) P.C.

marital control will affect the performance of her obligations towards the children of her former husband. If, for instance, her children are of the female sex and are already in the safe keeping of other relations, the court will not order the removal as a matter of course merely on assertion of the legal right of the mother to their lawful guardianship unless it is convinced that the removal would be for their good.

The same rule applies to where she is converted to another religion. That fact does not in the slightest degree impair her right but if the court apprehends that she is demanding their custody with a view to convert them, the court may demand a satisfactory assurance that she would not get her minor children converted and otherwise place her on terms. (1)

855. Minor co-parcener.—In a joint Mitakshara family, the father and in his absence, the senior member is the manager and as such guardian of the interests of its several co-parceners. On the death of the father the mother becomes entitled to the guardianship of her children, but she is not entitled to the guardianship in respect of their proprietary interest in the joint family.

A guardian can only be appointed in respect of the minor's separate property. Where therefore, he possesses only a co-parcenary interest in the property of a joint Mitakshara family, no guardian is possible "on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such family is not individual property at all, and that therefore a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property." (2) In this view it is possible to appoint a guardian of all the joint property when all the co-parceners are minors (3) or the minor's property is prima facie separate though his separation be disputed. (4) In the former case as soon as any co-parcener comes of age the guardian must be removed and all the joint property handed over to him, notwithstanding the fact that other co-parceners are minors. (5) In the latter case the procedure of the Guardian and Wards Act being only temporary, it is competent to the party aggrieved by the order to show that the property in respect of which the court has appointed a guardian, is still joint and recover it as such. (6)

856. The religion which a child is presumed to follow is the religion of its father. If he was a Christian then the child must be brought up a Christian. So the Privy Council said: "A child in India under ordinary circumstances, must be presumed to have his father's religion and his corresponding civil and social status, and it is, therefore, ordinarily, and in the absence of controlling circumstances, the duty of a guardian to train his infant ward in such religion." (7)

Converted child.

(1) Dwijapada v. Bailean, 20 C.W.N. 608.

(2) Ghurbullah v. Khalaksingh (1903) 25 A 407 (416) P. C. Alkajikar v. Noru 85 M. L. J. 504; 34 I. C. 766; Kajikar Lakshmi v. Maru Devi 32 M. 189; Ramkishan v. Bati Ram, (1910) P. F. 28; 5 I. C. 887; Murlidhar v. Harilal, (1906) P. L. B. 165; Kuri Mal v. Bhanna Mal (1909) P. R. 43; 11 I. C. 745; Virupakshappa v. Nilganga 19 B. 309 F.B. Govind v. Moro (1875) B.P. J. 261; Sakararam v. Motiram (1881) B.P.J. 24; Vyankatray v. Mahadev (1882) B.P.J. 226; Samatsang v. Bavaji (1882) B.P.J. 404; Chhagan v. Ramchandra (1886) B. P. J. 275; Salikram v. Janika 40 C. 269; Gurja Mohersingh 16 A. W. N. 31; Gourah v. Gujadhur P. C. 259; Shamkuar v. Mahanada 19 C. 801; contra in Babaji v. Sheshgiri, 6 B 593; Manlal. In re 25 B 553 must be regarded as overruled by the Privy Council.

(3) Sandau v. Kamalakant, 15 I. C. (C) 434

(4) Gurappa v. Tayawa 40 B. 513.

(5) Virupakshappa v. Nilganga 16 B. 309 F. B. Bindaji v. Mathurabai 30 B. 150 (156); Ramachandra v. Krishnarao 32 B. 252

(6) Gurappa v. Tayawa 40 B. 513.

(7) Skinner v. Orde 14 M.I.A. 809 (823); but this is only the ordinary rule—In re Clarke, 21 Ch. D. 817. In re Naven (1891) 2 Ch. 299; In re McElrath, (1893) 1 Ch. 143 (142, 149) and the Court may depart from it for sufficient reason. In re McElrath, (1893) 1 Ch. 143 (149).

In this case one George Skinner was the illegitimate son of a native woman by a European father. He professed the Christian religion and was married to the appellant in a Christian Church according to the Christian rites. He was killed in the Mutiny in 1857. The appellant thereupon became a mistress of one John who was a Mahomedan convert from Christianity and herself became a convert to Mahomedanism.

In 1869 John withdrew Skinner's daughter then aged 13 from the Meerut school where she was being trained and treated as a Christian. On her removal from the school she was thrown into pardah and converted to Mahomedanism. On being questioned by the judge, the girl (then aged 14) said that she had become converted to Mahomedanism from choice and that she wanted to live with her mother. But the Privy Council held that it was very easy for a mother under such circumstances to procure from a young daughter the expression of a wish to remain with her and to become a Mahomedan like her, rather than continue a Christian and go to a strange school, that children prima facie follow the religion of the father and that as the child's father was a Christian it was the duty of the guardian to bring up all his children in that religion and in the result they affirmed the order placing her under a Christian guardian but recommended that she, the minor, should again be consulted and such orders might be passed as might be the best for her. (1)

The religion of the father here does not mean the religion which he might have newly adopted (2) but a religion which was his established religion.

857. So where the Hindu father had entrusted his minor daughter to a missionary by whom she was baptized at his instance and brought up for three years, after which the father died and the mother applied for her guardianship, the Court in rejecting the mother's application held that it was for the father to say in what religion his children should be brought up and that it would not be for the minor's welfare to accede to the mother's prayer for the guardianship of her daughter who had for three years been in charge of a Christian missionary and had been educated and brought up as a Christian. (3) A converse case was presented to a Calcutta Bench in which the father having become a convert to Christianity applied for the guardianship of his minor son aged 12 or 13 years who expressed a preference to remain a Hindu and with his maternal uncle whereupon the Court refused the father's application for guardianship. (4)

58. Where the minor is a member of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara Law the father, or in his absence, the elder brother or other senior male member of the family is entitled to the management of the whole co-parcenary property including the minor's interest.

Karta or guardian of co parcenary.

Synopsis.

(1) Guardianship of property of minor co-parcener (858).

858. Analogous Law.—It has been stated in S. 53 that a guardian can be appointed only of the separate property of a minor. As a member of a

(1) Ib., pp. 327-328

(2) Radhi Bai v. Vessanmal, 11 S.L.R. 17;
41 I.C. 571.

(3) Albrecht v. Bathee, 22 M.L.J. 247; 18 I. C. 453.

(4) Mokoond v. Nobodip, 26 C. 891 (886).

Mitakshara joint family, a minor co-parcener has no separate property of his own for which a guardian could be appointed. Being a member of the joint family his property is subject to the law of management of co-parcenary property. So long as he remains joint he is bound to submit to its joint management. Even if the property be mismanaged, the remedy is a suit for partition <sup>(1)</sup> and not the appointment of a guardian of his interest. As the Privy Council observed: "It has been well settled by a long series of decisions in India that a guardian of the property of an infant cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family. And in their Lordships' opinion those decisions are clearly right, on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such a family is not individual property at all and that, therefore, a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property." <sup>(2)</sup> But, of course, there is nothing in law to prevent the court from appointing a guardian of the person of a minor <sup>(3)</sup> although he may continue to be a member of the joint family.

As to the rights and liabilities of a manager see post under "Joint Property."

59. (1) A Hindu father may by his will, made orally

Father's power to appoint guardian
by will.

or in writing, appoint one or more persons to act as a guardian or guardians of his children after his death; and in doing so he may exclude even the mother from her natural guardianship. The mother, however, has not a similar power to appoint a guardian by will, though the court may pay regard to her wishes so expressed.

(2) Where more than one person are appointed guardians, unless the contrary is expressed or necessarily implied, it is competent to any one to accept the office though the others may disclaim or die.

(3) Any guardian accepting office cannot resign at will.

Synopsis.

(1) Testamentary guardian (859).

(2) Power of father to appoint (860).

859. Analogous Law.—The law of wills is novel to Hindu Law and has arisen out of the law of gifts. The father's power to appoint a guardian by will is consequently based, on no textual authority, but is one corollary of his acknowledged parental power over his own children established by a long series of cases. <sup>(4)</sup> It is equally established that this power is only inherent in

(1) Mahadev v. Loshman, 19 B. 99.

(2) Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (416) P. C.; Jhabhu Singh v. Ganga Bishan, 17 A. 529; Bandhu Prasad v. Dhurai, 20 A. 400; Gurja v. Moher Singh, (1896) A. W. N. 80; Sham Kuar v. Mohanunda, 13 C. 301; Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava, 19 B. 809 (where all the previous cases on the point are referred to.); Bindajee v. Mahurabai, 30 B. 152; Ramachandra v. Krishnarao, 32 B. 259; Kajigar v. Maru, 32 M. 139;

Murkhdhar, v. Harilal, (1906) P. L. R. 165; contra Manulal (In re) 25 B. 353 which must now be deemed to be overruled by the Privy Council.

(3) Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava, 19 B. 309.

(4) Piriheelal v. Doorgalal, 7 W. R. 73 (75); Budhilal v. Murarji, 31 B. 413; Mahableshwar v. Ramachandra, 15 Bom. L. R. 882.

the father. It is not possessed by the mother <sup>(1)</sup> and even as to the father it is a power of nomination which he can only exercise in his will to take effect after his death. He cannot substitute another person to be a guardian in his place during his life-time. <sup>(2)</sup> A person cannot appoint a guardian for any other relation, e.g., a nephew. <sup>(8)</sup> And since as regards his capacity to make a will he is subject to the Indian Majority Act it follows that he must be an adult within the meaning of that Act before he is competent to give such testamentary directions.

860. A father may, it is apprehended, appoint a guardian not only in respect of every child born, but en ventre sa mere at his death, whether born or conceived before or after the date of appointment <sup>(4)</sup> and the guardianship may be limited for any period before the minor attains his majority. But if the minor be a female her guardianship will ordinarily cease on her marriage when her guardianship is naturally transferred to her husband.

Clauses 2 <sup>(5)</sup> and (3) <sup>(6)</sup> are taken from the English law, being equally applicable to Hindus.

60. (1) The husband is the lawful guardian of his minor wife and is entitled to require her to live with him irrespective of her infancy.

Husband his wife's guardian.

(2) After the husband's death the guardianship of her person devolves on the husband's relations in preference to her paternal relations.

Synopsis.

- (1) Husband, lawful guardian of wife (2) Appointment of guardian by court (861-864). (865-866).

861. Analogous Law.—The following texts support the rule:—

Manu:—2 Day and night must women be held by their protectors in a state of dependence; but in lawful and innocent recreations, though rather addicted to them, they may be left at their own disposal.

3. Their fathers protect them in childhood; their husbands protect them in youth; their sons protect them in age; a woman is never fit for independence. <sup>(7)</sup>

Narad:—28. After the death of her lord, the relations of her husband shall be the guardians of a woman who has no son. They shall have full authority to control her, to regulate her mode of life, and to maintain her

29. When the husband's family is extinct, or contains no male, or when it is reduced to poverty, or when no one related to it within the degree of a Sapinda is left, the father's relations shall be the guardians of a woman. <sup>(8)</sup>

862. The husband's right to guardianship of his wife was recognized by the early text writers <sup>(9)</sup> and cases. <sup>(10)</sup> Even in one later case the High Court reversed the District Judge's appointment of the widow's brother and appointed her husband's sister's son as her guardian in consonance with Hindu Law. <sup>(11)</sup>

(1) Venkayya v. Venkata, 21 M. 401.

(2) Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807

P. C. (8) Dhanpat Ram v. Prem Singh, (1911)

P. L. R. 220; 12 I. C. 452.

(4) 17 Halsbury's L. E. 124.

(5) Eyre v. Shaftsbury, (Countess) 2 P. Wms. 102 (107).

(6) Spencer v. Chasterfield, (Earl) Amb. 146;

Re Grays, Minors (1891) 27 L. R. 1r. 609. A guardian may, however, disclaim before acceptance Ex parte Champney 1 Dick. 350; O'Keefe v. Casey 1 Sch. & Lef. 106.

(7) IX-2, 8.

(8) XIII 28, 29; 38 S. B. E. 196, cited in Daya Bhag XI 1-64.

(9) Mao. H. I. ii-208.

(10) Kishen Mohan v. Khettar Moni, 2 Jay 196; Kisar v. Gunga, 20 W. R. 207.

(11) Khudi Ram v. Bonwarilal, 16 C. 684.

But the court now is not likely to yield to a priori legal right without reference to the welfare of the minor.

863. The husband even if he be a minor <sup>(1)</sup> is the lawful guardian of his minor wife in preference to her parents and other relations, unless he is precluded by the usage of his caste from such a custody until his wife attains puberty. <sup>(2)</sup> This is the established rule of Hindu Law <sup>(3)</sup> and is recognized in the Guardians and Wards Act. <sup>(4)</sup>

864. Clause 2 is consequential on her renouncing her father's gotra and becoming affiliated as a member of her husband's family. <sup>(5)</sup> The subject has already been considered on the preceding pages to which the discussion here must be regarded as merely supplementary 865. Though the husband has naturally the right of guardianship over his wife, it is a right which might at any moment be challenged by an application made under the Guardian and Wards Act, when the question of his unfitness must be considered by the court. Where the husband has failed to obtain the custody of his wife by a civil suit he should not be appointed a guardian as it would then give the husband relief in a summary proceeding which he had failed to obtain in a regular suit. <sup>(6)</sup>

866. In this case the wife aged 16 who had become a convert to Mahomedanism refused to return to her Hindu husband who failed in a suit to obtain restitution of conjugal rights. He thereupon resorted to an application under the Guardian and Wards Act but the court refused to assist him in evading the consequence of a decree by appointing him the guardian of his wife's person, which it held, would be otherwise not in the interests of either party and would on the other hand lead to mutual unhappiness, since the wife would be treated as an outcaste in her husband's home and the husband was not likely to extend to her the affection which as a wife she had the right to expect. <sup>(7)</sup>

61. (1) Any relations or friend of a minor, or the Collector of the District in which the minor resides or has any property, may apply to the court for the appointment or declaration of a guardian and the court may, on being satisfied that it would be for the welfare of the minor, subject to the rules herein stated, appoint or declare a guardian.

(2) Where a guardian has been validly appointed by the father by his will, the court may not appoint or declare any other person as a guardian until he has been removed for any of the reasons stated in S. 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

(1) S. 21, Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890).

(2) Such is the practice in the Madras Presidency, Armuga v Vwaraghava, 24 M. 758.

(3) Suntosh v. Gera Pattuck 28 W.R. 22; Kateeram v. Gendhenee, ib. p. 178; Boochand v. Janokee 24 W. R. 228; S. C. 25 W.R. 386; Surjyamonni v. Kali Kanta 28 C. 37 (45). • •

(4) S. 19 (a), Guardians and Wards Act

(VIII of 1890).

(5) Mac. H. L. Vol. 1 Ch VII; Vol. II, Ch VII; Kesar v Ganga, 8 B. H. C. R. (Ac) 31; Khatel Monee v. Kishen Mohun 2 Hay 196; Khudi Ram v Bonwarilal 15 C. 584.

(6) Bhagwana v. Ramchand, (1911) P. L. R 231; 11 I. C. 145.

(7) Ib.

(3) Where any parent and in the case of a married female, her husband, is available, the court may not appoint any other guardian unless it finds that the parent or the husband is unfit to discharge the obligations of that office.

(4) Provided that in the case of other relations the Court will pay due regard to their natural claims to guardianship and may appoint any of them or some other person found best fitted to promote the minor's welfare.

(5) Provided further that where the minor has attained sufficient maturity of intelligence and discretion, it will consult him and pay due regard to his choice of a guardian but will not be bound to appoint his nominee if it finds any other person better fitted to promote his welfare.

(6) Any order passed by the Court acting under the Guardians and Wards Act may be set aside in a suit for the custody of the minor.

Synopsis.

- (1) Appointment of guardian by Court (867). (2) Unfitness of father (867).
(3) Welfare of the child (868).

867. The unfitness of the father to be the guardian of his minor children

Father's unfitness. must not be judged by the fact that some other person was better able to maintain and educate them. The question in his case is not whether the child would be better taken care of by another, but only in what way and to what extent the father had neglected his children. If he has habitually ill-treated, neglected or deserted them, waived his right or abdicated his office by consigning them to another person for their maintenance or education, then the court will not assist the father in enforcing his parental right of custody and control if it will be to the detriment of the child or interfere with his education or be averse to its expressed wishes. <sup>(1)</sup> But the fact that the father, a goldsmith by caste, was keeping a concubine in his house is no ground for refusing him the guardianship of his children as that circumstance, though an objection, was not so serious and gave as to justify the supersession of the father's legal right. <sup>(2)</sup> In one case after anxious consideration, an Allahabad Bench upheld the father's right to the guardianship of his daughter 11 years old whom he was about to marry to an old impotent man of seventy years. <sup>(3)</sup> But this case should not be regarded as a precedent.

868. Then again on the rule that a right once vested cannot be divested, the Madras High Court negatived the right of the father who had renounced the world by becoming a Sanyasi returning to his household to claim the

(1) Joshiy Assam 23 C. 290 (296); Mokoond Lal v. Nobodip, 25 C. 881; Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 M. 807 P. C.

(2) Kalidas v. Subbamma, 7 M. 2.

(3) Kanhai Ram, v. Biddya Ram, 1 A. 552 custody of his daughters aged 14 and 16 with a view to prevent their early marriages. (1)

869. The term "welfare" is used in this connection in its larger sense as implying a child's intellectual, physical, moral and religious well being (2) But the ties of affection should not be disregarded as they are generally conducive to his well being. (3)

62. One person may be appointed guardian of the person and another of the property : and two or more persons may be so appointed joint guardians of the person or of the property or of both.

870. Analogous Law.—This rule is abstracted from S. 15 of the Guardians and Wards Act. (4)

63. It is not competent to the court to appoint a guardian in respect of the property of a minor of which he has no present separate possession.

Court's jurisdiction when limited.

Synopsis.

(1) Guardian of property of minor (2) Court's jurisdiction to appoint, when limited (871).

871. Analogous Law.—This section lays down a general principle of which S. 55 furnishes an illustration, that there cannot be a guardian of a minor's estate when it is not in his possession. As Sir G. Jessel, M. R., observed, "I doubt whether the court has any power of its own to appoint a guardian of the estate of an infant whose estate is not in possession, the jurisdiction existing for the sole purpose of taking care of an infant's present property." (5) Following this case it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the Court had no jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of the estate of a minor where it was in the actual possession of trustees on his behalf, and the minor had no interest in the property beyond that of a beneficiary until he came of age. In that case the grandfather had in his will appointed certain persons as trustees for the management of his estate on his death for the benefit of the son of his predeceased son. The predeceased son's widow applied to the court under S. 10 of the Guardians and Wards Act for the appointment of a guardian to the minor's property. But both the District Judge and the High court refused her application holding that as the minor's property was in the hands of the trustees there was no property in possession for which a guardian could be legally appointed, and that if the trustees misbehaved, it was open to the minor to obtain redress in a regular suit. (6) The same view has been followed in Calcutta in a case in which the minor's estate had become vested in the executor of his father's will, whereupon the court held that no guardian of the property of the minor could be appointed so long as the executorship continued. (7)

(1) Muthusawmy v. Narayana, 21 M.L.J. 202; 8 I.C. 898 (897).

(2) In re McGrath, (1898) 1 Ch. 143 (148)

(3) VIII of 1890.

(4) Ib.

(5) In re Marquis of Salisbury, L.R. 20

Eq. 527 (528).

(6) Ashrafi Kuar v. Jai Narain, 6 I.C., (A) 861.

(7) Ganga Prasad v. Hara Kanta, 15 C.W.N. 558.

64. (1) The natural guardian of a minor's property possesses the power to transfer any portion of the minor's property in case of necessity or for the benefit of the estate.

(2) Provided that where the property comprises a family trade, the guardian has the power to transfer or pledge the property and credit of the firm for the ordinary purposes of that trade.

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Powers of natural guardian of minor's property (872) | minor (875).  |
| (2) Powers in respect of minor's trading business (873). | (5) De facto guardian's powers (876).                       |
| (3) Powers of certificated guardian (874).               | (6) Guardian and trustee (877).                             |
| (4) Power to compromise on behalf of                     | (7) Guardian not to enter on speculative enterprises (878). |
|  | (8) Necessity or benefit to minor (879)                     |
|  | (9) Liability of trading firm (880).                        |

872. Analogous Law.—The powers of the legal guardian of a minor's estate are closely comparable to those of the manager (other than the father) of a joint Mitakshara family. In the one case the guardian, as in the other the manager, is entitled to mortgage or sell the estate if justified by necessity, or benefit. (1) Whether manager or not, the father is, however, further entitled by reason of a text to alienate the joint property for the payment of his antecedent debts. (2)

873. Clause (2) is an exception, and is justified by the nature of the business which brings the minor in trade relations with the world at large, who in their ordinary commercial dealings cannot be expected to investigate the status of the family and its requirements on each occasion. This was clearly pointed out by Sausse, C. J. of Bombay in a case (3) which is now considered a leading case on the subject, and as such has been continuously since followed. (4)

874. The powers of a certificated guardian are thus not the same, but very much less as enacted in S. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. (5) He cannot without the previous permission of the court transfer any part of the property of the ward or lease it for a term exceeding five years, or for any term extending more than one year beyond the date on which the ward will cease to be a minor. (6) In a case in which the manager of a joint Mitakshara

(1) Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Babooec, 6 M. L. A. 393; Nandan v. Harikishen, 3 A. 535; Bhemsingh v. Lachlu, (1882) A. W. N. 70; Gharibullah v. Khalaksingh 25 A. 407; P. C. Hurry Mohan v. Gonesh Chander, 10 C. 828 F.B.; Mohanund v. Nafur Mondul, 25 C. 820; Nanti Chundor v. Bisheshwar, 25 C. 506; Rash Mona v. Soerjakanda, 82 C. 832. There is no distinction in principle between a mortgage or a sale Mohanund v. Nafur Mondul 25 C. 840 (825).

(2) See post "Joint family."

(3) Ram Lal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B. H. C.

R. (App.) 51.

(4) Joykarkso v. Nityanund 3 C. 738; Morris v. Verchozele 6 C. W. N. 429; Sanka v. Bank of Burma 21 M. L. J. 620, 11 I. C. 79 (and cases cited therein); Bishamber v. Fatchlal 29 A. 176; Raghnathji v. Bank of Bombay 34 B. 72; Ram Pertab v. Foola Bai, 20 B. 767.

(5) VIII of 1890.

(6) Ib. In Adhar Chanda v. Kirtibash 6 I. C. 638 the obiter to the contrary overlooks this distinction.

family was also the certificated guardian, the court held that his appointment by the court could not detract from his legal powers as manager, and that if he alienated the minor's property without leave of the court the alienation would not be invalid because it was made without leave since by agreeing to become a certificated guardian he did not cease to be the manager of the joint property. <sup>(1)</sup> But such a case is not likely to occur now since it is no longer competent to the court to appoint a guardian in respect of a mere co-parcenary interest. The question what constitutes a legal necessity is one which must depend upon the facts of each case. The performance of the father's funeral rites, <sup>(2)</sup> the payments of the father's debts, <sup>(3)</sup> the marriage expenses of the minor and the purchase of jewels for bridal presents, <sup>(4)</sup> the repairs to his property, <sup>(5)</sup> and maintenance of the minor, <sup>(6)</sup> are all instances of such necessity, to which many more could be added. So the guardian may alienate property for the benefit of the estate. <sup>(7)</sup> Where the mother entered into a contract for the sale of her minor son's immoveable property and the son having subsequently died, the mother succeeded to him as his heir whereupon the other party sued her for specific performance of her contract of sale the court threw out the suit holding that as the mother had no right to sell except for a legal necessity—and it was found against the plaintiff—and as she did not purport to sell the property as her own, the principle underlying S. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act was inapplicable, and the plaintiff had no equity which he could enforce against her in respect of a contract made by her for her minor son. <sup>(8)</sup>

875. Moreover, the rule here stated is subject to the provisions of other laws; e.g., S. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act. <sup>(9)</sup>

S 38, T. P. A Compromise.

The guardian is equally entitled to make a compromise on behalf of his ward. <sup>(10)</sup>

876. De facto guardian's power.—The powers of a natural or a de facto guardian are the same as those of a legal guardian. <sup>(11)</sup> Any act done by a de facto guardian would be equally binding on the minor if it is supported by necessity or benefit to the minor. <sup>(12)</sup> Such for instance, would be an alienation made by the guardian for repairs of the minor's property or other case of proved necessity.

877. Guardian and trustee.—A guardianship is sometimes spoken of as a sacred trust, but this is only so as regards the nature of the obligations necessary for the discharge of the two offices, but the powers of the guardian and the trustee are not co-extensive, those of the guardian being more limited than

<sup>(1)</sup> Ram Autar Singh v. Chowdhuri, Nursingh 3 C. L. J. 12.

<sup>(2)</sup> Nathu Ram v. Shilagan, 14 B. 562

<sup>(3)</sup> Murari v. Tayana, 20 B. 286.

<sup>(4)</sup> Kankipati v. Racherla, (1911) 2 M. W. N. 477.

<sup>(5)</sup> Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C. L. J. 586; 6 I. C. 638; Hurry Mohun v. Gonesh Chunder, 10 C. 828 (829) F. B.

<sup>(6)</sup> Soonder Narain v. Benud Ram, 4 C. 76.

<sup>(7)</sup> Mohanund v. Nafur Mondul, 26 C. 820 (822); Rajani Kanta v. Abinash Chandra, 2 I. C. (C.) 866.

<sup>(8)</sup> Rashmoni v. Surjakanla, 32 C. 832 (836).

<sup>(9)</sup> Rajani Kanta v. Abinash Chandra, 2 I. C. 866.

<sup>(10)</sup> Sarabjit v. Indarjit, 27 A. 203 (250); Nirvanaya v. Nirvanaya, 9 B. 365; Natesa v. Rama (1911) 2 M. W. N. 145, 10 I. C. (M) 221.

<sup>(11)</sup> Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C. L. J. 586 (588); 6 I. C. 638; Sham Chandra v. Tadadhar, 13 C. L. J. 277; Mahomedan Law different—Mata Devi v. Ahmad Ali 34 A. 213 (222) P. C.

<sup>(12)</sup> Amrit v. Manik, 12 B. H. C. R. 79; Keshav v. Doulat Khan, (1891) B. P. J. 147; Arunachala v. Chidambara, 13 M. L. J. 223; Adhar Chandra v. Kirtibash, 12 C. L. J. 586; 6 I. C. 638.

of the latter. A guardian can alienate only in cases of necessity or for an evident advantage of his ward, while the trustee is empowered to deal with the property in any case he considers reasonable and proper. (1)

878. The natural guardian of a minor must not enter into speculative or hazardous enterprises on behalf of his ward. And though he is entitled to continue the business of his ward, he must carry it on as a man of ordinary prudence avoiding obvious risks and probable losses. The minor's father in a case was a money lender. His guardian continued the business lending money to insolvent persons without security and subscribing to the capital of a new company. It appeared that in the course of the money lending business he had to lend money to persons who failed but there was no proof of any misconduct or want of care or prudence. It was held that in as much as the guardian had acted to the best of his ability, the minor could not hold him liable for losses suffered by him by reason of his guardian's failure to recover the debts advanced, but as regards his subscription to the capital of a new Mill company the success of which was a mere matter of speculation, he had acted beyond the scope of his authority and the minor was entitled to recover Rs. 10,000 which he had subscribed to the capital in exchange for the shares which were made over to the guardian. (2)

879. The minor is bound whether the transfer made on his behalf was either necessary or beneficial to him. A transfer may be necessary though it may not be beneficial to the minor as where his estate is sold to pay off an antecedent debt of the father or other debts incurred for purposes which the law regards as creating a just charge on the estate. (3) So a transfer may be beneficial to the minor though it may not be necessary. As was observed in a case, "Necessity seems to connote the idea of warding off an evil or the doing of something that cannot be avoided or of something which it is one's legal duty to do. To avoid the sale of a minor's property for a debt would be warding off an evil; conducting necessary repairs would also be an act of the same class. The maintenance of the minor would be a necessity, as something which cannot be avoided. Performing his father's funerals would be a necessity as an act which it is his duty to perform. But over and above all these acts that are necessary, there may be acts which are positively beneficial to the minor, and an alienation which would conduce positively to the benefit of the minor would be upheld apart from any necessity, unless, of course it is accompanied by other evil." (4)

880. Liability of a trading firm.—The general rules and restrictions applicable to persons dealing with a minor or with his property do not apply to a case where the minor inherits an interest in a trading partnership. In such cases the rule first laid down by Sausse C. J. (5) and consistently since followed (6) defines the

(1) Subbiah v. Rangiah 7 M. L. J. 191; Trusts Act (11 of 1882), S. 36.

(2) Bansidhar v. Gampallal 8 C. P. L. R. 95.

(3) Kaikhur Singh v. Roop Singh 3 N. W. P. H. C. R. 4; Hanuman Persaud Pandey v. Babooee, 6 M. J. A. 898; Babaji v. Krishnajeo, 2 B. 666; Sucaram v. Kalidas, 18 B. 631; Arunachala v. Chidambara, 13 M. L. J. 223.

(4) Vembu Iyer v. Srinivasa, 17 I. C. 609.

(5) Ram Lal v. Lakmichand, 1 B.H. C. R. (App.) 51 (71, 72).

(6) Jyokisto v. Nilvanund, 8 C. 788; Morrison v. Verchoyele, 6 C.W.N. 429; Sanka v. Bank of Burma 21 M. L. J. 620; 11 I. C. 79 (and cases cited therein); Ram Purtab v. Fooli Bai 20 B. 767; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay 34 B. 72; Bishambhar v. Fateh Lal, 29 A., 176; Jhiti Bai v. Tejnah 13 N. L. R. 109.

exact powers of the guardian or manager of such minor's property in the following terms :—

“Ancestral trade, like other Hindu property, will descend upon the members of a Hindu undivided family ; and we think that such a family can, by its manager or its adult members acting as managers, enter into co-partnership with a stranger.

“In carrying on such a trade, infant members of the undivided family will be bound by all acts of the manager, or the adult members acting as managers, which are necessarily incident to and flowing out of the carrying on of that trade, whether it be singly or with a co-partner.

“The power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade. Third parties, in the ordinary course of bona fide trade dealings, should not be held bound to investigate the status of the family represented by the manager whilst dealing with him on the credit of the family property.

“Were such a power not implied, property in a family trade, which is recognized by Hindu Law to be a valuable inheritance, would become practically valueless to the other members of an undivided family wherever an infant was concerned, for no one would deal with a manager, if the minor were to be at liberty on coming of age to challenge as against third parties the trade transactions which took place during his minority.

“The general benefit of the undivided family is considered by Hindu Law to be paramount to any individual interest, and the recognition of a trade, as inheritable property, renders it necessary for the general benefit of the family that the protection, which the Hindu Law generally extends to the interests of a minor, should be so far trampled upon as to bind him by acts of the family manager necessary for the carrying on and consequent preservation of that family property ; but that infringement is not to be carried beyond the actual necessity of the case.”

881. It has been however pointed in later cases that in such cases the liability of the minor must be confined to the extent of his interest in the firm and that his liability should not be extended to himself personally or to his other property unconnected with the firm. (1)

The subject will be found more fully set out in the sequel.

65. The natural guardian of a minor may enter into a contract or compromise on behalf of his ward and do all other acts which are reasonable and proper for the protection of his property and for his benefit.

Natural guardian may contract or compromise.

Synopsis.

- (1) Powers of natural guardian (882). (2) Contract or compromise by guardian (882). (3) Acknowledgment of liability (883).

882. Analogous Law.—A de facto or natural guardian possesses far larger powers than the legal or appointed guardian whose powers are defined by S. 27

(1) Sanka v. Bank of Burma, 21 M. L. J. 620 ; 11 I C. 79.

and limited by S. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. But for the special limitation, the two would possess the same powers. He is entitled to make any contract or compromise on behalf of his ward provided it is done in the bona fide interest of the ward. As was observed by Sir Richard Garth, C. J.: "It is now settled law that a Hindu widow fully represents the estate, and when the estate is pretty large it becomes necessary to enter into various contracts or transactions with third parties in the course of its management. Circumstances may be imagined where it would be manifestly unjust to hold that a particular contract which a Hindu widow found it necessary to make with a third party for the benefit of the estate was not binding upon the next heir after her death. Suppose the estate consists of sunderbund tracts in which periodical embankments are required to be constructed for their preservation. Suppose a Hindu widow in possession of such an estate engages workmen to construct an embankment on the condition of paying for the work after it was finished and suppose the death of the widow takes place just after the work was completed. It seems to me that it would be manifestly unjust to hold that the next heir succeeding to the estate would not be bound to pay for the work done out of that estate. On the other hand, cases may be supposed where it would be unjust to the next heir after the widow's death, to make him liable under a particular contract, though made by a Hindu widow in the course of the management of the estate. Suppose a Hindu widow engages a builder to make sundry improvements in the family dwelling-house while there is no necessity for such improvement, and dies after the work is finished. It seems to me that it would be unjust to hold that the next heir is liable to pay for the work done out of the estate though it is to a certain extent benefited thereby. It follows therefore, that in order to bind the next heir, it is not sufficient to show that the contract has conferred a benefit upon the estate; but it must be further established that the contract is of such a nature that a prudent owner in managing his estate would find such a contract necessary for the due preservation of the estate. A contract, therefore, which not only confers a benefit upon the estate, but is necessary for its good management, though made by a Hindu widow, is, in my opinion, binding upon the next heir after her death." (1)

883. In this view the guardian is entitled to execute a promissory note on behalf of his ward, and acknowledge any liability not barred by limitation. (2) He is also held to be the "agent duly authorized" for the purpose of S. 20 of the Limitation Act (3) but on this point the contrary has been laid down in some cases of the Calcutta (4) and Allahabad High Courts. (5)

Promissory Note : acknowledgment.

What acts bind minor.

66. The guardian may bind the minor in the following cases :—

(1) Hurry Mohun v. Gonesh Chunder, 10 C. 828 (829, 830) F. B.

(2) Sobhanadri v. Sriramulu, 17 M. 221. Kailasa v. Ponnukamm, 18 M. 456. Chinnaya v. Gurusutham, 5 M. 169 F. B. : Subramaniam v. Arumuga, 26 M. 390. Nathuram v. Shonu, 14 B 562: Amrit v. Manik, 10 B. 512 ; Annapagauda v.

Sangadiggappa, 26 B. 221 ; Bati Maharani v. Collector, 17 A. 198

(3) Annapagauda v. Sangadiggappa, 26 B. 221 (234).

(4) Chhatto, Ram v. Billo, 26 C. 51 ; Azuddin v. Lloyd 13 C. L. R. 112 ; Wajibun v. Kadir Bakh 13 C. 292.

(5) Tilak Singh v. Chhutta 26 A. 598.

(1) By entering into a contract charging the minor's estate.

(2) By acknowledging his debt before it is barred by time.

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Right of guardian to charge the minor's estate (885). | (3) What are necessities (887).                  |
| (2) Power to bind minor personally for necessities (886). | (4) Guardian's right to acknowledge debts (888). |

884. Analogous Law:—The powers of a Karta of a joint Mitakshara family must be distinguished from those of a guardian and of the latter, when he is a de facto guardian and when he is appointed by a will or by the court.

885. To a certain extent the powers of a de facto and a de jure guardian are identical. Both must, generally speaking, deal with the ward's property, as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with it if it were his own, and he may do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the realization, protection or benefit of the property <sup>(1)</sup> or for the maintenance of his ward. <sup>(2)</sup> The guardian is entitled to borrow money on the credit of his ward's estate for any purpose binding on the minor, such as for instance, the performance of the funeral rites of his father <sup>(3)</sup> or to pay off his father's debts, <sup>(4)</sup> to marry and maintain the minor, to purchase jewels to be presented to the minor's wife during marriage <sup>(5)</sup> and in fact on any of the heads of what is known as legal necessity. But he cannot make his ward personally liable by a simple contract debt; nor can such debt be recovered out of his estate unless it is charged <sup>(6)</sup> except where it is incurred for the minor's necessities, or is a trade debt which is subject to a different rule. <sup>(7)</sup> A guardian of a minor cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it. <sup>(8)</sup>

886. Minor's necessities.—The guardian is empowered to bind the minor personally by contracts entered into for necessities of the minor or of his estate. <sup>(9)</sup> Such liability is not affected by the fact that the loans were advanced at the instance of the guardian. "His contract on his behalf might be ineffectual like one entered into by himself, but the liability to discharge debts incurred for necessities would remain. The necessity for them would determine whether or not he was bound to repay them, and not we think, the reasonable belief of the borrower that they were for necessary purposes." <sup>(10)</sup> Where the promise is to pay money which has been expended for necessities, the estate of the minor may be liable not on the promise but because the money had been supplied. <sup>(11)</sup>

(1) S. 27 Guardians and Wards Act (VIII) to 1890.

(2) Nandan Singh v. Harkishen Singh, 3 A. 535.

(3) Nathu Ram v. Chhagan, 14 B. 562.

(4) Murari v. Teyana, 20 B. 286.

(5) Kankipati v. Racherla, (1911) 2 M. W. N. 477.

(6) Ranmalsingji v. Vadilal, 20 B. 61; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320.

(7) Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath 35 C. 320 (329). Ram Partap v. Footibai 20 B. 767. Sakrabhai v. Maganhai 26 B. 206 F. B.; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay, 34 B. 72; Jhifibai v. Tejmal

13 N. L. R. 100 (110 111).

(8) Patchu v. Vajula 36 M. L. J. 29 F. B.; Padma Krishna v. Nagamani 39 M. 915; Subbamma v. Arumuga, 26 M. 330; Pukaram v. Ramachandra 20 B. 767. Surendra Nath v. Atul Chandra 34 C. 892.

(9) Contract Act (X of 1872) S. 68; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath 35 C. 320 (328, 324).

(10) Ranmalsingji v. Vadilal 20 B. 61; Juggessur v. Nilambur 3 W. R. 217; Bhawal Singh v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (328).

(11) Sundararaja v. Pattanathusami 17 M. 306; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath 35 C. 320 (328).

887. The term "necessaries" must be understood with reference to Hindu Law. For instance the marriage of a sister is a "necessary" within the meaning of Hindu Law for which a minor's estate would be liable for the payment of money borrowed from another. (1) To a Hindu marriage is a prime necessity and a samskar (a religious sacrament) (2) the expense of which is a charge on the inheritance.

888. Guardian may acknowledge debt.—Though the guardian cannot revive a barred debt (3) he is competent to acknowledge it on behalf of his ward before it becomes time barred. (4) His authority to revive a barred debt depends upon the language of S. 25 of the Contract Act which enforces "a promise made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith, or by his agent generally or specially authorized in that behalf to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law of limitation of suits." (5) The position then depends upon whether the guardian is the minor's agent "generally or specially authorized" to promise to pay barred debts. Even where he is the manager of a joint family, he would appear to possess no power to revive such debt. (6) A fortiori guardian cannot possess such power.

The guardian cannot acknowledge a debt on behalf of his ward after he is dead. (7)

67. A guardian cannot contract in the name of a ward, so as to impose on him a personal liability.

Personal contract
by guardian.

Synopsis.

(1) Personal contract by guardian not binding on minor (889). (2) Charge distinguished (890).

889. Analogous Law.—This rule is based upon a decision of the Privy Council (8) decided upon the following facts: The guardian mother on behalf of her minor son sold certain villages rent free, personally covenanting both for herself and for her minor son, to indemnify the purchaser should any one disturb the purchaser, or should the Government assess any rent on the property sold. The Government having assessed the villages to revenue and cesses, the purchaser sued the minor after he came of age upon the covenant and his defence was that his guardian could not legally enter into any covenant so as to make him at any time personally liable—a contention which the

(1) Nandan Prasad v Ajudhia Prasad, 32 A 325 (328) F.B.; Vaikuntam v. Kallabhiran, 28 M 512.

(2) Kameswara v. Veerachurlu 34 M.422.

(3) Veerappa v. Muthusami, 7 M L. T. 388; Subbanarayana v. Narendra, 19 M 255

(4) S. 21 Lim. Act; Sobhanadri v. Sri-ramulu, 17 M.221; Subramania v. Arumuga, 26 M. 390.

(5) S. 25 (3) Contract Act.

(6) Chinnaya v. Gurunatham 5 M. 169 F.P.; Naikat v. Appaji, 20 B. 155; Copal-

narin v Muddomutty, 14 B.L.R. 21. But an executor of an administrator possesses such authority—Tilackchand v. Jitamel, 10 B. H. C. R. 206; Jethibai v. Pullibai, 14 Bom L. R. 1020 (1027)

(7) Yellappa v. Desayappa, 80 B. 218, in which (the Nazir had acknowledged a debt after his ward was dead).

(8) Waghela v. Sheikh Masludin, 11 B 551 P. C.; Tukeeran v. Ramachandra, 2 N. L. R. 25; Jitibai v. Tejmal, 18 N. L. R. 109,

Privy Council upheld, holding that it was so under the English law and as there was no rule of Hindu Law, "the matter must be decided by equity and good conscience, generally interpreted to mean the rules of English law, if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances." They then added: "They conceive that it would be a very improper thing to allow the guardian to make covenants in the name of his ward, so as to impose a personal liability upon the ward, and they hold that in this case the guardian exceeded her power so far as she purported to bind her ward." (1) The same principle underlay the decision in another case in which the father of a boy named Ganga had delivered his minor son to one Durga who promised to educate him and appoint him his heir. He brought him up and dying intestate, his widow contested his right to inherit and the Privy Council upheld her contention holding that there was no completed contract between Ganga and Durga, as Ganga could not make an agreement which should legally bind his son on attaining majority to remain with Durga, which was the sole consideration for Durga's promise to constitute him his heir. (2) But in such a case where a minor comes to court to have an account taken as between himself and an agent, the latter is entitled to deduct the advances made to the guardian for the benefit of the minor. (3)

890. Though the guardian cannot enter into a personal covenant on behalf of his ward, there is no law to prevent him from charging his estate. (4)

Charge distinguished.

68. (1) A transfer made by the guardian may be avoided by the minor, if it is wholly or partially unsupported by necessity or not for the benefit of the estate.

Transfer by guardian when void-
able.

(2) Provided that in the latter case, the alienee is entitled to restitution of the money paid for such necessity or benefit.

(3) Provided further, that where the bulk of the consideration is supported by legal necessity, the court may, instead of setting aside the transfer, order payment to the transferor such consideration as is not supported by necessity or benefit.

Synopsis.

- (1) Minor's right to avoid transfer by guardian (891-892). fit (893-896).
(2) Liability of minor to restore bene- (3) Limitation for suits by minor (897-900).

891. Analogous Law.—This section deals with two classes of transfers: (a) that made without any legal necessity, and (b) that which is to some extent supported by legal necessity. In the former case the minor is entitled to avoid the sale and he is subject to no equity to refund the consideration paid to his guardian on his account. (5) In the latter case however, he is

(1) Waghela v. Sheikh Masludin, 11 B. 551 (556) P. C.

(2) Lala Narain v. Lala Ramnauj, 20 A. 209 P. C.

(3). Surendra Nath v. Atul Chandra, 34 C. 592 (595).

(4) S. 66 ante. Rammalsingji Maharana v. Fadil 20 B 61 (74).

(5) Hunooman Persaud Panday v. Babooe, 6 M. I. A. 398 (421); Bunseedhur v. Bindesoree, 10 M. I. A. 454 (474).

equitably bound to restore the benefit received by him <sup>(1)</sup> which may be charged on the estate he sues to recover from the transferee. <sup>(2)</sup> A transfer by a certificated guardian is subject to the provisions of S. 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act. <sup>(3)</sup>

892. Transfer by the guardian.—A transfer made by a certificated guardian is subject to the rule enacted in S. 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act, <sup>(4)</sup> which lays down that it may be set aside by any person other than the guardian if he was affected thereby. <sup>(5)</sup> As such the minor whose property was transferred may avoid the transfer on the short ground that it was made in contravention of the Act. Where, however, the minor has no certificated guardian, but is subject to a natural guardian, the latter may transfer his property on any ground which under the law to which the minor is subject would bind his interest.

893. Restitution.—In either case where the transfer is set aside, the question arises and is covered by S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act <sup>(6)</sup> which enacts that “on adjudging the cancellation of an instrument, the court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require.”

894. The question then is what is the requirement of justice in such a case of cancellation. Now, a consideration for a sale may (a)—be wholly paid, or (b)—partially paid, the balance being payable and not paid; (c)—it may be paid for necessity which is not proved; (d)—or is only partially proved; and lastly (e)—it may be paid by a transferee bona fide after due enquiry being satisfied that it was necessary, though in fact, it was not necessary.

895. In cases (a) and (b) where the whole or part of the consideration has been paid and the transfer is set aside, there can be no question of restitution if no part of the consideration was supported by necessity and there was no inquiry as mentioned in case (e). There is then no equity, since the transfer is wholly void and the transferee has to thank himself if he loses both the property and his money too; for he knew that he was merely dealing with a guardian and it was his duty to inquire into the necessity of the transfer. If, however, he did inquire and paid the money bona fide being satisfied that the transfer was necessary, then the equitable rule enacted in S. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act <sup>(7)</sup> would come into play and even if there was no necessity the court might still uphold his transfer. <sup>(8)</sup> But assuming that there was no inquiry and no necessity justifying the transfer to its full extent, then the court may or may not cancel the transfer. If for instance, the bulk of the consideration was utilized for purposes binding on the minor, the court would not cancel the transfer, though it will decree the sum paid otherwise than for legal necessity. Such was held to be the case where out of the consideration of Rs. 1,300 necessity was proved to the extent of Rs. 1,022. <sup>(9)</sup>

(1) S. 41, Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877); Bunseedhur v Bindesree, 10 M. L. A. 454 (474).

(2) Bukshun v. Doolhin, 12 W. R. 337; Pranchandra v. Karunamay, 15 W. R. 268; Kesar (Bai) v. Ganga, 8 B. H. C. R. (Ac) 81; Mirga Pana v. Said Sadik, 7 N. W. P. H. C. R. 201; Kuvarji v. Moti, 8 B. 234; Dallaram v. Vinayak, 28 B. 181 (192); Sinaya v. Munisami, 22 M. 289; Jagar Nath v. Lalla Prasad 31 A. 221 (227).

(3) VIII of 1890; Tejpal v. Ganga, 25 A.

59; Giriraj v. Kazi Hamid Ali, 9 A. 840; Nizamuddin v. Anandi Prasad, 18 A. 378 (375).

(4) VIII of 1890

(5) Dallaram v. Gangaram, 28 B. 287 (290).

(6) 1 of 1877.

(7) IV of 1882

(8) See Gour's Law of Transfer (4th Ed.).

(9) Thalagara v. Thalagara, 27 M. L. J. 132; 26 I. C. 178.

But where out of the total consideration of Rs. 1,425 only a little more than a moiety was paid for necessity and the purchaser has given the vendor a promissory note for Rs. 525 and Rs. 138 were not proved to have been spent on a purpose binding on the minor's estate, the court set aside the whole sale conditional on the plaintiff paying to the vendee Rs. 762. <sup>(1)</sup> In decreeing restitution the court may award interest at a reasonable rate. <sup>(2)</sup>

896. This is, of course, an equitable relief which the transferee may forfeit unless he had acted bona fide. <sup>(3)</sup> If he had colluded with the guardian or purchased the minor's estate at an undervalue the court will refuse him the benefit of restitution. On the other hand, he need make no inquiry at all where the money is paid by him for a transfer duly sanctioned by the District Judge under S. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, <sup>(4)</sup> or which is otherwise proved to have been justified by necessity. Where a transfer does not affect the minor's interest, the latter cannot be heard to complain on the ground that it was made with reference to his property. So where the guardian mortgaged his property to the defendant and then sold the equity of redemption to the plaintiff who sued to redeem the prior mortgage, the court held that the minor could not complain of the sale to the plaintiff as not being for his benefit as his interest was not concerned. <sup>(5)</sup> But this case does not appear to have been correctly decided, for the sale of the equity of redemption was the sale of the minor's property in which the minor was certainly concerned and the propriety of which he was entitled to challenge.

897. Limitation.—The question of limitation applicable to a minor suing to set aside a transfer made by his guardian is governed by Art. 44 or Art. 91 of the Limitation Act <sup>(6)</sup> which allows him 3 years from the date the ward attains majority. The applicability of the shorter period limitation prescribed in Art. 44 depends upon what is meant by the word "guardian" and upon the nature of the transfer made by him, that is, whether it is voidable or void, for if it is the latter then the transfer being a nullity there is no necessity to avoid it <sup>(7)</sup> but since the possession of the transferee would in such a case be adverse, the minor must sue to set it aside within the ordinary period prescribed in Art. 144 enlarged to the extent allowed in S. 6. Now since a guardian is entitled to alienate his ward's property only in the case of necessity or when it is for the minor's benefit it follows that this must again depend upon the personal law of the party to whom that provision is applied. In the case of a Mahomedan where the elder brother of a minor devisee mortgaged his property and it was found that the brother was not authorized either by the will or by the Mahomedan Law to act as a guardian of the minor, the Privy Council held the mortgage a nullity and one which the minor was not bound to set aside within the period provided in Art. 44. <sup>(8)</sup> This article would be obviously inapplicable, and if so, the only

(1) Rukmani v. Muthammal, (1915) M.W. N. 8; 26 I. C. 489; Kaliapa v. Devasayamani (1918) M. W. N. 795; 18 I. C. 27.

(2) Nur Baksh v. Rukum Singh, 8 A. L.J. 764; 11 I. C. 764; Muhamad Ismail v. Gaur Parshad, (1916) P. R. 24; Manashram v. Ahmed Husein, 20 C. W. N. 68; 37 I. C. 850.

(3) Sultan Singh v. Hashmat, (1915) P. R. 109; 29 I. C. 801.

(4) Akhil Chandra v. Girish Chandra, 21 C. W. N. 864; 41 I. C. 802.

(5) Vithoba v. Sakharan, 4 C.P.L.R. 128.

(6) IX of 1908.

(7) Hennoman Persaud v. Babooes, 6 M. I. A. 393; Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad, 34 A. 213 P. C.

(8) Sarder Shah v. Haji, (1903) P. L. R. 182; Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad, 34 A. 213 P. C.; Imcumbandi v. Mutasuddi 23 C. W. N. 50 (63) P. C.; Surdurkab v. Haji (1908) P. L. R. 152; Rajolali v. Wajirali 34 I. C. (P.) 35; 1 Pat. L. J. 183.

other article applicable would be Art. 144. There would be a varying period of limitation even in the case of a Hindu according as the transfer is wholly or partially unsupported by legal necessity since in the former case the guardian being wholly incompetent to convey his ward's estate, the transfer would be void and not voidable merely, as in the other case where it is only partially unsupported by legal necessity.

898. Again where such guardian is also a co-parcenary manager, the same question may assume a greater importance. But these distinctions would be immaterial if regard is had to the fact that a transfer however made for a minor is only voidable at his instance on proof of certain facts without which it is good as much against the minor as against a third party. As such, he must sue for its cancellation within the time prescribed by Art. 44.

899. But though this view is supported by the preponderance of cases, (1) there are also cases (2) which support the longer limitation prescribed in Art. 144. But it is clear that the authority of a guardian is more limited than of a karta or manager of a joint Mitakshara family, but since they have both the same right of alienation, the question of limitation does not depend upon the distinction that exists between a manager and any other guardian. But of course, a transfer purported to be made by one who professes to be a guardian but is neither a de facto nor a de jure guardian would necessarily be a nullity and the minor is not bound to set it aside before recovering possession of his property. (3) Such would be the case where the alienation is made by a co-parcener who is not the manager. (4) The question of limitation may be considered from the following standpoints:—(a) Where the transfer is made by a relation such as a co-parcener but who is not a karta of the family or guardian of the minor; (b) where the transfer is made by a de facto guardian authorized to transfer for necessity but transferred in fact without any necessity; (c) where such transfer is made not by the guardian but by the manager of a co-parcenary of which the minor was at the time a member; and (d) where it is made by either the karta or the guardian for partial necessity.

900. In case (a) it is now settled by the Privy Council that the transfer is a nullity and the minor, is therefore, not bound to cancel it either under Art. 44 or Art. 91 and that his suit is subject to the ordinary limitation prescribed in Art. 144 enlarged to the extent provided in S. 6. (5) But the courts are not agreed as to the limitation applicable in the other cases. In case (b) it has been held in some cases that the transfer is equally void, and that therefore, it

(1) Satish Chandra v. Chunder Kant, 3 C. W. N. 278; Shama Chandra v. Gadadhar, 13 C. L. J. 277; Krishna Dhoni v. Bhagwan, 31 I. C. (C.) 188; Hamansar v. Raghubar, 5 A. 490; Tejpal v. Ganga, 25 A. 59; Sinaya Pillai v. Munisami, 22 M. 289; Hazari v. Lallu, 7 O.C. 181; Ranga Kaddi v. Narayana, 28 M. 428; Murari v. Toyana, 10 B. 286.

(2) Kamakshi v. Ramasami, 7 M. L. J. 131 dissented from in Sivavadevelu v. Ponammal, 22 M. L. J. 101; 15 I. C. 865; Velayudham v. Perumal, 15 I. C. (M.) 811; Basaruth Ali, 25 A. 909; Abdul Rahman v.

Sukhlalal, 32 A. 392; Unikuneri, 14 M. 16; Kalyan Singh v. Pitambar, 18 A. L. J. 94; Asaram v. Itan Singh, 12 N. L. R. 12; Husen v. Rajanm, 10 N. L. B. 183.

(3) Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad 34 A. 213 P. C.

(4) Banwarilal v. Daya Sunker, 18 C. W. N. 815.

(5) Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad, 34 A. 218 P. C.; Banwarilal v. Daya Sunker, 18 C. W. N., 815; Sardar Shah v. Haji (1908) P. L. R. 182; Rejob Ali v. Wazir Ali, 34 I. C. (P) 85; 1 Pat. L. J. 188.

need not be set aside, <sup>(1)</sup> whereas it has been held in others that the transfer is in every case good till it is avoided by the minor and that therefore it is voidable and not void and as such the minor is, as regards limitation, subject to Art 44 or Art. 91. <sup>(2)</sup> It must be confessed that in some of these cases <sup>(3)</sup> the distinction between the unauthorized transfer of a guardian and the transfer of an unauthorized guardian was not kept in view, but it is a distinction which cannot be ignored. Nor is the distinction between a mere guardian and a karta on this point immaterial. <sup>(4)</sup> As regards case (d) the courts are agreed on the shorter limitation on the ground that since the authority to transfer depends on necessity or benefit, its insufficiency may make the transfer voidable, being improper but it cannot render it altogether null and void ab initio.

69. A guardian cannot bind his ward by an act not purported to be done on his behalf.

Guardian must act
 as such.

Synopsis.

(1) Guardian's acts binding on minor only when he acts as such (901-902).

901. Analogous Law.—This rule is founded on the principle that a guardian cannot be permitted to act on his own account with the chance of transferring his obligations to the minor if he finds it to his advantage. <sup>(5)</sup> Such was the case of the mother who had taken a lease which she surrendered during the minority of her adopted son against whom the lessor sued for its rent. It did not appear that the mother had taken the lease qua guardian of her minor son. The suit against the son was launched on the ground that he had ratified it on coming of age which could not be proved. The Privy Council held that the plaintiff could not bind the minor on the ground that he had taken the lease through his mother because the mother's Kabuliyat did not purport to be on his behalf or to bind his estate. <sup>(6)</sup> The fact his estate had had benefited by the transaction is immaterial, for, as observed by the Privy Council: "It is not in every case in which a man has been benefited by the money of another, that an obligation to repay that money arises. The question is not to be determined by nice considerations of what may be fair or proper according to the highest morality. To support such a suit there must be an obligation, express or implied, to repay." <sup>(7)</sup> But the principle of this case only applies to cases where it is doubtful in which capacity the guardian had purported to act. Where, therefore, the guardian had no estate of his own, the Court held that the conveyance could not be impeached on the ground that the guardian had omitted to mention that he was acting for his ward. <sup>(8)</sup>

(1) Konahshi v. Ramasami, 7 M. L. J. 181; Umri v. Kunchi, 14 M. 26; Ramansar v. Raghubar, 5 A. 490; Lal Hurro Prasad v. Dasaruth, 25 A. 909; Abdul Rehman v. Sukh Dayal, 28 A. 30 (32); Bachchan Singh v. Kamla Prasad, 32 A. 392; Kalyansingh v. Pitambar, 13 A. L. J. 94; Shree Shankar v. Ram Shewals 21 C. 77 (Art 91 inapplicable); Balappa v. Chanasappa, 17 Bom. L. R. 1134; Husen v. Rajaram, 10 N. L. R. 183; Asorem v. Batamsingh, 12 N. L. R. 12; Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125.

(2) Battish Chunder v. Chunder Kant 3 O.W.N. 278; Shama Chandra v. Gadadhar, 18 C. L. J. 277; Krishna Dhoni v. Bhagawan

34 I C (C) 188; Ranga Reddi v. Narayana, 28 M. 1811.

(3) Thayammal v. Kuppanna, 38 M. 1125 (1126).

(4) Mahableshwar v. Ramchandra, 38 B. 98.

(5) Indur Chunder v. Radha Kishore, 19 C. 507 (513), P. C.

(6) Ib. p. 512, 513; To the same effect Gadgappa v. Apaji, 3 B. 237 (240).

(7) Ram Tutrel Singh v. Bisessar, 23 W. R. 305 cited and applied in Gadgappa v. Apaji, 3 B. 237 (240); Babur Ali v. Sookea, 13 W. R. 68.

(8) Murari v. Tayana, 20 B. 286; Ghasi Ram v. Binia, 1 N. L. R. 66.

But the contrary has been laid down in other cases in which it has been laid down as established law that a guardian cannot bind his ward's estate except by a document purporting to bind it. (1) If therefore the bond was executed by the guardian in his own name, and it was sought to prove that it had been executed for the minor, the court held that it was not open to it to go behind the terms of the bond for the purpose of construing it: "In our opinion, when a third person enters into dealings with the guardian of a minor, and advances money for necessities of the minor or for the benefit of the estate and takes a bond for the debt from the guardian, the responsibility rests on him to take care that the bond is so drawn as to render the estate of the minor in law liable for the debt." (2)

902. The rule must then be merely confined to cases of uncertainty and not to those of defective conveyancing.

Minor's privilege is personal.

70. A transaction entered into with a minor is only voidable at the option of the minor.

Synopsis.

(1) Minority, a personal privilege (903). (2) Minor's fraud (904).

903. Analogous Law.—It has been held that minority is a personal privilege and no one dealing with a minor can object to a transaction on the ground of his incompetency except the minor himself. (3) So where the minor conveyed his property to the plaintiff after which the minor died and was succeeded to by his father as his heir, the plaintiff sued for a declaration of his title against the father who pleaded the invalidity of his sale on the ground of the minority of his son but the court held the plea was one open only to the minor and could not be availed of by his heir. (4) Where the guardian enters into a contract prejudicial to a minor, the latter is entitled to sue him through his next friend. (5)

904. The question whether a minor is precluded from obtaining relief on a contract induced by him by a fraudulent statement that he was of age, is one which has often been agitated in the courts of this country with varying results. In some cases it was held that the minor was estopped under S. 115 of the Evidence Act (6) while in others there was held to be no estoppel, the word "person" in S. 115 of the Evidence Act being construed to refer to one sui juris and not to a mere minor. This view has now been affirmed by the Privy Council in a Colonial appeal from Penang, when their Lordships adopted the rule laid down by the King's Bench in a case to which they referred for their guiding principle. (7) In the English case the plaintiff a money-lender had sued a minor for recovery of £400 and £75 for interest on the ground that the defendant had contracted the loan by fraudulently representing himself to be of full age at the time. In dismissing the claim Lord Sumner passed in review the entire case law on

(1) Rattmalsingji v. Vadilat, 20 B. 61; Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath 85 C. 320 (329).

(2) Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath, 35 C. 320 (329).

(3) Hari Ram v. Jilam Ram, 3 B. L. R. (Ac) 426; Sashi Bhushan v. Jadu Nath, 11 C. 552; Mahamed Arif v. Saraswati Debbya 18 C. 256.

(4) Mahamed Arif v. Saraswati, 18 C. 259;

Vithoba v. Sakaram, 4 C. P. L. R. 128; Contra Deelchand v. Chandkhan, 11 N. L. R. 1 (8).

(5) Abdulla v. Ramdas, 2 N. L. R. 146.

(6) 1 of 1872.

(7) Leslie Ltd v. Sheill, (1914) 3 K. B. 607 followed in Mahomed v. Yeoh, 21 C.W. N. 257 (265) P. C., 39 I.C. 401; 43 I. A. 256 P. C.

the subject the result of which may be thus stated : (i) that where a minor has by a fraudulent mis-statement of his age induced another to lend him money the court cannot order its recovery on the ground of fraud since the rule as to infant's immunity was made to safeguard the weakness of infants at large, even though here and there a juvenile knave skipped through ; (ii) that nevertheless wherever it is possible to order restitution the court will strive to effect it ; where, for instance, the money can be traced to the possession of the minor, the court will order its return ; (iii) and that apart from restitution, it cannot decree the claim ex contractu either on the ground of estoppel or fraud or otherwise overwhelming equity destroying the privilege of infancy. (1)

71. (1) A minor is bound by the result of a suit to which he was a party, if he was properly represented therein.

Minor's liability under decree.

(2) Provided that if any decree be passed on a compromise, such compromise must be sanctioned by the court.

(3) Provided further that no decree obtained by consent has any effect against the minor unless it was consented to by his natural or certificated guardians.

(4) But no decree so obtained has any effect against him if it was secured by the fraud or misconduct of such guardian.

Synopsis.

(1) Minor's liability under decree on minor (906).

(905).

(3) Fraud or misconduct of guardian

(2) Compromise decree when binding (907).

905. Analogous Law.—A suit may be instituted by a minor through his Cl. (1). next friend. It is not necessary that he should sue only through his guardian though it is the ordinary rule. (2)

Where he is a defendant it is cast on the plaintiff to sue him through a guardian who must be appointed for that purpose by the court. (3) Ordinarily it will appoint a certificated guardian (4) and in his absence the natural guardian (5) and failing him, any other person fit and willing to act as his guardian. Such person is designated the guardian ad litem and is then, for the conduct of the suit, subject to the provisions of O. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure ; and the directions of the judge as therein stated. A suit relating to the estate or person of a minor, and for his benefit has the effect of making him a ward of court, and no act can be done affecting the property of the minor unless under the express or implied direction of the court itself. (6)

The decree passed against the minor is subject to the provisions of that order final and as binding upon him as if he were adult.

906. No guardian ad litem can compromise a suit without the leave of the court (7) expressly recorded in the proceedings. (8) "Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the court so recorded shall be voidable against

Cl. 2 and 3.

(1) Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill, [1914] 8 K.B. 607. M. 377 (378).

(2) O. 32 R. 4 (2) C. P. C.

(7) O. 32 R. 6 (1).

(3) Ib., O. 32, R. 3.

(4) Ib., O. 32 R. 3.

(5) Ib., O. 32 R. 3 (4) and 4 (2).

(6) Karamali v. Rahimbiroy, 18 B. 187 followed in Doraswami v. Thungasamy, 27

(8) O. 32 R. 7 ; as to which see Pray Das v. Girdhar Das, 28 A. 35 ; Lakshmasa v. Chinnathambi, 24 M. 326 ; Atmaram v. Bhila, 15 Bom. L. R. 228 ; 19 I. C. 424.

all parties other than the minor." (1) These provisions are embodied in clauses 2 and 3.

907 Clause (4) is based on the general principle of law which protects minors and other disqualified persons against the fraud or misconduct of their guardians. (2) But this rule should not be extended to guardians who are also managers of a joint Mitakshara family in which the minor has no separate interest. In such a case the fact that he is joined as a necessary party does not entitle him to open a decree obtained against the joint family unless there was anything to show that the other members had colluded to defraud him. (3)

The effect of a suit on the rights of a minor not properly represented belongs to the domain of general law to which reference should be made for further information.

72. A guardian of the minor's person has the right to the custody of his ward during the period of his guardianship.

Right to custody.

Synopsis.

(1) Guardian's right to the custody of his ward (908). (2) Procedure for recovering custody (909).

908. Analogous Law.—This is in accordance with S. 24 of the Guardians and Wards Act which enacts as follows:—

A guardian of the person of a ward is charged with the custody of the ward and must look to his support, health and education, and such other matters as the law to which the ward is subject requires

The next section empowers the court to restore the guardian's custody, enforcing it, if necessary, by arrest of the ward and delivery to his guardian.

909. Apart from the Act the natural guardian is entitled to the custody of his ward. (4) The Act has merely transferred to the court general powers to be exercised for the protection of the welfare and well-being of children. (5) Even apart from the Act, the High Court in its equitable jurisdiction, has authority to interfere with the legal right of the guardian, even if he is the father, if he be an improper person. (6) No regular suit lies for the custody of a minor, the only remedy being by an application under the Guardians and Wards Act, which was intended by the legislature to be a complete code defining the rights and remedies of guardians and wards. The father is therefore, not entitled to sue as guardian of the infant child, detained by the defendant who is the maternal grandmother of the child. (7) In an application under the Acts the court has to decide the position of custody with reference to the welfare of the minor irrespective of its age. "The practice in such cases is that if the children be of a proper age, the court gives them their election as to the custody in which they will be; if not, the court takes care that they be delivered into proper custody." (8)

(1) O 32, R. 7 (2).

(2) Ram Ankar v. Mumtaz Ali, 24 C. 853 P. C.; Rameswar v. Ram Bahadur, 34 C. 70 P. C.

(3) Rameswar v. Ram Bahadur, 34 C. 70 P. C.; Daya Shankar v. Hublal, 37 A. 105; Madari v. Har Dayal, 13 O. C. 158; 7 I. C. 538; Anarpal Singh v. Chhabraj 11 I. C. (O). 105; Ajudika v. Mahabir, 22 I. C. (O) 923.

(4) Holmes In re 1 Hyde. 99; Carran

In re 1 Hyde. 143.

(5) Joshy Assam In re 28 C. 290.

(6) Carran In re 1 Hyde. 143; Bhilus Koer v. Chamela, 2 C. W. N. 191.

(7) Sham Lal v. Bindu, 26 A. 594; Alasila v. Mazria, (1896) P. R. 41 F. B.

(8) K v. Grenville 4 A. and E. 624 (1839-642); Santhi In re 16 B. 307 (cases reviewed).

CHAPTER VII.

LAW OF MAINTENANCE

910. Topical Introduction.—The law of maintenance is not based on any contract but is evolved out of the right in property to which a person was prima facie entitled, but which he became disqualified from sharing, by reason of the nature of the estate or his own disqualification whether personal or sexual. Being thus excluded from participation in the estate, law afforded him the solatium of maintenance. The right of maintenance is thus not dependent on near relationship but on the existence in the hands of the heir of property upon which all dependent members of a joint family lay a claim. (1) Even where there is no joint family the law of necessity enjoins on a certain person by reason of his jural relationship to another, the duty of maintaining him. Such is the duty of the husband and the father. It is the duty of the State to protect its infant population and that duty tics upon those who are primarily responsible for bringing them into existence. This is the underlying principle of S. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Apart from that enactment, Hindu Law recognizes the necessity of maintenance founded upon the dictates of natural justice, sometimes supported by the theory of co-ownership, (2) personal identity, (3) moral duty, (4) or relationship, but in all cases it is ultimately traceable to the original fount of jus naturalis which the wisdom and experience of mankind has taught to be best for the community and the underlying principles of which are visible in the frame work of the jurisprudence of every nation.

911. The close connection of maintenance with the law of person and property is everywhere visible in Hindu Law. In the second stage of social evolution when the patriarchal family became transformed into a joint family, the growth of individual rights developed and altered the early notions of property. As it became divisible, it was seen that an equal division was not possible, both because the rights of all members were not equal as also because some members were not equal, and also because some members by reason of their sex or deformity had not the same claim as others who contributed to the wealth and strength of the joint family. Subordinate rights became thus recognized which in some cases naturally took the shape of maintenance grants either as a substitute or as a solatium for the greater right in property. But being still a right which was intimately allied to the right of property, it became spoken of as a charge thereupon. But as legal concepts became more defined, it was perceived that a right might be closely connected with land and

(1) Ramabai v. Trimbeck, 9 B. H. C. R. 288; Savitri Bai v. Luzum Bai, 2 B. 573; Apaji v. Gangabai, ib p. 682; Gopikabai v. Dattatray, 24 B. 386 (392, 393)

(2) Jamna v. Machul Salu, 2 A. 213.

(317).

(3) Srenath v. Probodh Chunder, 11 C. L. J. 580; 6 I. C. 244

(4) Sidessury v. Janardhan, 29 C. 557.

yet separate from it. Such is the history of all debts which at one time were regarded as charged both on the debtor and his land till their relation to him and his land became more defined. As such, maintenance was so regarded at one time. But it was then perceived that it did not possess even the certainty of a debt; till its amount was ascertained and fixed, it was not even a debt. But even in the abstract, a claim for maintenance is no more a charge on property than the expenses of marriage, or other religious ceremonies. Debts due by a deceased person stand higher than other claims upon his estate, and yet debts are no charge upon specific property unless expressly made so by bond or by a decree. (1) Nevertheless being a right obtained in lieu of a right in property it was an appropriate subject of a charge, and one which bears some relation to the property. In the case of the wife, Yajnavalkya fixed one-third of the husband's estate as an appropriate solatium to a deserted wife by way of maintenance, (2) but as will be seen presently that such rigid necessity was fixed without regard being had to demands of other claimants upon it. The law of maintenance is consequently almost wholly the law of leading principles deducible from the decided cases and these will now be set out.

Personal obligation to maintain certain relations.

73. A person is personally bound to maintain the following persons :—

- (a) his minor sons, whether legitimate or illegitimate ;
- (b) his unmarried daughters ;
- (c) his wife so long as she is chaste and remains under his roof and protection ;
- (d) his aged father and mother.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Personal obligation to maintain certain relations (912). | (8) Sister (921).                         |
| (2) Wife (913-914).  | (9) Chela (922).                          |
| (3) Concubine (915).   | (10) Son's widow and grandchildren (923). |
| (4) Legitimate son (916).                                    | (11) Step-son and step-mother (924).      |
| (5) Illegitimate son (917-918).                              | (12) Son-in-law (925).                    |
| (6) Parents (919).   | (13) Brother (926).                       |
| (7) Daughter (920).  | (14) Adopted son (927).                   |

912. Analogous Law.—The law of maintenance has been developed from the following scanty texts :—

Texts. Manu :—" Let the father alone support his sons ; and the first born his younger brother ; and let them behave to the eldest, according to law as children behave to their father". (3)

9. " He who bestows gifts on strangers, with a view to wordly fame, while he suffers his family to live in distress, though he has power to support them, touches lips in the honey, but swallows poison ; such virtue is counterfeit "

10 " Even what he does for the sake of his future spiritual body to the injury of those whom he is bound to maintain, shall bring him ultimate misery both in this life and in the next " (4)

201 " Eunuchs and outcasts, persons born blind or deaf, madmen, idiots, the dumb, and such as have lost the use of a limb are excluded from a share of the heritage."

---

(1) Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar, 9 C. XX (Mandlik) p. 158.
585 (555). (3) Manu IX-108.
(2) Ch. 1-76 (Mandlik) p. 171 ; Mayukh (4) Ib. XI-9, 10.

202 " But it is just, that the heir who knows his duty, should give all of them food and raiment for life without stint according to the best of his power: he who gives them nothing sinks assuredly to a region of punishment." (1)

189. " The same ceremony (of penance) must be performed even of women degraded, for whom clothes, dressed rice and water must be provided, and they must dwell in a hut near the family house. " (2)

Digest :—" Another : a father, a wife and a son shall not be forsaken : he who forsakes either of them unless guilty of a deadly sin, shall pay 600 panas to the king." (3)

" Manu declared that a mother and a father in their old age, a virtuous wife and an infant son, must be maintained even though doing a hundred times that which ought not to be done." (4)

Narad :—" If among several brothers one childless should die or become a religious ascetic, the others shall divide his property excepting the stridhan.

They shall make a provision for his women till they die, in case they remain faithful to the bed of their husband. Should the women not remain chaste, they must cut off that allowance." (5)

913. The wife's right to maintenance belongs to the law relating to husband and wife and has been already set out in that connexion (§ 20). Ordinarily she is entitled to maintenance as she is liable to live with and under the protection of her husband. If she abandons him without any just cause, such as habitual cruelty endangering her personal safety, then she would be entitled even to a separate maintenance. (6) But an occasional outburst of temper or assault does not justify her in deserting her husband. The fact that the husband had married another wife is no ground for leaving him : (7) still less will she be justified in leaving him to live in adultery. (8) On the other hand if she lives with her husband she is entitled to maintenance even though she be unchaste. (9) If a wife after leaving her husband without just cause is willing to return to live with him but he declines to receive her, he must allow her a separate maintenance so long as she is willing and he is not. (10)

914. The question how far her right is conditional and contingent upon her chastity has been already considered (§ 515). At any rate, a wife is not entitled to sue for maintenance from her husband, if at the time of the suit she is living in adultery and persists in that vicious course. (11) But this was a case in which the wife had not given birth to an illegitimate child but was actually living in adultery at the time of her suit. If, however, she had withdrawn from her vicious course when she sued, then she could not be deprived of maintenance on the ground of her unchastity. (12)

915. According to Hindu Law a man is under no legal obligation to maintain his concubine, however long might have been the concubinage. (13) The concubine has no legal right to maintenance because she is under no legal duty to her paramour. She lives with him so long as she likes, and she is at any time free to leave him. (14) She cannot urge that she was willing to live with her

(1) Ib. IX-201, 202

(2) Ib. XI-189.

(3) Manu VII 89.

(4) 8 Dig. B.k. V.Ch. VI, p 400 cited and followed in Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B 592 (597)

(5) Narad XIII-25, 26; 83 S.B.E pp. 195, 196.

(6) Kullyanessuree v. Dwaraka Nath, 6 W. R. 116; Sita Nath v. Hambuly, 24 W. R. 877; Matangini v. Jayendra, 19 C. 34 :

Siddlingappa v. Sudava, 2 B. 634.

(7) Virasvami v. Appasami, 1 M.H.C.R 375

(8) Illata v. Illata, 1 M.H.C.R 372

(9) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 278

(10) Yeshodabar v. Lal Talabashet, (1886) B. P. J. 281

(11) Debi v. Daulata, 39 A. 234 following Subhagya v. Bhavani 24 I.C. 390.

(12) Subhagya v. Bhavani, 24 I.C. 390.

(13) Ramanarazu v. Buchamma 23 M. 282.

(14) Ningareddi v. Lakshmana, 26 B. 163.

paramour but the latter drove her out or that she had to leave his house because he was keeping other mistresses. (1) Even the fact that she has given birth to a son by him does not improve her right to maintenance. (2) But though this is the law as between her and her paramour, on the latter's death a concubine acquires a right of maintenance out of his estate if she had continued faithful to him till his death. (3)

916. The right of a legitimate son to maintenance during his minority against his father is both provided in S. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and is also supported by Hindu Law. (4) But upon attaining his majority the son cannot enforce this right against his father's self-acquired property (5) though he can do so against his father's ancestral estate. (6) Where the son has the right of maintenance, it is not forfeited by reason of his disobedience or refusal to live with his father. It may be a good ground for reducing the amount to the minimum but it is no ground for discontinuing it altogether. (7)

917. Similarly, the right of an illegitimate son to maintenance against his natural father is now equally recognized by S. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as it is supported by Hindu Law (8) and is settled by the Privy Council. (9) This right exists whether the father belongs to a regenerate caste or is a Shudra, though in the latter case the son is even entitled to inheritance. (10) The right to maintenance is not altered because the illegitimate son is by an adulterous intercourse (11) or was begotten on a female slave or on a concubine. (12) Under the Mitakshara law his right is lifelong in recognition of his status as a member of his father's family and by reason of his exclusion from inheritance among the regenerate classes. (13) But it is conditional upon his obedience to the head of the family. "If he be docile", says Vajnaneshwar (14) — "provided he be not disobedient" — says Mitra Misra. Quoting these texts, the Allahabad High Court said: "Obedience to the head of the family, not the age of the illegitimate descendant, or his capacity to earn his own livelihood, is the test by which under Hindu Law, the continuance of the right to receive maintenance must be decided. Till the illegitimate sons reach full age, this test cannot be applied; but thereafter it cannot be ignored — what constitutes docility or disobedience in the sense of the texts, is a question the answer to which is not easy. We think that on attaining full age, the respondents must as a condition of receiving maintenance from the estate of Manji Lal, render to the head of the family such reasonable service as is

(1) Ramlasamji v Gangabai, (1886) B. P. J. 22.

(2) Sikki v Venkatasam, 8 M. H. C. R. 144.

(3) Ningareddi v Lakshminarayana 26 B. 163; Yashwantrav v Kashi Bai, 12 B. 6; Panchapakesa v Kanaka, 33 M. L. J. 455, 42 I.C. 344.

(4) Manu IX 108.

(5) Amma Kannu v. Appu 11 M. 91.

(6) Sardul Singh v Partab Singh, (1877) P. R. 46; Futtich Singh v. Shere Singh, (1868) P. R. 84; contra Budawa v. Gurdit Singh, (1870) P. R. 65.

(7) Sardul Singh v Partab Singh, (1877) P. R. 46.

(8) Sakharam v. Rani, 1 B. H. C. R. 191;

Muthusamy v Venkatasubha 2 M. H. C. R. 298.

(9) Choturya v Sahab Purhulad Syn, 7. M. I. A. 13; Parichat v. Zalim Singh, 3 C. 214; Roshun Singh v Bahwan Singh, 21 A. 191 P. C.

(10) Pandaya v. Pali, 1 M. H. C. R. 478 affirmed O. A.; Inderan v. Ramaswamy, 18 M. I. A. 141.

(11) Sulstamany v. Velu, 20 M. L. J. 850; 5 J. G. 915; Kuppa v. Singaravelu, 8 M. 825; Virararammurthi v. Singaravelu, 1 M. 306.

(12) Rahi v Govind, 1 B. 97; Sarusuti v. Manu, 2 A. 184 (186); Hargobind v. Dharamsingh, 6 A. 329 (323, 333) where the texts are cited.

(13) Anantikaya v. Vishnu 17 M. 160.

(14) Mitakshara Ch. 1-11, 12

ordinarily rendered by cadets of a family in that station of life to which the parties belong.”<sup>(1)</sup> This is a personal right and cannot be devised or inherited.<sup>(2)</sup>

918. The Criminal Procedure Code makes no distinction between the Son by a non-Hindu woman. illegitimate son of a Hindu mother and one born of a non-Hindu mother but a claim made under that code must conform to its provisions and is limited as to the amount therein specified. But apart from the code, the illegitimate son of a Hindu father and a non-Hindu mother has no right to maintenance. Such has been the view of the court in a case where the son was born of a Mahomedan<sup>(3)</sup> or a Christian concubine.<sup>(4)</sup>

919. Though an adopted son has the same right of maintenance as a Adopted son. legitimate son, no such right can be claimed if the adoption is found to be invalid. As pointed out by Sir Michael Westropp, C. J. “An invalid adoption works nothing. It leaves the alleged adoptee precisely in the same position which he occupied before the ceremony, no matter how formally it may have been celebrated”.<sup>(5)</sup>

920. The liability to maintain one's parents is clear both from the text already cited<sup>(6)</sup> as also the decided cases<sup>(7)</sup> and is Parents. independent of inherited assets.

921. The unmarried daughter has a legal claim to be maintained by her Daughter. father or out of his estate<sup>(8)</sup> but an illegitimate daughter though possessing a legal claim against the father has no such claim to maintenance out of his estate.<sup>(9)</sup>

922. An unmarried and widowed destitute sister must be maintained Sister. by the heir or out of the assets of the joint family. Even where the sister is a discarded wife, old and infirm, she has the same claim for maintenance as a widowed sister.<sup>(10)</sup>

923. The chela who possesses the status of a son has, on the analogy of Chela. a son, the right of maintenance against his guru provided that the latter was not an ascetic and follows the life of a householder. Though it is said, he must show that he has been deprived of procuring his ordinary means of livelihood,<sup>(11)</sup> this is by no means necessary in every case since the question must depend upon the nature of the guru's estate and the status and the nature of his relationship to his chela and the custom or usage if any, determining their rights.

(1) Hargobind v Dharamsingh, 6 A. 329 (835) P. C.

(2) Bakant Singh v. Roshan Singh 18 A. 268 O. A., Roshansingh v. Bahadur Singh, 22 A 191 (197) P. C.;

(3) Adoyto v. Woojan, 4 C. L. R. 164

(4) Lingappa v. Esudasan, 27 M. 10 (15).

(5) Laksmappa v. Ramaya 12 B. H. C. R. 864 (897); Dalpat Singh v. Ravisingh, 17 Bom. L. R. 566.

(6) Manu VIII. 88; see other texts cited in Savitri Bai v. Lazimi Bai, 2 B 592 (597)

(7) Prankoonwar v. Deokoonwar, 1 Borr. (2nd Ed.) 404; Dai v. Purshotum Id., p. 463; Savitri Bai v. Lazimi Bai, 2 B. 578; Koobai v. Ramabai, id., p. 592; Subharaya v. Subhakka,

8 M 286.

(8) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M. I. A. 141 (159); Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R., 288; Mangal v. Rukhmuni, 28 B. 291; Jamma v. Machul 2 A. 315. Tulsha v. Gopal Rao 6 A. 263; Mansha v. Jivan Mal ib p. 617 (621).

(9) Inderun v. Ramasawmy, 13 M. I. A. 141 (159); Salu v. Hari, (1877) B. P. J. 84; Rahi v. Govind, 1 B. 97 (102); Parvati v. Ganpat Rao, 18 B. 177 (183); Saraswati v. Kashi Ram, 4 C. P. L. R. 43; Bhagyalal v. Churaman 9 C. P. L. R. 88 but contra Salu v. Hari, (1877) B. P. J. 84 (case of shudra).

(10) Luttun Singh v. Chundani, (1866) P.R. 80.

(11) Narain Dass v. Mahtab, 7 W. R. 187.

924. Though the father is personally bound to maintain his children he is not bound to maintain his son's widow or his grand children (1) though if maintained, their maintenance is held to be a legitimate ground of necessity (2) and it has been held that on death of the father-in-law his estate might be justly charged to defray the marriage expenses of his grand daughter. (3)

Son's widow and grand children. 925. Similarly, a Hindu is under no personal obligation to maintain his step-son or step-mother. (4)

926. The son-in law has of course, no claim to maintenance by his father-in-law, though in a case his claim based on an implied contract was upheld on the ground that he had lived in his father-in-law's house as his gharjavar. (5)

Son-in law. 927. There is again no such obligation to maintain a brother even though a minor, though of course, in a joint family the elder brother as manager is charged with the maintenance of all co-parceners and other near relations as stated in the sequel.

Brother. 74. A wife who is entitled to maintenance does not forfeit her right by her husband's conversion to another faith.

Husband's conversion immaterial.

928. Analogous Law.—The right to maintenance arises out of the jural relationship between the husband and the wife created by marriage, which is not dissolved by reason of conversion to another faith, though the converted husband may dissolve his marriage under the provisions of the Native Converts Marriage Dissolution Act (6) but till such dissolution, he remains bound by the tie of marriage and its attendant obligations one of which is the maintenance of his spouse. (7)

75. No mistress of a Hindu has any right of maintenance unless she had been kept by him until his death, in which case she becomes entitled to maintenance out of the estate in the hands of his heirs, so long as she remains chaste.

Mistress's right to maintenance.

Synopsis.

- (1) Texts on mistress's right to maintenance (929-930). (2) Concubine's right (931).

929. The following texts support this right:—

Mitakshara :—"Heirless property or wealth which is without an heir to succeed to, goes to the king or becomes the property of the sovereign deducting however a substance for the females as well as the funeral charges that is, excluding or setting apart a sufficiency for the food and raiment of the women." (8)

Mayukh :—"Except in the case of Brahmins, a king (when succeeding to the estate of an heirless person) who is attentive to his duty should give some thing as maintenance to

(1) Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai 2 B. 574 F. B.; overruling contra in Udaram v. Sonkabai, 10 B. H. C. R. 483; Kulu v. Kashi Bai, 7 B. 127; Khetkar Moni v. Kashinath, 2 B. L. R. (A.C.) 15 F.B.; Maymabini Dasi v. Balak Chandra 8 B.L.R. 22; Nilmoney v. Hingu Lall, 5 C. 256.

(2) Chunmun Lal v. Gumpat Lal, 16 W.R. 52.

(3) Ramecomar v. Ichmonyi, 6 C. 36 (39).

(4) Daya v. Nath, 9 B. 279 (284); Hamamun v. Kedar Nath, 16 C. 758 (765) P. C.

(5) Gowind v. Radha Ballabh, 15 C. W. N. 205; 7 I. C. 118.

(6) XXI of 1866.

(7) 4 M. H. C. R. (App) 3.

(8) Mit. Ch. ii. Sect. 1-§§ 27, 28.

the women (Stri) of the deceased. This is the law of inheritance declared : both these have reference to concubines, because the term used is not patri (married wife) <sup>(1)</sup>.

This relates to women kept in concubinage, for the term employed is 'females' (Yoshul). The text of Narad likewise relates to concubines, since the word there used is 'women' (Stri).

930. Analogous Law.—The wife has a legal status and has consequently legal rights and obligations. The concubine is reprobated by law and she has therefore no right of any kind against her paramour, as she can stay with him or leave him at her pleasure. But concubines were common in Vedic India and their right to maintenance is recognized out of the paramour's estate, whether ancestral or self-acquired, on his death if she was faithful to him till then.

931. Concubine's right of maintenance.—The rules governing the maintenance of concubines may be thus stated : (i)—no concubine has any right to maintenance against her paramour during his life-time, (2) (ii)—an occasional concubine (3) or even a continuous one has no right if she was discarded by her paramour before his death, (4) and (iii)—her maintenance is contingent upon her continuous chastity. (5) So a widow who has remarried in the life-time of her first husband without his consent, is not the legal wife of the second husband upon whose death she would be entitled only to maintenance as a concubine. (6) Such was also held to be the case where a Brahmin woman had married a Shudra, which being a marriage not recognized by law or usage, her status was held to be no better than that of a concubine entitling her to maintenance only as such, dependent upon her continuous connection with her husband. (7) The fact that the concubine has a son by her paramour does not improve her claim to maintenance for herself. (8)

76. (1) The manager of a joint Mitakshara family is bound to maintain all male members of the family, their wives and their children, and on the death of any of the male members, he is bound to maintain his widow and his children.

Manager's duty to maintain.

(2) The obligation is commensurate only with the possession of family property.

(3) The same principles apply to cases governed by the Dayabhag law.

(4) The holder of an impartible estate is bound to maintain all those who are customarily entitled to maintenance.

Synopsis.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) Duty of manager of joint Hindu family to maintain (926). [928]. | (5) Right of grandmother (931).                    |
| (2) Right of widow of co-parcener (927-)                            | (6) Liability of holder of impartible estate (932) |
| (3) Right of daughter-in-law (929).                                 | (7) Right of married daughter (933).               |
| (4) Right of step-mother (930).                                     | (8) Right of sister-in-law (934).                  |

932. Analogous Law.—The unit of Hindu society is the joint family comprising a patriarch, his wives, his unmarried daughters, and his sons with their wives and descendants. This social group had in ancient times a

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Mayukh (Mandlik) p. 78.   | (5) Yashwantrav v Kashi Bai , 12 B. 26.      |
| (2) Sikki v. Venkatasamy , 8 M. H.C.R. 141;  | (6) Khemkar v Umishankar , 10 B. H.          |
| Ramanarasu, v. Buchamma , 23 M. 282; Nugareddi v. Lakshmana , 26 B. 163 (167, 168). | C R. 381; Salu v. Hari , (1877) B. P. J. 94. |
| (8) Ramanarasu v. Buchamma , 23 M. 282.  | (7) Kashi v Jamna Das 14 Bom.L R 547         |
| (4) Ramanarasu v. Buchamma , 23 M. 282.  | (8) Sikki v Venkatasamy , 8 M H.C.R. 144,    | common dwelling, and lived, ate, worshipped their gods, and enjoyed their estate in common. (1) The rights of the subordinate members have now become recognized, but there still remain those whose rights have either not been reduced to possession or have no present rights at all. The obligation to maintain all such relations lies on the manager of a Mitakshara family or on the father of a Dayabhag household. But this obligation is not personal but confined to him as manager of the joint estate, or in the case of a Dayabhag family to the head of a family in which all the other members have a contingent interest. These and their wives are entitled to maintenance since it is a principle of Hindu Law that an heir succeeding to property takes it for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor and is under a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was morally bound to support. It is immaterial whether the property so inherited is moveable or immoveable. In each case it must be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, the means and other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was morally bound according to Hindu Law and customs and practice of the people, to maintain that party. (2) As such, the rule applies equally to cases whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag school of law. The question in each case being: Has the relation any moral claim to maintenance, the moral claim being as regards maintenance, treated as legal claim which the courts would enforce? (3) As such, the relations mentioned in S. 70 have undoubtedly such claim. But there are others whose claim to maintenance is recognized though it is dependent upon the existence of ancestral property.

933. The widow of a co-parcener is entitled to be maintained out of her

(1) Widow. husband's estate in the hands of his surviving co-parceners even though she may have been deserted by the husband. (4) But she has no such right if there is no ancestral property (5) or she is leading an unchaste life. (6) A Hindu widow must, in the first instance, look for her maintenance to her husband's family (7) failing which she may claim it from his father or out of his estate. But the widow has no legal claim to maintenance out of the self-acquired property of her father-in-law. (8) But as soon as that property descends to his heirs, e.g., his sons, the latter become legally bound to maintain the widow to the same extent as if they had inherited ancestral property. This result is supported on the ground that since the father-in-law was morally bound to support his daughter-in-law and the discharge of this moral obligation by the son is conducive to his father's spiritual benefit, the moral obligation of the father ripens into a legal obligation as against the son who inherits his father's estate. (9) And the same obligation would continue even if the estate descends on the father-in-law's

(1) Antiquities of India, p. 109.

(2) Kashoe Nath v. Khetkur Monee, 9 W. R. 418 O. A. Khettraman v. Kashinath, 10 W. R. 89 F. B.; Kamini Dasi v. Chandra, 17 C. 373 (376, 377); Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194.

(3) Kamini Dasi v. Chandra, 17 C. 373 (377, 378).

(4) Ramabai v. Trimback, 9 B. H. C. R. 288; Savitri Bai v. Lavimi Bai, 2 B. 573 F. B. Gangabai v. Sitaram, 1A 170 F. B. Amrita Lal v. Manick Lal, 27 C. 551.

(5) Ganesh v. Yenunabai, (1878) B. P. J. 180; Sakharam v. Janki Bai, (1878) B. P. J. 189.

(6) Harku Singh v. Nanda Kuar, (1885) 5 A. W. N. 164; Daulta Kaur v. Meghu, 15 A. 382; Vishnu v. Manjanna 9 B. 108; Nagamma v. Virabadra, 17 M. 392; Roma Nath v. Rajommoni 17 C. 674.

(7) Makhada v. Nundelal, 18 C. 278.

(8) Rajmonee v. Shibchander, 2 Hyde 108; Khettraman v. Kashinath, 10 W. R. 89 F. B.; Savitri Bai v. Lavimi Bai, 2 B. 573 F. B.; Ganjabai v. Sitaram, 7 B. 127; Janki v. Nandaram 11 A. 194 (205, 206) F. B.

(9) Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 (208) F. B.; Kamini Dasi v. Chandra, 17 C. 373; Devi Persad v. Gunwanti 22 B. 110; Ramammal v. Echammal, 22 M. 308.

widow, since she is equally bound by the same rule. (1) But there may be cases in which even the father-in-law may be held bound to maintain her out of his self-acquired property. As Norman, J. observed: "If she resides in the house of her father-in-law and is an infant, and for that or other reasons, is unable to maintain herself, there may be and probably is, both according to Hindu Law, and equity and good conscience—a legal obligation on the part of the father-in-law, who has taken upon himself the care of her person and the charge of entertaining her as a member of his family, and on whose protection she is dependent, to provide her with food and the actual necessities of life." (2)

934. But this is an exception, and the rule remains. But if in such a case the father gifted or devised his estate, then the donee or the devisee, as such, would be under no obligation, for the legal obligation to maintain arises out of the relationship of the heir to the father which cannot descend upon a donee or devisee. (3) The same rule would hold good where a person acquires a share on partition with the father. (4)

935. There is no personal obligation under Hindu Law on the father-in-law to maintain his daughter-in-law, except when he is in possession of ancestral property. (5) As was observed in a Madras case: "An adult son has no right to maintenance against his father. How can his wife's right be regarded as standing on a higher footing? The son's marriage may have been performed after he attained his majority. It may have been performed by him of his own will and perhaps without the father's advice and consent. How could it be held that his widow is entitled to maintenance against his father in such cases?" (6) Even where her father-in-law has inherited property in which his son was a co-partner, his liability to maintain his widow may be determined if the daughter-in-law permanently severs her connection with her husband's family and ceases to be a dependent member thereof, as where she leaves her husband's home during his father's life-time taking up her residence in her father's house as a member of his household, after taking some of her husband's property which was all she considered herself entitled to. But the mere fact that the daughter-in-law leaves her husband's home is no reason for refusing her maintenance. (7) There is no difference in this respect between the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag schools. (8)

936. The obligation to maintain the step-mother depends upon the condition that the son has inherited available assets from his father. (9)

937. The grandmother is entitled to maintenance. As Sir William Macnaghten says: "She has a right to participate in all the comforts which are enjoyed by his family in its undivided estate, and a legal as well as natural claim to that protection which may be derived from a union of her descendants. If,

(1) Janki v. Nand Ram, 11 A. 194 F. B.; Yamunotai v. Monubai, 23 B. 608.

(2) Khetramani v. Kashi Nath, 10 W. R. 89 (95) F. B.; Meenakshi v. Rama, 37 M. 896 (402).

(3) Parvati v. Tarwadi, 26 B. 263.

(4) Meenakshi v. Rama, 37 M. 896 (402) explaining Rangammal v. Echammal, 22 M. 808 (802).

(5) Khetramani Dasi v. Kashi Nath, 2

B. L. R. (A.C.) 15 F.B.; Meenakshi v. Rama, 37 M. 896 (401).

(6) Meenakshi v. Rama 37 M. 896 (401); Siddessury v. Janardan, 29 C. 557.

(7) Siddessury v. Janardan, 29 C. 557.

(8) Visolatchi v. Annaswamy, 5 M.H.C.R. 159.

(9) Daya v. Nath, 9 B. 279; Sukh Dial v. Ram Ditti, (1874) P.R. 31; Thakur Prasad v. Baghabati, 1 C. L. J. 142.

therefore, she is deprived of such advantages, it is but just she should be enabled to take care of herself, and not be obliged to go from door to door for her support." (1)

938. The manager of a joint family property being liable to maintain all its members, it follows that the same obligation cannot rest on one who by reason of the impartibility of the estate becomes entitled to exclude the other members. (2) In other words, since there can be no co-parcenership in an impartible estate no member of the holder's family has, apart from custom, any right to maintenance. As such, the sons undoubtedly possess such right and custom in their case is so well known that it need not be proved. But the same customary right cannot be presumed in the case of a grandson, and there is no invariable or certain custom that any below the first generation from the last holder can claim maintenance as of right. Apart however, from custom, no one has any claim to maintenance by reason of his relationship to the Zemindar. As the Privy Council said: "An impartible Zemindari is the creature of custom, and it is of its essence that no co-parcenary exists. This being so, the basis of the claim is gone, inasmuch as it is founded on the consideration that the plaintiff is a person who, if the Zemindari were not impartible, would be entitled as of right to maintenance. There is no claim based on personal relationship." (8)

939. The obligation to maintain the daughter rests upon the parental duty to maintain his own offspring. And in the case of an unmarried daughter this obligation descends to the heir who is equally bound to maintain her. (4) But as soon as the daughter is married, the obligation to maintain her is transferred to the husband. And on his death, she is entitled to be maintained out of his estate. Even if she be in indigent circumstances, she has no right to be maintained out of her deceased father's estate unless she can show that she continued after her marriage to be a dependent member of her father's family with those whom he was legally or morally bound to maintain. She is, however, in no case entitled to separate maintenance out of the estate of her father in the hands of his heirs. (5) But of course, illegitimate daughters have no such right of maintenance. (6)

940. It was at one time laid down that a person was legally bound to maintain his brother's destitute widow independently of all questions regarding union or separation or the existence of ancestral or self-acquired property, (7) but it is now settled that these cases go too far and that the liability of a person to maintain his brother's widow is dependent upon the existence of assets inherited by him from his father or her husband. (8)

(1) H. L. Partition cited in Puddum Mookhee v. Rayee Monee, 12 W.R. 409; Rayee Monee v. Puddum Mookhee, 13 W.R. 66.

(2) Nilmoney v. Hingoolal, 5 C. 256; Venkatachala Raddiar v. Venkatachella, 7 M. L. T. 81; 4 I. C. 302.

(3) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, 39 M. 396 affirmed O. A. 41 M. 78 (P. C.) following Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (155) P. C.; Nilmoney v. Hingoo Lal, 5 C. 256 (259) P. C.

(4) Mangal v. Rukhmīni, 23 B. 291.

(5) Mokhda v. Nand Lal, 27 C. 555 O. A. 23 C. 278 (288); Siddessury v. Janardan, 29 C. 557.

(6) Parvati v. Ganpat Rao, 18 B. 177 (188); Bhagyal v. Sunderia, 9 C. P. L. R. 88.

(7) Lakshmi v. Lakshmidas, 1 B.H.C.R. 18; Chandrabhagabai v. Khashi Nath, 2 B. H. C. R. 323; Timmappa v. Parameshriamma 5 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 140; Chandrabhagabai v. Parameshriamma 5 B.H.C. (A.C.) 180; Udaram v. Sonkabai, 10 B. H. C. R. 433.

(8) Prankoonwar v. Deskoornwar, 1 Borr. 404 (2nd Ed.); Dai v. Purshotum, Id. p. 458; Shoo Bai v. Gowreemund, 2 Borr. 8:8 (2nd Ed.); Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B.H.C.R. 288; Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 578 (628) F.B.; Hongo v. Yamunabai, 3 B. 44; Yamunabai v. Manubai, 23 B. 608 (612, 613).

77. Where a son or other heir is excluded from inheritance by reason of disability he is entitled to maintain himself and his family out of the property which he would have inherited but for his disability.

Maintenance of disqualified heir.

Synopsis.

- (1) Texts relating to maintenance of disqualified heir (941). (2) Lights of disqualified heir's family (942).

941. Analogous Law.—The right of the disqualified heir and his family for maintenance, is not only expressly provided by the following text, but is one which the courts would have enforced as a matter of justice, even if there had been no text in favour of it :—

Manu :—201. Eunuchs and outcastes, persons born blind or deaf, madmen, idiots, the dumb and such as have lost the use of a limb are excluded from share of the heritage.

202 But it is just, that the heir who knows his duty should give all of them food and raiment for life without stint according to the best of his power : he who gives them nothing sinks assuredly to region of punishment (1)

942. Maintenance of a disqualified heir.—The texts only provide for the maintenance of the excluded heir. But his family which has the right of maintenance against him has equally the same right against his estate from the enjoyment of which he is excluded by reason of his personal disqualifications. It cannot affect their primary right of maintenance. (2) As the Privy Council observed :—“The right to maintenance, so far as founded on or inseparable from the right of co-parcenary, begins where co-parcenary begins and ceases where co-parcenary ceases.” (3)

78. (1) The widow who does not succeed to the estate of her husband as his heir is entitled to maintenance out of her husband's separate property, or out of the property in which he was a co-parcener at the time of his death.

Widow's right to maintenance.

(2) Save and except as above, she has no absolute right of maintenance.

(3) Her right of maintenance is not forfeited by reason of her having lived apart from her husband in his life-time without any justifying cause.

(4) The widow does not forfeit her right of maintenance by reason of her living apart from her husband's relations unless she does so for immoral or improper purposes.

(1) Manu, IX-201, 202; Mitak Ch. ii. S. 10-1, 3, 6.

(2) Mitak Ch. ii. S. 10 12-15; Mayukh Ch iv. Sec. 11 12; 3 Dig 483; Dai v Purshotam, 1 Borr. 458 (2nd Ed); Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 578 (591) F. B.; Ram Soonder v.

Ram Sahye 8 C. 919. Rama Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, 41 M. 78 P. C. affirming O. A. 39 M 396

(3) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, 41 M. 778 (784) P. C.

(5) Continued chastity is a condition precedent to the widow's right to maintenance. But she is allowed a locus penitentie so that if she reforms and leads a continent life, she becomes entitled at least to a starving maintenance.

(6) Maintenance is not a charge upon the estate, but may be so made by contract or a court's decree.

Synopsis.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| (1) Widow's right to maintenance out of co-parcenary property of her husband (943). | (3) Chastity, if a condition of the right to maintenance (947). |
| (2) Residence apart from husband's relations not a bar (945-946)                    | (1) Maintenance, when a charge on the estate (948).             |

943. Analogous Law.—The general rule stated in clause (1) has long since been settled, <sup>(1)</sup> it being held that the widow is entitled to maintenance out of the whole of the estate in which her husband was interested as owner <sup>(2)</sup> or co-parcener <sup>(3)</sup> though he may have been personally disqualified from inheritance, <sup>(4)</sup> whether she possesses property of her own or not, since it is an absolute right due to her membership of the family, and does not depend upon her necessity arising from her want of other means to herself. At a partition made by the husband during his life-time between his sons, his wife was at one time entitled to an equal share with his sons. In course of time this right became lost, but in lieu thereof her absolute claim to maintenance has become established. <sup>(5)</sup>

944. Though the widow has no absolute right of maintenance except as provided in clause (1), the court is entitled to award her maintenance if equity and justice so demand it. <sup>(6)</sup>

945. It has already been stated that since the widow's right of maintenance is in lieu of her share, the mere fact that she had lived apart from her husband is no ground for disqualifying her for maintenance. <sup>(7)</sup>

(1) Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N. W. P. H. C. R. 68 (71); Bhagabati v. Kannailal, 8 B. L. R. 225; Brinda v. Radhica, 11 C. 492 (494); Narbadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 93 (106); Subhvarayulu v. Kamalavallilayagaramma, 35 M. 147.

(2) Bhagabati v. Kannailal, 8 B. L. R. 225; Brinda v. Radhica, 11 C. 492 (494); Narbadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (106).

(3) Gulab Kunwar v. Collector, 4 M. I. A. 246 (258); Shoo Dyal v. Judoonath, 9 W. R. 61 (67); Hema v. Ajoodhya, 24 W. R. 474; Dev Prasad v. Gunwanti, 22 C. 410; Meherban v. Shoo Kunwar, 1 Agra 106; Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N. W. P. H. C. R. 68; Lali Kuar v. Gangya Bishu, 7 N. W. P. H. C. R. 261; Becha v. Muthina, 25 A. 86; Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B. H. C. R. 283; Anrit v. Manik, 12 B. H. C. R. 79; Savitribai v.

Laxmini Bai, 2 B. 578 (582); Adhibai v. Cursanads, 11 B. 199; Manjappa v. Lakshmi, 15 B. 234; Jankibai v. Shrinivas, 88 B. 120; Visalatchi v. Annasamy, 5 M. H. C. R. 150; Subrenania v. Kahani, 7 M. H. C. R. 226; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45.

(4) Mit. Ch. ii-S. X-5; Mayabag Ch. V-11 14 16; Smriti Chand Ch. V-10.14, 20.

(5) Lingayya v. Kavakamma, 88 M. 153; dissenting from contra in Ramavati v. Manjhari, 4 C. L. J. 74; Radhabai v. Ragho, (1878) B. F. J. 292.

(6) Khetter Monee v. Kasheonath, 10 W. R. 89 (95) F. B.; Meenakshi v. Rama, 87 M. 896 (402).

(7) Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B. H. C. R. 283; Savitri Bai v. Laximibai, 2 B. 578 (588) F. B.

946. Still less is she disentitled merely because she chooses to live apart from her husband's relations, unless, she does so for immoral or improper purposes. <sup>(1)</sup> But in strict contemplation of law it is in the husband's family that the widow ought to reside <sup>(2)</sup> and she would be so bound, if her husband had expressly made her maintenance conditional upon her residing with his family. <sup>(3)</sup>

947. This clause is based on the under noted decisions, <sup>(4)</sup> though there are also cases to the contrary. <sup>(5)</sup> The following text, CI (5). however, supports the clause :—

Mitakshara :—If a woman becoming a widow in her youth, be head-strong, a maintenance must in that case be given to her for the support of life. This passage of Harit is intended for a denial of the right of a widow suspected of incontinency to take the whole estate. From this very passage (of Harit) it appears that a widow not suspected of misconduct, has a right to take the whole property <sup>(6)</sup>

948. The maintenance of a widow is commonly spoken of as a charge on her husband's estate, but it is only so in the sense that that estate is the primary fund out of which it is payable; otherwise it is not such a charge as is defined in S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, <sup>(7)</sup> though it may be so made by an agreement, <sup>(8)</sup> will, <sup>(9)</sup> or a decree. <sup>(10)</sup>

79. The widow is as of right entitled to reside in the family dwelling house. This right cannot be defeated by a sale of the house to a purchaser with notice. Even in the case of a purchaser without notice she cannot be evicted unless she is provided with another residence. But she has no such right where the sale is contracted by the husband or is for a debt binding upon her.

Widow's right of residence.

Synopsis.

- (1) Widow's right of residence in family house (949)
 (2) Nature of the right (950-952).
 (3) Right against transferee with notice (953).

(1) Pirthee Singh v. Itaj Kauer 20 W. R. 21 P. C.; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (421) P. C.; Kasturbai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372 dissenting from Rango v. Yamunabai, 3 B. 44; Gopibai v. Lakshmidas, 14 B. 490; Chandrabhagabai v. Kashinath, 2 B. H. C. R. 841; Parvati Bai v. Chattru, 13 Bom. L. R. 1022; Mokhada v. Nundolall, 23 C. 278 (287); Siddessury v. Janardan, 21 C. 557; Ahellya v. Muckee Loney, 6 W. R. 37; Visalatchi v. Anasamy, 5 M. H. C. R. 150; Surampalli v. Surampalli, 81 M. 838; Umril Kowaree v. Kuler Nath 3 Agra 182.

(2) Raghunada v. Brozo Kisoro, 1 M. 69 (81) P. C.

(8) Mulji v. Ujam, 13 B. 218. Girianna v. Honamma, 15 B. 286.

(4) Parami v. Mahadevi, 31 B. 273 (289); Honamma v. Timanabhot, 1 B. 559; Sathya-bhama v. Kesavacharya, 39 M. 658; Romanath v. Rajonimon, 17 C. 674 (679).

(5) Valu v. Ganga, 7 B. 84; in Visalatchi v. Anasamy, 5 M. H. C. R. 150 the question was considered as unsettled.

(6) Mit. Ch. ii S. I 37, cited in Mayukh Ch-iv-S-viii 8 (Mandlik) p. 79; 2 Dig. 423, 425; Str. H. L. Vol. 2, pp. 172, 175.

(7) Bhartpur State v. Gopal 24 A. 160 (163); Sorolah v. Bhodun Mohun 15 C. 292 (307); Digambari v. Dhankumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074; Shom Lal v. Banna, 4 A. 296; Ram Kumwar v. Ram Dai, 22 A. 326; Venkatammal v. Andayappa, 6 M. 130; Ramanadan v. Ranyam-mal, 12 M. 260 (272); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45 (49).

(8) S. 100 Transfer of Property Act; Juggernath v. Odhianes, 20 W. R. 126; Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai, 12 B. H. C. R. 69 (76); Yamnabai v. Nanabhai, 12 Bom. L. R. 1075; Mahalakshnamamma v. Venkatarat, namma 6 M. 88 (86); Bhagirathi v. Ananta, 17 M. 268.

(9) Baharajai v. Itajbai, 23 B. 342.

(10) Manshadevi v. Jivanmal, 6 A. 617 (621); Krishna v. Simapommu, 16 M.L.T. 551; 25 I. C. 759.

- (4) *Right against transferee without husband (955).
notice (954).* (6) Or any transfer for necessity (956).
(5) Effect of bona fide transfer by

949. Analogous Law.—The widow's right of residence in the family dwelling house has been established by a necessary deduction drawn from a passage of Katyayan that "except his whole estate and his dwelling house, what remains after the food and clothing of his family, a man may give away whatever it be, whether fixed or moveable; otherwise it may not be given."<sup>(1)</sup> Referring to this passage, Sir Barnes Peacock said: "The meaning of that passage is, that he must not give away his whole estate without providing food and clothing for his family, and that he must reserve one house, without which he himself or his family might want a dwelling. . . . The most difficult question is whether the passage of Katyayan, which says that a dwelling house may not be given, is mere moral precept or a restriction on a man's right to convey. It seems to me at present that it is a restriction, and not a mere moral precept, and that the son and heir of the father has not such a right in the dwelling of the family that he can at once of his own pleasure turn out all the females of the family, or sell it or give the purchaser a right to turn them out."<sup>(2)</sup> This was the case in which the adopted son had sold the house to a purchaser who sued to eject his adoptive mother but the court held that the purchaser had no such right at least without providing some other suitable dwelling. This case has been followed in the other courts and establishes the widow's right of residence in the family house which she can maintain even against a transferee with or without notice of her right.<sup>(3)</sup>

950. Strictly speaking, the owner is, according to Katyayan's text, legally incompetent to sell the family dwelling house. If, therefore, he sells it, the purchaser acquires no title in law. But inasmuch as the prohibition to sell is coupled with the reason that the house should be preserved for the residence of the family, the courts modify the prohibition to that extent by requiring the purchaser to provide another suitable residence for the females of the family before taking possession of the house. But this is in the nature of an equitable concession to which the purchaser with notice or a volunteer with or without notice is not entitled.<sup>(4)</sup>

951. The rule stated in the section consists of the following distinct propositions:—(a)—that the widow has an absolute right to live in her husband's family dwelling house<sup>(5)</sup>; a right of which, (b)—she cannot be deprived by a transferee with notice<sup>(6)</sup>; (c)—and even if the transferee be without notice, he cannot eject her from her residence,<sup>(7)</sup> her right thereto being defeasible only, (d)—by a transfer made by the husband<sup>(8)</sup> or (e)—for a debt of her husband<sup>(9)</sup> or for a debt binding upon her.<sup>(10)</sup> These clauses may now be examined.

(1) Cited in 2 Dig. 138

(2) Manjala v. Dinanath, 12 W. R. 35 (36, 37).

(3) Manjala v. Dinanath, 12 W. R. (O. C.) 35; followed in Gauri v. Chandramani, 1 A. 262; Talemand v. Rukmina, 3 A. 353; Venkatammal v. Andayappa, 6 M. 130; Dalsukhram v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282 (286).

(4) Imam v. Balammo 12 M. 384; Rayawa v. Shrivayyappa, 18 B. 679.

(5) Devkore v. Sammulkhram, 13 B. 101.

(6) Dalsukhram v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282:

Gauri v. Chandramani, 1 A. 262; Talemand v. Rukmina, 3 A. 353; Venkatammal v. Andayappa, 6 M. 130.

(7) Manjala v. Dinanath, 4 B. L. R. (O. C.) 72.

(8) Manilal v. Baitara, 17 B. 398.

(9) Venkatammal v. Andayappa, 6 M. 130; distinguished in Ramanadan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 (F. B.); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Manilal v. Bai Tara, 17 B. 398.

(10) Johurra v. Sreegopal, 1 C. 470 (475).

952. Widow's right of residence.—The widow is entitled as of right to reside in the dwelling house of her husband (1) though she is not bound to reside therein if she is subjected to cruelty or ill usage. As the Privy Council observed: "If a widow from any other cause than unchaste purposes, ceased to reside in her husband's family and takes up her abode in her parent's family, her rights are not forfeited." (2) This is the right possessed equilly by the widows of all co-purceners (3) and those whose husbands had that right. This right however, cannot be enlarged by demanding on the death of the husband, a specified portion of the dwelling house for the purpose of separate residence. The decree was as to each year's annuity, to be regarded as speaking on the day upon which for that year it became operative. Her right of residence cannot be defeated by offering her a separate house to live in on the ground of her quarrelsomeness. (4)

953. Her right of residence may be enforced by her not only against the members of her husband's family, but also against their transferees with notice of her right. The right of itself does not create any charge on the family house, though it is a right in rem as regards the house, which she is entitled to enforce against all comers possessing notice of her right. (5)

954. Even where the transferee takes without notice of her right, he cannot eject her from the dwelling house in which she lived at the time of her husband's death without providing her with another suitable residence. (6) This is the necessary outcome of Katyayan's text previously quoted and discussed (§§ 949, 950).

955. Her right of residence cannot be defeated by any transfer made even by the husband in fraud of her rights, though it is a right which is not paramount to the necessity of the family for which the house may be sold to a purchaser conferring on him a right to eject the widow even though he should have taken with notice of her right. (7)

956. So again she must subordinate her right to a transfer by whomsoever made for a family necessity. So the house must go with the rest of the family assets on the manager's insolvency due to losses incurred in a family business. (8) And generally the house may be sold for any purpose which would justify sale of any other family property. (9)

(1) Prankoonwur v. Devkoonwar, 1 Borr. 364; Kamla v. Muneeshunker, 2 Borr. 687; Parvati v. Kisan Singh, 6 B. 567; Dalsukhram v. Lallu v. Bhai, 7 B. 282; Devkore v. Sanmukhram, 18 B. 101; Mangala v. Dinanath 4 B. L. R. (O. C.) 72; Gouri v. Chandramani 1 A. 262; Talemand v. Rukminia 3 A. 353.

(2) Jadumani v. Kheylramohan, Sirkar's Vyavastha Darpan (2nd Ed.) 984, Pirthee Singh v. Raj Jowar, 20 W. R. 21 P. C.; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P. C.; Parvatibai v. Chatru, 13 Bom. L. R. 1023.

(3) Ganpatrao v. Shivprasad, 4 Bom. L. R. 865.

(4) Devkore v. Sanmukh Ram, 18 B. 101 (105).

(5) Dal Sukhram v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 282

(286).

(6) Mangala v. Dinanath, 12 W. R. (O. C.) 35.

(7) Nana v. Rama, (1886) B. P. J. 252; Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (511, 514); Dalsukhram v. Lallubhai, 7 B. 242; Moni Lal v. Tara, 17 B. 398; Ramanadan v. Raviganmal, 12 M. 260; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45.

(8) Johurra v. Srengopal, 1 C. 470 (475).

(9) S. 39 Transfer of Property Act (V of 1882); Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Nihal Devi v. Shub Dial (1907) P. R. 37; Thamardas v. Gani, 4 S. L. R. 978; 10 I. C. 905; Kania Mohini v. Nanchura, 35 I. C. (C) 566.

No forfeiture on loss of caste.

80. Mere loss of caste does not deprive a person of his right to maintenance.

957. Analogous Law.—Maintenance is a right, and since no right is affected by the forfeiture of caste by reason of the Caste Disabilities Removal Act, (1) it follows that a mere loss of caste of a person by reason of her conversion or otherwise is no ground for depriving her of maintenance.

81. (1) In fixing the amount of maintenance payable to a widow, regard must be had to the following facts :—

Amount of maintenance.

- (a) the income of the entire estate,
- (b) the position and status of the deceased husband,
- (c) the value of his estate,
- (d) the stridhan in her possession, and
- (e) her reasonable wants.

(2) Provided that the amount of maintenance shall in no case exceed the annual profits of the share to which the husband would have been entitled to on partition, if living.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Amount of maintenance (959).                 | (3) Limits of widow's right (966).     |
| (2) Principles determining assessment (960-965). | (4) Conditional maintenance (967-968). |
|   | (5) Reasonable wants of widow (969).   |

958. Analogous Law.—The only texts bearing on the quantum of maintenance are as follows :—

Yajñavalkya.—He who forsakes a wife, though obedient to his commands, diligent in household management, mother of an excellent son, and speaking kindly, shall be compelled to pay the third part of his wealth or, if poor, to provide a maintenance for that wife. (2)

But this precept is merely illustrative of the right, and has never been literally enforced, the courts having laid down rules for their own guidance in this matter which are summarized in the section.

959. Amount of maintenance.—Maintenance does not imply merely the cost of food and raiment. It implies a provision for all wants having regard to the position, status and income of the family and the claims of other persons thereto. As observed in a case : "Where a widow has asked for separate maintenance, you look first at the mode of life of the family during her husband's life-time, and you try to find out what amount will be sufficient to allow the widow to live as far as may be consistently with the position of a widow in something like the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's life-time. Then you see what

(1) XXI of 1850.

(2) Ch. IV. 76, (Mandlik.) p. 171 cited in

2 Dig. 420 : Mayukh Ch. XX—I (Mandlik) p. 153.

the husband's estate is, and you also see how far that estate is sufficient to supply her with maintenance on this scale, without doing injustice to the other members of the family who also have their rights as heirs, or their rights to maintenance out of the estate". (1) The same principle governs the cases of other claimants to maintenance. (2)

960. In estimating the amount of maintenance which should be allowed to a Hindu widow out of her husband's estate, regard should be had to the estate as gauged by the annual income derivable therefrom, to the position and status both of the deceased, and of the widow, (3) and the expenses involved by the religious and other duties which she has to discharge. (4) So in a case where the widow sued her husband's uncle, the holder of an impartible Raj for maintenance, upon the finding that the annual income of the estate was Rs. 22,000 per annum, the court decreed the widow an annual maintenance allowance of Rs. 3,000 per annum charging it upon the Raj estate. In fixing this sum, the court took it into consideration the fact that the parties were high caste Kshatriyas and the widow was entitled to maintain herself in comfort and maintain a position suitable to her rank. The fact that the widow was childless, in no degree altered her right to maintenance, or differentiated the principles upon which maintenance should be calculated. (5) It was pointed out that if the widow had only been fortunate enough not to lose her husband, he would have inherited the estate and he would have been the owner of an annual income of Rs. 22,000 per annum. The fact that she lost her husband was no ground for sentimental considerations but nevertheless she was entitled to adequate provision sufficient to make her life, as far as possible, one of comfort.

961. While however, the widow is entitled to be suitably maintained, this does not mean that she should be maintained in the same state as her husband would maintain her. So where there were other claimants for maintenance and there were debts, the court held Rs. 800 per annum sufficient to maintain a widow out of an estate the net income from which was Rs. 10,000. (6) But in fixing a sum for maintenance the court is not to be influenced by the Shastric injunction that the widow is to live the life of austerity, semi-starvation and wretchedness, since it is a matter of religious or ceremonial observance rather than of law. (7)

962. In assessing the amount the court is not entitled to take into consideration the value of her jewels or other unproductive property in her hands, if they constitute her stridhan, or although forming part of her husband's estate, they are suitable to the position of the family in society. (8)

(1) Karoonamoyee v. Administrator General, 9 C. W. N. 651 (652, 658).

(2) Maresh Parth Singh v. Dirgpal Singh, 21 A. 282.

(3) Nitto Kisserree (Sreemutty) v. Jogendra Nath, 5 I. A. 55; 3 Suth. P. C. 505.

(4) Baisni v. Rup Singh, 12 A. 558; Rangothayee v. Nelimunisami 21 M.L.J. 706; 10 I. C. 110; Rukhma v. Rango Bai I.C.P.L.R. 83; Ronno v. Lawmi (1977) C. P. 8 C. Pt VIII-72; Raja Rotansingh v. Ram Beni Bai 1 N. L. R. 93;

(5) Baisni v. Rup Singh, 12 A. 558 (561); Dale v. Ambika, 25 A. 266 (270).

(6) Kaleersaud v. Kupper 4 W. R. 65.

(7) Hurry M. han Roy v. Nyantara, 25 W. R. 474 (476); Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C. W. N. 808; 8 C. L. J. 489 (496); Umrit v. Kidernath, 3 Agra 192; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P. C.; Ram Chandra v. Sagunabai, 4 B. 261.

(8) Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N. W. P. H. C. R. (63).

963. But it is submitted, and it has been held, that in assessing the amount court is bound to take into consideration the stridhanam possessed by the claimant. (1)

964. Where the court found that the widow—a pardanashin lady—needed a servant and allowed her Rs. 150 per annum on that ground, the High Court reversed the District Judge who, while admitting the necessity, had reduced the allowance on the ground that she could share that cost with a friend. (2)

965. The amount which the widow is entitled to recover is not only that required for her food, clothes and residence, but also that necessary for the performance of religious and other ceremonies, e.g., the shraddh of her husband, the pilgrimage to Gaya and the performance of other rites necessary for the beatitude of her deceased husband and her own salvation.

966. Limits of her right—Theoretically there is no limit as regards the amount which a woman may recover by way of maintenance. But in practice this amount is never allowed to exceed the profits of the share to which the husband would have been entitled to on partition, if living. (3) “A Hindu wife’s right to maintenance has been attributed to a kind of identity with her husband in proprietary right, though her right may be of quite a subordinate character, but it is by virtue of this right that she gets a share equal to that of a son when partition takes place at the instance of male members” (4) While the claim of the widow for maintenance is, as already stated, subject to the maximum amount which represents the annual income from her husband’s estate or interest, it is also said to be subject to the rule that, ordinarily, it should not fall much less than one-third of such interest. (5)

967. Conditional maintenance.—Although the Shastras enjoin on the widow the duty of residing with her husband’s relatives, it is only a moral precept which the courts do not insist on as a condition of her receiving maintenance. But though she is free to choose her own residence, there are two limitations upon her choice: (a)—if her husband has directed that she shall be maintained in the family house, she is not entitled to maintenance if she resides elsewhere without cause; (6) (b)—in no case can she take up a separate residence for the purpose of unchastity. (7) Again, where the family property is insufficient to admit of an allotment of separate maintenance (8) then the court may allot to her a portion of the land not exceeding one-third, whatever may be its value. (9) Such was the case of the widow who sued the defendants

(1) Per Westropp C. J. in Savitribai v. Laximi Bai 2 B. 573 (582) F.B. Mahadray v. Ganga Bai, ib. p. 689; Jodoonath v. Brjounath 12 B. L. R. 88; Kishori Mohun Ghose v. Moni Mohun 12 C. 165; Poorendra v. Hemangini, 36 C. 75 (84).

(2) Krishnabai v. Babaji, (1895) B. P. J. 414.

(3) Mahadray v. Gangabai, 2 B. 689; Adhibai v. Cursundas, 11 B. 199 (209); Jayani v. Alamelu, 27 M. 15 (49); Shib Doyee v. Doorga, 4 N. W. P. H. C. R. 68 (72).

(4) Srinath v. Prabodh Chunder, 11 C.L.J. 580 (587); Jamna v. Machul, 2 A. 815.

(5) Ramabai v. Trimbak, 9 B. H. C. R.

288 followed in Adhibai v. Cursundas, 11 B. 199 (209, 210).

(6) Vyavastha Darpan 870; cited in Pirthee Singh (Raja) v. Rani Raj Koor 12 B. L. R. 288 (213) P. C. Mulji v. Ujam, 18 B. 210; Goki Bai v. Lakshmi Das, 14 B. 490 (.96, 197); Giranna v. Honama, 15 B. 236.

(7) Kasturibai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372; Romanath v. Rajomni, 17 C. 674; Bhoba Tarini v. Peary Lal, 24 C. 646.

(8) Savitri Bai v. Laxmi Bai, 2 B. 573; Kasturibai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372; Ramchandra v. Saguna Bai, 4 B. 161 (268); Godavaribai v. Saguna Bai, 22 B. 62.

(9) Godavaribai v. Saguna Bai, 22 B. 62.

who were the widows of her husband's brothers for maintenance. The courts found that the income from the family lands averaged only Rs. 40 per annum, and thereupon the court assigned to the plaintiff one-third of the vacant site for her residence but declined to award her separate maintenance. <sup>(1)</sup>

968. The husband is not entitled to limit his widow's maintenance by will, since the right is paramount or superior to his power of testamentary disposition. <sup>(2)</sup> She was in a subordinate sense a co-owner with him in the property and her right to maintenance is in a limited way a charge on his property. <sup>(3)</sup> But of course, though neither she nor the court is bound by the allowance so fixed, it is nevertheless entitled to great weight as evidence of what a lady in the position of his widow should need. <sup>(4)</sup>

969. Responsible wants of the widow — In assessing maintenance the court is not to be swayed by any sentimental considerations, and the amount fixed must bear a responsible relation to the annual income of the estate and the position and status both of the deceased and the claimant widow, assuring her of such living as might be expected in the class or community to which the family belongs. For instance, the widow of a respectable trader is entitled to live unostentatiously but comfortably and not penuriously. The widow is entitled to live up to her social rank. <sup>(5)</sup>

970. It has already been seen that her stridhanam and other property which yields no income cannot be taken into account in fixing her allowance. <sup>(962)</sup> But the court cannot ignore her stridhan and other sources of her certain income, since these circumstances, and even the position and conduct of the claimant, may reduce the maintenance. <sup>(6)</sup> Such would be the case, if the widow had lived apart for purposes of immorality, or if she had concealed a portion of her husband's assets. But the court is not justified in punishing the claimant by reducing her allowance, for making vexatious defences in the suit. <sup>(7)</sup>

When widow disentitled to maintenance.

82 The widow has no right of maintenance in the following cases:—

- (1) If she has sufficient stridhan or other means of support from the income of which she can maintain herself.
- (2) If she had once received sufficient allotment for her maintenance which she has since dissipated.
- (3) If she is remarried.
- (4) If she is leading an unchaste life.

(1) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala 12 C. W. N. 808; 8 C. L. J. 489 (497).

(2) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala 12 C. W. N. 808; 8 C. L. J. 489 (497) citing Samta v. Machul 2 A. 815; Becha v. Mothini, 23 A. 86; contra Joytara v. Ramhari 10 C. 638.

(3) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C. W. N. 808; 8 C. L. J. 489; Srinath v. Prabodh

Chunder 11 C. L. J. 580, 6 I. C. 244.

(4) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala, 12 C. W. N. 808; 8 C. L. J. 489 (498).

(5) Adhibai v. Cursandas 11 B. 199 (210).

(6) Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W. R. 359 (373) P. C.

(7) Nitto Kashore v. Jayendra, L. R. 5 I. A. 55.

(5) If she is living apart from her husband's family for immoral or improper reasons.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Widow when disentitled to maintenance (972).                         | (973).   |
| (2) Possession of sufficient stridhanam or other means of support (972). | (4) Remarriage (974).   |
| (3) Dissipation of original allotment                                    | (5) Effect of unchastity (975-976).                           |
|   | (6) Separate residence from family for immoral purpose (977). |
|   | (7) Concubine's maintenance (977).                            |

971. Analogous Law.—All the clauses of this section are drawn from the decided cases.

972. Under the first clause no female can claim a separate maintenance if she is possessed of sufficient stridhan or other source of certain income from which she is able to maintain herself. (1) Such was held to be the case where the widow had inherited considerable property from her father. (2) It has been already stated that where such property exists but is insufficient for her maintenance, then it will be taken into consideration in fixing the amount. But in doing so her jewels and other non-productive property must be excluded. (3) And so must be the precarious income that she might be making on account of the charity of her relations or by the performance of menial work unsuitable to her rank and position.

973. The mere gift of property by the husband does not deprive the widow of her right of maintenance. (4) But where the widow had received her full share of maintenance and squandered it, she is not entitled to charge again the estate for another share of further maintenance. It would be against reason and a premium upon extravagance to hold that she would be so entitled. (5)

974. Then again if the widow gets remarried she forfeits all right to maintenance out of her deceased husband's estate, (6) unless, it is said, she belongs to a class amongst whom remarriage was customary independently of the enabling Act in which case remarriage does not deprive the widow of her maintenance. (7) But it is submitted that even amongst the Shudras where remarriages are customary, the effect of remarriage is to dissolve the relationship between the widow and the family of her first husband, and as the right of maintenance is founded on relationship, it must cease with the relationship put an end to by remarriage. This is the view of the other courts, though the Allahabad Court had to maintain the contrary by reason of its adhesion to the stare decisis. (8)

(1) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 P.C.; Gokil Bai v. Tsaklomidis, 14 B. 410.

(2) Ramawati v. Manjhari, 4 C. L. J. 74.

(3) Shib Dayee v. Doorga Pershad, 4 N. W. P. H. O. R. 68; Chandrabhagabai v. Kashinath, 2 B. H. C. R. 341; Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 584; Joytara v. Ramhari, 10 C. 688.

(4) Joytara v. Ramhari, 10 C. 688.

(5) Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573 (588) F. B.; Gun Joshi v. Sagooa, 2 Borr. 404 (416).

(6) S. 2 Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act; Matungini v. Ram Lutton, 19 C. 289; Rasul v. Ram Sarun, 22 C. 589, Muhammed Umar v. Man Kuar, 21 C. W. N. 906; Vithu v. Govinda, 22 B. 321; Panchappa v. Sangambasawa, 24 B. 87; Murugayi v. Viramakali, 1 M. 226.

(7) Har Saran v. Nanda, 11 A. 380; Dharamdar v. Nandlal (1889) A. W. N. 78; Ranjit v. Radha Devi, 20 A. 476; Gajadhar v. Kamsilla 31 A. 161 (165).

(8) Gajadhar v. Kamsilla, 31 A. 161 (165).

C1 (4).

975. The following texts bear on the subject of maintenance conditional upon continence :—

Narad :—Among brothers if any one die without issue, or enter a religious order, the rest of the brethren divide his wealth, except the wife's separate property. Let them allow a maintenance to his women for life, provided these preserve unsullied the bed of their lord. But if they behave otherwise, the brethren may resume their allowance". (1)

Continued chastity is the condition precedent to enjoyment of the right. Any lapse from virtue imperils her right to the former maintenance. But whether she is then entitled to starving maintenance is a question upon which there have been divergent opinions. On this subject there are three possible views and each of them has found supporters. The first view is that with her unchastity her allowance should be reduced but not cancelled altogether. The second view is that it is forfeited altogether; while the third view favours its suspension with the possibility of its resumption upon the widow reforming her ways. According to the latest view of the Bombay High Court, unchastity is a good ground for reducing maintenance to a starving allowance but it does not justify its complete withdrawal. And if the widow afterwards reforms and is repentant, she is entitled to her previous allowance. (2) So on a review of the texts, Chandavarkar, J. said: "The general rule to be gathered from these is that a Hindu wife cannot be absolutely abandoned by her husband. If she is leading an unchaste life, he is bound to keep her in the house under restraint and provide her with food and raiment just sufficient to support life; she is not entitled to any other right. If, however, she repents, returns to purity and performs expiatory rites, she becomes entitled to all conjugal and social rites unless her adultery was with a man of a lower caste, in which case, after expiation, she can claim no more than bare maintenance and residence." (3) This is one view the other being that widow's right to maintenance is dependent upon her continence and if she turns unchaste, then her allowance may be resumed. (4) The question whether a maintenance grant settled by the husband upon his wife on his death is resumable by reason of her subsequent unchastity depends upon whether chastity is a condition precedent to its continuance. If it is, then the grant would be forfeited. But if it is not, then it cannot be resumed. (5) Of course, such a term may be a part of the grant in which case the question is one of construction. So where the widow's claim was compromised by her husband's brother transferring her some land for her maintenance it was held that the grant could not be resumed upon her unchastity, since if it were the intention it could have been so provided in the deed. (6) But according to the Madras view, such a term is implied in every grant for maintenance. (7)

976. Whatever may be the effect of unchastity upon the widow's right to maintenance, there can be no doubt that he who raises that plea is bound to prove it by clear and cogent evidence, and not merely by evidence which points to a vague suspicion which might be easily be fastened upon a young widow by

Pleading of unchastity.

(1) Narad XIII-25, 26; cited in Dayabhag XI-48.

(2) Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya 39 M. 658.

(3) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 278 (288); Honamma v. Timanabhat 1 B. 55; Roma Nath v. Rajonimoni, 17 C. 674. Kandrasani v. Murugammal, 19 M. 6.

(4) Valu v. Ganga, 7 B. 84; Vishnu v. Mangamma, 9 B. 108; Muthammal v. Kannak-

shy, 2 M. H. C. R. 337; Sudhagay v. Thana-kapudayan, 1 M. H. C. R. 183; Visalakshi v. Annasavmy, 5 M. H. C. R. 160; Nagamma v. Virabhadra 17 M. 392; Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya, 39 M. 658; Debi v. Doulla 39 A. 234.

(5) Parami v. Mahadevi, 34 B. 278 Bhup-singh v. Lachman, 26 A. 321.

(6) Bhup Singh v. Lachman, 26 A. 321 (325)

(7) Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya, 39 M. 658.

interested and jealous relatives or neighbours or such as it is easy to arouse by idle gossip. In one case after the close of the plaintiff's case the defendant had applied for leave to amend his pleading so as to raise the issue about the plaintiff's unchastity which the defendant averred had just then come to their knowledge. The trial judge refused leave and the Privy Council upheld the refusal, the more so as the decree contained a dum casta clause. (1)

977. The same considerations weigh where the widow lives apart from her husband's family. Ordinarily, she is entitled to choose her own residence. But she cannot live apart for the purpose of immorality. (2) And where the family property is insufficient for separate maintenance the court may insist upon her maintenance in the family in which in strict contemplation of law it is her duty to reside. (3) So if she is a minor, her husband's relations are her natural guardians and she should live with them. So again if the husband had expressly directed her to be maintained in the family, she cannot claim separate maintenance without a just cause. (4) Such cause might be furnished by the cruelty and ill-treatment to which she was subjected in her husband's home or her own desire to end her days in a sacred place, or any other cause which the court regards as valid and sufficient.

Concubine's maintenance.

The general principles here set out equally apply to a continuous concubine (5) or any other female.

83. The amount of maintenance is liable to variation with the change of circumstances of the family and the value of the estate.

Change of maintenance.

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Rate of maintenance (978).       | (3) Case for reduction (980-982). |
| (2) Case for increase in rate (979). | (4) Case for suspension (983).    |

978. Analogous Law.—The amount of maintenance must naturally bear a close relation to the income of the estate and the necessities of the claimant from time to time. (6) It is consequently liable to be increased or decreased or discontinued altogether according to circumstance. (7) Even where maintenance is awarded by a decree which contains no clause as it should, in favour of modification according to change of circumstances, that condition is to be implied and it is competent to any party, to maintain a separate suit for its enhancement or reduction. (8)

(1) Saboo v. Ayeshabai, 27 B. 485 P. C.

(2) Pirthee Singh v. Raj Kower 20 W. R. 21 P. C.; Navayan Ilao v. Ramabai 3 B. 415 (421); Kasturbai v. Shirajiram ib. p. 372 (contra Bango v. Yaminabai ib. p. 41 dissent-od from); Parvati Bai v. Chatru 13 Bom. L. R. 1023; Molchada v. Nundolal 28 C. 278 (287); Siddesury v. Janardan 29 C. 557

(3) Raghunada v. Brozo Kishoro, 1 M. 69 (81) P. C.

(4) Vyavastha Chandrika 261 followed in Mulji v. Ujam 18 B. 218 (220); Oiriana v. Honamma 15 B. 286.

(5) Panchapakasa v. Kanaka 38 M. L. J. 455; 42 I. C. 344.

(6) Nitto Kishore v. Jogendro 5 I. A. 55; Davi Persad v. Gunwanti 22 C. 410; Narhar v. Dirgnath 2 A. 407; Baisni v. Rupsingh 12 A. 558; Itanabai v. Trimbak 9 B. H. C. R. 283; Savitri Bai v. Luzimi Bai 2 B. 578; Apaji v. Gangabai ib. p. 682; Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya 24 B. 886 (892, 898).

(7) Sreeram v. Puddomookhee 9 W. R. 152; Nubo (Iopal) v. Amrit 21 W. R. 428; Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya, 24 B. 886.

(8) Vijaya v. Sripathi, 8 M. 94; Bangaru v. Vijayanacchi 22 M. 175; Rukabai v. Ganda Bai 1 A. 594; Moolilal v. Bai Kasi 17 B. 45; Gopikabai v. Dattatraya, 24 B. 886 (892).

979. Case for increase.—A case for increased maintenance may be justified not only on the ground that since the decree, the value of the estate had greatly increased, or apart from any such increase, there has been a material increase in the cost of living which renders the money allowance insufficient to give the widow the means of maintenance suitable to her degree and the circumstances of the family. (1)

980. To raise a case for reduction it is necessary to show that the value of the estate upon which maintenance was charged had been reduced not by any default of the holder or of those through whom he claims, but by the act of God and owing to circumstances beyond his control. (2)

981. Such was the case of the widow who had sued her husband's adopted son for possession of the estate, but settled her suit amicably by an agreement executed by the son to pay her Rs. 264 and 3 bish of paddy annually for her maintenance by assigning to her certain tenants of his zemindari from whom she was to recover the amount fixed for maintenance. One of the tenants who was to pay Rs. 84 and 3 bish of paddy absconded owing to his land having become unfit for cultivation by an inundation of salt water. The widow thereupon sued the son to recover Rs. 84 and the 3 bish of paddy and also further arrears of maintenance. It was found that the defendant's zemindari had suffered as a whole from the same cause impoverishing the defendant so that he was unable to pay Government Revenue and became deeply involved in debt. The Subordinate Judge considering the impoverished state of the estate reduced the allowance to Rs. 15 per mensem and this was upheld by the High Court who observed: "Such decrees apportion maintenance always with reference to the circumstances of the parties, to the reasonable wants of the widow, and the extent of the property out of which the maintenance is to come. So long as the circumstances remain unaltered, the maintenance of course will be paid at the rate agreed upon; but if by circumstances not arising out of the default of the holder of the property the assets of it are greatly reduced, so that he can no longer be reasonably called upon to pay the amount of the maintenance fixed, I think it is open to the court to reconsider the allowance and to readjust it to the altered circumstances." (3)

982. So where in a suit for reduction of maintenance the court found "that the reduction of income was entirely due to the laches of the plaintiffs themselves, having been brought about by acts of fraud, undertaken with a view to defeat the defendant's lawful claim," the High Court threw out the suit for reduction holding that the plaintiff could not be permitted to take advantage of his own laches. (4) A case for reduction must be founded upon circumstances anterior to the suit. The fact that the widow had made a vexatious claim is no ground for reducing maintenance by way of punishment. (5) It would seem that the court is loath to modify an allowance except upon a clear case calling for its interference. It will not act upon vague and indefinite assertions. (6) So again there must be substantial grounds for

(1) Bangaru v. Vijayamachi, 23 M. 175; Bhuttacharjee v. Puddomookhee, 9 W. R. 152

(2) Greeschund v. Sumthoo, 5 W. R. 98 (99) P. C.

(3) Rajender v. Pulto Soondry, 5 C. L. R. 18 (20); to the same effect Vijaya v. Sri-pathi, 8 M. 94; Subramanian v. Vembamall, 14 M. L. J. 589; Ruka Bai v. Ganula Bai, 1 A.

584; Narhar Singh v. Dirgnath, 2 A. 407; Munn v. Kabutra, (1881) A. W. N. 12.

(4) Munna v. Kabutra, (1881) A. W. N. 12.

(5) Nitto Kishore v. Jogendra, L. R. 5 I. A. 55

(6) Greeschund v. Shumbhoo, 5 W. R. 98 (99), P. C.

reduction. Any reduction in the family income will not justify reduction of maintenance. So where the court had awarded Rs. 25 per mensem for maintenance and Rs. 2-8 for residence out of an estate valued at Rs. 35,000 in which the widow's husband's share would have stood at Rs. 8,750. About Rs. 3,000 of the estate was held in the Post Office Savings Bank which allowed  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. interest subsequently reduced, whereupon the plaintiff sued for a corresponding reduction. But the court held that cause insufficient to modify the decree. (1) In another case the court refused to discriminate between the widow with a son and one without, holding that the question in each case was what was a reasonable sum to be awarded due regard being had to all the circumstances of the case. (2) So where the adopted son had compromised the widow's suit for maintenance by assigning to her the rent of certain lands which were thrown out of cultivation by the inundation of salt water which reduced the rent values, impoverishing the defendant, the court held it to be a fit case for revision of maintenance readjusting it to the altered circumstances. (3) Where maintenance is fixed by an instrument for life, it is a question of construction and intention whether it was fixed without advertence to the increase or decrease necessitated by altered circumstances. (4)

983. Case for suspension.—So the widow's right for maintenance may be suspended if she has sufficient means of her own. It was so held in a Mitakshara case in which she had been allowed maintenance from her husband's co-parceners who obtained his property by right of survivorship. Subsequently she inherited property worth at least 2 lacs from her father, whereupon the court dismissed her suit for arrears for maintenance holding that by common law the right to maintenance was one accruing from time to time according to the wants and exigencies of the widow. (5)

84. Debts due from the family take precedence over the widow's claim for maintenance.

Priority of debts

Synopsis.

(1) Priority of family debts to claim for maintenance (984).

984. Analogous Law —Maintenance has sometimes been loosely spoken of as a charge on the family assets. (6) But it is not settled that a mere claim to maintenance though justifying a charge does of itself amount to a charge on the property from which maintenance is payable. (7) It, therefore, follows that if it is not charged by a contract or decree it might be defeated by any alienation made for family necessity and in the case of a trading firm in payment of its debts

(1) Bhagirathi Bai v. Ravji, (1896) B.P.J. 694.

(2) Narhar Singh v. Dirgnath, 2A. 407.

(3) Rajendra v. Pulla Soudery, 5 C.L.R. 18.

(4) Subramanian v. Vembamall 14 M.L.J. 339.

(5) Ramawati v. Manjhari, 4 C.L.J. 74 (78) following Narayan Rao v. Rama Bai 3 B. 415 P.C.; Goki Bai v. Lakshmidas, 14 B. 490.

(6) Khakro v. Jhoomucklatl, 13 W.R. 263; Tarunginee v. Dwarkanath, 20 W.R. 196;

Har Dayal v. Radhan, (1871) P.R. 7; Heera Lal v. Kaunsillah, 2 Agra 42.

(7) Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22 A. 326; Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 A. 160; Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar 9 C. 537; Digambari v. Dhanak Kumari, 10 C.W.N. 1074; Kuleda v. Jageshwar 27 C. 194; Mahalakshamma v. Venkatarathnamma 6 M. 88; Mutiah v. Viremmal, 10 M. 283 F.B.; Bhagirathi v. Anantha, 17 M. 268. See this question fully discussed in Gour's Law of Transfer (4th Ed.) pp. 662-660.

without reference to any necessity. <sup>(1)</sup> And even as an unsecured claim, debts of the family take precedence of maintenance <sup>(2)</sup> on the ground that such debts we equally binding upon her. <sup>(3)</sup> Consequently, she cannot enforce her right to maintenance against a purchaser of the family property and sold for such debts. <sup>(4)</sup>

Maintenance a personal right.

85. (1) The right to maintenance is a personal right and cannot be transferred.

(2) A right to maintenance cannot be attached in execution of a decree, though arrears of maintenance may be so attached or transferred.

Illustration.

A, a Hindu transfers Sultanpur to his sister-in-law B, in lieu of her claim against him for maintenance in virtue of his having become entitled to her deceased husband's property, and agrees with her that, if she is dispossessed of Sultanpur, A will transfer to her an equal area out of such of several other specified villages in his possession as she may elect. A sells the specified villages to C, who buys in good faith, without notice of the agreement B is dispossessed of Sultanpur. She has no claim on the village transferred to C.

Synopsis.

(1) Right of maintenance, personal
(1985)

entitled to maintenance (1986).

(2) Transfer where third person

(3) Maintenance right non-transferable (1987).

1985. Analogous Law.—The right to maintenance was at one time spoken of as a charge on the estate <sup>(5)</sup> but it is now clear since the passing of the Transfer of Property Act which has defined a charge for the first time <sup>(6)</sup> that it is not so unless it is fixed and charged on a specific portion of the estate by contract or decree. <sup>(7)</sup> Even prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act it was held in several cases that maintenance merely created a personal right and did not enure against a bona fide transferee without notice <sup>(8)</sup> though it could be enforced against one who took with notice. <sup>(9)</sup> The correct view and

(1) Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B.H.C.R. (App) 51; Johurra v. Sree Gopal, 1 O. 470; Joykisto v. Nityanund, 8 C. 738; Bemola Mohun, 5 C. 792; Ram Parth v. Fooli Bai 20 B. 767; Bishamhar v. Fateh Lal, 29 A. 176; Raghunathji v. Bank of Bombay 34 B. 72; Morrison v. Verchyoole 6 C.W.N. 429.

(2) Sham Lal v. Banna, 4 A. 296 (300); Gur Dyal v. Kaunsilla, 5 A. 367; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45.

(3) Adhiranee v. Shona Malee, 1 C. 365; Natchiarammal v. Gopalakrishna, 2 M. 126; Jaganti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45; Jayanti v. Mangamma, 25 M. 45; Jamnabai v. Nana-bhai, 12 Bom L.R. 1075.

(4) Adhiranee v. Shona Malee 1 C.365; Johurra v. Sree Gopal, Ib. p.470; Soorja Koer v. Nath Buxsh Singh, 11 C. 102; Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494; Balsukhram v. Lalubhai, 7 B. 282; Natchiarammal v. Gopalakrishna, 2 M. 126; Venkatammal v.

Audhyappa, 6 M. 130; Ramanadan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 F. B; Shamul v. Banna, 4 A. 269 (299) F. B.; Jamna v. Machul, 2 A. 315; Gur Dyal v. Kaunsilla 5 A. 367

(5) Heeralal v. Kausillah 2 Agra 42; Ramchandra v. Savitribai. 4 B.H. C. R. (Ac.) 73

(6) Tarunginee v. Dewar Kanath, 20 W. R. 196

(7) Coomara v. Venkataswara, 5 M.H.C.R. 405; Subramania v. Kaliani, 7 M. H. C. R. 226

(8) Mutuswamy v. Venkataswara, 12 M. I. A. 203; Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai, 12 B. H. C. R. 69 Anund Moyee v. Gopal Munder (1864) W R. 310, Bhagabati v. Kanai Lal, 17 W. R. 433 note; Jugger Nath v. Odhiranee 20 W. R. 126; Adhiranee v. Shona Malee, 1 O. 365

(9) Geluck Chunder v. Obilia, 25 W. R. 100.

one which accords with the statutory law must be, that maintenance as such merely creates a personal right which might be secured by a charge but till it is so secured, it is no more than a claim enforceable in any of the ways open to an unsecured creditor and as such subject to all the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, regarding a claim against a transferee with notice of the claim and of the fact that the transfer was made in order to defeat or defraud her of her rights <sup>(1)</sup> but not otherwise. In other words, apart from fraud, such a claim does not avail against a bona fide transferee for value, even though he had notice of the claim. <sup>(2)</sup> On the other hand, it would be enforceable against a volunteer without notice. <sup>(3)</sup>

986. The law is now embodied in S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act <sup>(4)</sup>
Transfer where third person is entitled to maintenance in the following words: (a) Where a third person, (b) has a right to receive maintenance, (c) or a provision for advancement or marriage, (d) from the profits of immoveable property, and such property is transferred with the intention of defeating such right, (e) the right may be enforced against the transferee, (f) if he has notice, (g) of such intention or if the transfer is gratuitous, (h) but not against a transferee for consideration, (i) and without notice of the right, nor against such property in his hands.

987. Maintenance right untransferable.—The right of a widow to maintenance and residence is a personal right, and is, as such from its very nature, untransferable <sup>(5)</sup> for the husband's or heir's duty of maintaining the wife or the widow is one which he cannot owe to another. <sup>(6)</sup> But though this is true of a right, <sup>(7)</sup> arrears of maintenance may be attached and sold as soon as it becomes a debt, i.e., is ascertained and fixed <sup>(8)</sup> but not till then. <sup>(9)</sup>

86. A person cannot defeat the right of his wife or widow to maintenance by disposing of his entire property by gift or devise and if he does so, she has the right to enforce her claim against the donee or devisee as the case may be.

Maintenance cannot be defeated by gift or devise.

Synopsis.

- (1) Effect of gratuitous transfer on nance right (989).
 right to maintenance (988). (3) Transfer pendente lite (990).
 (2) Transfer in fraud of maintenance

988. Analogous Law.—This section merely carries the provisions of S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act a step further in that it protects a right

(1) S. 58 Transfer of Property Act; Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei, 24 A. 160; Beharilalji (Shri) v. Rajbai, 23 B. 342

(2) Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai, 22A. 326, Beer Chunder v. Raj Coomar 9 C. 535; Seerja v. Koer Nath Buksh Singh 11 C. 102; Bank Rai v. Bilase, (1877) P. R. 14.

(3) Jamna v. Machul 2 A. 315

(4) For the meaning of which see Gour's Law of Transfer (4th Ed) 641-649; 652 661

(5) Narbada v. Mahadee 5 B. 99 (103, 104.)

(6) Bhyrub Chunder v. Nubo Chunder 5 W. R. 111; Annapurni v. Swaminathan, 6 I. C.

(M) 439, Narbada v. Mahadee, 5 B. 99 (104); See the subject further discussed in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (4th Ed.) 223.

(7) S. 60 (n) C. P. C.

(8) Rajarav v. Nanarav, 11 B. 528 (533) contra Gulab Kuar v. Bansihar 15 A. 371.

(9) Ramabai v. Ganesh (1876) B. P. J. 188; Tuffazul Hoosein v. Raghunath, 7 B. L. R. 187; Bhyrub Chunder v. Nubo Chunder 5 W. R. 111; Kashee Shuree v. Ganesh Chunder, 6 W. R. (M. R.) 64; Hoymobutty v. Kerdona, 8 W. R. 41.

though it may not be ascertained and its amount made payable from the profits of immoveable property, "and whether the right is enforced against a transferee" or a "devisee". But in other respects this rule must be regarded as merely supplementary to that enacted in the Transfer of Property Act though S. 39 of that Act does not as such affect any rule of Hindu Law.

989. Transfer in fraud of maintenance.—S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act protects maintenance receivable from the profits of immoveable property against fraudulent and gratuitous transfers. But there may be cases when that right might be defeated without any redress being available under that section. Such a case may, for instance, arise where the husband executes a will devising all his property to another thereby defeating his widow's claim to maintenance. Such was the case of a husband who owned a house in Bombay which was his self-acquired property. By an agreement dated 3rd April 1879 he had agreed to give his third wife a room therein to live in and settled on her a monthly allowance of Rs. 7 whereupon she executed a release of even date in favour of her husband renouncing all claim upon his property. On the 17th July 1879, following, he gifted the same house to his undivided sons by his first and second wives. Two months later he died, whereupon the plaintiff sued her step sons for the enforcement of her maintenance grant. The defendants contested the suit on the ground that their father was at liberty to give away his self-acquired property. It was held that the release was ineffectual to deprive the plaintiff of her right to maintenance which her husband could not defeat by any alienation or will without reserving sufficient property for her maintenance "Either the gift was abortive for want of an essential provision, or it passed, along with the right of the donor, the obligation that he was bound to satisfy. In the one case as well as in the other, the sons as donees are liable. The widow's claim ranks next to the family debts" (1) This was the case of a gift inter vivos but in a later case, it was pointed out that the result would have been no different if the alienation had been by a will. As Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., observed in another case: "If it was his self-acquired property he could dispose of it by his will but not so as to override his widow's claim to maintenance." (2)

990. A transfer made during the pendency of a suit in which a charge on specific property is claimed, is of course, subject to the doctrine of lis pendens enunciated in S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. (3)

87. The right of maintenance or residence may be enforced against all transferees and devisees of the property liable to the claim except a bona fide transferee for valuable consideration paid for a purpose binding upon the claimant, or one without notice of the right.

Synopsis.

- (1) Nature of the right to maintenance (991). (2) Claim against transferee (992).

(1) Narbadi v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99 (108, 109); Ramchurn v. Jusooda 2 Agra. 184.

(2) Krishna Rao v. Bhagwant Rao, 2 Bom. L. R. 1082.

(3) Dose Thimmamma v. Krishna 29 M. 508 following Bazayat Hoosain v. Dowlai Chund, 4 C. 402 (409) P. C.

991. Analogous Law.—S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act which protects the right of maintenance against certain transfers does not by reason of the saving clause enacted in S. 2 (d) affect the rule of Hindu Law, though it covers some of the ground of that law relating to maintenance. The right of maintenance and residence against transferees of the husband or of the heir has now become crystallized into the following rules :—

(1) That such right is not a charge upon the estate though it may properly be charged thereon.

(2) That no transfer or devise can be made with intent to defeat that right. Even the husband cannot transfer or devise his self-acquired property in fraud of his widow's right of maintenance, though it be to his own sons.

(3) That even without such intention, the right cannot be defeated by any transfer made to a transferee without consideration, or to one with notice of the right.

(4) That the right may, however, be lost by a transfer made for legal necessity or for a purpose binding upon the family in which case the question of notice is immaterial. Even a transferee who takes with a notice of the claim would hold it free from it.

(5) That where the property is limited, the transferee is bound to enquire whether there is any claim for maintenance or residence, and his failure to do so would be tantamount to notice within the meaning of S. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act and of the Trusts Act.

(6) That as regards residence, if she was living in the family dwelling house at the time of her husband's death, then she cannot be ejected therefrom by a transferee with or without notice, unless it is sold for a purpose binding upon her, or the purchaser provides for her another residence.

S. 39 of the Transfer of Property Act deals only with the first case (1) and that only upon a transfer. As the Act is not concerned with testamentary disposition of property, it does not state the effect of a devise and even as regards transfer, it only protects the right of maintenance from which the right of residence is distinct.

992. Widow's claim against transferee.—It is settled that the widow's claim for maintenance and residence in the family house may be enforced not only against the heir but equally against a donee or devisee. It may, in fact, be enforced against all transferees with or without consideration except a transferee with notice of her claim and not even against him, if he is a purchaser for family necessity. Assuming, however, that he is not such a purchaser, the question then arises when is the transferee deemed to have such notice. From the trend of decided cases it is apparent that the notice spoken of in this connection is such notice as is defined in the Transfer of Property Act (2) and the Trusts Act. (3)

Accordingly it has been held that where the transferee purchases out of an ample estate there is no need for him to enquire. But if he purchases out of a small and insufficient estate, it is his duty to enquire as to what from the widow is receiving her maintenance. If he fails to so enquire and purchases

(1) Yamuna Bai v. Namabai 12 Bom. L.R. 1075 (1077, 1078). See Author's comments in his Law of Transfer Vol. I. S. 687.

(2) S. 3 of Act. IV of 1882.

(3) S. 3 of Act. II of 1882.

the estate he will be deemed to have had notice of the fact which he could have ascertained by enquiry. <sup>(1)</sup>

88. Maintenance is payable out of and may be charged on any property of the person personally liable for it ; otherwise it may be charged on and is payable out of the joint family or inherited property according to the nature of the right.

Synopsis.

- (1) Charge for maintenance, nature and extent of (993-995). (2) Maintenance grants, duration of (996).

993. Analogous Law.—The question to what extent if at all, maintenance is a charge on the estate, has been often considered and by no means satisfactorily decided in several cases. Prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, the word "charge" was a loose expression used to convey not only a definite incumbrance but a fund out of which a claim is payable. Hindu Law does not discriminate between these two notions of a charge. <sup>(2)</sup> But the fact that it provides for maintenance of disqualified heirs and others out of the property has naturally led to the view that maintenance must be a charge upon the estate. And this view was enunciated in several cases <sup>(3)</sup> though the contrary was equally maintained in others. <sup>(4)</sup> In 1882, the Transfer of Property Act, for the first time, formulated a definition of the term "charge" as akin to mortgage and though even the Privy Council has since spoken of the maintenance of a mother as a "charge upon the whole estate", <sup>(5)</sup> still it is clear from the context that what their Lordships implied by that expression is no more than that it was a burden upon the estate as against the sons and not a charge in the statutory sense of the term. Such a claim is, to use the language of the Madras High Court, no more than "a mere equity to a provision" <sup>(6)</sup> and whether it is an equitable charge or not, the fact remains that in its effect it does not possess all the attributes of a charge as described in the Transfer of Property Act.

994. This is conceded in the very cases in which maintenance is held to constitute a charge upon the inheritance. In 1877 Sir Raymond West had to consider the nature of the burden created by maintenance upon the estate and upon review of the texts and the earlier cases, laid down, that such a claim did not operate as a charge upon the inheritance unless it was reduced to certainty by a legal transaction <sup>(7)</sup> and that was not a burden on the estate in the hands of a purchaser with or without notice for a consideration binding upon the family. <sup>(8)</sup> But in another case, Westropp, C.J., held past and future maintenance to be a charge on her husband's estate in possession of her step sons. <sup>(9)</sup> The nature of the widow's right of residence in the family dwelling house was the subject of consideration by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 1888 when

(1) Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai 2 B. 494

(2) See the authorities set out and discussed Per Westropp, C. J. in Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai 2 B. 494 (503).

(3) Ramachandra v. Savitribai 2 Agra 42; Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai 12 B. H. C. R. 69 (71); Golab Koonwar v. Collector 4 M. I. A. 246 explained in Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai 12 B. H. C. R. 69; Guga Rao v. Administrator General, 2 I. J. (N. S.) 124.

(4) Nistarini v. Mahan Lal, 9 B. L. R. 27.

Mangala v. Dina Nath, 4 B. L. R. (O. C.) 27. following Prankoonwar v. Devkoonwar, 1 Borr 404; Bhagabati v. Kamailal, 8 B. L. R. 225.

(5) Hemangini v. Kedarnath, 16 C. 758 (766) P. C.

(6) Kalpagaikachi v. Ganpathi, 3 M. 184 (191).

(7) Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (521)

(8) Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494.

(9) Narbada Bai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99.

Muttusami Ayyar, J. again, reviewed all the cases from which he concluded that until 1877, the mother's maintenance was considered to be a charge on ancestral property. <sup>(1)</sup> But in its nature the charge was indefinite in its scope, and, as in the case of a male co-parcener, a right to carve specific and individual property out of a general fund which is the common "property of the joint family." Referring then to the right of residence he said, "As to the mother's right of residence in the family house, it is a right inherent in her and an incident of her status as mother, and the son cannot arbitrarily eject her from it. There is no indefiniteness as to the specific property to which it is referable" and as the residence of Hindu females in family houses is a fact well known in this country, a purchaser was held not entitled to eject her, unless he showed that the sale bound that interest. The reason for distinction between a jus in re over general funds and a charge on a specific part of that fund, did not extend to the right of residence in the family house, and it was therefore held with special reference to the mode in which the theory of a charge in the nature of an existing proprietary right was developed, that "the equity of a purchaser for value did not extend to the mother's right of residence in specific property, viz., the family house, unless the sale was binding on her." <sup>(2)</sup>

995. But this is an uncertain fact and whatever may be the widow's right of residence, it does not solve the real difficulty. Is the right to maintenance a charge on the general estate? If so it must be subject to all its incidents as now defined in the Transfer of Property Act. If it is not a charge in this sense, but it is a charge in some other and more limited sense, then that term will have to be again defined and its incidents set out with specific reference to its meaning in this connection. For the present it will suffice to state that maintenance is not a charge on the inheritance within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, inasmuch as it is not secured thereon by any rule of Hindu Law so as to have the same effect as a mortgage. <sup>(3)</sup> But it is a right which is a fit one to be charged upon the estate inasmuch as it is one which is a substitute for ownership and is in fact closely allied thereto.

996. Maintenance grants.—The question whether a maintenance grant enures for the life of the grantee, or of the grantor or for ever, depends upon the nature of the right and claim, the character of the estate, the sex of the grantee and the terms and incidents of the grant. A grant by a male to a female relation is presumably held to be a grant only for her maintenance and as such terminable with her life. <sup>(4)</sup> But where the grantee is a male, the fact that the grant purports to be and is expressly declared to be for maintenance does not carry with it any limitation. Such a grant may be perpetual or precarious. It depends upon its terms. The fact that the grantor is the holder of an impartible estate does not limit his right to carve out maintenance grants enuring beyond his own life-time. Such is the Babuana grant which is a grant for maintenance of the grantee and his family descendible to his male descendants, <sup>(5)</sup> with the reversionary right in the grantor on failure of heirs. <sup>(6)</sup>

(1) Ramanadan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 (271).

(2) Ramanandan v. Rangammal, 12 M. 260 (272) F.B.

(3) Shamlal v. Banwa 4 A. 296; Ramkumwar v. Ram Daia 23 A. 326; Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei 24 A. 160 (163); Digambari v.

Dhan Kumari, 10 C. W. N. 1074; Venkatammal v. Auliyappa 6 M. 180; Ramanadan v. Rangammal 12 M. 260 (271, 272) F. B.; Jayanti v. Alamelu, 27 M. 45 (49).

(4) Sorabjit v. Indrajit, 2 A. L. J. 720

(5) Durgadut v. Rameshwar 86 C. 948 P. C.

(6) Ramchandra v. Muliwan 88 C. 1158.

89. A person entitled to maintenance may sue for a declaration of his right, and combine therewith a claim for a past and future maintenance, with or without a charge to be created on any property liable to the claim.

Suit for maintenance

Synopsis.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| (1) Scope of suits for maintenance (1997). | (7) Defences to a suit for maintenance (1003).          |
| (2) Cause of action (998).                 | (8) Defiance of restrictions imposed by husband (1004). |
| (3) Limitation (999).                      | (9) Possession of assets (1005).                        |
| (4) Provision for maintenance (1000).      | (10) Measure of maintenance (1006-1008).                |
| (5) Recovery of arrears (1001).            |  |
| (6) Rate of arrears (1002).                |  |

997. Analogous Law.—It being settled that a right to maintenance as such, creates no charge on any specific property, it follows that a person entitled to maintenance may or may not sue alone for maintenance or he may sue that any sum decreed on that account shall be secured by a charge declared on a specified property out of which it is legally payable. As such a right must depend upon the nature of the estate and the claimant's right thereto, the decision of the question must depend upon the nature of the relationship of the plaintiff to the party sued. For instance, the right of the wife to maintenance against the husband stands on a different footing to the claim of his widow against his heirs. And similarly the right of a disqualified heir is to be distinguished from that of the junior member of the family of the holder of impartible property. In the case of the wife suing for maintenance, the question that arises is whether she has made out a case for maintenance at all and at any rate, for a separate maintenance. If she has, then the court has to consider the further question whether the demands of justice require that her claim should be further protected by a charge on her husband's estate. So far as this rule is concerned, it is intended to set out the nature of the claim that is possible in law. The plaintiff may sue for arrears of maintenance in which case the court may have to ascertain the rate at which it should be allowed. Consequently in a case where this has not been previously agreed upon, the proper course would seem to be one for the settlement of the right and a decree charging the sum decreed for past and future maintenance upon the estate. A mere personal decree for maintenance does not create a charge<sup>(1)</sup> and is subject to all the uncertainties of such a decree. From the fact that maintenance is regarded as arising out of a subordinate co-ownership in the estate, it is eminently a case in which the court will charge the estate unless some very strong reasons appear to the contrary.

998. Cause of action.—A suit for maintenance by the wife against the husband will not lie in the absence of any allegation that the husband has refused or has ceased to maintain her.<sup>(2)</sup> In any case the plaintiff must have no means for her maintenance. So where the plaintiff sued for maintenance and it appeared that she was then in possession of funds belonging to her husband's family estate sufficient to maintain her for five years, the court threw out her

(1) Brinda v Radhica, 11 C. 492.

(2) Purnabibi v. Radhakissan 81 C. 476, suit on the ground that no cause of action had accrued to her inasmuch as the court could not decree a claim in anticipation of her wants. (1) It has some times been said that there is no cause of action for maintenance unless there is demand and refusal but maintenance cannot be refused on that account. (2) At any rate, the mere withholding of maintenance is sufficient and it amounts to a refusal. (3) The question was considered by the Privy Council in a case in which the plaintiff's failure to prove a wrongful withholding was argued as disentitling the plaintiff to maintain a suit but their Lordships negatived that contention, holding that "if the defendant had been misled into the belief that the claim for maintenance was abandoned and had in consequence not set aside any portion of his annual income to meet such a claim, he would have had a good defence to the present action. But, without some such ground of defence, it is impossible to hold that the younger brothers of the defendant had forfeited an undoubted right merely because they were, in the first instance, advised to institute a wrong suit and did not claim their maintenance, as it fell due." (4) In other words, apart from any surprise or prejudice to the defendant, the mere failure of the plaintiff to prove a refusal or withholding does not imperil his suit.

999. But since the denial of a right is a starting point for limitation (5) it is necessary that it should be stated by the plaintiff, at least in answer to the plea of limitation, since it is an established rule that when the defendant pleads limitation to a suit it lies on the plaintiff to show that it is in time. If therefore, in such a case the plaintiff fails to prove the defendant's denial within 12 years, then his suit would be barred by time. (6) On the other hand, the defendant may show that he had denied the right more than 12 years before suit which would suffice to defeat the claims otherwise maintainable.

1000. Provisions for maintenance.—In a suit for maintenance the cause of action may arise under the common law or under a contract or provision of a will. It is the duty of the plaintiff to state in what right he claims to maintain the suit. A widow with a right of maintenance reserved under a will, is entitled to contest its factum. Under S. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act (7) the amount of maintenance fixed by the husband testator himself, if not a nominal amount, and not fixed contrary to any provision of Hindu Law, cannot be varied by the court. But a widow cannot be deprived of her right of maintenance by any provision in the will denying her right or excluding her by devising the property to another. But the husband is entitled to provide for reasonable restrictions as to her residence which she is bound to obey unless she has "just cause" to the contrary. So where the testator had devised a monthly allowance of Rs. 125 to his widow on condition that she lived in his houses "at Madhupur or Benares" and it appeared that the house at Madhupur

(1) Dattatraya v. Rahmabai, 33 B. 50.

(2) Jivi v. Ramji, 3 B. 207; Narayanrao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415 421 P. C. in which the point was disposed of even on the assumption that refusal was necessary; Ambabai v. Ramchandra (1895) B. P. J. 44; Parwati Bai v. Chhatru, 36 B. 181; Rangu Bai v. Subaj, 36 B. 883.

(3) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai 3 B. 415 (421) P. C. contra in Motilal v. Kashi 17 B. 45 overruled in Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (156) P. C.

(4) Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147 (157) P. C.

(5) Art. 129 Limitation Act.

(6) As to the law under the Limitation Act XIV of 1852 and IX of 1871 see Jivi v. Ramji 3 B. 207 (209); Chhaganlal v. Bapubhai 5 B. 68.

(7) Brinda v. Radhica, 11 C. 492 (494).

was unfit for human habitation, while his house at Benares was in the occupation of his concubines, the court held it to be a just cause on the part of the wife for not complying with that provision of the will and as her residence elsewhere necessitated a larger expenditure, it raised the testamentary allowance of Rs. 125 to Rs. 320, making it a charge on the estate. (1)

Where a charge is created by agreement or will, the plaintiff may sue to enforce the charge or abandon it and sue merely for a money decree.

1001. Recovery of arrears.—It is not in the discretion of the court to refuse arrears as it is a legal right and the only discretion it possesses is in fixing the amount. (3) It may be recovered for any period not exceeding 12 years. (2) In a suit for arrears there is no necessity, though it is advisable, to prove the withholding of the amount. But a formal demand and refusal need not be proved, and failure to prove other withholding or refusal is of itself no ground for refusal to decree the claim unless the defendants can plead and prove surprise or prejudice, as that if they had known of the demand they would have made provision for its payment (4) and that from the absence of demand, they had reason to believe that the right had been waived or abandoned as where the widow was living with her well to do father out of her husband's family and did not make any demand for a considerable period. (5) But where in such a case the plaintiff who had lived with her father-in-law for several years but demanded maintenance only 3 years before suit but claimed it for 6 years, the court allowed it for only 3 years on the ground that she had been living with her father and had not made any demand before 3 years. (6) Adverting to this case the Privy Council said: "In that case the learned judges of the High Court of Bombay admitted that a withholding of maintenance might be proved otherwise than by a demand or refusal, and if they intended moreover to decide that non-payment of maintenance when due, does not constitute prima facie proof of such withholding, their Lordships are unable to agree with the decision." (7) A widow cannot release her claim to future maintenance. (8) At any rate he who relies upon such release must prove its execution in the same circumstances as would bind a minor. But a woman may waive her claim to arrears of maintenance and a defendant pleading such waiver must show not only that the plaintiff had agreed to waive her right or led the defendant to believe as a reasonable man that she would not claim arrears. (9)

1002 The court is bound to allow arrears at the same rate as future maintenance. (10) If the widow has supported herself in the past without incurring any debt then there is no occasion to grant maintenance, "since the right

(1) Promotho v. Nagendra Bala 8 C. L. J. 499 (498, 499); 12 C. W. N. 808.

(2) Lakshminamma v. Subhammal, (1898) B. P. J. 887; Ambabai v. Ramchandra, (1896) B. P. J. 44; Pirihoe Singh v. Raj Koer, 20 W. R. 21 P. C. affirming 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 170; Venkopadhyaya v. Kavari, 2 M. H. C. R. 36; Sinthayee v. Thanakapudayan, 4 M. H. C. R. 188.

(3) Art. 128 Limitation Act; Venkopadhyaya v. Kavari, 2 M. H. C. R. 36; Subramania v. Kaliani, 7 M. H. C. R. 226; Jivi v. Ramji, 8 B. 207; Narbadabai v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 99.

(4) Mallikarjuna v. Durga Prasad, 17 M. 862 O. A., Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda 24 M.

147 P. C. Subramania v. Muthamma, 21 M. L. J. 482; 9 I. C. 614; Paravatibai v. Chatru, 86 B. 181.

(5) Seshamma v. Subharayudu, 18 M. 408.

(6) Motilal v. Kashi, 17 B. 45.

(7) Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda 24 M. 147 (155, 156) P. C.

(8) Bhyrub v. Nubo Chunder, 5 W. R. 111; Narada v. Mahadeo, 5 B. 93 (104); Gangabai v. Krishnaji, (1879) B. P. J. 2; Annapurni v. Swaminathan, 6 I. C. (M) 489.

(9) Subramania v. Muthamma, 21 M. L. J. 482; 9 I. C. 614; Manikka v. Soubagiammal, 27 M. L. J. 291; 25 I. C. 897.

(10) Raghubans v. Bhagwant, 21 A. 183 of a widow to maintenance is one occurring from time to time according to her wants and exigencies". (1) But upon this point the courts are at variance, since the Madras Court upholds the widow's right to maintenance by reason of her interest in land (2) while the Calcutta Court grounds it upon her necessity. (3)

1003 Defence in a maintenance suit.—Besides the usual defences available to a defendant, a suit for maintenance may be defended on the ground that the plaintiff had already received a share of the property in lieu of her right. But the mere fact that the husband had made a gift of stridhan is not equivalent to a provision for maintenance. (4) The defendant may also plead plaintiff's unchastity as disentitling her to maintenance (5) and no court will decree a claim made by one found steeped in vice at the time of the suit. (6) Even after the decree the defendant may maintain another suit for its cancellation or modification on that account. (7) The question whether remarriage is a ground for forfeiture of maintenance has been already considered (§ 973). But it is always a good defence since a remarried woman has the first claim upon her husband for maintenance and she who claims maintenance must preserve unsullied the bed of her lord. (8)

1004. Where the husband had left an express direction in his will that his widow is to be maintained in his own house, it is a defence to a suit by the widow, who has left that house to make a home of her own. She may override her husband's wishes for a just cause (9) but if she fails to plead and prove such cause she will lose her action. It is within the competence of the testator to impose suitable restrictions when providing for maintenance and it is upon the court to consider whether the restriction is unreasonable or such as it should not give effect to. (10)

1005. No suit for maintenance will lie so long as the plaintiff has in her possession an unexpended balance of her husband's property, (11) or property otherwise inherited as from her father (12) sufficient to maintain her for the period for which she claims. Though it is the duty of the wife to live with her husband, and of his widow to live with his family, it is not a sine qua non to her maintenance. Even the wife may live apart from her husband if driven to adopt this course by his cruelty and immorality. (13) And when she becomes a widow she is entitled to live apart at her own discretion, provided only she does not do so for the purpose of unchastity or for any other improper purpose. (14)

1006. The measure of maintenance is an ever fruitful source of contest, and upon it the courts have not been able to formulate any general working rule.

(1) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B 415 P. C.; Rangubai v. Subaji, 86 B. 383.

(2) Lingayya v. Kanakamma, 36 M. 153 followed in Utharankat v. Utharankat, 80 I C. (M) 897

(3) Siddessury v. Janardhan 29 C. 557.

(4) Jyotara v. Rambari, 10 C. 688

(5) Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108; Daulata v. Mughu 15 A 382; Nagamma v. Virabhadra, 17 M 392

(6) Debi Saran v. Daulata 89 A. 284.

(7) Vishnu v. Manjamma 9 B. 108

(8) Janaka v. Mewar Ram O. S. C. 12; Kemkor v. Umia 10 B. B. C. R. 381 contra per Banerji. J. held in Gajadhar v. Kaunsila 8 A. 161 on stare decisis, his opinion being conformity with the text.

(9) Bidhu Mukhi v. Satischandra, 9 I. C. (C) 534

(10) Kanku v. Parvati, (1890) B. P. J. 182.

(11) Ramawati v. Manghori, 4 C. L. J. 74.

(12) Sita Bai v. Ramchandra, 12 Bom. L. R. 373.

(13) Pinthee Singh v. Raj Kover, 20 W. R. 21 P. C.

(14) Pinthee Singh v. Raj Kover 20 W. R. 21 P. C.; Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 8 B. 415 (421) P. C.; Kassurbai v. Shivajiram, 3 B. 372; (contra Rango v. Yamunabai 8 B. 44 dissent- ed from) Surampalli v. Surampalli 31 M. 888; Mokhada v. Nundo Lall 28 C. 278 (287); Siddessury v. Janardhan 29 C. 557.

Such rules as can be safely deduced from the approved texts and cases have already been set out. But so many factors enter into the measure of maintenance that only the faintest indication can be given of what should be the guiding principles in awarding maintenance. Where the fund for maintenance is a large estate yielding a considerable surplus income, the question does not present the same difficulty as in the case of small incomes where the court has to judge nicely between the rights of those who are to pay and those who are to receive the maintenance. In such cases the quantum of maintenance must be fixed with advertance to all the circumstances of the family, the income of the estate, other demands upon it, the relationship of the claimant's husband and his rights in the family, the income received from his share, the claimant's income from other sources <sup>(1)</sup> her immediate and prospective wants, her position and status in the family; e.g., whether a mother or a daughter-in-law; and other individual circumstances which may enter into the calculation of a reasonable allowance. <sup>(2)</sup> The rate of maintenance that can be allowed to an illegitimate member of a family can be only at a compassionate rate. He cannot claim maintenance on the same principle and on the same scale as disqualified heirs and females who have been members of the family by marriage. In fixing the compassionate rate, regard should be had to the interest of the deceased father in the joint family property and the position of the mother's family. <sup>(3)</sup> It is not the ordinary practice of the appellate court to interfere with the discretion of the trial court in fixing the quantum of maintenance unless strong grounds are shown for their so doing. <sup>(4)</sup> It has been held that the maximum allowance the widow can get is one-third of the income received from her husband's estate <sup>(5)</sup> but this is not the invariable rule and the court has conceded her right to receive the full amount of such income. <sup>(6)</sup>

1007. In assessing the amount of maintenance, properly awardable to the younger brothers of the holder of an impartible Raj, the same principles should be applied as those on which amounts of maintenance allowances are ordinarily determined in the case of Hindu widows. In fixing the proper amount of allowance to the younger sons in any impartible Raj, while on the one hand the allowance is not to be such as to cripple the Raj, it must, on the other hand, be proportionate to the fair wants of a person in the position and rank in life of the plaintiff. Regard must be had to the income of the Raj; to the claims of the other members of the family and other expenses which the defendant has to incur in maintaining his position as a Raja, the legitimate expenses that have to be met by the plaintiff and his sources of other income if any. <sup>(7)</sup> The elements for consideration in fixing the amount of maintenance awardable to a widow, are the position and status of the deceased husband and of the widow. The court should ascertain the value of the estate with reference to the annual income derivable therefrom, and consider the proportionate amount payable out of it to the widow, including not only the ordinary expenses of living but also the amount which she might expend for religious and other ceremonies. <sup>(8)</sup>

(1) Savitri Bai v. Luxmi Bai, 2 B. 573; Poorendra v. Hemanga, 86 C. 75.

(2) Dinobundhoo v. Rajmohinee, 15 W. R. 78; Nobe Gopal v. Amrit Moyee, 24 W. R. 423; Dovi Persad v. Gumanthi, 22 C. 410; Dalal Kuntwar v. Ambika Pratsapsingh, 25 A. 266 (270); Sakvarbai v. Bhamanji, 1 B. H. C. R. 194.

(3) Gopalasami v. Arunchelum, 27 M. 82.

(4) Collector of Madura v. Mutu Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397.

(5) Gampi v. Ganpama, (1883) B. P. J. 144.

(6) Madharav v. Ganagabai, 2 B. 639.

(7) Maresh Parlab Singh v. Dirpal Singh, 21 A. 232.

(8) Baisin v. Rupsingh, 12 A. 558.

1008. In a case where a widow is entitled to maintenance, it is better to award a fixed annual sum and not a share of the income of the estate; (1) though in a proper case the court might assign certain tenants or lands so as to facilitate recovery without the periodical pressure of the court.

90. (1) A suit by the widow for maintenance must be brought against all or any of the heirs in possession of the estate liable to the claim.

Parties to a maintenance suit

(2) But if the suit be to declare or enforce a charge then all persons interested in the estate must be joined.

Synopsis.

(1) Necessary parties to a suit for maintenance (1009).

1009. Analogous Law.—The nature of the claim made must determine the persons arrayed as defendants. If the suit is to enforce a pre-existing charge then the rule as to the joinder of parties laid down in O. 34, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure should apply. If, on the other hand, the suit is for maintenance to be charged upon the estate, even then persons interested in the estate should be made parties. But if the suit relate merely to a money claim, then the plaintiff is entitled to sue any one through whom he can reach the estate ultimately liable to his claim. If, for instance, the claim is made against the joint family, then a suit might be instituted only against the manager who represents it. But in point of law the plaintiff is not bound to implead all persons equally liable to her claim (2) though they will be all liable to contribute, (3) and may if so desired by the defendant, be impleaded as party defendants.

91. (1) A decree for maintenance must fix dates for the periodical payments of the amounts decreed, giving directions for its execution and where it is charged on any estate, it must contain directions for a sale of the property charged, so far as may be in accordance with O. 34, Rr. 4 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Maintenance decree.

(2) A decree charging any property for maintenance may be executed in accordance with the law regulating the enforcement of a charge.

Synopsis.

(1) Form of decree for maintenance (1010-1011).

(2) Alteration of amount fixed by decree (1012).

(3) Merely declaratory decree im- proper (1013).

(4) Maintenance without charging estate (1014).

(5) Charge decree (1015).

(1) Jhanna v. Ram Sarup, 2 A. 777.

(2) Ramchandra v. Savitri Bai, 4 B. H. C. R. 78; explained in Nistarini v. Makhantal, 9 B. L. R. 11 (27). But the case is one of doubtful authority for it assumes that maintenance is a charge and as such only the eldest brother need be sued, which is contrary to O. 34, R. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(3) Ramchandra v. Savitri Bai, 4 B. H. C. R. 78.

1010. Analogous Law.—A decree for maintenance differs from an ordinary money or mortgage decree in that it provides for the satisfaction of a periodically-recurring right, and is as such, executable from time to time. It must be self-

Form of decree.

contained and provide for every contingency of satisfaction and non-satisfaction, partial and complete, and where it is charged on any estate it must provide for its sale in case of non-payment of the amount thereby charged.

1011. The following form should suffice in ordinary cases : “ This suit coming on this day, etc., it is hereby declared as follows :—

(1) That the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 50 on or before the 15th day of October 1919 and thereafter the same amount every year on or before the same date during the life-time of the said plaintiff or until the further orders of this court.

(2) That the defendant do also pay Rs.                      on account of the arrears of maintenance on or before the date aforesaid and if the said payment be delayed then the amount so due shall carry interest at 6 per cent per annum until payment.

(3) That as a security for the due discharge of the said amounts hereinbefore ordered to be paid by the said defendant to the said plaintiff, the undermentioned property be and is hereby charged and will continue to be so charged till it is discharged by an order of this court.

(4) That in the event of the defendant failing to pay all or any portion of the said amount hereby charged, the plaintiff shall be entitled to apply for a decree absolute for sale of the property so charged and he may so apply from time to time as the occasion may arise on each default being made in payment of the amount of maintenance hereby decreed.

(5) That the defendant will provide suitable residence to the plaintiff in his family-house, and should the plaintiff be for any sufficient reason dissatisfied with it, she will be entitled to demand from the defendant another suitable residence, or in lieu thereof, recover Rs. 36 per annum in addition to the sum hereinbefore fixed for her maintenance which shall be deemed to be enhanced to that extent for the purpose for recovery from the property charged.

1012. It has been suggested by Parsons, J., that in “ decrees where maintenance is awarded, courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders, as circumstances might require, and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved.” (1) But it is submitted that this is a course, which if adopted, would detract from the finality of a decree, and would, on the other hand, be a standing invitation to contest it, every time that it comes up for execution. It would unnecessarily delay recovery, and it may neutralize its effect upon the parties who are presumed to abide by its terms till it is set aside or modified in a separate suit which the contestant might otherwise never institute.

(1) Gopika Bai v. Dattaya, 24 B. 386 (890).

1013. There cannot be a decree merely declaratory of the plaintiff's right of maintenance without determining its amount. Even where the plaintiff sues for such declaration the court as a court of equity is bound to enquire into and afford the plaintiff adequate relief. (1) The decree which merely declares the right of maintenance is not capable of execution. (2) The court should discourage a multiplicity of suits for the maintenance of one person and should if possible, make a complete decree providing for past and future maintenance. (3)

1014. Maintenance decree.—A decree for maintenance without charging any estate may be executed in the manner of an ordinary money decree. It creates no priority over other similar decrees. Such a decree becomes executable from time to time as therein provided and if it fails to specify the dates of payment, as where it merely awards payment "of Rs. 36 every year" the decree being dated 7th September 1865, then that amount would be payable on the 7th September of every year: "The decree was as to each year's annuity, to be regarded as speaking on the day upon which for that year it became operative, and separately for each year." (4) In other words, such a decree is a composite decree comprising as it does annual decrees for payment of specific sums, and if therefore there is no execution for any number of years, it would not bar execution of the decree for subsequent years. (5)

1015 Charge decree.—As regards a charge decree it must be framed in accordance with the provisions of S. 100 of the Transfer Property Act and O. 34, Rr. 4 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Such a decree is little distinguishable from a simple mortgage decree.

92. A suit for a declaration of a right of maintenance must be brought within 12 years from the time when the right is denied, and a suit for arrears within the same period from the time when the arrears are payable.

Synopsis.

- |  |                                      |
|--|--------------------------------------|
| (1) Limitation for suits for arrears of maintenance (1016). | (3) Claim for arrears (1019). |
| (2) Starting point (1017-1018).                             | (4) Suit on contract (1020).  |

1016. Analogous Law.—The limitation for maintenance suits is subject to Articles 128 and 129 of the Limitation Act which allow 12 years for a suit "for arrears of maintenance" from "when the arrears are payable" and in a suit for a declaration of a right to maintenance the same period from "when the right is denied."

(1) O. T. R. 7, C. P. C., Nistarini v. Mukhun Lall 17 W. R. 483 (489); Eshan-chunder v. Shama Churn 11 M. I. A. 7; Mohammed Zahoor Ali v. Rutta Koer, 7 M. I. A. 468.

(2) Venamma v. Aitamma, 12 M. 188.

(8) Per Westropp C. J. in Lakshman v.

Satyabhamabai, 2 B. 494 (497 498) followed in Vishnu v. Manjamma, 9 B. 108 (110).

(4) Lakshmi Bai v. Madhavray, 12 B. 65 (67).

(5) Ashutosh v. Lukhemonio, 19 C. 189 F. B.

1017 Limitation.—A suit for maintenance contemplated in Articles 128 and 129 of the Limitation Act may be a suit for a declaration of one's right to maintenance, as well as for the recovery of arrears. In either case, law allows 12 years for the suit but the starting point in the second case is most material. That point is reached only when the right is denied and not when it accrues. For instance, the widow may acquire a right to maintenance on the death of her husband, but limitation does not commence to run against her as from that date. She may not care to put her right in suit or she may have other means of maintenance in which case her suit would be thrown out as premature, as was the suit of the lady who had in her possession funds sufficient for her maintenance for five years on the ground that the court was not in a position to forecast events or to anticipate the position of affairs five years later. (1)

1018. It will be noticed that limitation counts only from the moment of refusal. Now since there may be a demand without refusal, and a refusal without demand, the fact that is material is not so much the demand as the refusal. But since ordinarily a refusal implies and is preceded by a demand, the two together contribute the plaintiff's cause of action. The denial of the right must be unqualified. Mere non-payment is not such a denial (2) and it does not entitle the claimant to sue. (3) Her right to maintenance is one accruing from time to time according to her wants and exigencies. The fact that she had not received it for some time does not prejudice her when her wants and exigencies oblige her to demand it. (4) "A statute of limitation might do much harm if it should force widows to claim their strict rights, and commence litigation which, but for the purpose of keeping alive their claim, would not be necessary or desirable." (5)

1019. Claim for arrears.—Though the period of limitation for maintenance commences from the date of refusal, that for arrears counts from when they were payable, and since they are ordinarily and presumably payable every year, it follows that arrears for twelve years may always be recovered if they are otherwise recoverable, (6) even if a suit for a declaration contemplated in Article 129 be barred. (7) A decree declaring a person's future right to maintenance must declare the sum recoverable periodically and it may then be executed at any time within 12 years. (8)

1020 Suit on contract.—The larger limitation prescribed in Articles 128 and 129 of the Limitation Act has been held to apply only to a suit instituted on the basis of Hindu Law and not to one instituted on the basis of a contract for maintenance which would be subject to the shorter limitation prescribed in Article 115 or 120. (9)

(1) Dattiaraya v. Rukhmabai, 38 B. 50.
(2) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai, 3 B. 415
P. C.; Yarlagadda v. Yarlagadda, 24 M. 147
P. C.

(3) Punna Bibee v. Radha 31 C. 476 (479).
(4) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai 3 B 415 P.C.;
Siddessury v. Janardhan 29 C 557 (568)

(5) Narayan Rao v. Ramabai 3 B 415
(490) P. C.

(6) Venkopadhaya v. Kavari, 2 M.H.C.R

86; Sinhayee v. Thanakapudayen 4 M.H.C.R.
188; Jivi v. Ramji, 3 B 207; Narayan Rao v.
Ramabai, 3 B. 415 (420) P.C.; Siddessury v.
Janardhan, 29 C. 557 (572) contra Jeerun v.
Puttno, (1871) P. R. 67 was wrongly decided.

(7) Ratnamasari v. Akilandanmal. 26 M
261 (313) F.B

(8) Narendra v. Nalim, 26 I C. (C) 989.

(9) Girjanund v. Sailajanund, 23 C. 465
(683, 664).

CHAPTER VIII.

THE JOINT FAMILY.

1021. Topical Introduction.—It has been already seen (§§ 27-28) that the primitive social group was the patriarchal family in which the father owned all the members and things comprised in the family. There was then no distinction between his wives, sons and slaves and his cattle. They were all equally his property.

1022 The next stage was reached when the patriarch, instead of being the proprietor of them all, became their representative. This altered conception of familial rights necessarily involved recognition of some rights in its component members. When this stage was reached, the patriarchal family became the joint family. In the one the patriarch possessed all the rights, the other members had neither any individuality of their own, nor possessed any capacity to possess any rights or property. In the other, the members had acquired rights to the same extent as the patriarch lost them. Both in India as in Rome the primary social unit was the family. In both places the father originally exercised the power of life and death over his children and dependents. All their acquisitions belonged to him. But the filial revolt against this paternal mastery had the inevitable result of curtailing the proprietary privileges of the parent. "A certain qualified and dependent ownership had always been recognized by the Roman Law in the perquisites and savings which slaves and sons under power were not compelled to include in the household accounts, and the special name of this permissive property, peculium, was applied to the acquisitions, newly relieved from patria potestas." (1)

1023 The secularization of law and the speedy growth of individualism fostered by the establishment of free institutions, very soon made the joint family system and its allied institution a memory of the past. But in India the growth of individualism was halting owing to the persistence of sacerdotal authority and its alliance with temporal power. In Rome the early secularization of law led to its development. In India its merger with religion has paralyzed its growth. As such, the joint family system in India of to-day is the survival of a ruder age for which no parallel now exists in the western countries. But at one time, some two thousand years ago, such families were a part of the social system of many ancient peoples, in which the father or the manager wielded the same power over the junior members of his household as the father or the manager of a joint Mitakshara family possesses at the present day. He could modify their personal condition at pleasure; he could give a wife to his son; he could give his daughter in marriage; he could transfer them to another family by adoption. And this is all that the Hindu father can do today. Similarly, as regards the right of property the modern Hindu Law bears close analogy to the laws of ancient Rome. Under both these systems the father or the manager possesses certain rights both over the person and the property of the other members of the joint family. His rights over their persons entitle him to act as the

---

(1) Maine's Ancient Law. p. 141.

guardian of all minor males and all minor females except as regards their peculium or stridhan. He arranges for their marriage and provides them with maintenance. He may, subject to the rules already set out, give away his son in adoption and thereby terminate his interest in the joint family.

1024. As regards their property he is entitled to manage it, represent them in suits, incur debts and transfer the joint property for the purpose of family necessity.

1025. In the original conception of a joint family, the family would consist of the aggregate of individuals, without reference to their relationship. But in course of time it became limited to those who were born therein or who became its members by affiliation or marriage. The members of the family will necessarily fluctuate from time to time, not only added to by births and diminished by deaths, but added to by marriage and adoptions and diminished by the same process. The members of this fluctuating body are, however a corporate body with a traditional head and manager who exercises over them his modified patria potestas and is the protector of its women, the guardian of its infants, and the representative and accredited spokesman of them all.

1026. The strength of the joint family lies in the joint family property. Without such property a joint family is conceivable but then its jointness would have no meaning, since such families may possess certain personal rights in common but they are comparatively of little account. The importance of a joint family, therefore, lies in the fact that it possesses all its property in common. As such, members have mutual rights and obligations with reference to it. But while Hindu Law postulates and presumes the existence of joint family, it does not either postulate or presume the existence of joint family property, the result being that where a member of a joint family sues another in respect of any property admittedly in possession of the family, he starts with no presumption in his favour as to its jointness. If he alleges it is joint he must prove it. But here the fact that he is a member of a joint family may assist him. For it may be that he is unable to prove that the property is joint by any direct evidence. In that case if he establishes a nucleus of joint property, then, another rule of Hindu Law would again come into play, namely, that whatever is acquired with the aid of joint funds becomes joint property.

1027. The law of joint property and partition fills an important, though diminishingly important, place in Hindu Law. It has been the subject of prolonged controversies and many of its points have not even yet emerged from that cloud land. But the differences themselves have not become crystallized into distinct principles so that there is no difficulty in stating in a codified form their leading principles. Both the terms "joint property" and the "right of survivorship" do not belong to Hindu Law, but have now become an integral part of it. They are terms applicable to the English real property which furnished to the early European writers apt analogies drawn from their own system. In course of time the analogy was forgotten and the singularly inappropriate terms such as "joint tenants" and "tenants in common" began to be used as if they were a part of the Hindu system. It is, of course, well known that under the feudal system, which still prevails in England, all land belongs to the Crown and the utmost that a tenant is capable of holding is a tenancy in freehold. But in India, land may be and is usually held, by private owners. Consequently, when an English lawyer speaks of a "joint tenant" or a "tenant in common" of land held by several owners, he is merely using an expression not to define the extent of his right in the land but merely to define its incidents. There is, of course, much in common between an English joint tenant and a Hindu co-parcener, since while they differ as to the mode of their creation, they closely correspond as to the mode of their enjoyment and devolution. For instance, (1)—the estates held under both are of the same duration, or nature and quantity of interest, (2)—joint tenants as well as co-parceners are both entitled to possession over the whole of the joint property, and (3)—if one member dies, his right passes to the rest by survivorship. The beneficial acts of one of them respecting the joint estate enure equally to the advantage of all.

1028. But here the analogy ends. For while the joint tenancy can only be created by a deed or will, it is one of the modes for destroying the Hindu co-parcenary which can only arise by birth. Then again, while the interest of a joint tenant must extend over the whole with equal intensity, it is the very reverse in a Hindu co-parcenary where the quantity of interest is ever fluctuating with the births, adoptions, renunciations and deaths of other co-parceners. Since a joint tenancy is created by a deed or will, it may be created in favour of two strangers, whereas such a thing is impossible under Hindu Law.

1029. Analogies drawn from the English Law of Real Property are apt to be misleading, and however useful they might have been at one time to grasp the leading principles of Hindu co-parcenership, they belong to two different systems which are both radically different in their inception and effect. For instance, the tendency of English Law is towards separation of property and interest, whereas that of the Hindu Law is towards jointness, so that while the moment the three unities of title, time and extent are destroyed, the joint tenancy becomes a tenancy in common, whereas under Hindu Law an estate separate in the hands of the father immediately becomes joint upon its inheritance by his sons.

1030. Again, the wife and children of the joint tenant have not any right of maintenance which is accorded to the wife and children of a co-parcener. And the fact is, that apart from the common attributes already stated, they have nothing else in common. But the terms "joint tenants" and "tenants in common" have unfortunately become too deeply imbedded into the Anglo-Indian Law to be altogether ignored, though their constant misuse is apt to engender confusion in understanding the meaning of legal concepts which now require no mnemonic aid for study.

1031. The joint family is at times spoken of as a corporation <sup>(1)</sup> but it is only a corporation in the sense that it has a perpetual existence, but a corporation is a creature of statute, while a co-parcenership is a creature of common law. The corporation, as such, is a juridical person, having a collective existence and rights. So is a co-parcenership. But there the analogy ends. A corporation is subject to fluctuations in its membership due to other causes than a co-parcenary body. Any one may join a corporation; but no one can do so in a co-parcenary which is an aggregate of relations born and to be born into the family. Again, a member of a corporation cannot dissolve it at will, which a co-parcener may do by forcing a partition which is acknowledged to be his vested right.

(1) Chuckun Lall v. Poran Chunder 9 28 M 344 (845).
W. R. 498 (484); Sokkanadha v. Sokkanadha,

1032. Similarly, the manager of a joint family is often spoken of as a trustee. So Phear, J., in one case said: "It appears to me that the joint family is, as regards the enjoyment of the joint property, a single entity. As long as the members, who have, what may be termed, vested interests in the property, choose to continue in a state of commensality and in joint fruition and enjoyment of the profits of the property, they cannot be said to possess individually, any several proprietary right other than the right to call for partition—a right which they may alien. For proprietary purposes, they exist as a whole somewhat in the character of a corporation. They manage the property together, and the karta is but the mouthpiece of the body, chosen and capable of being changed by themselves. The family may in this respect be likened to a committee with the karta as chairman. No doubt in practice, the members of the family often do leave pretty nearly everything in the hands of the karta and under his control, but this is in most cases the result of the respect which seniority in age and generation is apt everywhere to engender, and most especially in the case of a Hindu joint family where it takes place, it is a willing abdication of personal care and supervision. It is not a distinct agency or delegation of a separate authority: each member may still, at times, interfere if he chooses. And he may always insist upon division if he is dissatisfied with the management. Even where the members of the family apparently leave the most unrestricted power in the hands of the karta, it is, I believe, usual to hold a family conclave at least once in the year to confirm and approve of what the karta has done, and to discuss jointly what should be done hereafter as to the family affairs." (1) And so Lord Lindley delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in a case held, that the manager was "not the agent of the members of the family so as to make them liable to be sued as if they were the principals of the manager. The relation of such a person is not that of principal or agent, or of partners; it is much more like that of trustee and cestui que trust." (2)

1033. But this was, again, merely a simile and it should not be pushed too far. As will be presently seen, the joint family possesses peculiar incidents of its own and its manager similarly possesses certain rights and powers which are in some respects the survival of his plenary powers, which he enjoyed in the patriarchal age, which in so far as they have been curtailed by the growing rights of the junior members, they may be at times those of a trustee, guardian and even an agent; but his complex powers cannot be more compendiously described otherwise than by setting them out in detail.

1034. Both the Mitakshara as well as the Dayablag families are joint and have co-parceners. But their incidents differ. For instance, while the Mitakshara co-parcener is entitled to the right of survivorship, no such right can be claimed by a Dayablag co-parcener. This is again indicated by the borrowed phraseology of English law, the one being designated joint tenants and the other, tenants in common. Again, the right of the Mitakshara co-parcener arises on his birth, while the right of the Dayablag co-parcener arises on the death of his father, leading to far reaching results as regards the right of the father. Under the Mitakshara law he is merely a manager of the joint estate and his rights are limited by those of his son and other co-parceners, whereas under the Dayablag the father is the absolute owner of all his estate whether

(1) Chuckun Lall v. Poran Chunder, 9 W. R. 488 (484); to the same effect, Garu Savank v. Narayan, 7 B. 467.

(2) Annamalai v. Murugesu, 26 M. 544 (558) P. O; to the same effect, Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh, 39 A. 437 (447, 448) P. C.

self-acquired or ancestral, and he can deal with it in any manner he likes irrespective of the consent of his sons. <sup>(1)</sup> Again, the vested right of the Mitakshara co-parcener entitles him to call for the partition of his share, but the Dayabhag son having no vested interest in his patrimony, has no right to any partition against his father, who, may, however, make a partition if he so chooses, and in that case he is entitled to a double share of the son.

1035. Again, since the Dayabhag father is the owner of his estate he is entitled to transfer or bequeath it to any one he likes by his will. <sup>(2)</sup> Then as regards the extent of the co-parcener's right, while under the Mitakshara, it is distributed over the whole estate, that under the Dayabhag is restricted to that fraction of the property which he would get on partition. In other words while the share of the Mitakshara co-parcener is neither fixed nor defined, that of the Dayabhag co-parcener is both. <sup>(3)</sup> On the death of the father the right in the one case passes to the son by survivorship, in the other case by inheritance or devise. On the death of the father the sons may call for a partition or remain joint. In that case the co-parcenary will be subject to the rules applicable to the Mitakshara co-parcenary as regards its management and the rights of the manager and the co-parceners inter se, <sup>(4)</sup> with this difference that while the right of the Mitakshara co-parcener to alienate his share for value is not universally conceded, and his right to alienate otherwise is universally denied, the Dayabhag co-parcener having his share fixed, is free to devise or transfer it for or without consideration. He may further sue or be sued individually in respect of his share. But he cannot, without partition, appropriate any portion of it to his exclusive use or enjoyment.

1036. The law of joint family may be classified under four heads: (i)—the joint family, its constitution and property, (ii)—the rights and duties of its manager (iii)—the rights and duties of co-parceners inter se, and (iv)—in relations to strangers.

It is discussed in this order in the sequel.

93. "Issue" of a person means and includes his son, son's son and son's son's son by legitimate descent, or valid adoption.

"Issue" defined.

1037. Analogous Law.—Hindu Law regards the son, the son's son and the son's son's son as in reality the same person in different bodies. <sup>(5)</sup> As such, the three take by their birth the wealth and the spiritual debts of their three ancestors. As will be seen in the sequel this liability is by a special rule of limitation now limited to the grandson. But the term "putra" is nevertheless used in the Sanskrit texts in that generic sense as comprising the next three male descendants. In this chapter this term has been eschewed as liable to be misunderstood. But its definition here is intended to obviate misapprehension of the texts quoted.

(1) Dharma Das v. Amulyadhan, 88 C. 147.
1119 (1124).

(2) Debendra v. Brojendra, 17 C. 886.

(3) Soorjemoney v. Denobundoo, 6 M. I. A.
526 (558); Rajkishore v. Gobind, 1 C. 27 P. C.;

Sheo Soondary v. Pirthee Singh, 4 I. A. 458.

(4) Abhaychandra v. Pyasi Mohan, 18
W. R. 75 F. B; Dwarika Nath v. Bungshi, 9 C.
W. N. 882.

(5) Ghose's H. L. (2nd Ed.), pp. 457,

- 94. (1) Ancestral property means property which a person inherits from his father or father's father or father's father's father; and
- Ancestral property defined. (2) all property acquired out of the income of such property.

Synopsis.

- (1) Texts on 'ancestral property' (1038). (3) Property inherited from father, etc. (1042).
 (2) What is ancestral property (1040). (4) Accretions to such property (1043-1044).

1038. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the question of ancestral property :—

Yajñavalkya :—The ownership of father and son is co-equal in the acquisitions of the grandfather, whether land, settled income or moveables. (1)

Mistakshara :—Therefore it is a settled point that property in the paternal or grand paternal (2) estate is by birth, although the father have independent power in the disposal of effects other than immoveables, for indispensable acts of duty and for purposes prescribed by texts of law, as gift through affection, support of the family, relief from distress and so forth. But he is subject to the control of his sons and the rest in regard to the immoveable estate whether acquired by himself or inherited from his father or other predecessor, since it is ordained. (3) Though immoveables or bipeds have been acquired by a man himself, a gift or sale of them should not be made without convening all the sons. They who are born, and they who are yet unbegotten, and they who are still in the womb require the means of support; no gift or sale, should therefore be made. (4)

1039. The second clause states the general rule that accretions and accumulations follow the corpus. (5) Accessorium sequitur sum principale. But this rule may be varied by custom. (6)

1040. What is ancestral property.—The term “ancestral property” is a technical term and bears a special meaning as denoting only such property as a person inherits from his father, father's father and father's father's father. (7) But he must acquire it by descent, and not by devise or a gift inter vivos. Property so acquired would be the donee's or devisee's self-acquired and not ancestral property. (8) It is not necessary that the property which the son acquires from his ancestor should be “ancestral” in the hands of the latter. For it may be his own acquisition, or it may have been acquired by him by descent or devise. The mode of its acquisition is immaterial except for the purpose of his own enjoyment. The position is then this. A man may possess property, partly inherited, partly devised and partly his own separate acquisition. As to the first, his right of disposition is controlled by his issue, since it is his ancestral property. As to the second, his issue have no vested right and the property though it may have been acquired from his ancestor does not by reason of the mode of his acquisition bear upon it the impress of “ancestral property.” It is so long as he is alive his, self-acquisition, and as such indistinguishable from his property of the third class which is the product of his own unaided industry. It will be thus seen how all property in the hands of a Hindu has a constant

(1) ii-121.

(2) Colebrooke translates it as “paternal or ancestral” which is wrong, as the word used is ‘Pitamaha’, i.e., grandfather. Jamuna Prasada v. Ram Partap, 29 A 667 (669)

(3) Vyasa.

(4) Mit L-1-27.

(5) Umrithnath v. Goureenath, 13 M. I. A. 542 (546); Sudanund v. Soorjoo, 11 W.R. 486;

Krishnappa v. Ramaswamy 8 M H C R 25

(6) Nawabuddin v. Kani, (1901) P.R. 12.

(7) Attar Singh v. Khakur Singh, 85 C.

1089 P. C.; Venkata v. Court of Wards 28 M.

383 P. C.; Bishmanalli v. Gangadhar, (1917)

Pat. 356.

(8) Jug Mohan Das v. Mangal Das, 10 B

528 (554, 578).

tendency to become ancestral property, and the only means of preventing it from assuming that character is to gift or devise it, while it remains a separate property.

1041. There is, however, another possibility for the ancestral property to lose its character, which it does when it is not inherited by the son, grandson or great grandson, but by or through a female, a collateral, an uncle, a brother, (1) nephew or the like. So property acquired from a mother's father or mother's grandfather is not ancestral property (2) In such cases the property though obtained by descent is in the hands of the heir--his separate property. Sanskrit text writers speak of the former as Apratibandh, or unobstructed property, and of the latter as Sapratibandh, or obstructed property, implying that in the one case the heir has a vested interest, while in the other it is merely contingent and dependent upon the failure of issue. These terms will be further considered in the sequel.

1042 For the purpose of ancestral property it is immaterial whether the issue was born before or after its acquisition by descent, provided that it vested in him some time. But as regards the father's separate property, if the son predeceased the father it would not be ancestral property in the hands of his heir. This may be illustrated by the following case:--A father with two sons A and B had self-acquired property. A predeceased his father leaving a widow, and upon his father's death B took the property. A's widow claimed maintenance out of it as ancestral property. The Court admitted that in any question between B and his sons, it would be ancestral property. But it was not so as regards A. During his life-time the property was absolutely at the disposal of the father. As regards A, it was neither ancestral nor co-parcenary property, and on his death his widow had no higher claim over it than her husband. Her rights were not enlarged by its change of character when it reached the hands of B. (3) But suppose in this case, the property in the hands of the father had not been his self-acquisition but ancestral property, then the widow's claim for maintenance would have stood upon a higher ground, for her husband would then have had a vested interest in his father's property of which he could have forced a partition even during his father's life-time. (4)

1043. Secondly, any accretion made to the ancestral property becomes also ancestral, though this rule is held to be subject to customary law in the Punjab. (5) But such accretion must be made with the aid of ancestral property. (6) If it is so acquired, it becomes incorporated with the ancestral property and the son acquires equally a vested right thereto, whether he was born before or after the accretion is made. (7) The question what "aid" the ancestral property should give so as to make all acquisitions made accretions to it, has been considered in several cases in which it is laid down that it must be material and not merely nominal. (8) The mere fact that a person had received his general education out of the ancestral funds is not enough to make all his

(1) Gurumurthi v. Gurammal, v. 32 M. 86 (88).

(2) Jamna Prasad v. Ram Partap, 29 A. 687 (669).

(3) Janki v Nand Ram 11, A. 194 (198) F B.

(4) Devi Pershad v. Gunwanti, 22 C. 410 (415).

(5) Nawabuddin v. Kami. (1901) P. R. 12.

(6) Gur Charanlal v. Badri Narain, 17 A. W. N. 187; Sufa Chund v. Hemraj, (1869) P. R. 59.

(7) Jugmohan Das v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528.

(8) Ram-Pershad v. Sheochurn, 10 M. I. A. 490 (505).

subsequent acquisitions ancestral. (1) So the Privy Council denounced as a startling proposition of law "that if a member of a joint Hindu family receives any education whatever from the joint funds, he becomes for ever incapable of acquiring by his own skill and industry any separate property." (2)

Such accessions ordinarily comprise properties purchased out of the income received from ancestral property. (3)

But ancestral property recovered by a person as by repurchase from a stranger loses its character as ancestral property in accordance with an express text of the Mitakshara. (4)

1044 In one case, one Paras Das, the head and manager of a joint family banking business owning a large amount of joint ancestral property, sued for the recovery of certain property which he claimed to inherit by collateral succession. He borrowed some Rs. 9,000 out of the joint fund for the expenses of the litigation, but this money he repaid in the course of a year without interest. The litigation ended in a compromise in favour of the manager, and the question being raised that the property so acquired had become an accretion to the joint property of the family, the court held that it was no accretion merely because the manager had utilized a portion of the balance of the family's banking business which would have otherwise lain dormant: "The joint estate suffered no appreciable detriment by the transaction and it would be, we think, unduly extending the principles of Hindu Law applicable to acquisitions by the aid of joint funds or joint exertions, if we were to hold that the property which came to Paras Das from a collateral branch of the family became joint family property." (5) In another case, the plaintiff, his brother and his father, all living in union, purchased a house, the price of which they raised by pledging the ornaments of their wives. The sale-deed was taken in the name of the father. The ornaments were redeemed by the plaintiff alone out of his own earnings, and he returned the ornaments of his father and brother. On a partition this house was allotted to the plaintiff who pulled it down and adding to its site by purchasing some more land, he built a new house. It was attached in execution of a decree against the plaintiff's son to which the plaintiff objected. Parsons and Ranade, JJ., admitted his objection but on different grounds. Parsons, J., held that as the house had been acquired with the assistance of joint family, it became joint but not ancestral property, and that therefore, on its allotment in a partition to the plaintiff, it became his self-acquired property, in which his son had no vested interest. Ranade, J., however, held that the house did not become the plaintiff's self-acquired property because it had been allotted to him in a family partition, but he upheld the plaintiff's claim on an assignment which he had taken from his son. (6)

Joint property defined.

95. (1) The joint property of a joint family, comprises the following property, namely :—

(1) Dhunookdharee v. Gunput Lall, 10 W. R. 122; Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 32

(2) Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 (261) P. C.; Chala Konda v. Chula Konda, 2 M. H. C. 56 (76); Mancha v. Narotam Das, 3 B. H. C. R. (Ac.) 1 (6); Lakshman v. Jannabai, 6 B. 225 (241) (case of a vakil); Ahmedbhoy v. Casumbhoy, 18 B. 534 (545, 548); Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 32 (37); Dwarka Prasad v. Jamna

Das, 13 Bom. L. R. 133 (137).

(3) Bussessur v. Lachmessur, 5 C. L. R. 477 P. C.; Sudanand v. Bonamalee, 6 W. R. 258; Bona v. Bolee, 8 W. R. 182.

(4) Cited in B-lakee v. Court of Wards, 14 W. R. 34.

(5) Bachho v. Dharam Das, 28 A. 347 (355).

(6) Khandubai v. Pirthai, 2 Bom. L. R. 76.

- (a) Ancestral property inherited by a member of the family from a direct male ancestor not exceeding three degrees higher than himself.
- (b) Acquisitions to the property made with the help of joint ancestral property.
- (c) Property acquired by members of the joint family.
- (d) Property acquired with the help of nucleus of ancestral property.
- (e) Property though separately acquired but is thrown into the common stock.

(2) Such property may be called co-parcenary property.

(3) And members of the family possessing a share therein may be called co-parceners.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |  |
|---|---|--|
| (1) Difference between "Joint property," "Joint family property" and "Joint ancestral property" (1045-1047). | (2) Apratibhandh and sapratibhandh property (1048-1050). | (3) Meaning of ancestral property (1052). |
|---|---|--|

1045. Analogous Law.—The terms "Joint property" "Joint family property" and "Joint ancestral family property" are generally used to designate property which belongs to the members of the family. But these three terms do not always connote the same thing. As pointed out by Beaman, J., the term "Joint property" connotes to an English lawyer merely the sense it bears in English Law, namely, that the property is held by any two or more persons jointly, and its characteristic is survivorship. But in India the term "joint property" conveys a good deal more, since it means that it is property of members of a joint Hindu family. Then again, the term "Joint family property" is not the same thing as "the joint ancestral property" since family property may be joint as in clauses (b) –(e) without being ancestral, and it may be ancestral without being joint. There must have been a nucleus of joint family property before joint ancestral property can come into existence. Because the word "ancestral" connotes descent and therefore, of course pre-existence. Such nucleus is, however, by no means necessary for a joint family property.

1046 The courts draw some distinction between these two species of property, holding that in joint ancestral property the members acquire a right by birth; whereas no such presumption is made in respect of property which is merely joint without being ancestral. But there is really no real difference between the two. As Beaman, J., said: "Bating all presumptions, I state as my opinion without much fear of serious contradiction, that where property is admitted or proved to have been joint family property, it is subject to exactly the same legal incidents in every respect, as property which is admitted or proved to be ancestral joint family property". (1)

(1) Karsandas v. Gangabai, 32 B. 479 (491).

1047. Then again joint ancestral property is not the same thing as "ancestral property" which means property which a person inherits from a direct male ancestor not more than three degrees higher than himself—that is to say, from his father, his father's father, and his father's father's father. Property inherited by him from his other relations is his separate property. The essential feature of the one is that if the person inheriting it has sons, grandsons, or great grandsons, they all become joint owners with him, whereas in the case of the other they acquire no such interest. In other words, the son of the heir of unobstructed heritage acquires in his father's inheritance an interest by birth, so that his power of alienation is subject to his rights, whereas in property which he has inherited by obstructed succession he has the same unrestricted right of alienation as he possesses over his self-acquisitions. (1) This distinction is conveyed by the text writers by designating the two properties as Apratibandh or Sapratibandh, terms which have been translated as unobstructed and obstructed, but which connote the same sense as the terms "vested" and "contingent" of English Law.

1048. These terms are thus explained in the Mitakshara. "Heritage is of two sorts: unobstructed (Apratibandh) or liable to obstruction (Sapratibandh). The wealth of the father or of the paternal grandfather becomes the property of his sons or of his grandsons in the right of their being his sons or grandsons, and that is an inheritance not liable to obstruction. But property devolves on parents (or uncles), brothers and the rest, upon the demise of the owner if there be no male issue, and thus the actual existence of the son and the survival of the owner are impediments to the succession; and on their ceasing, the property devolves on the successor in right of his being uncle or brother. This is an inheritance subject to obstruction. The same holds good in respect of their sons and other descendants". (2)

1049. Nilkanth describes the same terms as follows: "Where the life of the owner of the property or that of his sons, etc., is interposed, the wealth is called obstructed heritage (Sapratibandh); for example the wealth of uncles and the like; but where ownership accrues to sons, etc., from relationship to the owner, without the necessity of having recourse to other means of acquiring wealth, that is unobstructed heritage (Apratibandh); for example, the father's wealth." (3)

1050. This division of heritage is not recognized by Jimut Vahan according to whom the right to succession accrues only on the death of the previous owner, (4) the result being, as previously stated, that while the heir in Bengal has the unrestricted right of alienation uncontrolled by his son, the heir under the Mitakshara cannot alienate his unobstructed heritage without reference to the rights of his issue. For this reason property acquired by unobstructed heritage is called "ancestral property" and whereas property acquired otherwise as by inheritance from any other relation such as an ancestor more than three degrees remote, or from or through a female, as for instance, a daughter's

(1) Nund Coomar v. Ruzseoddeen, 18 W. R. 477; Rayadar (In re) 9 M. H. C. R. 455; Jowahir v. Guyan Singh, 4 Agra 78. The rule is the same whether the son be one by adoption—Babu v. Ratnoji, 21 B. 319 (895).

(2) Mit 1-1-3: see these terms explained per Couch, C.J. in Nund Coomar v. Ruzseoddeen, 18 W. R. 477.

(3) Mayukh IV-II-2 (Mandlik) p. 87.

(4) Mandlik's H.L. 359, 360.

son, a collateral relation or from a maternal ancestor is not ancestral property nor are the heirs or male descendants co-parceners with him in respect of such property. <sup>(1)</sup>

It will be thus seen that property which may be self-acquired of the father will become ancestral upon its inheritance by his son, <sup>(2)</sup> and such ancestral property must necessarily be co-parcenary as regards his own issue, though it is not so as regards his own collaterals since they have no interest in it by birth. <sup>(3)</sup>

1051. Both the terms "ancestral property" as well as "co-parcenary property" are thus technical terms and bear a special meaning at variance with their etymological sense.

1052. "Ancestral property" not only includes the property inherited from an ancestor, as previously stated, but by accession it includes all the profits therefrom which may have been added to the corpus. <sup>(4)</sup> So where a person blended in his account his profits made from ancestral and those made from his self-acquired property, the court held that augmentations which blended, as they accrued, with the original estate partook of the character of that estate. <sup>(5)</sup> All property acquired out of the income of ancestral property is itself ancestral, whether acquired before or after the birth of a son. <sup>(6)</sup>

Self-acquired property defined

96. (1) The following property constitutes the self-acquisition of a member of a joint family :—

(a) Property acquired by inheritance from a lineal ancestor more than three degrees remote or from a collateral or from or through a female relation.

(b) Property acquired by gift or devise.

(c) Property acquired without detriment to the joint estate.

(d) Property which is the gains of learning or science acquired without substantial help from the joint funds.

(e) Property which by its nature or extent or the mode of its acquisition is incapable of joint ownership.

(2) Where ancestral property is blended with self-acquired property in such a manner that it is impossible to separate the two, the whole may be presumed to be self-acquired.

(1) Nund Coomar v. Ruzsooddeen, 18 W. R. 477; Gurumurthi v. Gurammal 82 M. 88; but see Venkayamma v. Venkata ramanayamma 25 M. 678 (687, 688) P. C. discussed post under "Inheritance."
(2) Ram Narain v. Pertum Singh, 20 W. R. 189; Chaturbhooj v. Dharamsi, 9 B. 498 (450).

(3) Janki v. Nand Ram 11. A. 194 (198); Gurumurthi v. Gurammal 82 M. 88 (90).

(4) Goroo Churn v. Golukmoney, Fult. 166; Lakshman v. Jannabai, 6 B. 225; Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed 10 B. 11 (16).

(5) Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed, 10 B. 11 (16, 17).

(6) Jugmohan Das v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528.

Illustrations.

(a) A a member of a co-parcenary receives the gift of a village from his father-in-law as his marriage dowry. The village is his self-acquisition.

(b) The father of a co-parcenary gives half of his self-acquired estate to his son A, and the other half to his daughter B, using appropriate words to convey an absolute estate. The estate is the self-acquisition of A and the stridhan of B.

(c) A, a member of a co-parcenary, insured his life and purchased the insurance premia out of his salary. The insurance money is his self-acquisition.

(d) A who had received a general education out of the joint funds, acquires property out of his savings made in the practice of his business, as vakil, contractor, or astrologer. The property is his self-acquisition.

(e) A purchased land at a court auction in execution of a decree for money of a co-parcenership. It is his self-acquisition, for under S. 66 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code no evidence is admissible to show that the purchase was on account of the joint family.

(f) A member of a co-parcenary receives a grant of an impartible estate. The estate is his self-acquisition as by its nature it is incapable of joint ownership.

Synopsis.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| (1) Texts on self-acquired property(1053-1054). | (5) Gains of science (1063-1065).                 |
| (2) Early cases on the subject (1056).              | (9) Acquisition by unaided effort(1066-1067). |
| (3) What is a self-acquisition (1057).              | (10) Accretion to self-acquired property (1068).  |
| (4) Obstructed heritage (1058).                     | (11) Blended property (1069-1070).                |
| (5) Acquisition by gift or devise (1060).           |  |
| (6) Personal gifts (1061).                          |  |
| (7) Property acquired without detri-                |  |

1053. Analogous Law.—The following texts support this section :—

Manu :—206. Wealth, however acquired by learning, belongs exclusively to any one of them who acquired it so does anything given by a friend or received on account of marriage or presented as a mark of respect to a guest.

Texts.

207. What a brother has acquired by labour or skill without using the patrimony, he shall not unless by his free will, put it into parcenary with his brethren since in fact it was acquired by himself. <sup>(1)</sup>

Narad :—6. Property gained by valour or belonging to a wife and the gains of science are three kinds of wealth not subject to partition and so is a favour conferred by the father exempt from partition.

7. When the mother has bestowed a portion of her property on any of her sons from affection, the rule is the same in that case also, for the mother is equal to the father as regards her competence to bestow gifts. <sup>(2)</sup>

Yajnavalkya :— Whatever is acquired by the co-parcener himself, without detriment to the fathers' estate <sup>(3)</sup> as a present from a friend, or a gift at nuptials does not appertain to the co-heirs. Nor shall he who recovers hereditary property which had been taken away give it up to the parceners nor what has been gained by science. <sup>(4)</sup>

1b. The wealth which is given to one by parents, belongs to him alone. <sup>(5)</sup>

- (1) Manu IX-206, 207.
 (2) Narad XIII-6, 7
 (3) Includes also the estate of any undivided co-parcener—Smṛiti Chandrika VII-28.
 (4) II-119, 120, cited and explained in Mit. 1-IV-1-31. Dayabhag likewise devotes a whole chapter to this subject VI-II 40.
 (5) Yaj. II-128 (Mandlik) p. 216. Virmirodaya amplifies this by saying that any gifts within due bounds made by the father to his separated sons out of affection is not to be disputed by the son born after partition, and that the same rule applies in the case of affectionate gifts by the father to his sons before partition. These gifts are to be considered as the peculiar property of the sons and as such impartible"—I-222 P-1 cited Mandlik p. 216 F. N.

2. That which had been acquired by the co-parcener himself without any detriment to the goods of his father or mother, or which has been received by him from a friend, or obtained by marriage shall not appertain to the co-heirs or brethren. Any property which had descended in succession from ancestors and had been seized by others and remained unrecovered by the father and the rest through inability or for any other cause, he among the sons who recovers it with the acquiescence of the rest shall not give up to the brethren or other co-heirs : the person recovering it shall take such property.

Mitakshara :—6. Here the phrase anything acquired by himself without detriment to the father's estate must be everywhere understood and it is thus connected with each member of the sentence, what is obtained from a friend without detriment to the paternal estate, what is received in marriage without waste of the patrimony, what is redeemed of the hereditary estate without expenditure of ancestral property, what is gained by science without use of the father's goods. Consequently what is obtained from a friend as return of an obligation conferred at the charge of the patrimony, what is received at a marriage concluded in form termed Asur or the like, what is recovered of the hereditary estate by the expenditure of the father's goods, what is earned by science acquired at the expense of ancestral wealth, all that must be shared with the whole of the brethren and with the father.<sup>(1)</sup>

1054. Both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag devote a chapter each to the subject of self-acquisition. Their substance is to exempt all acquisitions made without detriment to the joint estate. The rest is merely illustrative and most of the illustrations refer to occupations now no longer pursued. Thus the Dayabhag gives the following list as constituting the "gains of science" <sup>(2)</sup>:—

- (1) Prize for the solution of a difficulty.
- (2) Fee for teaching a pupil.
- (3) Fee for officiating as a priest.
- (4) Prize for solving a scientific question.
- (5) Deciding a litigated question.
- (6) Prize won in a literary debate.
- (7) Prize won in a reading competition.
- (8) Games of artists and artisans.
- (9) Gambling gains.
- (10) Gains of valour and soldier's booty. <sup>(3)</sup>
- (11) Marriage presents.
- (12) Personalia. <sup>(4)</sup>
- (13) Books.
- (14) House, garden, and the like, constructed on the site of the old family dwelling.

(15) Lost ancestral property, recovered by one's labour, ability and exertion. <sup>(5)</sup>

1055. Jimut Vahan emphasizes the fact that anything gained by a person as a reward for learning or valour or by the application of knowledge or skill<sup>(6)</sup> is his own.

1056. These precepts on the subject of self-acquisition were somewhat narrowly interpreted in the early cases in which the courts were inclined to the view that any assistance from the joint estate, however indirect and inconsiderable, was Early cases.

- (1) Ib. 1-IV-2, 6.
- (2) Ib. VI-11-2-12.
- (3) Ib. § 20.
- (4) "Clothes, vehicles ornaments, prepared food, water, woman, and furniture for repose or for meals are declared not liable to distribution." Ib. § 23.

(5) All the text writers quote similar instances—See Mayukh IV-IV 1-4 (Mandlik) pp. 39, 40, 214-216.

(6) Dayabhag VI-11-17.

a "detriment to the estate" within the meaning of the texts, so as to render the product of all such individual effort equally joint property. <sup>(1)</sup> But this view has long since become equally obsolete, and it is now settled that the law must not be divorced from common sense and the acquirer deprived of his self acquisition, unless it involved material detriment to the estate, or to put it differently, all self-acquisitions belong to the acquirer, unless it can be shown that they were made with the material assistance of the joint fund. <sup>(2)</sup> Such question may be now considered with reference to the more general principle whether individual acquisitions can be regarded as accretions to the joint estate

1057. What is a self-acquisition.—The question when any property acquired by a member of a co-parcenary becomes joint property of the family has already been considered. And in considering that question references have been made to cases when such acquisitions fail to become a part of the corpus of the joint estate. But the law of self-acquisition had attained sufficient importance even in the medieval age, when separate chapters were devoted to the subject. It has since assumed much greater importance, and therefore calls for separate notice. So far as the sacred texts are concerned, their conjoint effect is to put all acquisitions howsoever made to the single test—were they made without detriment to the joint estate, which means that if they were made without material draft on the family fund, then they cannot be treated as an accretion to the family estate and must be regarded as the separate property of the co-parcener.

1058. It is agreed that all acquisitions made by what is known as "obstructed heritage" must be regarded as falling into this class. Now since all inheritance to a male ancestor more than three degrees remote from the heir is an obstructed heritage, it follows that property inherited from an ancestor other than the father, grandfather and great grandfather becomes a person's separate property and similarly would be the property, inherited from any collateral such as a brother or a paternal cousin, <sup>(3)</sup> uncle, grand-uncle and the like; or that inherited from or through a female such as the mother <sup>(4)</sup>

(1) Obstructed inheritance.

(1) Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M.H.C. B. 56; Gangadharudu v. Durasulu, 7 M.H.C.R. 47; Mancha v. Narclam Das 6 B.H.C. R. (A.C.) 1.

(2) Nana Narain v. Huree Punth, 9 M.I. A. 96; Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 P.C. Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal, 29 A. 244 P.C.; Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal 40 A. 159 P.C.; Subanslal v. Harbans Lal, 1 B.S.R. 121; Parlab v. Tilukdharee, 1 B.S.R. 236; Koul Nath v. Jagrup 5 B.S.R. 14; Muddan Gopal v. Ram-Buksh 6 W.R. 71; Bishen Perikash v. Bawa Misser, 10 W.R. 287 O.A. 20 W.R. 187; Rameshwar v. Lachmi Prasad, 7 C.W.N. 688; Subhagya v. Suragya, 10 M. 251; Gunnaiyan v. Kamalshi, 26 M. 389 (353); Tottampudi v. Tottampudi 27 M. 228; Avay ambal v. Kamalambal, 19 M.L.J. 65; Tangabai v. Vamanaji, 2 B.H.C.R. 301; Narettan v. Narsandas, 3 B.H.C.R. (A.C.) 6; Purshotam v. Vasudev, 8 B.H.C.R. (O.C.) 196;

Lakshman v. Jamnatar, 6 B. 225 (240, 243) Jugmohandas v. Mangal Das, 10 B. 528 (578, 580); Hannmantapa v. Jivubai, 24 B. 547; Chabildas v. Ramdas, 11 Bom. L. R. 66; Lachmi v. Debi Prasad, 20 A. 485; Durg Dal v. Ganesh Dal, 32 A. 905

(3) Rayadur v. Rayadur, 3 M. H. C. R. 455; Nand Chomar v. Rascooddeen, 10 B.L.R. 188; Jawahir v. Guyan Singh, 4 Agra 78; Pitamasingh v. Ujagarasingh, 1 A. 652.

(4) Muttayan v. Zamindar of Sivagiri, 6 M. 1 (16) P. C. reversing contra O. A. from Muttayan v. Viragasudra, 3 M. 870 (878); Sivaganga Zamindar v. Lakshmana, 9 M. 188; Saminadha v. Thangathanni, 19 M. 70; Chelikhanji v. Appa Rau, 20 M. 207 (218); Venkayamma v. Venkataramanayyama, 25 M. 678; considered and explained in Karuppal v. Sankaranarayana, 27 M. 800 (312—315) F.B.; Jogeswar v. Ramchandra, 23 C. 670 (679).

a maternal grandfather, maternal great grandfather, father-in-law (1) or the like. (2)

1059. It has already been stated that such property is only the self-acquired property in the hands of the heir, and that it would become joint property in the hands of his own heir unless it was acquired by a gift or devise (§ 1049).

1060. This is in accordance with clause (b). All property from whomsoever acquired by a gift or devise becomes self-acquired property in the hands of the donee or devisee. Consequently, property so obtained even from the father, grandfather or the great grandfather would be self-acquired,

(b) Acquisition by gift or devise.

though if the same property be obtained by inheritance, it would be "ancestral" and "joint." (3) But of course, in such a case the question may arise whether the gift or devise was intended to be made to a persona designata or to a family. If it is to a person for and on behalf of his family then the property would unquestionably become joint. The question is one of construction and intention. (4) If for example, the village is given to A and B jointly without limitation, by words purporting that they were to take it in distinct shares, the result would be both according to the English as well as the Hindu Law that they take the whole of the joint property by right of survivorship. (5) So where the father left a will devising one of his three houses to his three sons, adding—"therefore my three sons shall use and enjoy this house from son to grandson and so on in succession without power to give as gift or sell the same"—and as regards his other two houses the will provided that out of a total income of Rs. 530 (being the total amount of the income of rent per month) deducting the aforesaid expenses of Rs. 181, "the remaining amount whatever it may be, shall be divided by my executors to my three sons in equal shares. . . . My executors shall divide and give away these properties to my own grandsons being my sons, sons after my sons according to their respective shares. My sons shall have no right whatever to give as gift or to sell these properties"; and one of the testators' sons sued for the construction of the will, the court held that as to the first house, it vested absolutely in the three sons as members of a joint Hindu family, and that the law of inheritance in undivided Hindu families applied, and that as to the second and third houses, the sons took a limited estate as tenants in common in the income of the houses, in the nature of an estate for lives, which would subsist till the death of the last survivor, when the limited estate would come to an end and the provision for the division of the corpus could be carried out; that as to the first house on any of the donees dying, the other sons would take by survivorship excluding the widow of the deceased and that as to the other two houses the limited estate of each son would on his death pass to his legal representatives, and not to the survivors. (6) In another case decided by a Full Bench some land had been transferred to his wife and her children in

(1) Beharee Lal v. Lall Chand, 25 W. R. 307.

(2) Adhar Chandra v. Nobin Chandra, 12 C. W. N. 108; Atar Singh v. Thakur Singh, 35 C. 1089 P. C.; Jawahir Singh v. Gayan Singh, 3 Agra 78; Pitamsingh v. Ujagar Singh, 1 A. 651; Nallatambi v. Mukunda, 3 M.H.C.R. 455; Saminadha v. Thangathani, 19 M. 70; Nund Coomar v. Raseecooddeen, 18

W. R. 477; Lochun Singh v. Nemdharee, 20 W. R. 170; Gurumurthi v. Gurammal, 32 M. 88 (90); Parson v. Somi, 14 Bom. L.R., 400.

(3) Diwali v. Brahardas, 26 B. 445; Kishori v. Mundra, 38 A. 655.

(4) Radhabai v. Nanarav, 3 B. 151 (153).

(5) Radhabai v. Nanarav, 3 B. 151 (153).

(6) Yeshirajulu v. Mukunthu, 28 M. 868.

accordance with the nuncupative will of the owner. The family was subject to the Marumakkatayam law under which land was impartible. The court held that as the donor had expressed no intention as to how the properties should be held by the donees, and in the absence of such expression, the presumption was that he intended that they should take them as properties acquired by their branch, or as the exclusive properties of their own branch, with the usual incidents of tarwad property in accordance with the Marumakkatayam usage which governed the donees. (1)

1061. Marriage gifts and other friendly offerings are excepted from partition even by the Sanskrit texts (2) which all quote Personal gifts. Manu who excepted from partition "any thing given by a friend received on account of marriage, or presented as a mark of respect to a guest." So where a person gifted to his son-in-law a shop and business in which the latter employed his brother as a servant, the court had no hesitation in overruling his pretention of jointness on the short ground that what the brother had received as a present from his father-in-law was his self-acquisition. (3) So nuptial gifts to a member of a joint family made out of the joint fund become his separate property. (4) On this principle the court upheld a gift of 8 acres of ancestral land by the father of a joint family possessing 200 acres to his daughter at her marriage. (5)

1062. As regards self-acquisitions made without detriment to the estate the general rule observable by the courts has already been set out (§ 1055). It has been there stated that the test in such cases is whether the acquirer has received material assistance from the joint funds in his mental equipment which has enabled him to make acquisitions. It is now settled that the mere fact that a person was maintained out of the family, (6) or received his general education out of its funds, (7) does not suffice to make his acquisitions joint; though the case would be different where he had received special education for a particular profession from the income of which he had acquired property. But the tendency of modern cases is against a too narrow construction of the rule. The courts have, consequently, laid down that the income of a Vakil who had been generally educated at the expense of the family was his self-acquired property. (8)

1063. In some of these cases the vakil appears to have received his professional training out of the joint fund but nevertheless his savings were held to be his own. (9) The contrary was laid down in some early cases, (10) but referring to them the Privy Council observed, that it would be a startling

(1) Kunbacha v. Kutti Mammi, 16 M. 201 (1907) F. B. following Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhoo, 6 M. I. A. 526; Mahomed Shumsool v. Shewakram, L. R. 21 A. 7; Moidin v. Ambu, 16 M. 202 overruling Narayanan v. Kaman, 7 M. 315.

(2) Manu IX 206 quoted supra : to the same effect Narad XIII. 6 7; 88 S. B. E. 190: Mit. 1-IV-2.

(3) Beharee v. Lalchand, 25 W. R. 307; Adhar Chandra v. Nobin Chandra, 12 C. W. N. 108.

(4) Sheo Gobind v. Sham Narain, 7 N. W. P. H. O R. 75.

(5) Anivilla v. Cherla, 35 M. 628;

Sundaram v. Krishnaswami, 28 I. C. (M) 992; Kilambi v. Tirumala, 5 M. L. T. 40; 4 I. C. 1094.

(6) Chabiidas v. Ram Das, 11 Bom. L. R. 606.

(7) Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal 40 A. 159 P. C.

(8) Bhagirathi v. Sadashivray, (1880) B. P. J. 126.

(9) Suraj Narain v. Ratanlal, 40 A. 159 (188) P. C.

(10) Luxmon Row v. Mullar Rao, (1881) 2 Knapp. 60 (64); Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M. H. C. R. 56; Gangadharudu v. Durvasulu, 7 M. H. C. R. 47; Mancha v. Norotam Das, 6 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 1.

doctrine "that if a member of a joint Hindu family receives any education whatever from the joint funds, he becomes for ever after incapable of acquiring by his own skill and industry any separate property." (1)

1064. Following this case the Bombay Court observed: "We think that we shall be doing no violence to the Hindu texts, but shall be only adapting them to the conditions of modern Hindu society, if we hold that, when they speak of the gains of science which has been imparted at the family expense, they intend the special branch of science which is the immediate source of the gain, and not the elementary education which is the necessary stepping stone to the acquisition of all science." (2) This was a case where a person had started with a rudimentary education received in his family, learnt up law in a solicitor's office in Bombay, and then rose to be a Subordinate Judge. His savings were held to be his own. Similar view has been taken of persons who made money as Karkun (or agent) in a Revenue collectorate, (3) commissariat officer, (4) an overseer in the department of Public Works, (5) or astrologer, (6) or a dancer. (7) But the case would have been different if one had trained the other up in dancing at the family expense.

1065. Such was the case of one Bhao for whom his brother had secured a lucrative post in the Mahratta Darbar where he made a fortune, estimated to be over 30 lakhs. While holding this office Bhao continued his connection with his parental home where the brothers had some fields which he left in charge of his brother but continued to receive reports respecting its management. Lord Brougham, L. C., upheld the decree of the courts below based upon a presumption of jointness, though he confessed that he did not feel any great confidence in his judgment. (8) In a leading case, the Bombay High Court animadverted upon this decision holding that it was decided when Hindu Law had not been studied with that attention which has since been devoted to it "and Lord Brougham found it impossible to speak with any great confidence upon a question of Hindu Law which has since been settled as clearly as such questions can be settled. If full effect be given to the words of the judgment which we have quoted, it would come to this, that so long as there is any ancestral property, however small, and so long as any member of the family shares in such property, and has not abandoned it, all acquisitions of such member are subject to partition. That would be equivalent to saying that no member of a united family who shares in an ancestral property can acquire any separate property." (9) But the judgment of the Privy Council in that case was never intended to interest any one beyond the parties immediately concerned.

1066. It is, of course, quite clear from the Hindu texts as well as the decided cases that, any property acquired by a co-parcener without the assistance of joint funds would be a fortiori his separate property. So it is open to a co-parcener to acquire property with money borrowed upon his sole credit (10) or the security of his life. Such was held to be the case where a person

Acquisition by un-aided effort.

- (1) Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 P.O.
- (2) Lakshman v. Jemabai, 6 B. 235 (249).
- (3) Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 32.
- (4) Lachmi v. Debi Prasad, 20 A. 485.
- (5) Somasundara v. Gangam Bissen, 28 M. 386 (388).
- (6) Durga Dat, v. Ganesh Dat 82 A. 805.
- (7) Boo Logam v. Swornam, 4 M. 380.

- (8) Luzmen Row v. Mullar Row, 2 Knapp, 60 (64) : 5 W. R. 87 P. C.

- (9) Lakshman v. Jannabai, 6 B. 225 (281).

- (10) 2 Macn. H. L. 151; followed in Nus-singh Das v. Rai Narain Das, 8 N. W. P. H. C. R. 217 (235).

had insured his life and paid the premia out of his salary. (1) The same view was taken of compensation paid on the death of a member of a joint family under the provisions of S. 1 of the Fatal Accidents Act. (2) A Jagir is prima facie a personal grant not of the soil but only of its revenue. Being personal it is neither partible nor heritable. (3) But a maintenance grant is not necessarily restricted to the grantee personally. It depends upon its terms. (4) If made by the father to his son, it will be held to be the grant of profits assigned in rent free tenure. (5)

1067. But of course such unaided effort must be independent of the family. So where the manager of a joint family used its funds for the purchase of other properties, he could not seek for their separation on the ground that they had been acquired by his individual exertion. Even if the fact that he did exert be admitted, it was an exertion qua manager for which he could claim no recompense. (6) On the same principle the grant of a Desai Inam to the manager of a joint family was held to enure to the benefit of the family. (7)

1068. On the general principle that accretions follow the principal, all accretions made out of self-acquired property would themselves be treated as self-acquired. (8) Such are the savings and properties purchased therewith by the holder of an impartible estate. (9)

Accretions to self-acquired property.

1069. Blended property.—This clause is based upon a decision of the Privy Council in which the son sued to set aside his father's alienation as made without consideration. The defendant denied that the property sold was ancestral. The Lahore Court found that it was impossible to differentiate between the portions which came from relatives and co-sharers and the portions which might have in some instances been purchased. Thereupon the Chief Court decreed the claim but the Privy Council reversed its decree holding that it was on the plaintiff to prove that the property was his ancestral property and the finding of the Chief Court put the plaintiff out of Court. (10) The contrary was however, laid down by the Bombay court where it was held that purchases made out of the aggregate result of indiscriminate blending of ancestral with self-acquired property was ancestral. In so deciding it was said: "Before property is self-acquired, it must have been actually acquired without any detriment to the ancestral funds." (11) This case may be distinguished on the ground that here the new acquisition was at least partially made out of the ancestral property whereas in the case before the Privy Council, there was evidence of blending, but no evidence that the property claimed as self-acquired had been acquired with the aid of any ancestral property.

(1) Mahadeva v Rama, 18 M. L. J. 75; Rajamma v. Ramakrishnayya, 29 M. 121.

(2) Sri Gopal v. Amba Devi, (1914) P. R. 52: 22 I. C. 846.

(3) Raghoji Rao v. Lakshman Rao, 35 B. 689 P. C.

(4) Muthukumara v. Udayan, 38 M. 387; Secretary of State v. Rashidul Haq, 18 C. L. J. 31; 21 I. C. 93.

(5) Ramchandra v. Bhikambar, 37 C. 674; Mullu v. Raghubar, 18 I. C. (O) 127.

(6) Sheo Dyal v. Judoonath, 9 W. R.

61 (64).

(7) Nanjundiah v. Venkatasubbiah, 27 M. L. J. 618, 26 I. C. 87; S. 90, Trusts Act

(8) Boomad Lal v. Dawkee Nundun, 19 W. R. 223.

(9) Parbati v. Jagadishchunder, 29 C. 433 (453) P. C.

(10) Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh, 35 C. 1039 (1045, 1046) P. C.

(11) Chabildas v. Ram Das, 11 Bom. L.R. 606 (618) following Lal Bahadur v. Kanhivalal, 29 A. 244 P. C.

1070. As regards the Privy Council case it should be added that the case was heard ex parte, and the question of onus was stated to be admitted. The clause has, of course, no application where the question is whether any property is ancestral or self-acquired. It will apply only when the two are inextricably blended, and there is no evidence that one had contributed to the acquisition of the other. Such would be the case where a person in possession of ancestral property had means of his own out of which he could have acquired the other properties.

97. (1) The term "legal necessity" implies such pressing requirement of the family or of the estate which the law regards as sufficient justification for contracting a debt, or for the transfer of the joint estate.

"Legal necessity" defined.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, the following objects constitute such necessity :—

- (1) Debt of the father.
- (2) Payment of Government Revenue.
- (3) Maintenance of co-parceners, and of their wives and issue.
- (4) Marriage expenses of co-parceners, and of their daughters.
- (5) Performance of the customary family and funeral ceremonies.
- (6) Costs of litigation in recovering or preserving the estate.
- (7) Cost of defending a member of the joint family prosecuted for an offence.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Legal necessity defined (1071).                      | (7) Marriage expenses of members           |
| (2) What is legal necessity (1073).                      | (1080).   |
| (3) Father's debts (1074-1076).                          | (8) Performance of ceremonies (1082-       |
| (4) Debts recoverable from the estate (1077).            | 1083).  |
| (5) Government revenue (1078).                           | (9) Cost of litigation (1084-1085).        |
| (6) Maintenance of co-parceners and their family (1079). | (10) Expenses of defence of members (1086) |

1071. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the subject of necessity :—

Yyas —Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage, or sale of immoveable property, during a season of distress, for the sake of the family, and especially for pious purposes (1)

1072. The terms "legal necessity" and "benefit," observed Lord Atkinson, are "general and elastic terms," (1) and as to the latter, "it is impossible to give a precise definition of it applicable to all cases." (2) The term necessity and benefit are ordinarily coupled together, but though allied they are not identical, for an act may be necessary without being advantageous and vice versa. It is, however, quite usual that an act may be both. For example, the payment of Government revenue charged upon an estate is necessary and its mortgage for that purpose advantageous to the estate since it prevents its extinction by sequestration. Other examples could be multiplied to illustrate the dual result. Such for example, would be a charge incurred to protect an estate from submersion by flood or altered watercourse. On the other hand, an act may be beneficial without being necessary. Such would be the case where an estate is sold solely for the purpose of investing the price in a business bringing in an income larger than that derived from the safer and more stable estate. It is clear that this act though probably beneficial to the family is not such as is within the scope of the manager's authority. (3) In other words, it is not "reasonable and proper" within the meaning of the next section. Both the terms "necessity" and "benefit" are thus terms of art and have a special significance in Hindu Law.

So an act may be both necessary and beneficial in the ideal sense of Hindu Law though in reality it is neither. Such is the performance of a pilgrimage or of a religious ceremony. Apart from such acts, the manager's necessary acts are such as are necessary for the material existence of the undivided family, or for the preservation of the family property. (4)

1073. What is "Legal necessity".—"Legal necessity" is a term of art and means such objects of necessity as the law considers sufficient to justify the pledging of the family credit. For "necessity" must have reference either to the family members, whether co-parceners or not, or to the estate. In either case it must be judged in the circumstances of each case. (5)

As West, J., said: "Family necessity is an expression that must receive a reasonable construction, and the head of the family and those dealing with him, must in the interest of the family itself, be supported in transactions which though in themselves diminishing the estate, yet prevent and tend to prevent still greater losses. A reasonable latitude, too, must be allowed for the exercise of the manager's judgment, especially in the case of the father, though this must not be extended so as to free the person dealing with him from the need of all precaution, where a minor son has an interest in the property." (6)

"Legal necessity is of various forms. All the indispensable religious ceremonies, the sacraments, such as marriage and the investiture with the sacred thread, the obsequies, the cremation, the periodical offerings to the manes, the ceremonies customary in the family, the subsistence of the family, the education of the younger members, the payment of the ancestral debts, the giving of presents at particular seasons and on special occasions to the

(1) Palaniappa v. Sreemath, 40 M. 709 (1914) P. C.

(2) Ib., p. 718.

(3) Palaniappa v. Sreemath, 40 M. 709 (1914) P. C.

(4) Ramlal v. Lakhmichand, 1 B. H. C. R.

(App.) 51

(5) K. M. Bhattacharya's Law of the Joint Hindu Family, p. 488

(6) Babaji v. Krishnaji, 2 B 666; Ratnam v. Govindarajulu, 2 M. 339.

relatives,—these and a thousand other causes of expenditure are constantly cropping up in a fairly prosperous Hindu joint family. All these are, in the strict sense of the word, lawful necessities.” (1)

But all expenses considered necessary by the manager do not constitute “legal necessities” a term which must be confined only to such objects which law recognizes as proper objects for the raising of money on the credit of the joint estate. Naturally this must depend upon the value and income of the estate, the status and position of the family, the claims upon it and the precedents by which it might be supported. But the leading heads of necessity are now well settled and they will now be examined.

1074. According to the Hindu idea the son, grandson and great grandson are in reality the same person in different bodies. Consequently the liability of the son was equally a liability of the grandson and of the great-grandson. This is in accordance with Ashahaya's interpretation of the following text of Narad.

Narad :—If a debt has been legitimately inherited by the sons, and left unpaid by them, such debts of the grandfather must be discharged by his grandsons. The liability for it does not include the fourth in descent.

1075. As to this Ashahaya says that the term “grandsons” must be taken to relate to the grandsons of the debtor's sons, i.e., to the great-grandsons of the debtor, and that the term “fourth descendant” signifies the fourth in descent from the debtor's sons, i.e., the fifth in descent from the debtor himself. This assumption, he says is necessary in order to reconcile the present rule with the statements of all other legislators, and with Narad's own rule. (2) But this construction is opposed both to the text and the sound method of interpretation. And the rule now accepted as settled, is what is apparent from Narad's words, namely, the father's debt is payable only by the son and the grandson, and not by any more remote descendant. This they are bound to do whether the estate inherited by them be the ancestral or the self-acquired estate of the father (3) and their liability is, in any case, limited to the assets inherited by them; and they are only liable if they were joint with their ancestor, or when the debt for which they are made liable was incurred, (4) and the suit is otherwise in time, that is to say, if the claim could have been enforced against the father if he were alive when the suit was brought, since the cause of action against both is identical. (5) The son is moreover not liable for the father's debt if he can show that it was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. (6)

1076. The legal debt of the father constitutes a recognized head of necessity. “The sons are under a pious obligation to discharge the just debts of their father, because otherwise he would be liable to be punished in a future state for non-discharge of their debts. Upon any intelligible principle of morality, a debt due by the father by reason of his having retained for himself money which he was bound to pay to another, would be a debt of the most sacred obligation, and for the non-discharge of which punishment in a future state might be expected to be inflicted, if in any. The son is not bound to do any-

(1) K. M. Battacharya's Law of the Joint Hindu Family, p. 488.

(2) Refers to Narad, 1-6 : Vishnu, VI-27, 28; Vajnavalkya II 50; 33 S. B. E. 42.

(3) Hunuman Persaud v. Mt. Buboee, 6 M. I. A. 398 (421); Girdhari Lall v. Kantoo

Lall, 14 B. L. R. 187 (197) P. C.

(4) Fakir Chand v. Daya Ram, 25 A. 67

(5) Fakirchand v. Daya Ram, 25 A. 67 (70).

(6) Subramania v. Gopala, 33 M. 308; Naro v. Paruguda, 41 B. 347.

thing to relieve his father from the consequences of his own vicious indulgences, but he is surely bound to do that which his father himself would do, were it possible, namely, to restore to those lawfully entitled, money he has unlawfully retained." (1)

All debts of the father are then due from and payable by the son.

1077. The family is bound to pay all debts recoverable from the estate, that is such debts as were incurred by the manager, and are chargeable to the joint family which constitute a sufficient necessity, justifying the mortgage or sale of the family estate. (2)

Debts recoverable from the estate.

1078. The second head of such necessity is the Government revenue due on the joint estate. By the common law, as under the several Land Revenue Acts, the payment of Government revenue is a prime charge on the land (3) and the penalty prescribed for non-payment is either forfeiture or sale. Its payment is, consequently, a recognized head of legal necessity. (4)

(2) Government Revenue.

1079. The maintenance of the co-parceners follows as a matter of course from the fact that he is joint owner of the estate, and so long as he remains joint, he is entitled to be maintained out of the joint funds. His wife and children have equally the same right. As regards other relations, their right of maintenance depends upon their legal or moral claim upon the family. The subject has already been set out in a preceding chapter, (5) and all persons there mentioned as entitled to maintenance out of the joint family are persons for the maintenance of whom the assets of the family, are liable, and might be validly charged.

(3) Maintenance of co-parceners and their family.

The manager is not bound to allow the co-parceners separate maintenance, though he may do so at his discretion. And where he decides to allow them separate maintenance he may equally charge the joint funds with the cost thereof.

1080. Betrothal (6) and marriage of the male (7) and female members of the family is another head of legal necessity. As already stated, marriage is a Samskar and a religious necessity. (8) (§ 412). It is the only obligatory ceremony in the case of a Shudra. (9) Consequently, the manager is entitled to burden the estate with the reasonable expenses of the marriage of the co-parceners. (10)

(4) Marriage expenses of members.

(1) Natasayyam v. Ponnusami, 16 M. 99 (104) followed in Peari Lal v. Chandi, 5 C. L. J. 80 (88).

(2) Soorjee Pershad v. Krishnan, 1 N. W. P. H. C. R. 46; Lalla Gumpul v. Toorun, 16 W. R. 52.

(3) Chatraput v. Grindra, 6 C. 389.
(4) Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 (416) P. C.

(5) Ch. VIII.
(6) Sundrabai v. Shivnarayana, 32 B. 81 (87) where texts and cases are cited, dissenting from contra Sundari v. Subramania, 26 M. 505 and Govindarazulu v. Devarabhotla, 27 M. 206 overruled in Gopala v. Venkatanarasa, 37 M. 273 F. B.

(7) Ganpat v. Tulsi Ram, 13 Bom. L. R. 860.

(8) Sundrabai v. Shivnarayana, 32 B. 81; Gopala v. Venkatanarasa, 37 M. 273 (274) F. B.

(9) Sundrabai v. Shivnarayana, 32 B. 81 (90); Saravana v. Muttayi 6 M. H. C. R. 371; Mahadeva v. Rama, 13 M. L. J. 75; Kameswari v. Veerachariu, 34 M. 4-2; Gopala v. Venkatanarasa, 37 M. 273 F. B; Narayana v. Ramalinga, 39 M. 587; Goribullah v. Khalak Singh, 25 A. 407 P. C.

(10) Juggessur v. Nilambur, 3 W. R. 217.

The question is immaterial whether the relation to be married is a female, <sup>(1)</sup> provided she is a member of the joint family. This is now settled.

But the Allahabad Court would draw a line after the first marriage, holding the second and subsequent marriages as outside the pale of legal necessity. <sup>(2)</sup> In strict view of the law this view is right; but it may be doubted whether it is in consonance with modern thought.

1081. The expenses of marriage would include the price paid for the bride, though it may convert the marriage to the Asur form disapproved by the sages. But as already seen, such marriages now obey the economic law of supply and demand and are quite common in places where girls are in deficiency. <sup>(3)</sup>

1082. The performance of indispensable religious or customary duties is another head of legal necessity. Such are the performance of initiatory, <sup>(4)</sup> and funeral ceremonies <sup>(5)</sup> and the performance of the father's exequial rites and Shraddh <sup>(6)</sup> and the pilgrimage to Gaya <sup>(7)</sup> but not to Benares. <sup>(8)</sup> since one is the necessary part of the exequial rites which the other is not. But though a pilgrimage to Gaya to offer pindas for the spiritual benefit of the deceased is an acknowledged necessity a feast given upon return is not so. <sup>(9)</sup> So referring to the widow it was said: "Pilgrimages are generally made by a widow with a view to present her husband's funeral obligations at the sacred place visited, and to answer for his soul the special merit rising from such presentation. In every case the question must be whether the pilgrimage was for the spiritual benefit of her husband, in the performance of her duty to his soul, and whether the expenses incurred are reasonable and were made honestly, having regard to the estate, the status of the family, and other considerations which it is customary for Hindus to take into account in accordance with the religious beliefs and usages." <sup>(10)</sup> So a pilgrimage to Pandharpur or any other local Gaya might be considered necessary, and it was so considered in a case. <sup>(11)</sup>

1083. The gift of property to the priest of a temple may be a pious act but is not of legal necessity. <sup>(12)</sup> If the gift be of small value it may pass muster as a pious gift, but a considerable portion of the estate cannot be alienated for a pious purpose. <sup>(13)</sup>

1084. Litigation is an evil, but it is a necessary evil, and one which constitutes legal necessity if it is necessary for the recovery, protection or preservation of the estate or of any of its assets, <sup>(14)</sup> and it may be added, for the defence of its head, <sup>(15)</sup> or of any of its members. <sup>(16)</sup> The question was examined by Mahmud, J.,

(1) Pryag Narain v. Ajudhia, (1848) 7 B. S. R. 602; 8 I. D. (O. S.) 456; Chumun Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W. R. 52; Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 A. 575; Makhan Lal v. Gayan, 8 A. L. J. 13.

(2) Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram, 32 A. 575.

(3) Ib.

(4) 2 W. Mac. Ch. XI—case 6 pp 259, 260. Puran Dai v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482 (484).

(5) Chumun Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W. R. 52; Mahomed v. Shoma, 14 B. 562 (564).

(6) Chumun Lall v. Gunput Lall, 16 W. R. 52; Mahomed Ashraf v. Professoree, 19 W. R. 426; Mutteram v. Gopal, 20 W. R. 187.

(7) Junmajooy v. Russomoye, 10 W. R. 209; Mahomed Ashraf v. Brojessuree, 19 W. R. 426; Mutteram v. Gopal, 20 W. R. 187.

Ganpat v. Tulsi Ram, 13 Bom. L. R. 860 (862); Srimohan v. Brig Behary, 36 C. 753; contra Raj Chandra v. Sheshoo, 7 W. R. 116 (8) Hurromohun v. Auluck Monee, 1 W. R. 252.

(9) Makhan Lal v. Gayan Singh, 8 A. L. J. 13.

(10) Ganpat v. Tulsi Ram, 13 Bom. L. R. 860 (862).

(11) Ib. p. 862.

(12) Ram Kewal v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506.

(13) Puran Dai v. Jai Narain, 4 A. 482; Ram Kewal v. Ram Kishore, 22 C. 506.

(14) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 31 A. 497 (506) P. C.; Indar Kaur v. Lalla Prasad, 4 A. 532 (542); Groose v. Amritamayi, 12 W. R. 18.

(15) Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4 (8).

(16) Ib.

who said: "A distinction should be drawn between litigation undertaken to protect the property and litigation the object of which is to obtain a possible benefit for the estate. The former relates to the security of that which has already been acquired. As a general rule, the former class of litigation would no doubt amount to legal necessity; and in regard to the latter classes of litigation it may be laid down that, if such litigation ends in actual benefit to the estate, any alienation which may have been necessary for prosecuting the litigation would be valid and binding upon the reversioner, on the analogy of the maxim—he who enjoys the benefit ought to bear the burden also. It may be further laid down that in cases where the litigation undertaken by the widow is not undertaken for the benefit of the estate, any alienations made by her for the purpose of prosecuting the litigation are necessarily invalid and do not bind the property. It may even be a question of nicety to determine the exact nature of a litigation when it actually ends in failure. The widow may have been acting with a view to benefit the estate; the creditor may have advanced money to her without any fraudulent intention. But these circumstances alone do not in my judgment warrant the conclusion that the charge created by the widow should bind the property as against the reversioners." (1)

1085. In this case the widow had embarked upon a very costly but uncertain claim to recover property to which her husband had an alleged right of succession, but which he had not himself sought to enforce. The court held that the litigation was not for the benefit of the estate, and did not support the mortgage. (2) Even where a suit is necessary, it may not be necessary to mortgage the estate and carry the case to the Privy Council. In this view the court disallowed a mortgage given by the widow as security for costs, even though the husband had deposited it before it was accepted. (8)

As between suits instituted to protect and those instituted to recover an estate the courts hold the first to be necessary while the second unnecessary though they may be for the benefit of the estate. (4)

1086. The cost of defending the head of the family, whether the father or any other relation, is held to be a necessity justifying the mortgage or sale of the joint estate. (5)

(7) Cost of defending member.

But it seems that it cannot be mortgaged for the defence of any other co-partener, although he must be adequately defended at such cost as the family can afford.

98. The term "benefit" includes such protection or preservation or improvement of the family estate, or the maintenance, education, or advancement of its members, as may, due regard being had to all the circumstances, be considered reasonable and proper.

"Benefit" defined.

Synopsis.

(1) Benefit to the estate (1087).

(2) What is a benefit? (1088-1090).

(1). Indar Kuor v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A 532 (548).

(2) Indar Kuor v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (534, 546).

(3) Phool Koer v. Debi Pershad, 12 W. R. 187.

(4) Roy Mukhun Lall v. Stewart, 18 W. R.

121.

(5) Beni Ram v. Man Singh, 34 A. 4; contra Nathu Rai v. Din Dayal, 2 Pat. L. J. 166; 39 I C 665 in which, however, there is no discussion; Nobin Chandra v. Khedar Nath, 6 C. W. N. 648.

1087. Analogous Law.—In a case already cited, Lord Atkinson stated that the terms “legal necessity” and “benefit” were general and elastic terms, and that as regards “benefit” it was impossible to give a precise definition so as to be applicable to all cases. (1) “The preservation however, of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it or portions from injury or deterioration by inundation, these and such like things would obviously be benefits. The difficulty is to draw the line as to what are, in this connection to be taken as benefits and what not.” (2) That necessity and benefit are two concepts distinct and distinguishable from each other is recognized both in the texts as well as in the decided cases. The recovery of a estate from another which the family claimed by succession is a clear case of “benefit” as distinct from necessity. (3) Such is also the case of starting a trade for improving the family fortunes. (4) The older cases, however do not observe any distinction between legal necessity and benefit, holding the latter as a species of family necessity. So in a leading case (5) the Privy Council said that the alienation would be valid if it was made by the managing member of the family “for legitimate family purposes” and in another case where, the father had contracted a debt to purchase a stock of buffaloes to enable him to start the business of milkman, West, J., held that the debt was contracted to put the father in the way of earning a maintenance and therefore, under the pressure of family necessity. (6) On the other hand, in a Calcutta case where the widow had executed a bond for raising funds to prosecute a suit for recovery of certain property the Lower Court upheld her debt as supported by necessity, but Couch, C. J., said: “That is not a necessity at all, because there was no necessity to institute the suits though it may have been a proper thing for her to do, as being beneficial to her as well as to those who would succeed her in the property.” (7)

1088. What is a benefit.—The distinction between necessity and benefit is now well recognized, and though cases must occur in which an act might be justified from the dual standpoint, since an act is sometimes defended as necessary because it is conducive to the spiritual benefit. Even apart from such figurative expressions the two terms are sometimes apt to be confused; though they do not exert the same degree of pressure upon the estate.

The distinction between the two was pointed out by Mahmud, J., in a passage already cited. (8)

1089. The question whether anything is a benefit must depend upon the circumstances. A well and a tank are both useful for irrigating land, but whether the manager was justified in charging the estate for the purpose of excavating them is a question which must depend upon circumstances. If the income of the estate was sufficient, he would in no case be entitled to raise funds on the security of the estate to dig them. If on the other hand, it was the only means of averting drought and there were no funds, it might be both

(1) Palaniappa v Sreemath, 40 M. 709 (714) P. C.

(2) Ib., p. 718.

(3) Roy Mukhun Lal v. Stewart, 18 W. R. 121.

(4) Babaji v. Krishnaji, 2 B. 666; Achhe v. Jawala, (1878) P. R. 67; Ganga v. Khushal, (1876) P. R. 77; Raghunath v. Ruheem, (1869) P. R. 53; Janki Das v. Sanchi Ram, (1871) P. R. 11; Achru v. Merchand, (1879) P. R. 98; Thakuri v. Ganda Mall, (1879) P. R. 78;

Hazura v. Chanda, (1887) P. R. 87; N. Jamma v. Sardar, (1888) P. R. 93; Charanjit v. Telu Mal, (1888) P. R. 152;

(5) Suraj Bunsri Koer v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C. 148 P. C.

(6) Babaji v. Krishnaji, 2 B. 666.

(7) Roy Mukhun Lal v. Stewart, 18 W. R. 121 (122) followed in Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (543)

(8) Indar Kuar v. Lalta Prasad, 4 A. 532 (543).

a benefit and a necessity. (1) In either case the act would be justified if it is reasonable and proper. If the litigation has ended in recovery of the estate then the end necessarily justifies the means and he who has the benefit cannot complain of the burden. (2) The construction of a house is not such benefit as to justify the mortgage of the estate. (3)

1090. In one case the widow had mortgaged the property to recover it from the purchaser to whom it had been sold for arrears of road cess. The court disallowed the mortgage holding that as the money was not used to stop the execution, it was not spent to meet a legal necessity. (4) But the question of benefit was not considered. It was perhaps a case where the estate was lost to the family by the widow's negligence. In that case she conferred no benefit on the reversion by her re-purchase of the property which she should never have lost. Where the manager purchases new property out of funds raised by selling or mortgaging the old, the question whether the transaction is beneficial to the family, and as such binding upon its members, depends upon its reasonableness and propriety, which must be decided with due advantage to all the surrounding circumstances, as to which no hard and fast rule is possible, but inter alia it must be shown, (i)—that the new lands are at least not inferior in quality and value to the old lands; (ii)—that though the new lands are not superior in value to the old lands, the family would otherwise gain by the change; (iii)—that the family would not lose by parting with ancestral lands and purchasing new lands. (5) But it is not a question for the infusion of sentiment into consideration of the question. The question is one of material advantage. It is not often that the managers in this country are willing to barter new lamps for old. Their chronic conservatism is a sufficient safeguard against making any cataclysmic changes in their ancestral domain. But when they are made conduct must be examined in the cold light of facts.

Constitution of Hindu family.

99. A Hindu family is constituted of the following members, namely :—

(1) Persons descended from a common ancestor and are related to one another as sapindas.

(2) Collateral relations descended from a common ancestor in the male line.

(3) Persons who are adopted into the family.

(4) The mother, the wives and widows, of the male members, and unmarried daughters.

Synopsis.

Constitution of a joint-family (1091-1092).

1091. Analogous Law.—The unit of a Hindu society is not the individual, but the family, and in their mutual relations it is not the individuals but the

(1) Makhanlal v. Gayan Singh, 8 A. L. J. 18; Bunjeet Ram v. Mhd. Wars, 21 W. R. 49.

(2) Karimuddin v. Gobind, 81 A. 497 P. C.

(3) Bhogaraju v. Adappa, 10 M. L. T. 179.

(4) Sri Mohan v. Brij Behary, 86 C. 758

(747); Kaihur Singh v. Roop Singh, 8 N. W. P. H. O. R. 40.

(5) Krishnasami (In re) (1912) 1 M. W. N. 187; 18 I. C. 648; Bokru v. Dhuram Singh, 14 I. C. (A) 746.

families that count. Whenever the individuals count, they do only as representing the family. Each individual in a family has to fill his appointed office recognized by immemorial usage.

1092. But what is a family and who are its members? In its primary conception family consisted of all the descendants in the male line from a common ancestor, their wives, sons and married daughters. The existence of such a family is still recognized. But in practice they are split up into smaller aggregates as soon as their number becomes unwieldy and it may then be that the family comprises only a man, his wife or wives, his sons, their wives and children, and their unmarried or widowed daughters. <sup>(1)</sup> But such a family though complete in itself, is only a component part of a larger family consisting of all such who are related to one another as sapindas. <sup>(2)</sup> These though living apart and possessing, separate property are yet members of the same family in that they are all related through a common ancestor. But a family in this larger sense has no legal attributes. The family to be considered is that which comprises the relations enumerated in the section. So Bhashyan Ayyangar, J., remarked: "The Mitakshara doctrine of joint family property is founded upon the existence of an undivided family as a corporate body and the possession of property by such corporate body. The first requisite, therefore, is the family unit, and the possession by it of property is a second requisite. For the present female members of the family may be left out of consideration and the conception of the Hindu family is a common male ancestor with his lineal descendants in the male line, and so long as that family is in its normal condition, of undivided estate, it forms a corporate body. Such corporate body, with its heritage, is purely a creature of law and cannot be created by act of parties, save in so far that by adoption, a stranger may be affiliated as a member of that corporate family. Persons, who by birth or adoption are not members of a Hindu family cannot in the absence of a custom having the force of law, by mere agreement become or be made members of a joint family. According to the above conception of a family, there may, of course, be one or more families all with one common ancestor, and each of the branches of that family with a separate common ancestor." <sup>(3)</sup>

100. (1) A co-parcenary is a joint family comprising a common male ancestor with his lineal descendants in the male line not more than three degrees remote from him, or of the last holder of a share of his property.

(2) A co-parcener is a male related not more than three degrees remote from a direct ancestor who owned an estate or was entitled to a share therein.

Synopsis.

- (1) What is a co-parcenary (1093-1096). (3) Co-parcenary of several families (1101-1103).
 (2) Who are co-parceners (1097-1100). (4) Females excluded (1104).

(1) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (154).

(2) Karsandass v. Gangabai, 83 B. 479 (498).

(3) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (154).

1093. Analogous Law.—The term “family” as used in connection with Hindu Law is an elastic term and its significance is more often assumed than defined. Taken as a large concept it would include all persons related to a common ancestor. As such, it would include the whole world and this is pointed out in the Mitakshara, which says:—“In the explanation of the word sapinda, it has been said that sapinda relationship arises from the circumstance that particles of one body have entered into the bodies of persons thus related, either immediately or through transmission by descent. But inasmuch as this definition would be too wide, since such a relationship exists in some way or other, amongst all men in the world which has no beginning, the author (1) says: “fifth and seventh removed from the mother and the father respectively.” (2)

1094. In other words, the larger concept of “family” which is intended to convey persons related to one another being thus inadmissible, an artificial rule has to be devised, to designate what should be called a “family.” As such, Yajnavalkya gives the term a dual meaning limiting it for the purpose of marriage and inheritance to mean all such persons as are related to a person up to fifth and seventh degrees removed on the mother’s or father’s line, respectively and limiting it for the purpose of joint family only to relations not more than three degrees remote from the common ancestor or a sharer of his property. These relations are his sapindas in each case.

1095. In the limited sense assigned to that term in the first case, the sapindas are to be counted thus:—“The six descendants beginning with the father, and the descendants beginning with the son, and one’s self counted as the seventh, in each case are sapinda relations.” (3) In the case of bifurcation of the line also, one ought to count up to the seventh ancestor, including him with whom the division of the line (branching) begins. For example two collaterals A and B are sapindas if the common ancestor is not farther removed from either of them than 6 degrees. And thus the counting of the sapinda relationship is made in every case.” (4)

1096. This subject will have to be more closely examined later on when dealing with the subject of Inheritance. For the present it is sufficient to know that the relations of a person even within these limits may run into hundreds and they are all designated as members of the same “family.”

1097. But it is clear that when we speak of a “Hindu family” we neither intend nor imply the large human family or the comparatively smaller groups of sapinda relations in the wider sense. They must then be both excluded as outside the ordinary sense of that concept. What is then a Hindu family? It is clear that the essence of the term “family” is that the relations who comprise that group should live and mess together and possess their estate in common. Ordinarily, such family might consist of all the descendants in the male line of a common ancestor and their wives, sons and unmarried daughters. But even such a family, though conceivable in theory, is not ordinarily to be met with in practice. We must, therefore, draw a much narrower line if we are to discover the real family. The family then to which the term applies is essentially a family composed of a man, his wife or wives, his

(1) i.e., Yajnavalkya, II-53.

(2) Mit. iii-ii (Panini) 109.

(3) Ib., p. 110.

(4) Ib., p. 110.

unmarried or widowed daughters and his sons married and unmarried, and their wives and children. This is all that a family connotes in law and to which the legal presumptions before discussed apply.

1098. But it is clear that even in this family all persons do not possess equal rights. The property which it owns is called "joint family property," but it is a misnomer if it implies possession of any common rights other than the right to maintenance. In the property of such family women possess no share. And even as regards males no relation beyond the son, the grandson and the great-grandson possesses any present right. But this does not mean that other relations have no shares at all. All it means is that given the father alive with his son, grandson and great-grandson, any remoter relation such as the great great-grandson has no present right to call for a partition which is the test of his present interest.

1099. Under Hindu Law, the law relating to partition is so intimately connected with the law of inheritance, that they may almost be said to be blended together. (1) The question then arises what relations are entitled to partition? Now the Mitakshara declares it a settled point that "property in the paternal or grand paternal estate is by birth." (2) The Mitakshara does not mention the great-grandfather but he is included in the Viramitrodaya, (3) and is supported by judicial decisions. (4) The principle of co-parcenary is co-ordinate with the gift of funeral cakes (5) and as no relation beyond the third (or counting one's self, the fourth) degree can offer them (6) it lies in near collaterals, up to the third degree. (7) As observed in a Madras case, "Upon this same principle it appears to us equally certain that the limit of the co-heirs must be held to include undivided collateral relations, who are descendants in the male line of one who was a co-parcener with an ancestor of the last possessor. For, in the undivided co-parcenary interests which vested in such co-parcener, his near sapindas were co-heirs, and when, on his death, the interest vested in his sons, or son, or other near Sapinda in the male line, the near sapindas of such descendants or descendant become in like manner co-heirs with them or him, and so on, the co-heirship became extended through the near sapindas down to the last descendant. Obviously, therefore, as long as the status of non-division continues the members of the family who have, in this way, succeeded to a co-parcenary interest, are co-heirs with their kindred who possess the other undivided interests of the entire estate, and one of such kindred and his near sapindas, in the male line cannot be the only co-heirs, until by the death of all the others without descendants in the male line to the third degree, he has, or he and they have, by survivorship acquired the entire

(1) Yenumala v. Yenumala, 6 M. H. C. R. 98 (107).

(2) Mit 1-1-27 Colebrooke's error in translating "Mahapita" महापिता as "ancestral" has already been commented on. The close connection between Partition and Inheritance would be obvious to any one who notices that both the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag which deal with partition and inheritance call it "dayabhag" (or 'the partition of heritage'). Katyayan said... 'His son' includes the great grandson of the person whose estate is divided because the case of the grandson is considered.... The meaning is that the partition of heritage extends inclusively to the further degree counting from the proprietor."

(3) Ch. ii-Pt. 1, 16; Gulab Shastri's Tr. p. 72.

(4) Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B. H. C. R. 444; Yenumala v. Yenumala, 6 M. H. C. R. 98 (107); 1 Str. H. L. 124.

(5) Devala cited in 3 Dig. 10; 1 Str. H. L. 204.

(6) Manu IX-186.

(7) They are called Kulyas, i.e., those belonging to the family right to the heritage, as effectually as if the estate had passed upon an actual partition with the co-heirs."<sup>(1)</sup>

1100. The relations included in this description were graphically described by Nanabhai Haridas, J., in a case in which the plaintiffs and defendants both descendants of one Udhav a common ancestor, the acquirer of the property, claimed partition. The plaintiffs were beyond and the defendants within the fourth degree from Udhav. The defendants disputed the plaintiffs' right to partition on the ground that they were more than three (counting themselves four) degrees remote from Udhav.

Take for instance the simplest case. A the father acquires an estate. It is his self-acquired property and, therefore, his sons B, C, D, and E have no interest by birth, that is, they are not his co-parceners. But suppose they have issue as given in the tree. On the death of A,—B, C, D, and E, become co-parceners in A's estate, and so do F, G, and H and so on up to K who is in the fourth degree from E; but since K's son is beyond that degree he has no right to force a partition, and therefore, he is not a co-parcenary, but as soon as E dies he will become one. This case illustrates the two rules stated in the section, viz., first, that any co-parcener may be beyond the fourth degree removed from the acquirer or the original owner of the property sought to be divided, provided he is not more than four degrees removed from the last owner, however remote he may be from the original owner thereof. This rule is capable of unlimited expansion.

Secondly, a co-parcenary may consist entirely of collateral relations. Such would be the case on the death of A, if the sons of A do not separate.

1101. Again, a co-parcenary may consist of several families. Take for instance, the last diagram enlarged by further births of male children in the family.

Here then there are the following families:—(1)

A with his four sons, B, C, D and E and their sons and grandsons M, N, F, G, H, O, P, J, Q constitute the main family. (2) Then B with his two sons M and N, C and D with their sons F, G, E with his sons, H, O, grandsons P, J, Q and great grandson K, and H and J likewise with their sons and grandson each constitutes a "branch" family. All the families have one common ancestor A and each branch family has its own head being B, C, D, E, H and J, respectively. On A's death the co-parcenary will consist of the four brothers B, C, D and E and their male issue. On the death of B, C and D, the co-parcenary will consist of E, his nephews, M, N, F, G and all his own issue, but L will be out of it; and will enter the co-parcenary on the death of E.

1102. It is thus apparent that the personnel of the co-parcenary ever varies by births, adoptions and deaths. Those who are not co-parceners to-day may become so tomorrow. Those who are of the co-parcenary today may go out of it tomorrow by adoption, partition, renunciation, acquiescence,<sup>(1)</sup> disqualification,<sup>(2)</sup> or death, natural or civil.

(1) Yenumala v. Yenumala, 6 M. H. C. R. 98 (107, 108).

1103. Hitherto the entire family depicted in the diagram has been considered joint. But suppose some branches of it separate from the rest. In that case the main family does no longer count. If E separates from his three brothers by taking one-fourth of his patrimony, then his estate becomes, his "ancestral property" in which his issue become co-parceners by birth. The branch co-parcenary then becomes the main co-parcenary and independent of its other branches. But so long as there is no division, the branch families have no legal existence as a separate independent unit; but if they comprise all the members of the branch, or of a sub-branch they can form a distinct and separate corporate unit within the larger corporate unit and hold property as such. Such property may be the self-acquisition or obstructed heritage of a paternal ancestor of that branch, as distinguished from the other branches, which property has come to that branch and that branch alone, or it may be the self-acquisition of one or more individual members of that branch, which by act of parties has been impressed with the character of joint property owned by that branch and that branch alone to the exclusion of the other branches.<sup>(8)</sup> So if in the last illustration, should E obtain property from his uncle, or any maternal relation and E and his sons H and O should augment it by their joint labour, the estate so constituted would exclusively belong to that branch, and descend to their issue as an unobstructed heritage.<sup>(4)</sup>

1104. It has already been stated that women are debarred from the right of enforcing a partition,<sup>(5)</sup> which is the test of co-parcenership. (2) Females excluded. Mothers do of course, receive a share at partition.<sup>(7)</sup>

1105. Disqualified co-parceners.—All schools agree that persons disqualified by physical incapacity from inheriting are also disqualified from taking as co-parceners and a co-parcener, may become disqualified by his subsequent incapacity,<sup>(8)</sup> but if his disqualification is afterwards removed he re-enters the co-parcenary as an after-born son.<sup>(9)</sup>

No co-parcenary by contract.

101. The relation of co-parcenership arises by law. It cannot be created by contract.

Synopsis.

- (1) Co-parcenary, a creature of law (1106). (2) Cannot be created by contract (1106).

1106. Analogous Law.—Both a joint family, and its child a co-parcenary, are the outcome of the Hindu social evolution, and have as such become definite concepts with their two essential attributes, namely :—The existence of an undivided family as a corporate body and the possession by it of property.

(1) Manu IX-207, Mit. II ii-11, 12; Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 145 (156).

(2) Ram Sahye v. Laljee, 8 C 149.

(3) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (155).

(4) Ib., pp. 155, 156.

(5) Suraj Bunsu v. Sheo Pershad, 5 C.

148 (165) P. C.

(6) Punna v. Radha Kissen, 31 C. 476 (478).

(7) Mit. L-ii-9.

(8) Ram Sahye v. Laljee, 8 C. 149; Ram Soonder v. Ram Sahye, 8 C. 919.

(9) Mit II-x-6.

"Such corporate body with its heritage, is purely a creature of law and cannot be created by act of parties save in so far that by adoption, a stranger may be affiliated as a member of that corporate body. Persons who by birth or adoption are not members of a Hindu family cannot in the absence of custom having the force of law, by mere agreement, become or be made members of a joint family". (1) So where the father and his five sons constituted an undivided family and two of his youngest sons, the plaintiff and the defendant commenced to live together, and one of them the defendant commenced business as a Railway contractor in which the plaintiff claimed a co-parcenary interest on the ground of their relationship and joint interest from which he wished the Court to infer an agreement in favour of their becoming joint coparceners, but the Court threw out his suit on the ground that the sub-co-parcenership set up by him was unknown to the law, and could not be created by contract. (2) In another case two brothers being members of a joint Mitakshara family went down to Calcutta and began to work there as coolies. Out of their joint savings they purchased a house. One of them having died the other sued his widow for possession of the house on the ground that he had inherited it by survivorship. But the court threw out his case on the ground that there was no intention to create a co-parcenary between themselves by agreement, (3) to which it might have been added that even if there was, it could not be recognized by law. (4) Such persons could not be regarded as reunited after a division. (5) As women cannot be co-parceners, it follows that property acquired by her and her husband would belong to both, and on the wife's death her share would descend according to the rules of inheritance prescribed for stridhan.

102. (1) The normal state of a Hindu family is one of jointness in mess, and estate.
 Normal state of Hindu family.

(2) As such it may be presumed that

- (a) Such family continues to remain joint until the contrary is shown.
- (b) Where property is shown to have been once joint family property it is presumed to remain joint until the contrary is shown.
- (c) All property acquired by or in the possession of a joint member is joint property.
- (d) Where there is a nucleus from which property may be acquired, any property acquired with its aid by a member is joint property.

(3) Provided that no presumption in the last clause will arise where it is admitted or proved that there has been separation from the joint family.

(1) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 26 M. 149 (154).

(2) Ib. p. 157.

(3) Motil Bouli v Bhagwan, 35 I. C. (C.) 695,

(4) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149 (157) commenting on contra in Sham Narain v. Court of Wards 90 W. R. 197.

(5) Muthu Ram Krishna v. Mari Muthu, 26 M. L. J. 532 ; 24 I. C. 363,

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Normal state of Hindu family is joint (1107-1108).                   | rate names (1124).  |
| (2) Presumption of joint ownership of family property (1109).            | (11) Separation in mess and residence (1125-1126).                   |
| (3) Presumption of continuance of joint status (1110-1113).              | (12) Separate possession of properties (1127).                       |
| (4) Presumption of acquisitions being joint family property (1114-1116). | (13) No presumption where partial separation admitted (1129).        |
| (5) Presumption of jointness and joint estate (1117-1119).               | (14) Law regarding self-acquisition (1130-1131).                     |
| (6) Presumption applicable only to normal family (1120).                 | (15) Property jointly acquired (1132).                               |
| (7) No presumption that joint family possesses joint property (1121).    | (16) Property created as joint (1133-1137).                          |
| (8) Presumption of union (1122).   | (17) Grants by Government, if and joint when family property (1138). |
| (9) Evidence in rebuttal (1123).   | (18) Impartible estates (1139-1142).                                 |
| (10) Mutation and purchase in sepa-                                      | (19) Accretions to the estate (1143).                                |
|   | (20) Hereditary offices (1144).                                      |

1107. Analogous Law.—This section states two propositions:—(i)—that the normal state of a Hindu family is one of jointness, and (ii)—that consequently all property possessed by it is presumably joint. Both those propositions are based upon the consensus of authorities. (1) They are both merely rules of evidence creating merely as they do presumptions of jointness in mess and estate which may be rebutted by any one asserting the contrary. This presumption applies to every Hindu family whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag school.

1108. It has already been seen that the unit of a Hindu society is a family, and that term, however elastic and at times misleading though it be, has become a definite concept which enters largely into the discussion of all legal questions relating to property and status. It has already been the subject of a previous discussion. Taking the term family in its narrower sense, there can be no doubt that its normal state of existence is one of jointness in mess, worship and estate. (2) The family being thus in every respect joint, all that appertains to it is prima facie held in common. This being the rule it gives rise to several presumptions which are, however, all reducible to the two main presumptions set out in clauses (2) and (3).

(1) Bevin Persad v. Radha, 4 M.I. A. 187 (168); Naragunt v. Vengama, 9 M.I.A. 66(92); Cheetha v. Miheen Lall 11 M.I.A. 369; Kattama v. Rajah of Swanga, 9 M.I.A. 589; Neelkisto v. Beer Chunder, 12 M.I.A. 523 (540); Prit Koer v. Mahadeo, 22 C. 85 (89) P.C.; Bilash Konwar v. Bhawanee (1864) W. R. 1; Pranath v. Kashinath, 1864 W. R. 169; Beer Narain v. Teemowaria, 1 W.R. 316; Neelmoney v. Ganga Narain, 1 W. R. 384; Muonye v. Lomun, 2 W. R. 188; Bisumbhur v. Suorodhuni, 8 W. R. 21; Bipopershad v. Kenadeyee, 5 W. R. 82; Bhurumchund v. Rajmohishee, 5 W. R. 145; Treelochun v. Raj Kishen, 5 W. R. 214; Lukhun v. Modheemookhee 5 W. R. 278; Sreenath v. Menhohimes, 6 W. R. 85; Sheoratan v. Gour Behari, 7 W. R. 449; Radha v. Phoolkoomaree, 10 W. R. 28; Govindnath v. Govind

Chunder, 10 W. R. 898; Dharoo v. Court of Wards, 11 W. R. 386; Konjbeharee v. Gyadeen, 11 W. R. 361; Parreelal v. Bukhoreelal 12 W. R. 124; Brijnath v. Srigopal, 12 W. R. 468; Shib Pershad, v. Gangamonee 16 W. R. 291; Inder comar v. Doolal 18 W. R. 258, Drobo v. Tarachand, 18 W. R. 459; Tarnakhunder v. Jodeshur, 19 W. R. 178; Babulal v. Tuma, 22 W. R. 116; Bhugobutty v. Domun 24 W. R. 865; Shushee Mohun v. Aukilchandei, 25 W. R. 282; Gane v. Kane 4 B. H. C. R. (A) 169; Mancha v. Narotandas 6 B. H. C. R. (A) 1; Cassumbhoy v. Ahmaddhoy 12 B. 280 (809); Parbutiy v. Sudabut 2 Hay 316, Nundram v. Chotoo; 1 Agra 255

(2) Nil Kisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M. I. A. 528 (540).

1109. The third presumption is a qualified one and does not necessarily flow from the very jointness of the family, since a family may be joint and yet it may possess no property of its own. But if it possesses any joint property the law presumes that all acquisitions made with its aid are also joint property, <sup>(1)</sup> and the burden of proving that any portion of that property is separate or self-acquired is on the person who alleges it. <sup>(2)</sup> Clause (1) is taken from a judgment of the Privy Council which has since been repeated in several cases. Delivering the opinion of their Lordships, Lord Chelmsford said: "The normal state of every Hindu family is joint. Presumably every such family is joint in food, worship and estate. In the absence of proof of division, such is the legal presumption; but the members of the family may sever in all or any of these three things." <sup>(3)</sup> This rule was first stated by the Pandits to Sir Thomas Strange in 1807 <sup>(4)</sup> and he re-stated it as follows: "With respect to the proof of disputed partition, though the law favours separation by which religious ceremonies are multiplied, it presumes joint tenancy as the primary state of every Hindu family; and this especially amongst brothers, it being most natural for such to dwell together in unity".

1110. Where once a family is proved to be joint, it is presumed to continue joint until the contrary is proved. <sup>(5)</sup> This is in accordance with the principle of S. 114 of the Evidence Act which presumes a thing in accordance with probability.

1111. And as a necessary deduction, law equally presumes that not only the joint family, but its joint property continues joint, since the two go together and one cannot be separated without separating the other. But this is merely a presumption applicable to the property proved or presumed to be joint. Where, therefore, the common family house belonging to a joint undivided family having been long ago burnt down, each of the members occupied separate sites and erected his own building thereon, they were held to be the separate property of each. <sup>(6)</sup>

1112. So again from the fact that a member is joint, law presumes that all property in his possession and acquisitions made by him are joint property. <sup>(7)</sup> So where certain ancestral lands were sold in execution of a decree against a joint member to an auction-

(1) Denonath v. Hurry Narain 12 B.L.R. 849; Gobind Chunder v. Doorga Persaud, 14 B.L.R. 887.

(2) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondri, 8 M.I.A. 229; Gopee Krist v. Gunga Persad 6 M.I.A. 58; Naragunt v. Venkama, 9 M.I.A. 66; Prankishen v. Moothooramohan, 10 M.I.A. 48; Tara Churn v. Jog Narain, 8 W.R. 226; Lalla Sreedhur v. Lalla Madho Pershad 8 W.R. 294; Prankisto v. Bhagee reitsee, 20 W.R. 158; R m Ghulam v. Ram Behari 18 A. 90; Gajewder v. Sardar Singh, 18 A. 176.

(3) Neelkisto v. Beerchunder, 12 M.I.A. 528 (540). To the same effect Naragunt v. Vengamma, 9 M.I.A. 66; Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondri 8 M.I.A. 229.

(4) 2 Str. H. L. p. 847; Dhunoorkdharee v. Gunput Lall, 8 M.I.A. 229; Neelkisto v. Beer Chunder, 12 M.I.A. 528 (540); Radhika v.

Dharma 3 B.L.R. (A.C.) 121; Koonj Beharee v. Khetur Nath 8 W.R. 270; Tarruck Chunder v. Jodeshur, 11 B.L.R. 193 overruling contra in Shiv Gulam v. Boramsingh, 1 B.L.R. (A.C.) 164 and dissenting from Khilut Chunder v. Koonj Lall, 11 B.L.R. 194; Sosbheddar v. Boolaram W.R. (8 N) 57; Dhunoorkdharee v. Ganpattal, 11 B.L.R. 201.

(5) Budha Mal v. Bhagawan Das, (1886) P.R. 86.

(6) Gujjalapadi v. Gujjalalapati, 11 M.L.T. 38; 18 I.C. 118.

(7) Prankishen v. Mothoora, 10 M.I.A. 408; Deela Singh v. Toofanee, 1 W.R. 307; Bissum-dhur v. Soorodhuny, 8 W.R. 21; Treeslochan v. Raj Kishen, 5 W.R. 214; Janokee v. Kisto Kcmul Marsh 1; Kishen Komul v. Janokee, 28 W.R. 3 F.B. Gungadthur v. Soorjo Nauth, 15 W.R. 446; Gokuru v. Gabardhan, 3 C.P.L.R. 41; Bhimra v. Pitchamber, 11 C.P.L.R. 87.

purchaser who re-sold them to the plaintiff, the court held that the family being joint, the property so purchased by the plaintiff must equally be presumed to be joint until the plaintiff could prove that he had purchased them from his own separate funds. (1) Appearances are not always to be relied upon in the legal idea of undivided, property, since a family may be separated as to residence, meals, and ceremonies, so as to seem even to their neighbours, as well as to others, divided, without being so, in fact, for it may continue to be united in interest, as on the other hand, having partitioned property, they may have become legally divided by a severance in their worldly concerns, and yet continue to live and mess together performing also in common their solemn and accustomed rites, they will appear to be still united, though in reality, and to legal purposes, they are no longer so. (2)

1113. Clauses 1 (a) and 2 (b) are merely consequential and are supported by the authority of Phear, J., who said: "It is no doubt laid down in many cases that the normal condition of a Hindu family is joint; therefore, starting with the fact of a family being joint it must be presumed to afterwards remain joint, unless some proof of a subsequent separation is given. Also that where property is shown to have been once joint family property, it is presumed to remain the joint property of all the members of the joint family, until something to the contrary is shown". (3)

1114. Clause 2 (c) takes for granted that the member, the character of whose property is to be determined, was at the time to which the matter relates admittedly or is proved to have been joint. It is only then that law justifies a presumption that all acquisitions made by him in his state of jointness were made on behalf of and for the benefit of the joint family, and that all property in his possession is joint property of the family.

If the jointness of the member is not proved, then there can be no presumption of the jointness of his estate except under the next clause under which a nucleus must be established. The combined result of these two clauses, then is, that in order to create a presumption in favour of any property in possession of an individual being the joint property of the family, either of the two things must be proved; viz., (i)—that the acquisition was made while in a state of jointness, or (ii)—that it was made with the help of a nucleus. But where the jointness is neither admitted nor proved, there is of course, no ground for any presumption as to the joint character of the property found with any member. (4)

1115. As to clause 2 Phear, J., in the case already cited, said: "But on the other hand, there is more than one case which lays down, that the single fact of a family living joint or in commensality, is not enough to raise a presumption in law that property acquired by one individual member of that family is joint

(1) Goroo Pershad v. Debee Pershad, 6 W.R. 58. (AC) 161 (186).

(2) 1 Str. H.L. 225, 226

(3) Shiv Golam v. Barran Singh, 1 B.L.R.

(4) Harish Chunder v. Gourao Pershad, 16 W. R. 163

property. To render it joint property, the consideration for its purchase must have proceeded either out of ancestral funds, or have been produced out of joint property, or by joint labour. But neither of these alternatives is a matter of legal presumption. It can only be brought to the cognizance of a court of justice in the same way as any other fact, namely by evidence. Consequently whomsoever's interest it is to establish it, he must produce the evidence." (1)

1116. It must however, be noted that this distinction does not appear to have influenced the decision in some earlier cases, where the courts have gone the length of presuming joint ownership even without the proof of nucleus. So Couch, C. J., in one case said: "The presumption of law is that all the property the family is in possession of is joint property. The rule that the possession of one of the joint owners is the possession of all would apply to this extent that, if one of them was found to be in possession of any property, the family being presumed to be joint in estate, the presumption would be, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of a joint family". (2) He then referred to the judgment of Phear, J., on the necessity of a nucleus and dissented from it as being in conflict with the view of the Privy Council. (3) But the Privy Council have since in several cases insisted upon the existence of a nucleus as a condition precedent to any presumption (4) and it has been recognized in several cases (5) and is held to be the rule equally applicable to Dayabhag families. (4) It will thus be seen that the clause (6) has not been settled without a contest.

These principles do not, of course, suffice to solve the many perplexing riddles which their presumptions and counter-presumptions present in practice.

They will now have to be considered.

1117. Presumption of jointness and joint estate.—As the ordinary and normal state of a Hindu is to live in a state of union

(1) Presumption of jointness. with the other members of his family, law presumes it to be so in all cases. But since it is only the usual and not the universal rule, even amongst Hindus, such presumption is capable of rebuttal. The presumption itself is of a varying degree of strength. It is stronger in the case of brothers than in the case of cousins and the farther you go from the founder of the family the presumption becomes weaker and weaker. (7) Even apart from the degree of relationship the presumption is growing daily weaker. As observed by Carnduff, J.: "Jointness is I imagine, becoming almost daily less and less the rule, and the presumption under consideration is, amid the changing conditions, and in response to the natural demands of a progressive society, steadily losing strength in the sense that it is more and

(1) Shiv Golam v. Baran Singh, 1 B. L. R. (A. O.) 164 (186). This case however, erroneously cast on the plaintiff the burden of proving that the family was joint. To the same effect on the necessity of a nucleus Frankristo v. Bhageerutee, 20 W. R. 158.

(2) Taruck Chunder v. Jodeshur, 11 B. L. R. 198 (200).

(3) Dhurum Das v. Shama Soondri, 3 M. I. A. 229.

(4) Anand Rao v. Vasant Rao, 5 C. L. J. 398 P. C.; Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal, 29 A. 244 (254, 255) P. C.

(5) Tarachurn v. Joy Narain, 8 W. R. 226; Bance Madhub v. Bhagaobutty, 8 W. R. 270; Chundro v. Buksh Ali 11 W. R. 305; Radhika Prasad v. Dharma Dasi, 11 W. R. 499; Ramkrishna v. Bhageerutee, 20 W. R. 158; Jogodumba v. Rohinee 23 W. R. 522; Kunja Behari v. Nemai Chand 2 I. C. (C) 526; Joti Ram v. Surasti (1888) P. R. 3.

(6) Ram Nath v. Kusum Kumari, 4 C. L. J. 56; Kunja Behari v. Nemichand, 2 I. C. (C.) 526 (529).

(7) 1 Str. H. L. 225, 226.

more easily rebutted as time advances. It may well be that it will disappear altogether some day, perhaps at no distant date.”<sup>(1)</sup> The education of the people, the growth of intellectual pursuits and opening of new avenues for the employment of individual enterprise are fast altering the old method of living and the joint employment and enjoyment of property. But so long as the joint Hindu family continues to preponderate there would be justification for the legal presumption, which should nevertheless be cautiously applied, and it must be understood as subject to a counter-presumption which may arise from separate residence, separate messing and separate worship.

1118. So it was observed in a case: “The Subordinate Judge has proceeded upon the presumption that the ordinary state of a Hindu family is joint and he has accordingly thrown on the defendants the onus of proving separation. It seems to us that the Lower Court is in error on this point. When the question simply is whether the deceased was simply separate or joint, the onus no doubt is on the party alleging separation, but where it is found as in this case, that the parties were living separately, messing separately, and worshipping separately, the ordinary presumption falls to the ground. In such a case it rests on the party who alleges the continuance of indivision in spite of severance in these particulars to prove his allegation.”<sup>(2)</sup> This view of the High Court was concurred in on appeal by the Privy Council who said: “The District Judge and the High Court agree that as regards residence, food and worship, the family had long ceased to be joint—the only point of difference being as to partition of ancestral property. Upon this question their Lordships have come to the same conclusion as the High Court.”<sup>(3)</sup>

1119. This is, indeed the standpoint from which their Lordships viewed another case in which the nephew had sued his two aunts, being widows of his uncle Ramdayal, for possession of an estate on the ground of his jointness with him. The plaintiff admitted that his grandfather had divided the ancestral property but he pleaded that his father and his uncle nevertheless continued joint. The defence was that the partition alleged by the plaintiff had separated the plaintiff's father from his uncle. There was no proof one way or the other, but their Lordships assumed with the plaintiff that the division was as stated by him. They then added: --“It also appears that whatever the division of the property may have been by Ram Gulam, all the members of the family lived separately and there was no commensality between them. In the case of an ordinary Hindu family who are living together or who have their entire property in common, the presumption is that all that any one member of the family is found in possession of belongs to the common stock,—that is the ordinary presumption—and the onus of establishing the contrary is thrown on the member of the family who disputes it. Having regard however, to the state of the family, when the present dispute arose, their Lordships think that that presumption cannot be relied upon as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, and therefore, as he seeks to recover property, which was in the possession of Ramdayal, and was ostensibly his own at the time of his death, it lies upon him to establish by evidence the foundation of his case, viz., that the property was joint property to which he and his brother Kesho Ram,

(1) Ganpat v. Balmukund, 18 C. L. J. 548 (549, 550) following Gannu Singh v. Bhagwati Koori, 3 I. C. (C). 234.

(2) Ramprasad v. Lakhpati, 80 C. 281 (241) affirmed O. A. (255) P. C.

(3) Ib., p., 255.

as surviving members were entitled." (1) Here it will be observed that their Lordships did not even start with a presumption, though it was probably because the plaintiff had admitted a division. But nevertheless the case is instructive as showing that the presumption arises only in a case of a normal Hindu family.

1120. What is then a normal Hindu family? It is a family which is in every respect joint—joint in mess, joint in residence, joint in worship, joint in estate, and joint in every other respect. Where such family is found the presumption is legitimate, since it is a fair inference to make that one must live in the same state in which most of the others belonging to the same community live. But if it is admitted or proved that the family to which the presumption is sought to apply is not a normal family, but one of which some members are not joint in one or more respects, the presumption would naturally weaken, and if it is found that they were separate in most respects, then there would be no room for the application of the presumption at all; since the initial presumption of law in favour of jointness would in such a case, be displaced by the counter-presumption of logic that where a person is separate in most respects it is not likely that he would continue joint only in some respect.

This is sometimes stated in a different form, namely, that a partition is presumed to be complete, but the two rules are different.

1121. Presumption of joint property.—Assuming however, that a family is normal, and that as such it is presumably joint, it does not thence follow that it has joint property since there is no presumption that every joint family necessarily possesses joint property. Consequently, unless the nucleus of family property is admitted or proved, the burden of proof of the existence of joint property lies on the claimant. The presumption in favour of the joint family does not obtain in the case of property, and it is for the claimant to prove the property to be joint. If, in any case, the plaintiff alleges that any property is joint property, it is for him to prove it, which he may do either by direct evidence, proving that fact, or by the indirect evidence of establishing a nucleus and by the application of the rule of Hindu Law that whatever has been acquired with the help of the nucleus becomes impressed with its own character.

The question then arises what must be the value of the nucleus necessary to constitute all acquisitions made by its aid joint property. This subject will have to be presently considered.

1122. Presumption of union.—The first clause states a rule expressed to apply only to a family living in a normal state, and one which is joint in all the three respects mentioned therein; that is to say, given a Hindu family of which nothing is known, then law will make the presumption stated in this clause. But such families do not give trouble in practice. The families that do are those which are not normal in the sense that they have severed in one or two of the three essentials of a normal union. For instance, they may have separated in mess or both in mess and worship and the question may then arise how far the presumption is then to prevail. It may be that the fortunes of the whole case depend upon the application of the presumption. The evidence on either side may be negligible or evenly balanced—upon what solid foundation is the court then to rest its decision. If it can be sure that notwithstanding severance in mess and worship, there still exists a presumption, then it will have something to go upon. But there may be other facts equally destructive of that presumption. As pointed out by Sir Thomas Strange in a passage before cited and followed by Nanabhai Haridas, J. in a considered judgment <sup>(1)</sup> the strength of the presumption varies with the relationship of the parties concerned. The presumption that arises in favour of the brothers living in a state of union is very different to the presumption in favour of the union of cousins, and still less in favour of more distant relations. Then again it cannot be forgotten that the presumption of union as a whole is getting daily weaker by the very condition of modern society. As Carnduff, J., rightly observed in a passage already cited: "Jointness is, I imagine, becoming almost daily less and less the rule, and the presumption under consideration is, amid the changing conditions, and in response to the natural demands of a progressive society steadily losing strength, in the sense that it is more and more rebutted as time advances. It may well be that it will disappear altogether some day, perhaps at no distant date."<sup>(2)</sup>

(1) Bannoo v. Khasheeram, 8 C. 815 P. C.

1123. In considering then the value of such presumption, several facts are material, while on the other hand many facts are regarded as equally immaterial. So, for instance, where one party alleged jointness, and another repARATION, the fact that one member possesses a larger share of the family property than others, and the fact that such property has not been shown to be self-acquired, would be a material factor in supporting the case of union. <sup>(3)</sup> So on the other hand, the fact that members have for a considerable time possessed and enjoyed separate portions of the family property in equal shares would support the case of separation.

1124. Immaterial facts.—For instance, mutation of names by a person

(1) Mutation and purchase in separate names in favour of another does not amount to relinquishment of the property by one in favour of the other, nor can it be used as evidence of disruption of the joint family. <sup>(4)</sup> Of course, if such mutation is accompanied by any statements supporting the relinquishment, then they would be relevant as admissions from which relinquishment or even severance may be inferred. So again, the fact that the settlement was made with one member of the family would not negative the rights of other members to a participation in the property so settled; nor is it necessary for such other members, if living in commensality with the former as joint proprietors to prove that they actually contributed money towards the acquisition of the property. <sup>(5)</sup> Where commensality is admitted the mere use of one brother's name in documents relating to the property raises no counter-presumption of exclusive ownership in his favour, <sup>(6)</sup> nor is his separate possession any evidence of separate acquisition unless such separate possession can prove consent of the other shares to his keeping a separate account. <sup>(7)</sup> So again where other facts prove jointness, the fact that certain property was purchased in the name of a single member would be

(1) Moro v. Ganesh, 10 B.H.C.R. 444 (468).

(2) Ganpat v. Balmakund, 18 C. L. J. 548 (549, 550).

(3) Kojalaji v. Shiva, (1888) B.P.J. 86.

(4) Chela v. Miheen Lall, 11 M. I. A. 869 (880, 881); Jussondah v. Ajoodhia, 2 I. J. (N 8) 261; Shibosondery v. Rakhal Doss 1 W. R. 88; Mun Mohinee v. Soodamonee, 8 W. R. 81; Bilash Koonwar v. Bhawanee, (1864) W.

R 1, Srichand v. Surajkuar, 9 I. C. 146.

(5) Burosoonduree v. Doorga Doss, 16 W. R. 215.

(6) Kishen Komulsingh v. Janokee, 23 W. R. (F B.) 31; Deela Singh v. Toofanee, 1 W. R. 307.

(7) Lalla Belaree Lall v. Lalla Madho Persaud, 6 W. R. 69; Ranjeetsingh v. Madud Ali, 8 Agra 222.

insufficient to rebut it, since it will be presumed that it was purchased with money derived from joint funds. (1)

1125. So again the mere circumstance that one of several brothers occupied a separate dwelling house would not of itself rebut the presumption of jointness. (2) But that it may have that effect was conceded by the Privy Council in a case in which it was said: "The cesser of commensality is only material to the determination of the issues in the cause, in so far as it removes or qualifies the presumptions which the Hindu Law might otherwise raise, that an acquisition made in the name of an individual son of the family was made by the head of the family and as part of the family estate." (3) Their Lordships then considered that fact along with others and considered their cumulative effect upon the case. Cesser of commensality is then an element which may properly be considered in determining the question whether there has been a partition of joint family property, though it is not conclusive. (4)

1126. Of course, of all the three facts of jointness, namely jointness in mess, residence and estate, it often happens that parties usually commence their separation by taking up separate residence necessarily. This is necessarily accompanied by separation in mess. The question then arises what is the effect of such separation upon the normal presumption in favour of jointness. Does it neutralize it so far as to leave the party alleging a jointness thereafter to prove his case. It has been so held in a case in which the lower court had held the contrary. Adverting to it, the court said: "The Judge is also wrong in saying that no presumption whatever arises of a separation from the fact of an admitted separation in dwelling and food. We would observe that such separation, though not conclusive evidence of a separation in estate, would give rise in Hindu Law to a presumption of separation in estate." (5) And a similar view has been expressed by the Privy Council in the cases already cited. (6) Of course, in such a case it may be that the members have been forced to separate mess and residence owing to discords amongst the female relations which so often force upon the male members not only the course of separation in residence but separation altogether. The question of separate worship is seldom now raised, since the household gods of a family are usually divided upon severance of mess and residence, and even when it is not so, it is an index of least importance in considering the question of separation.

1127. Separate possession.—In the foregoing discussion cases have been cited to show how far the courts regard single facts such as separate entry in the mutation register, separate possession, and the like as insufficient to rebut the presumption in favour of jointness. These were also cases in which the testimony of those single facts was overborne by other facts which made for jointness. There are however cases, in which possession for a considerable

(1) Anund Mohun v Lama, 1 Hay 374; Madhub Bose v. Soodha, 2 Hay 333, Nurnath v. Goda Kohita, 20 W. R. 342.

(2) Belas Koer v. Bhowanes, Marsh. 641.

(3) Anundee Koonwur v. Khedoo Lal, 14 M.I.A. 452 (422) cited and followed in Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurain 31 C. 262 (269) P.C.

(4) Anundee Koonwur v. Khedoo Lal, 14 M. I. A. 412; cited and followed in Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurain, 31 C. 262 (269) P.C.

(5) Jagun Koer v. Raghoonundun, 10 W. R. 148 (149); Sherajooddeen v. Horatsingh, 25 W. R. 116 the judgment does not support the head note.

(6) Anundee Koonwur v. Khedoo Lal, 14 M.I.A. 412 (422) cited and followed in Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurain, 31 C. 262 (269) P.C. In Bance Madhub v. Bhagobutty, 8 W. R. 270, mere separation in mess held insufficient.

period has been held of itself to destroy the presumption of jointness. So where the members lived apart for several years and during that time or for more than 12 years prior to the institution of a suit for partition, they were found to be in possession of portions of the originally undivided property in the assertion of titles mutually exclusive the court held that such severance of enjoyment necessarily drew after it a severance of right. (1) This was conceded in a later case in which, however, it was pointed out that though exclusive possession and enjoyment is cogent evidence of partition, it merely creates a presumption in its favour which may be rebutted by proving that it was due to a family arrangement (2) or convenience of management or enjoyment. But such arrangement if continued for 30 or 40 years would almost certainly be conclusive of a partition. (3) Certain descendants from a common ancestor commenced to live apart without any formal separation. About 11 years after, one of the parties to the separation sued the others for possession of some property in defendant's possession on the ground that it was joint property. The court held that the separation being admitted it was on the plaintiff to establish his allegation and that he could start with no presumption in his favour. (4)

1128. Possession is prima facie evidence of ownership. (5) But of course, such possession must be prima facie exclusive and exhaustive.

S. 110, Evidence Act. In the case of joint families, however, the possession of one is the possession of all. Consequently, the presumption arising from the separate possession of a single member is neutralized by the counter-presumption in favour of jointness. In such a case, therefore, if the plaintiff sues for a partition on the basis of joint property he must establish his case.

1129. No presumption where separation admitted.—The presumption

Cl. (3). of jointness with all its corollaries have however, no application where a separation is once admitted. So where the plaintiff sued on the allegation that his father and defendant had continued joint, while their brother separated from the family, the court held that a separation of the family being once admitted it was on the plaintiff to prove that notwithstanding this separation his father had remained joint with the defendant. (6) As the Privy Council observed: "There is no presumption when one co-parcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares in which the other co-parceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all." (7) But this does not mean that the separation of one member has necessarily the effect of the separation of all other members

(1) Sheshappa v. Igapa, (1875) B.P.J. 37

(2) Amaram v. Madhavrao, (1880) B. P. J. 311.

(3) Vijli v. Magan, (1891) B. P. J. 44 ; Vishnu v. Ramchandra, (1888) B. J. 58 ; Guracharya v. Bhimacharya, (1876) B. P. J. 241; Surbessur v. Gossain Doss 17, W.R. 210.

(4) Badul Singh v. Chuttur Dharee, 9 W. R. 558 ; Harish Chunder v. Nufur Chunder, 9 W. R. 461.

(5) S. 110, Evidence Act.

(6) Radha Churn v. Kripa Sindhu, 5 C.

474; Swamirayachari v. Heirs of Mudgalachari, (1875) B.P.J. 89; Somnugowda v. Bhurmogowda.

1 B.H.C.R. 43; Gopal v. Khande Rao, (1877)

B.P.J. 328; Maruti v. Vishvanath, (1877) B.

P.J. 347; Uma Shankar v. Bai Ratan

(1873) B.P.J. 217; Badulsingh v. Chutturdha-

ree, 9 W.R. 558; Bannoo v. Kashi Ram, 8 C.

815; Amirchand v. Ghasita, (1883) P.R. 148;

Sanidas v. Sahib Devi, (1892) P.R. 140;

Vaidyanatha v. Aiyasamy, 32 M. 191.

(7) Balabux v. Rukhma Bai, 30 C. 725

(736) P.C.

inter se. (1) As their Lordships point out, it may be so in many cases where it is necessary to fix the shares of other members and then it may virtually amount to a separation of all. In any case, the case is a clear authority for the view stated in clause (3), viz., that where once any separation is admitted or proved, it suffices to destroy the general presumption of jointness and its consequential presumptions. [For the effect of such separation on the general law of partition, see post, Chapter on Partition.]

1130. Separate property.—The law of self-acquisition is based on the texts set out in the sequel. (2)

1131. It is now settled that the family is not entitled to participate in any acquisition made by a joint member as a result of his individual effort if made "without detriment to the father's estate." These words have been interpreted to exclude merely a general education received at the expense of the family. (3) So it has been held that the earnings of a pleader who had received only a general education at the expense of the family were his self-acquired property. (4) Such was held to be the case where the acquirer was a Subordinate Judge. (5) So where three brothers who had nothing of joint property except their ancestral house, went out into the world and having obtained service in the Commissariat Department acquired considerable wealth, the court held each entitled to his own earnings. (6) Such have been held to be the earnings of a dancing girl. (7)

1132. Property jointly acquired.—Property may become joint if it is acquired by the joint exertions of the members of the joint family though there be no nucleus to assist in its acquisitions. Such property becomes joint property of the family and not only of those who acquire it. Nor can they set up amongst themselves a sub-coparcenary for the purpose of acquiring and enjoying the result of their joint labour to the exclusion of other members. As Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., said, a joint undivided Hindu family is purely a creature of Hindu Law and cannot be created by act of parties save in so far as the act of adoption may have that effect. (8)

1133. Property treated as joint.—Property may become joint by reason of its being treated as a joint acquisition. The characteristic of this property consists not in the contribution of joint labour to its acquisition, as in the conduct of those against whom the right is claimed. An extreme case of this kind arose where one N had four sons—A, B, C and D all residents of the village of Dongre in the Ratnagiri district where they had a small house, but no lands or other property. About 40 years ago one of them A, left his native village and set up a school at Bhynder in the Thana district where he afterwards opened a shop and commenced trading in salt. A year or two later, his brother B joined him, opened a school in a neighbouring village and

(1) Ranganatha v. Narayanqami, 31 M. 482; Babaji v. Dattu, 37 B. 64.

(2) Yaj. ii-112, 190 explained in Mit. 1. IV-1-81 Contra Chalakonda v. Chalakonda, 2 M. H. C. B. 56; Gangadharudu v. Durvasalu, 7 M. H. C. B. 47 is inconsistent with Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 (361) P. C. and impliedly overruled by it.

(3) Pauliem v. Pauliem, 1 M. 252 (361) P. C.

(4) Bhagirathi Bai v. Sadash'vray, (1980)

B. P. J. 1264 Chanbasapa v. Cholaiva, (1890) B. P. J. 172; Avayambal v. Kamalambal, 19 M. L. J. 85; Mehla Ram v. Rew achand, 4 S. L. R. 161.

(5) Lakshman v. Jamnabai, 6 B. 225.

(6) Lachman Kuar v. Debi Prasad, 20 A. 495; Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 82 (and cases there cited).

(7) Boologam v. Swornam, 4 M. 890.

(8) Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu, 25 M. 149.

commenced to act as broker at Bhynder where he died leaving the defendant, then a year old. Later on he was removed to his native village and on coming of age he managed his household business. Two other brothers C and D later on joined A and assisted him in his business. All the three A, C and D used to remit money to their parents at Dongre where their children were married. C and his sons then separated in mess and sued A and his sons, D and B's son for partition, in which B's son equally claimed a quarter share. A defended the suit on the ground of his separate acquisition but on the decree being passed against him, he did not appeal. The claim of B's son was rejected, but the High Court decreed his claim on the ground that he had been treated by the brothers as a member of the joint family, like one of their own sons, and that he had been placed in management of their family property and dealings at Dongre. The court held that the right to share did not depend upon the establishment of the fact of actual help having been rendered at the principal place of business. The fact that B's son was treated as standing in the place of his father B and served the common interests of the family by staying at home to look after the household with the consent of all the three brothers entitled him to a share which was decreed. <sup>(1)</sup> It will be observed that in the case emphasis was laid more on the contribution of labour than on the fact of treatment. So it has been observed in another case: "For the formation of a co-parcenary in Hindu Law such a nucleus is not absolutely necessary, provided the persons constituting it stand in the relation of father and son or other relationship requisite for a co-parcenary system, and these persons by living, messing and worshipping together and throwing all the property jointly into one common stock manifest their intention to deal with one another and with outsiders as members of a co-parcenary system under the Hindu Law." <sup>(2)</sup>

1134. To create a title upon the ground that the owner of a property threw it into the common stock abandoning his exclusive title in favour of his brothers, it is necessary for the latter to show a clear intention on the part of the owner to abandon his separate rights and throw it into the common stock. <sup>(3)</sup> It is not reasonable or conducive to the peace and welfare of families to construe acts done out of kindness and affection to the disadvantage of the doer of them, by inferring a gift, when it is plain that no gift could have been implied. <sup>(4)</sup> Such was the case in which the evidence showed that the names of the brothers of a single donee under a deed of gift had been entered in the Revenue papers along with his own, that on certain occasions the donee associated with his brothers in suits relating to the property in question, and that the donees made certain payments out of the income of the property to his brothers; but the court held that these facts did not support an inference as a matter of law that the donee had thrown the property gifted to him into the common stock, or that the donee was estopped from questioning his brother's rights. <sup>(5)</sup> Such was the case of one Kuldeep who treated his younger brother Sadha Ram, who was born deaf and dumb and so incapable of inheriting property, as if he had been under no incapacity. His name was entered as joint owner in the revenue record, and documents were

(1) Raghunath v. Mahadev, (1896) B.P.J. 508.
 508. To the same effect Krishnaji v. Moro, 15 B. 82.

(2) Lal Das v. Moti Bai, 10 Bom. L. R. 175 (177).

(3) Dharam Chand v. Amba, (1898) B.P.J.

808.

(4) Janaki Nath v. Janaki Nath, 2 A.L.J. 225.

(5) Muddan Gopal v. Khilchinda Koer, 18 C. 341 P.C.

issued and taken in his name. For a number of years his case had been treated by the family as one that might be cured. Ultimately there being no hope of his cure, a family arrangement was entered into by which he was set aside as disqualified. Sadhu Ram's collateral sued for his estate. The High Court upheld the claim on the ground that Kuldip had by his conduct admitted Sadhu Ram's title and that it was good even as a family arrangement or by virtue of the law of limitation. But their judgment was reversed by the Privy Council who held that acts of kindness should not be construed into acts to the disadvantage of the doer and that Kuldip's conduct was throughout that of a brother who was anxious to secure to his younger brother the share to which he would have been entitled if not disqualified: "Kuldip naturally and properly treated this afflicted brother as a member of the family and entitled to equal rights until it became absolutely clear that his malady was incurable. Their Lordships think that it would not be reasonable or conducive to the peace and welfare of families to construe acts done out of kindness and affection to the disadvantage of the doer of them, by inferring a gift when it is plain that no gift could have been intended". (1)

1135. In another case of succession to an Oudh impartible estate the plaintiff sued to eject the defendant who was his paternal uncle on the ground that the estate being subject to the law of lineal primogeniture the defendant had no title. The latter pleaded (a)—that both he and his brother were entitled to the estate as it had been recovered by their joint exertions, and that (b)—in any case the plaintiff had by his own acts in 1879 made it over to him. As to contention (a)—their Lordships held that the fact that upon its conferral on the plaintiff's father he alone entered upon possession of the estate, destroyed the theory of joint ownership and that as to contention, (b)—it was perfectly true that the plaintiff had caused the defendant's name to be mutated and recognized his claim, but their Lordships held that it did not prevent the plaintiff from stating the true state of the case after he had learnt it.

1136. "It is not now contended that the mutation operated as a transfer. It would be absurd to suppose that the plaintiff made any misrepresentation to the defendant; neither was the situation of the defendant altered in any way to his prejudice. No consideration was given by the defendant, nor is there anything in the transaction to create a trust. Possibly it might have given the defendant a possession on which time would run; but if so, time has not run long enough to create a bar. . . . A gratuitous admission may be withdrawn unless there is some obligation not to withdraw it; and there is not here any title on which such an admission can rest. If then there is no transfer, no estoppel, no bar by time, no trust, why should not the plaintiff assert his legal rights, whatever he may, in ignorance of the facts or in deference to his uncle or for any other cause not injurious to the defendant, have admitted." (2) But in another case where the Government had confiscated the estate of a rebel family but regranted about a third of it to the eldest brother, and the question was whether this grant was the grantee's self-acquired property or one which became the joint family property of himself and his two other brothers, the Privy Council referred to the grantee's own admission before the settlement officer in which he had admitted that he and his brothers were. "joint in equal shares" referring to which their lordships said: "It would seem, therefore, that it must be inferred that under a family arrangement which cannot now be questioned, the three brothers became jointly entitled as members of an undivided Hindu family to the Shirpur estate, although the Government grant was to Gaya Din alone". (1) The two cases might be distinguished on the ground that while one was a case under Mahomedan law, the other was one under Hindu Law under which the admission into the co-parcenary is possible by such recognition.

(1) Muddan Gopal v. Khikhinda Koer, 18 C. 341 (1881) P.C.

(2) Muhammad Imam Ali v. Hussain Khan, 26 C. 81 (1900, 1901) P.C.

1137. The same high tribunal had to decide another case in which it found the acquirer to have blended his income with that of the joint family. This was the case in which the question was as to whether one Durga Prasad's estate was separate or a part of the joint family property of himself and his sons. It appeared that Durga rose from a clerkship on Rs. 150 to be an Inspector of Schools on a salary of Rs. 750 per month. In 1885 he retired on a pension of Rs. 4,000 per annum. It was admitted that Durga had considerable nucleus of ancestral property in his hands after his partition from his two brothers, the income of which he blended with his own. His sons, when they came of age, sent the pay which they received to their father with whom they lived and by whom they were supported. Referring to this fact their Lordships remarked: "This is strong evidence that there was but one common stock of the whole family into which each voluntarily threw what he might otherwise have claimed as self-acquired; and the property purchased by, or with the assistance of, the joint funds, was joint property of the family, and not of any particular member of it." (2) But this was a case of father and son, the father being the karta, and there was one common stock. But the case was held to be different where one Ram Narain, a junior member of joint family, who as a pleader at Hardoi, had amassed a fortune, purchased properties at Hardoi out of his earnings in the name of his son-in-law, the husband of his only child. He maintained an omnibus account book in which he blended his professional earnings with his receipts and payments on account of joint properties. Ram Narain continued to be a junior member of his family from 1864 to 1890 when he became manager of the joint family. In 1889 he made a statement to the effect that he had gifted the villages to his son-in-law. In 1900 Ram Narain died and the question was the whether the properties gifted were his self acquisitions. The Privy Council held that they were and in upholding the gift they were influenced by the fact that Ram Narain had abundant moneys of his own to purchase those properties and that "the fact that he blended those that were not otherwise used does not mean that every entry of a purchase in the book is an entry of he transaction so dealt with that it must be regarded as joint property." And as to the gift they held that his purchase of the properties in the name of his son-in-law and a declaration to the effect that he had gifted them to him sufficed to convey a good title in his favour. (3)

1138. Government grant.—Property acquired from a grant from Government is unquestionably self-acquired, (4) unless it was merely restoration of a

(1) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 (428) P.C.

(2) Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiyalal, 29 A. 244 (255) P.C. distinguished in Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal 40 A. 159 (164) P.C.

(3) Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal, 40 A. 159 (170) P.C.

(4) Katama Nachiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga, 9 M.I.A. 543 (610); Beer Pertab v. Rajendar, 13 M. I. A. 1 (34) followed in Ram

Nundun v. Janki Korr, 29 C. 828 (851) P. C. Sookraj v. Government, 14 M.I.A. 112; Eurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W.R. 55; Brij Indar v. Janki, 5 I. A. 1; Shere Bahadur v. Dariao, 8 C. 646; Jaganatha v. Ramabhadra, 11 M. 880; Mallan v. Purushothama, 12 M. 287; Subharaaya v. Kamu, 28 M. 47; Gunnaiyan v. Kamachi, 28 M. 889 (and cases cited); Poona v. Nirpat Singh, 2 C.P.L.R. 138.

confiscated grant intended to be for the benefit of the family<sup>(1)</sup> or is a grant made in consideration of the services rendered by the family or at its expense. But a party cannot sue Government for the modification of its grant.<sup>(2)</sup> By an order of Government known as Lord Canning's Proclamation of 1858 all property in the soil of Oudh was confiscated by Government, out of which an estate was transferred to one Gouri Shanker, the head of a banking firm which had supported Government in suppressing the mutiny. In holding that the grant enured for the benefit of his family, the Privy Council said: "As regards that part of the property granted to Gouri Shanker which, if any was not previously part of the family estates, it cannot be held to have been the separate self-acquired property of Gouri Shanker within the meaning of Hindu law. It was granted as a reward for loyalty and for the support and assistance rendered to British officers; such services as those referred to in Gouri Shanker's petition could not have been rendered without the use of funds which must be presumed to have been those of the joint family."<sup>(3)</sup> So where an estate was allowed to continue in possession of its manager, and was at the settlement, granted to "the loyal members of his family", the Privy Council held the grant to be for the grantee's family generally, and not to any persons as persona designata.<sup>(4)</sup> The question whether a Government grant was personal to the grantee or to him and his family is one of construction and intention to be inferred from the terms of the grant and its surrounding circumstances.<sup>(5)</sup> It may be that the grant is personal. Even then it is open to the grantee to treat it as a joint family asset and it becomes so if the grantee constitutes himself as trustee for his family<sup>(6)</sup> or by a family arrangement<sup>(7)</sup> or by a family custom.<sup>(8)</sup>

1139. Impartible estate.—From the history of the law of primogeniture given in the foregoing pages (§§ 355-356) it will be clear that in their inception, impartible estates owed their origin to feudal grants, but with the decline and decay of feudalism they have continued to retain their incident of impartibility. Some of them have been the subject of express legislation or a formal grant by Government in which both their impartibility and inalienability is made a term of the tenure. Apart however, from law or grant, an estate may be impartible by its nature or by custom. But in this case, since impartibility is the rule and impartibility an exception, he who relies upon the impartibility of an estate must prove the custom.<sup>(9)</sup> In such cases the nature of the estate and the existence or otherwise of a special family custom are questions of fact to be determined on the evidence available in each case.<sup>(10)</sup>

(1) Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W. R. 55; Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, 32 A. 415 P. C.; Beer Pertab Singh v. Rajender, 12 M.I.A. 1 (87); Sookraj v. Government, 14 M.I.A. 112 (125); Narayana v. Chengalamma, 10 M. 1(8) P. C. (really a case of release of its reversionary rights by the crown); Ram Nundun v. Janki Koer, 29. C. 828 P.C.

(2) East India Co. v. Syed Ally, 7 M.I.A. 555 (578).

(3) Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal, 26 W. R. 55 (58). P. C.

(4) Govindrao v. Sita Ram, 21 A. 58 P.C.

(5) Baijnath v. Tej Bali Singh, 38 A. 590 (608).

(6) Sookraj v. Government, 14 M.I.A. 112 (127); Hardeo Bua v. Jawahir Singh, 8 C. 522 (588) P. C.; Shere Bahadur v. Dariao Kuar

8 C. 645 (552) P. C.; Ramanand v. Raghunath, 8 C. 769 (782) P.C.

(7) Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh 32 A. 415 (426) P.C.; Periasami v. Periasami, 1 M. 812 P. C.

(8) Bhujangirav v. Malojirav, 5 B.H.C.R. 161 (169); Madhaerav v. Almaram, 15 B. 519 (524).

(9) Gunesh Dut v. Moheshur, 6 M. I. A. 161 (187) Venkata v. Parthasarthy, 37 M. 199 (209) P. C.; Durga Charan v. Raghunath, 18 C. W. N. 55.

(10) Mallikarjun v. Durga, 13 M. 406 P. C. followed in Narasimha v. Parthasarthy, 37 M. 199 P. C. But of course, as previously stated, it is not a question of fact for the purpose of appeal (§ 887)

1140. It may be generally stated that an estate partaking of the nature of a principality or a Raj is ordinarily both impartible and inalienable. <sup>(1)</sup> Such are the Zemindaris <sup>(2)</sup> and Pal-yams <sup>(3)</sup> of the Madras Presidency, Orissa and Central Provinces which are all classed as non-feudatory states.

1141. The impartible estates are from their very nature incapable of being regarded as co-parcenary property though those who would be co-parceners if the estate were partible, would, amongst others, be entitled to maintenance as a right. This is now settled, <sup>(4)</sup> though in some earlier cases the Privy Council appeared to have thought otherwise. <sup>(5)</sup> The Privy Council observed: "Though an impartible estate may be for some purposes spoken of as joint family property, the co-parcenary in it which under the Mitakshara law is created by birth, does not exist." <sup>(6)</sup>

1142. But in spite of this modification, their Lordships continued to hold that the rule of succession is still by survivorship <sup>(8)</sup> and their view was followed by the other courts. <sup>(7)</sup> But in a later case their Lordships definitely declared that no junior members of the family possessed any co-parcenary rights in an impartible estate and their interest therein was merely a contingency <sup>(9)</sup> and this view has since been re-affirmed. <sup>(10)</sup> It is of course, clear that as the ownership of an impartible estate vests in the holder for the time being, who has complete dominion over it and no relation of the holder, apart from the personal relationship, has, by reason of his relationship and apart from custom, any right even to maintenance. "An impartible Zemindari is the creature of custom, and it is of its essence that no co-parcenary exists. This being so, the basis of the claim is gone, inasmuch as it is founded on the consideration that the plaintiff is a person who, if the Zemindari were not impartible, would be entitled as of right to maintenance". <sup>(11)</sup> And if during the life-time of the holder no other member of the family has any present proprietary interest in the estate, it follows that there is nothing to survive on the death of the holder, and the estate must descend as if it were separate estate, subject only to the

(1) Ganesh Dutt v. Moheshur, 6 M. I. A. 164; Beer Pertab v. Rajendar, 12 M. I. A. 1: See the subject discussed in 1 Gour's Law of Transfer (4th Ed.) §§ 225, 228.

(2) Javuridevamma v. Ramandora, 6 M. H. C. R. 98 (195).

(3) Kachi Kaliyana v. Kachiyuva, 28 M 508 P.C.; Naragunt v. Vengama, 9 M I A 66.

(4) Sartaj Kuari v. Deroj Kuari 10 A. 272 P.C.; Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur 41 M. 778 P. C.

(5) e.g. In Kalama Nachiar v. Raja of Shivangam, 9 M.I.A. 589 they said, "If the Zemindar at the time of his death and his nephews were members of an undivided Hindu family, and the Zemindari, though impartible, was part of the common family property, one of the nephews was entitled to succeed to it on the death of his uncle." In Yenumala v. Yenumala 13 M.I.A. 388 (389) they said: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the estate was in its inception part of the common family property, though impartible, and therefore with certain qualifications enjoyable by only one member of the family at the time" and that succession to such estates has always been determined by the rule of survivorship; Naragunt v. Vengama 9 M.I.A. 66; Heeranath v. Burni Naram, 17 W. R. 316 P.C.; Chintamun. v. Nowlukho, 1 C. 153 P.C.; Svagnana v. Periasami, 1 M, 312 P.C.; Rup Singh v. Baisu 7A. 1 P.C.; Doorga v. Doorga, 4 C. 190 P.C.; To the same effect Venkata v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 883 P.C. (6) Sartajkuari v. Dsornj, 10 A. 272; Gur Pershad v. Dhani Rai, 88 C. 182 (186, 187); Bachoo v. Mankorabai 29 B. 51 (57) O.A. 91 B. 373 P.C., Zamindar v. Trustee, 82 M. 429. (428); Venkata v. Venkata, 28 C.W.N. 173 P.C.

(7) Jogendro v. Nityanand, 18 C. 151 P.C. (8) Kali Krishna v. Raghunath, 81 C. 224; Gurpershad v. Dhani Rai, 88 C 182 (187).

(9) Laliteshwar v. Ramashwar, 86 C. 481; Tara Kumari v. Chaturbhuj, 42 O.1179 (1195) P.C.; Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 P.C.; Zamindar v. Trustee, 82 M. 429(428).

(10) Rama Rao (Sri Rajah) v. Raja of Pittapur 41 M. 778 P. C affirming O.A. 39 M. 896.

(11) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 (785) P.O. affirming 89 M. 896.

rule of law that for the purpose of ascertaining the party on whom the estate devolves, the estate would be regarded not as separate estate but as joint family property.<sup>(1)</sup> The holder of such an estate may subject to any custom resign or renounce it in favour of any person, gift<sup>(2)</sup> or devise it to any one, as he has no one with vested interest in the estate to prevent him from doing so. <sup>(3)</sup> And in this respect there is no difference between the Mitakshara<sup>(4)</sup> and the Dayabhag schools.<sup>(5)</sup> But where the holder of an impartible estate, by a gift or will carves out a portion thereout and grants it to his younger son for the maintenance of himself and his descendants, such property is ancestral in the hands of the son and not his self-acquired property which he was at liberty to alienate capriciously to the detriment of the testator's grandson.<sup>(6)</sup>

1143. The question whether properties acquired by the holder of an impartible estate become part thereof depends on his intention to incorporate the acquisition with the original estate.<sup>(7)</sup> But though such intention may alter the mode of succession, it cannot alter the incidents of the estate by impressing upon it the attribute of impartibility since no private individual can create an impartible estate<sup>(8)</sup> or alter its course of devolution.<sup>(9)</sup> Ordinarily, the savings and purchases from savings of an impartible estate are the self-acquired property of the holder over which he has every right of alienation.<sup>(10)</sup>

1144. Hereditary offices, whether religious or secular, are treated by the Hindu writers as naturally indivisible, but modern custom, whether or not it be strictly in accordance with ancient law, has sanctioned such partition as can be had of such property by means of a performance of the duties of the office, and the enjoyment of the emoluments by the different co-parceners in rotation.<sup>(11)</sup>

103. (1) All acquisitions made by the manager of a joint family in the name of any of its co-parceners will be presumed to be made out of its fund and for its benefit.

Co-parceners' acquisition presumed joint.

(1) Zamindar v. Trustee 32 M. 429 (433, 434); Visvanatha v. Kamulu 24 M.L.J. 271; 21 I.C. 724; Hardyal Singh v. Bishan Singh, 6 A.L.J. 758 : 8 I.C. 907; Indar Sen Singh v. Harpal Singh 34 A. 79 (Sed quere Does the successor succeed by survivorship o.f. Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur 41 M. 778 P.C.)

(2) Sivasubramania v. Krishnammal, 18 M. 287.

(3) Sivagnana v. Periasami, 1 M. 312 P.C.

(4) Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur, 41 M. 778 P.C.; Lalchraj v. Harpal Singh 34 A. 65 P.C.; Muthusami v. Bangarammal 9 M.L. T. 59; 8 I.C. 882.

(5) Sartaj Kurai v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 A. 272 P.C.; Venkata Surya v. Court of Wards, 22 M. 389 P.C.; Venkata v. Bhassayakarlu, 22 M. 588 affirmed O.A. 25 M. 867 P.C.; Tara Kumari v. Chaturbhuj, 42 C. 1179 P.C. Kapilnath v. Government, 22 W. R. 17 (20, 21); Rup Singh v. Pirthu Narain Singh, 20 A. 537. Beresford v. Ramasubba, 13 M. 167.

(6) Udaydev v. Jadun Lal, 6 C. 113 O.A. 8 C. 199 P.C.; Narain v. Loknath 7 C. 461.

(7) Hazarmal v. Abani Nath, 17 C.W.N. 280.

(8) Janaki Prasad v. Dwarka Prasad, 35 A. 918 (401) P.C. following Parbati v. Jagdis Chandra, 29 C. 433 P.C.

(9) Rameshwar v. Lachmi Prasad, 31 C. 111; Pireishah v. Manibhai 36 B. 53.

(10) Tagore v. Tagore, 18 W.R. 359 (864); Tanakeswarroy A. Shoshishikareswar, 9 C. 952 P.C.; Karistoremoney v. Narendrakrishna, 16 C. 385 P.C.; Purnasashi v. Kalkhan, 38 C. 603 P.C.; Kunhamed v. Kunhanbi, 32 M. 315; Parbati v. Jagadis Chunder 29 C. 433 (453) P.C.

(11) Mancharam v. Pran Shankar, 6 B. 2 8 (299)

(2) But no such presumption arises where the property stands in the name of a non-co-parcener.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Acquisitions by manager of joint family (1145).            | (3) Presumption and mode of proof (1147).                          |
| (2) Acquisitions by other members presumed to be joint (1146). | (4) Property standing in the name of a non-coparcener (1148-1149). |
|   | (5) Dayabhad families (1150).                                      |

1145. Analogous Law.—This section states a rule and its necessary corollary, the rule being that in a Mitakshara family the co-parceners being all joint owners, any acquisition made by the manager must be deemed to be made qua manager, on behalf of and for the benefit of the family, and the corollary being that such acquisition, if made for or by a non-co-parcener, cannot be so presumed, and that a co-parcener challenging it as made out of the family funds must prove it like any other fact.

As there are no co-parceners in the Dayabhad system of law, the same presumption cannot be extended to a family governed by that school.

1146. Acquisition by a co-parcener presumed joint.—In the case of an ordinary Hindu family who are living together, or who have their property in common, the presumption is, that all that any one member of the family is found in possession of, belongs to the common stock. That is the ordinary presumption, and the onus of establishing the contrary is thrown on the members of the family who dispute it. (1) The fact of the Hindu family is enough to put the purchaser upon enquiry, and if he deals with a single member without obtaining proof that the property is separate property, he does so at his own risk. (2) This presumption equally extends to property which having passed out of the family by sale into the hands of a stranger, is repurchased by a co-parcener. (3)

Such a presumption may, however, be rebutted by showing either that the family was not joint, or that the acquisition was made by a member out of his separate property, or that it was so acquired with the consent of the co-parceners, or that the latter acquiesced in its separate enjoyment as separate property.

As the presumption only applies to members of a co-parcenary, it has no application where the acquisition is made by a son-in-law (4) the wife, (5) or any person outside the co-parcenership.

1147. Presumption and mode of proof.—A co-parcener alleging any property to be his self-acquisition must, of course, prove it since it is an exception to the presumed community of estate. (6) Such presumption is not rebutted

(1) Banno v. Kashee Ram, 3 C. 315 (317) P. O.

(2) Shibosondery v. Rakhal Doss, 1 W. R. 38.

(3) Gooroo Pershad v. Debee Pershad, 6 W. R. 58.

(4) Dossee Monee v. Ramchand, 7 W. R. 249.

(5) Narayana v. Krishna, 8 M. 214.

(6) Dhurm Das v. Shamasondri 3 M. I. A. 229 (240); Prankishen v. Mothoor Mohun, 10 M. I. A. 403; Chastha v. Miheen Lal 11 M. I. A. 869; Bessasur v. Luchmessur, 5 C. L. R.

477 (479); Parbati v. Baikunth Nath, 18 C. W. N. 428 P. O. Pren Nath v. Kashi Nath (1864) W. R. 169; Deela Singh v. Toofanee, 1 W. R. 306; Nilmoney v. Gunga Narain 1 W. R. 834; Gopee Lal v. Bhugwan, 12 W. R. 7; Bodh Singh v. Ganesh, 19 W. R. 856; Heeralal v. Bidyadhur, 21 W. R. 848; Jugodumba v. Rohinee, 28 W. R. 422; Ramphul v. Deg Narayan, 8 C. 517; Narayan v. Anaji, 5 B. 180; Cassumbhoy v. Ahmedbhoy, 12 B. 230 (309); Dalaram v. Ramchandra, 22 B. 922; Kanhialal v. Devi Das, 22 A. 141.

by the mere proof that the property was purchased or stood in the name of a single member, since the evidence in such cases must prove the source of the purchase money; though the purchaser is not bound to prove particularly as regards each item of property that it had been purchased out of his separate fund. Such proof may be supplied by the acts of his exclusive ownership, if acquiesced in by the other co-parceners, <sup>(1)</sup> when he has merely to prove generally his case without being required to trace the very fund with which each purchase was made from the time of its acquisition in a given year to the moment when it was paid to the seller of the property. But the claimant must adduce evidence of his possession of separate funds <sup>(2)</sup> which is the criterion for determining whether the purchase was a self-acquisition or for the joint family. <sup>(3)</sup> No doubt evidence as to the source of the purchase money is generally the most satisfactory, but it is not indispensable. <sup>(4)</sup>

1148. But where the joint family is itself of an anomalous character, then the presumption arising in the case of a normal family would be correspondingly modified. The Privy Council had to consider the case of one such family where the two brothers had separated their transactions by a mutual agreement. Years afterwards one branch sued the other for partition and the question that exercised the courts was whether the property acquired by the defendant's branch was out of the joint property. It was shown that though the properties were so acquired, for 16 years the defendants had openly treated them as their exclusive properties to which the plaintiff's branch took no exception. It was held that the plaintiff had precluded themselves by their conduct from claiming the properties as joint which they had for so many years suffered the defendant to treat as separate. <sup>(5)</sup>

1149. Again such presumption being founded on the fact of union, there can be no presumption where any property stands in the name of a non-co-parcener, such as son-in-law <sup>(6)</sup> or a female member of the family. <sup>(7)</sup> As observed in a case: "Where a family lives in co-parcenary, the presumption which exists in the case of male members arises from the circumstance that they are co-parceners. On the other hand, the ladies are not in an undivided family co-parceners; whatever property they acquire by inheritance or gift is their separate estate, and although it is not unusual for property to be transferred to the name of a female member to protect it from the creditors of the male members, or to place it beyond the risk of extravagance on the part of the member, such dealings are exceptional and can afford no ground for a general presumption". <sup>(8)</sup>

(1) Bippro Pershad v. Kena, 3 W. R. 165 (167, 168); 5 W. R. 82, Gane Bhive v. Kane Bhive, 4 B. H. C. R. (A. C.) 169; Kanhia Lal v. Debi Das, 22 A. 141.

(2) Dhurm Das v. Shama Soondri, 6 W. R. 48 (44) P. C.; Pram Kishen v. Mothoora, 5 W. R. 11 P. C.; Gopi Krist v. Ganga Pershad, 6 M. I. A. 53; Parbati v. Baikunth Nath, 18 C. W. N. 428 P. C.

(3) Bissessur v. Luchmessur 5 C. L. R. 477 (479) P. C. following Gopee Krist v. Ganesh Pershad 6 M. I. A. 58; Cheetha v. Miheen Lal 11 M. I. A. 869; Yamumala v. Yamumala 13 M. I. A. 888; Pram Nath v. Kashi Nath (1864) W. R. 169; Deela Singh v. Toofanee Singh 1 W. R. 806; Nilmoney v. Gunga Narain 1 W. R. 884; Beharee v. Madho Pershad 6 W. R. 69; Gopee Lal v. Bhagwan Dass, 12 W. R. 7;

Bodh Singh v. Ganesh 19 W. R. 356; Jugodamba v. Rohinee 23 W. R. 422; Nursingh v. Narain Dass 6 W. R. 17 P. C. (O. A.) from 3 N. W. P. H. C. R. 217; Narain v. Asaji 5 B. 130; Balaran v. Ramchandra 22 B. 922; Subhagya v. Chellamma 9 M. 417; Subhagya v. Surajya 10 M. 251; Ramphul v. Dagnarain 8 C. 517; Kanhia Lal v. Debi Dass 22 A. 141

(4) Dhurm Dass v. Shama Soondri 3 M. I. A. 229. Dhunoorkhari v. Gunpat Lal 10 W. R. 122; Bhola Nath v. Ajoodhia 20 W. R. 85. (5) Narsingdas v. Narain Das 26 W. R. 17 P. C. affirming O. A. 3 N. W. P. H. C. R. 217.

(6) Dossee Monee v. Ramchand. 7 W. R. 249.

(7) Narayana v. Krishna, 8 M. 214.

(8) Id. p. 218.

1150. The presumption of law that, while a family remains joint, all property including acquisitions made in the name of individual members is joint property has no application to a Dayabhag family in which the father reigns supreme, and the other members have no vested interest in the family property during his life-time. The presumption could only arise, it was said, when all members of the family have equal rights, and if the presumption were extended to the Dayabhag family, it would destroy its very fabric, since the presumption would equally apply to the father and any acquisition made by him would be presumed to be for the benefit of the joint family, whereas the father's acquisitions are exclusively his own and his sons take no interest in the father's property until his death, when the rights arise by inheritance. (1) But the Privy Council observed no such distinction and they have held that the presumption applies equally to all joint families whether subject to the Mitakshara or the Dayabhag schools of law. (2)

Co parcenary
manager

104. Except in the case of a trading family, the father and in his absence, the next senior male relation is the rightful manager of a co-parcenary.

1151. Analogous Law.—The right of the father to manage his family stands above the right of any other relation. (3) It is the survival of his patria potestas. After the father, its management devolves upon the eldest male member of the family, especially the eldest brother. This is the normal rule, but where the person qualified to be the manager of his family lacks the qualification to manage it, its management devolves upon one better qualified. (4) The nature of business of the family often points to the member best fitted to act as the manager. In a banking business, for instance, the father may be superseded by a younger son more adept in the business; while in a trading partnership with several branches, it is usual for a relative to manage each branch subject to or independently of the supervision of the head manager.

But such management is not to be confused with the rights and powers of the karta who manages the orthodox household owning its ancestral lands. He owes his selection to his seniority, not as a matter of co-parcenary discretion, for if any co-parcener should disagree, his remedy lies in partition.

105. The manager possesses the following powers:—

(1) He is entitled to be in physical possession of the joint property, and perform in respect of it, all acts of management.

(2) As such, he may realize and expend its income at his discretion.

(1) Sarada Prasad v. Mahananda, 81 C. 448 (461).

(2) Chand Huree v. Narendro Narain, 19 W.R. 281 P.C. Dhurm Das v. Shama Sundari, 8 M.I.A. 229; Gopee Kristi v. Ganga Prasad, 6 M.I.A. 53; Parbati Dasi v.

Baikuntha Nath, 18 C.W.N. 428 P.C.; 22 I. C. 61 P.C.

(3) Surja Prasad v. Golab Chand 27 C. 724 (748); Gajindra v. Harihar, 12 C. W. N. 687.

(4) Udit Narayan v. Ranglal, 29 C. 797.

(3) He is not accountable to his co-parceners for his management, nor liable to them for his negligence or mismanagement.

(4) He is, however, liable if he has fraudulently misappropriated any of its income, or spent it on purposes not binding on the family.

(5) He is entitled to contract debts and alienate or charge the joint estate for family necessity, or for its benefit.

(6) He is entitled to represent the co-parcenary in all suits and proceedings affecting its interests, to make contracts, give discharge, pass receipts, acknowledge debts, refer to arbitration, compromise any claim or dispute affecting it, and generally to do all such acts as he may consider necessary or to its benefit.

(7) He is the de facto guardian of the co-parcenary interest of minor members of the family.

Synopsis.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| (1) Texts on the powers of a manager (1152).                                   | debt (1167).  |
| (2) Legal position of a manager (1153-1156).                                   | (13) Alienation for family necessity (1168-1169).              |
| (3) Rights of manager (1157-1159).   | (14) Consent of other co-parceners if essential (1170).        |
| (4) Individual capacity of manager (1155).                                     | (15) Grounds for setting aside alienation (1170-1171).         |
| (5) Manager's right to possession (1157-1158).                                 | (16) Manager's contracts (1172).                               |
| (6) Manager not accountable for income (1159).                                 | (17) Right to discharge debtor from liability (1173).          |
| (7) Unless guilty of fraud (1160).   | (18) Power to compromise or refer to arbitration (1174-1176).  |
| (8) Liability to account under agreement (1161).                               | (19) Acknowledgment of debts (1177).                           |
| (9) Liability to account for admitted assets (1162).                           | (20) Barred debts, cannot be acknowledged (1178-1180).         |
| (10) Debts contracted by manager (1163-1164).                                  | (21) Exception in the case of the father (1178).               |
| (11) Proof of binding character of the debts against co-parcenary (1165-1166). | (22) Right of manager to sue on behalf the family (1181-1183). |
| (12) Liability of other members for  | (23) Manager, de facto guardian (1184).                        |

Texts.

1152. Analogous Law.—The following texts bear on the powers of the manager :—

Manu :—After the death of the father and the mother, the brothers being assembled, may divide among themselves the paternal and maternal estate : but they have no power over it, while their parents live, unless the father choose to distribute it.

The eldest brother may take entire possession of the patrimony ; and the others may live under him, as they lived under their father, unless they choose to be separated.

By the eldest, at the moment of his birth, the father, having begotten a son, discharges his debt to his own progenitors; the eldest son therefore, ought before partition, to manage the whole patrimony.

That son alone by whose birth he discharges his debt, and through whom he attains immortality, was begotten from a sense of duty; all the rest are considered by the wise as begotten from love of pleasure.

Let the father alone support his sons: and the first born, his younger brothers; and let them behave to the eldest according to law, as children should behave to their father. (1)

Gautam :—After the father's death, let the sons divide his estate.

Or, during his life time, when the mother is past child bearing, if he desires it.

Or the whole estate may go to the first born; and he shall support the rest as a father. (2)

Narad :—Or the senior brother shall maintain all the junior brothers, like a father, if they wish if, or even the younger brother, if able; the well being of a family depends on the ability of its head. (3)

One who being authorized to look after the affairs of the family charges himself with the management (of the family property) shall be supported by his brothers with presents of food, clothing and vehicles (4)

1153. The karta of a Hindu family has been variously described and likened to the manager of an estate, a trustee, or managing director of a corporation or company. But his position is in some respects unique, for while as manager he must and does necessarily possess some of the attributes of a manager and trustee, his status and powers are the result of combined necessity and ancient privilege. They are stated in the several clauses which may now be taken as settled by the preponderance of precedents; (5) and their full effect will now be discussed.

1154. Position of manager.—The position of the manager in the joint family has been already set out.

When the father is alive, he is naturally and by right, the manager of the joint family and guardian of its infant members. In his absence, or if he resigns, the eldest male member takes his place and is vested with similar rights. The position of the manager is naturally honorary in that he is loco parentis

(1) Manu IX-104-108.

(2) Gautam XXVIII-1-3: 2 S. B. E. 29.9

(3) Narad XIII-5.

(4) Narad XIII-34.

(5) Cl. (a)—Baldeo v. Shamlal 1 A. 77 followed in Jallidar v. Ram Lal 4 C. 723; Dharm Das v. Amulyadhar 32 C. 1119 (1181, 1182); Bhiku v. Buttu 8 Bom. L. R. 99; as to trust property see Sri Ram v. Sri Gopal 19 A. 428; Ramanathan v. Murnugappa 27 M. 193 (201); Bhaskari v. Bhaskaram 31 M. 218; Thandavaraya v. Shunmugam 32 M. 167.

Cl. (b)—Damodar Das v. Uttamram 17 B. 271; Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201 (208); Balkrishna v. Mathusami, 32 M. 271 contra Abhaychandra v. Pyari Mohan, 5 B.L.R. 347;

Cl. (c)—Shookmoy v. Monoharri 11 C. 684 (694) P. C.; Setrucherla v. Setrucherla, 22 M. 470 P. C.; Tara v. Reece, 8 M. H. C. R. 177; Balakrishna v. Muthusami, 32 M. 271; Bhowani v. Juggernath, 13 C. W. N. 309; Parmeshwar v. Gobind 43 C. 459 (464, 465);

Nonerra v. Gurrav, 5 B. 589; Narayan v. Nathaji, 28 B. 201.

Cl. (d)—Abaychandra v. Pyari Mohan, 13 W. R. 75 F. B.; Parmeshwar v. Gobind 43 C. 459; Balakrishna v. Muthusami 32 M. 271; Danujar Das v. Uttamram 17 B. 271; Narayan v. Nathaji 28 B. 201 (208.)

Cl. (e)—Dwarika Nath v. Bungshi 9 C. W. N. 879 Moheshur v. Kishun Singh 34 C. 184;

Cl. (f)—Kishen Pershad v. Har Narain 33 A. 272 P. C. overruling Alagappa v. Velian 18 M. 33; Bal Savani v. Narayan 7 B. 467; Balji v. Keshawji 37 B. 340; Gopal Das v. Badri Nath 27 A. 361; Durga Prasad v. Damodar Das 32 A. 183; Girwar v. Makbunessa 1 Pat. L. J. 468; Pitamingsh v. Ujagar Singh 1 A. 651; Ram Kuber v. Ram Dasi 35 A. 428; Ram Das v. Chabildas, 12 Bom. L. R. 621; Jagam Nath v. Manmudal 16 A. 231 (family arrangement) Baleji v. Nana, 5 Bom. L. R. 95 (reference to arbitration).

to the other members. He cannot charge for his services ; though if his duties are onerous, the family may by a special agreement allow him to charge for his services.<sup>(1)</sup> Such a charge might be justified where the estate or business is large and calls for the display of special talent in its management. The manager does not owe his position to the presumed consent of his co-parceners, who cannot eject or supersede him or curtail his powers without his consent. When it has been customary in a family to have two or more managers, on the death of one of them, his son would as of right take his place.<sup>(2)</sup> Where the family holds any property on trust, the manager of the family is entitled to manage the trust property.<sup>(3)</sup> The other members have no right to manage the joint property by rotation.<sup>(4)</sup>

1155. The fact that a person is a manager, does not create any presumption that all his acts are performed in that capacity since in becoming the manager, he does not cease to act in his individual capacity. As such, he continues to possess all the rights of a co-parcener.<sup>(5)</sup> Where, therefore, all members of a joint family were to have executed a mortgage, which was in fact only executed by the manager, the question was held to be one of intention, whether he had executed it on behalf of all or only as a co-executant. The question is one of fact to be decided upon the circumstances of each case : "If the parties intended that all the members of the family should execute the document, it cannot take effect by reason that the person who alone executed the document, happens to be the managing member, and that the debt is recited to have been incurred for the benefit of the family."<sup>(6)</sup> In one such case the court held the mortgage incomplete so that it was held to be inoperative even against the individual share of the manager who executed it.<sup>(7)</sup> This view is justifiable on the ground that a person who undertakes a joint liability cannot be burdened with undivided liability which he never undertook.

1156. If the manager is also the administrator of the estate he cannot exercise power as manager which he is prevented from doing as administrator.<sup>(8)</sup>

So Lord Westbury said : "According to the true notion of an undivided family in Hindu Law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint and undivided property that he, that particular member, has a definite share. No individual member of an undivided family could go to the place of the receipt of rent and claim to take from the Collector or receiver of the rents a certain definite share. The proceeds of undivided property must be brought, according to the theory of an undivided family, to the common chest or purse, and then dealt with according to the modes of enjoyment of the members of an undivided family. But when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property, that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject matter so agreed to be dealt with ; and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share, which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has

(1) Krishnasami v. Raja Gopala, 19 M. 73 (86).

(2) Peruappavanalingam v. Nallasivan, 1 M. H. C. R. 416.

(3) Thandavaroya v. Shunmugam, 32 M. 167 (169).

(4) Sri Raman v. Sri Gopal, 19 A. 428; Ramanathan v. Murugappa, 27 M. 193 (201);

Thandavaroya v. Shunmugam, 32 M. 167 (169).

(5) Danodhar v. Danodhar, 1 B. H. C. R. 182.

(6) Sivasami v. Sevugam, 25 M. 389 (938)

(7) Ib.

(8) Osier in Banjil Singh v. Amullya Prasad, 9 C. W. N. 928.

